PREFACE

TO THE TWENTY-SIXTH EDITION.

Since the publication in 1918 of the twenty-fifth edition, comparatively few changes in criminal law have been effected by legislation. The book has been brought up to date by the inclusion of such new Acts as have been passed, of which the most important are those relating to official secrets, possession of firearms, and eligibility of women to serve on juries. Reference will also be found in the text to numerous recent decisions and rulings of the Court of Criminal Appeal and of the House of Lords in criminal cases.

The Editors desire to express their great indebtedness to Mr. G. B. McClure and Mr. W. Bentley Purchase, M.C., Barristers-at-Law, for most valuable assistance in the preparation of an entirely new Index and for seeing the book through the press.

Temple,
May 30th, 1922.

As the subject of Evidence in criminal cases, however, had not been treated of by any of these writers, and as some book upon the subject was extremely desirable, I thought I might select from the Work I originally compiled such part of it as related to evidence in criminal cases, and publish it, without subjecting myself to the imputation of wishing to enter into any competition with the learned writers of the Works already extant upon the Pleas of the Crown. I have made this compilation; I have added to it all the cases since decided, and the statutes since enacted, upon the subject; and I have compressed the whole into the smallest compass that appeared to me to be practical, consistent with perspicuity. I have also added precedents of indictments and other criminal pleadings—not from any idea that this part of the Work was required by the Profession, there being already one or two collections of great repute upon the subject—but merely because I found it impracticable to give the evidence in particular cases in the simplified form I was anxious to give it, without also giving, in each case, the particular indictment or pleading the evidence was intended to support. And as I was thus obliged to give the precedents, I thought it desirable, and indeed necessary, also to give such a summary of the law relative to pleading in criminal cases generally, as would enable the reader to frame an indictment in cases where he might not be able to find a precedent.

As to the arrangement of my materials, I have endeavoured to make it simple and perspicuous. The work consists of two books—the First Book, which treats of Pleading and Evidence in criminal cases generally, is divided into two parts; the first treating of Pleading generally, namely, of indictments, informations, special pleas, demurrers, etc.; the second treating of Evidence generally, namely, of evidence of records, of matters quasi of record, of private written instruments, and of parol evidence, the competency and credit of witnesses, etc., etc.

The Second Book, which treats of Pleading and Evidence in particular cases, is divided into four parts: the first treats of offences against the property and persons of individuals; the second treats of offences of a public nature, namely, offences against the King and his government, offences against public justice, offences against the public peace, offences against public trade, and offences against public police and economy; the third treats of conspiracies; and the fourth of principals and accessories.

I have now apprised the reader of what he is to expect in the following Work. Trifling as it may appear, it has cost me much time and great labour. I have taken infinite pains to simplify my subject; to reject everything redundant or irrelevant; to compress the whole into the smallest possible compass consistent with perspicuity; and to clothe it in language plain, simple, and unadorned. In fact, my sole object has been to make this a practically useful book: I neither anticipate nor desire for it a higher commendation.

TABLE OF CASES.

It is the ordinary common law remedy for all treasons and felonies, for misprisions of treason and felony, and for misdemeanors of a public nature: 2 Hawk. c. 25, ss. 1, 4. In the case of treason and felony it is now the sole remedy except (1) impeachment, now very rarely resorted to: (2) a coroner's inquisition in cases of murder or manslaughter (see post, p. 140): (3) the summary remedy permitted in certain cases of felony and misdemeanor under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), and 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 22), and the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 128 (2), as amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 15. In the case of misdemeanors, there is also an alternative remedy by way of criminal information, post, p. 127. As to the preparation of the indictment, see post, p. 27; as to preferring it to the grand jury, and the procedure of the grand jury, see post, p. 74 et seq.

Breaches of common law duty.]—An indictment lies at common law for a breach of duty, which is not a mere private injury, but an outrage on the moral duties of society. Perhaps the most important example is the neglect to provide sufficient food, medical aid or other necessaries, for a person unable to provide for himself, and for whom the defendant is obliged by duty or contract to provide, where such neglect injures the health of that person, whether the person injured be of extreme age (R. v. Marriott, 8 C. & P. 425; R. v. Instan [1893] 1 Q. B. 450; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 86), or of tender years (R. v. Friend, R. & R. 20; R. v. Hogan, 2 Den. 277; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 219; R. v. Phillpot, Dears. 179; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 113; R. v. Chandler, Dears. 453; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 109; R. v. Ryland, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 99; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 10; 10 Cox, 882; R. v. Rugg, 12 Cox, 16 (C. C. R.); R. v. Jones, 19 Cox, 678; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 41; R. v. Senior (1899) 1 Q. B. 283, 289; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 175), or is the defendant's servant (R. v. Ridley, 2 Camp. 650: R. v. Smith, L. & C. 607; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 153), or apprentice (R. v. Self, 1 Leach, 137; 1 East, P. C. 226; R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 153), or is a lunatic (R. v. Pelham, 8 Q. B. 959; 15 L. J. (M. C.) 105). The common law is strengthened by statutory provisions, e.g., 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 26 (servants and apprentices); 53 & 54 Vict. c. 5, s. 322 (lunatics); 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 12 (persons under 16). An indictment also lies for any act of wilful negligence, whereby human life or health is endangered, such as shipping dangerous combustibles without informing the ship-master: Williams v. H. E. I. Co., 3 East, 192; or exposing for sale, or possessing with intent to sell, provisions unfit for human food: R. v. Mackarty, 6 East, 133, 141, cit.; 2 Ld. Raym. 1179; 3 Ld. Raym. 487: R. v. Dixon, 3 M. & Sel. 11; R. v. Haynes, 4 M. & Sel. 214: R. v. Stevenson, 3 F. & F. 106: Shillito v. Thompson, 1 Q. B. D. 12; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 18. It also lies for acts intended to interfere with or pervert the course of justice, e.g., for disposing of a dead body so as to prevent the coroner from holding an inquest upon it where an inquest ought to be held: R. v. Price, 12 Q. B. D. 247; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 51: R. v. Stephenson, 13 Q. B. D. 331; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 176; but not for burning a dead body instead of burying it, unless it be so done as to cause a public nuisance: R. v. Price, supra; for manufacturing false evidence for the purpose of misleading a judicial tribunal, although the evidence is not in fact used : R. v. Vreones [1891] 1 Q. B. 360; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 17 Cox, 267; or for attempting to pervert the course of public justice by publishing articles in a newspaper affecting the conduct or character of persons awaiting trial : R. v. Tibbits and Windust [1902] 1 K. B. 77; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 4; 20 Cox, 70, and cases there cited : R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 839; R. v. Davies [1906] 1 K. B. 32; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 363.

It also lies for all nuisances of a public nature, though occasioned by an act in itself innocent, if the creation of the nuisance is the probable consequence of the act. R. v. Moore, 3 B. & Ad. 184; and see 1 Hawk. c. 75, ss. 6, 7. Under this head falls the remedy against a common innkeeper who refuses either to receive a traveller as guest in his house or to find him victuals or lodging on being tendered a reasonable price : see R. v. Rymer, 2 Q. B. D. 136; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 108; 13 Cox, 378; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1887.

Intention to commit offences.]—Mere intention to commit an offence is not indictable, except in the case of high treason, as to which it is said that under 25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2, voluntas reputatur pro facto; but in all cases where the intent to commit a crime is manifested by any overt act, the party may be indicted for an attempt to commit the offence. 1 Deacon, Cr. L. 643 : R. v. Scofield, Cald. 397 : R. v. Higgins, 2 East, 5, 21; R. v. Chapman, 1 Den. 432; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 152; 3 Cox, 467; R. v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 511 : R. v. Duckworth, [1892] 2 Q. B. 83; 17 Cox, 495; and see 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 140.

Attempts to commit crimes.]—Every attempt to commit a felony or misdemeanor is a misdemeanor at common law, whether the crime attempted is one by statute or at common law. R. v. Hensler, 11 Cox, 570 (C. C. R.) : R. v. Roderick, 7 C. & P. 795, Parke, B. : R. v. Martin, 2 Mood. 123; 9 C. & P. 213, 215 : R. v. Ransford, 13 Cox, 9 (C. C. R.) : R. v. Cartwright, R. & R. 107 n. : R. v. Butler, 6 C. & P. 368. This doctrine has been applied to an attempt to commit suicide. R. v. Doody, 6 Cox, 463; R. v. Burgess, L. & C. 258; 9 Cox, 302; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 185.

It is said that there cannot, ex vi termini, be an attempt to commit perjury : but an attempt to suborn perjury is indictable (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6, s. 7); so are certain attempts to bribe (6 Edw. 7. c. 34, s. 1).

To constitute an attempt the act done must be immediately connected with the commission of the offence. R. v. Eagleton, Dears. 515; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 158, Parke, B. : R. v. Cheeseman, L. & C. 140; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 89; 9 Cox, 100 : R. v. Roberts, Dears. 539; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 17. (a). Thus, the procuring of indecent prints with intent to sell them is an indictable misdemeanor; but the merely keeping and preserving them with that intent is not. Dugdale v. R.,

(a) In R. v. Baker, 28 N. Z. L. R. 536, the Court had to consider the criminal responsibility of a man who had written to another a letter explaining how to open a safe by the use of explosives. No particular safe was in the contemplation of either man when the letter was written; but the recipient subsequently tried to open a safe in accordance with the directions in the letter. The Court held both men equally guilty, the writer of the letter apparently as having counselled or procured the particular attempt.

1 E. & B. 435; Dears. 64; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 50. Care must be taken to distinguish an attempt from an intention, R. v. Landow, 23 Cox, 457; 77 J. P. 364; 29 T. L. R. 375; and from mere acts of preparation. R. v. Robinson [1915] 2 K. B. 342; 84 L. J. (K. B.) 1149; 79 J. P. 303; 31 T. L. R. 313.

Attempts to commit certain crimes are punishable by statute; e.g., attempts to murder (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 11-15); to commit unnatural offences (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 62; 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11); or offences against girls under thirteen, or between thirteen and sixteen (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, ss. 4, 5); or incest (8 Edw. 7. c. 45, s. 1 (3)).

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, any person indicted for felony or misdemeanor may be convicted of the attempt to commit the offence charged, if the jury is satisfied that the offence was not completed. See R. v. McPherson Dears. & B. 197; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 134; 7 Cox, 281: R. v. Hapgood, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 221. It is therefore unusual to prefer an indictment for the attempt to commit an offence (e.g., to obtain money by false pretences) where the full offence is charged.

In R. v. White [1910] 2 K. B. 124; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 854; 26 T. L. R. 466; 4 Cr. App. R. 257, on an indictment for murder, Darling, J., directed the jury that they might convict of an attempt to murder, and on their finding a verdict of guilty of attempt to murder the prisoner was sentenced to penal servitude as for a statutory felony within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 11-15. This ruling was upheld on appeal on the ground that the offences described in ss. 11-15 fell within the definition of attempts to murder, and that on an indictment for murder it was admissible under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, to convict of such attempt.

Incitement.]—To solicit or incite another to commit a felony or misdemeanor is an indictable misdemeanor at common law, even though the solicitation or incitement has no effect. R. v. Higgins, 2 East, 5; R. v. Scofield, Cald. 397: R. v. Quail, 4 F. & F. 1076: R. v. Gregory, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 77; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 60; 10 Cox, 459; and see 3 Chit. Cr. L. 688; Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 39. This includes an offer of a bribe to a person to commit an offence. Wade v. Broughton, 3 V. & B. 172: and an attempt to incite to the commission of felony or misdemeanor is also an indictable misdemeanor at common law. R. v. Ransford, 13 Cox, 9 (C. C. R.). It is immaterial whether the principal offence is one existing by the common law or is created by statute. See also 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 203; R. v. Campbell [1908] Victoria L. R. 136.

Incitements to commit certain crimes are punishable by statute, e.g., inciting to mutiny (37 Geo. 3, c. 70); to murder (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4); to offences against Post Office laws (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 69); to offences against the Official Secrets Acts, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 4, and 1920 (70 & 71 Geo. 5, c. 75, s. 7.)

Disobedience to statutes.]—Where a statute declares any act or omission to be treason, felony, misprision of treason or misdemeanor, an indictment lies in respect of such act or omission. And even though a statute does not use express terms describing the nature of the offence, if it prohibits a matter of public grievance to the liberties and securities of the subject, or commands a matter of public convenience (such as the repairing of highways or the like), all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command of the statute are misdemeanors at common law, punishable by indictment, unless such method of procedure manifestly appears to be excluded by the statute. 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 4; R. v. Davis, Say. 163; R. v. Sainsbury, 4 T. R. 451; R. v. Price, 11 A. & E. 727 : R. v. Stephenson, 13 Q. B. D. 331; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 176 : R. v. Hall [1891] 1 Q. B. 747; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 124. In R. v. Kenyon [1901] 36 L. J. Newsp. 371, an indictment was framed for contravening s. 3 of the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72) by building on a disused Roman Catholic burial-ground. Phillimore, J., seems to have considered the indictment good, and the defendants pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to imprisonment. The remedy usually sought is injunction (see Re Ponsford and Newport District School Board [1894] 1 Ch. 454; 63 L. J. (Ch.) 278). If a statute specifies a mode of proceeding otherwise than by indictment, then, if the matter is already indictable at common law, and the statute merely introduces a different mode of prosecution and punishment, the remedy is alternative, and the prosecutor has the option of proceeding either by indictment at common law, or by the mode specified by the statute. Castle's case, Cro. Jac. 644 : R. v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 799, 805 : R. v. Wigg, 2 Ld. Raym. 1163; 2 Salk. 460 : R. v. Balme, 2 Cowp. 648 : R. v. Richard Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 161 : and see 2 Hale, 191; 1 Saund. 135, and notes; Craies on Statute Law (4th ed.), pp. 283 et seq.; Maxwell on Statutes (5th ed.), p. 299. If a statute prohibits under a penalty an act which was formerly lawful, and a subsequent statute (R. v. Boyall, 2 Burr. 832), or the same statute (in a subsequent substantive clause), provides a mode of proceeding for the penalty otherwise than by indictment, the prosecutor may, notwithstanding, proceed by indictment upon the prohibitory clause, as for a misdemeanor at common law, or he may at his option proceed in the manner provided by the statute. 2 Hale, 171 : R. v. Wright, 1 Burr. 543; and see R. v. Jones, 2 Str. 1146 : R. v. Harris, 4 T. R. 202; 2 R. R. 358 : R. v. Buchanan, 8 Q. B. 883; 15 L. J. (Q. B.) 227 : R. v. Hall [1891] 1 Q. B. 747, 770; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 124, Charles, J. : Saunders v. Holborn District Board [1895] 1 Q. B. 64, 69; 64 L. J. (Q. B.) 101. But if the manner of proceeding for the penalty is contained in the same clause which prohibits the act, the mode of proceeding given by the statute must be pursued, and no other; for the express mention of any other mode of proceeding impliedly excludes that of indictment. R. v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 799, 805 : R. v. Buck, 2 Str. 679 : R. v. Hall, supra : R. v. Lovibond, 19 W. R. 753. Where a statute, in one clause, declares an act to be a public nuisance, it is indictable, though a subsequent clause subjects it to a pecuniary penalty recoverable by "information, bill, plaint, or action at law," or makes it abateable. R. v. Crawshaw, Bell, 303; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 8 Cox, 375 : R. v. Gregory, 5 B. & Ad. 555; 3 L. J. (M. C.) 25. It is now an established rule of construction that "where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts of Parliament, or both under an Act and at common law, whether any such Act was passed before or after" January 1, 1890, the offender shall, "unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be punished under either or any of those Acts, or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence." 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63 (Interpretation Act, 1889), ss. 33, 42. If, in the case of a common-law misdemeanor, a new mode of punishment or new mode of proceeding merely is directed, without altering the class or nature of the offence, the new punishment or new mode of proceeding is alternative, and the offender may be indicted as before for the common-law misdemeanor (R. v. Richard Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 161); and the mere declaration that an offence shall be felony which was so at common law does not create a new offence. Williams v. R., 7 Q. B. 250, 253, Patteson, J. But if a later statute expressly alters the quality of an offence, e.g., by making it a misdemeanor instead of a felony, or a felony instead of a misdemeanor, the offence cannot be proceeded for under the earlier statute. Michell v. Brown, 1 E. & E. 267; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 53. This result equally follows if the words "feloniously" or "deemed to be a felony" are used in the later Act. R. v. Johnson, 3 M. & Sel. 539, 556; Bayley, J.: R. v. Solomons, 1 Mood. 292; overruling R. v. Cale, 1 Mood. 11. And if a later statute describes an offence created by a former statute, and affixes to it a different punishment, varying the procedure, and giving an appeal where there was no appeal before, the prosecutor must proceed for the offence under the later statute. Michell v. Brown, supra. And where a statute makes the doing of an act felonious, if a subsequent statute makes it penal only, the later statute is a virtual repeal of the former, so far as relates to the punishment of the offence. 1 Hawk. c. 40, s. 5: R. v. Davis, 1 Leach, 271. As to the effect of a statute treating as a felony an act or omission which before was a misdemeanour at common law, see R. v. Cross, 1 Ld. Raym. 711: R. v. Payne [1906] 1 K. B. 388; 75 L. J. Disobedience to rules and orders made under statutory authority.]—Disobedience to an order relating to quarantine, made by the King in Council under statutory authority, has been held to be an indictable misdemeanor at common law. R. v. Harris, 4 T. R. 202, explained in R. v. Hall [1891] 1 Q. B. 747, 765; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 124. Where a statute, the matter of which concerns the public in general, delegates to commissioners the power to make orders under it, disobedience to an order made by them in pursuance of such power is an indictable misdemeanor at common law. R. v. Walker, L. R. 10 Q. B. 355; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 169. And where a statute gives power to make regulations, a regulation made under the power becomes for the purposes of obedience or disobedience a provision of the statute. Willingale v. Norris [1909] 1 K. B. 57, 64; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 69. Where a corporation was authorized by a public statute to make a towing-path on the side of a river, it was held to be an indictable misdemeanor at common law to obstruct the corporation in the execution of the powers given it by the statute. R. v. Smith, 2 Doug. 441. Disobedience to an order of a court of competent jurisdiction is a misdemeanor indictable at common law. R. v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 799, 804: R. v. Mortlock, 7 Q. B. 459: R. v. Brisby, 1 Den. 416; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 157: R. v. Jeyes, 3 A. & E. 416: R. v. Johnson, 4 M. & Sel. 515; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 542. SECT. 2.

AGAINST WHOM AN INDICTMENT LIES.

AN indictment lies against all persons who actually commit, or who procure, or assist in, the commission of any crime, or who knowingly harbour a traitor or felon; for each, in contemplation of law, is guilty, and liable to punishment according to the part which he takes in the perpetration or concealment of the offence. In the case of felony offenders are classed as principals in the first or in the second degree or accessories before or after the fact. In the case of misdemeanors all persons who aid, abet, counsel or procure the offence are treated as principal offenders.

Number and gender.]—By s. 1 (2) of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), when an enactment relates to an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction, unless the contrary intention appears, words importing the masculine gender include females, and words in the singular include the plural, and words in the plural include the singular. [This re-enacts part of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 14.]

Corporations.]—By s. 2 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889, "in the construction of every enactment relating to an offence punishable on indictment or summary conviction, whether contained in an Act passed before or after" January 1, 1890, "the expression 'person' shall, unless a contrary intention appears, include a body corporate." See R. v. Tyler [1891] 2 Q. B. 588, 594; 61 L. J. (M. C.) 38, Bowen, L.J. A contrary intention would be inferred in the case of treason, felony, or misdemeanors involving personal violence: Pharmaceutical Society v. London & Provincial Supply Association, 5 App. Cas. 857, 869; 49 L. J. (Q. B.) 736: R. v. Great West Laundry Co., 13 Manitoba, 66: and in cases where the only penalty for the offence is imprisonment or corporal punishment. See Pearks, Gunston & Tee v. Ward [1902] 2 K. B. 1, 11, Channell, J.; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 656. Hawke v. Hulton, Ltd. [1909] 2 K. B. 93; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 633. A corporation aggregate has been held incapable of perjury. Wych v. Meal, 3 P. Wms. 310; 24 E. R. 1078. But a corporation aggregate may be indicted, by its corporate name, for breaches of public duty, whether in the nature of nonfeasance, such as the non-repair of highways or bridges which it is their duty to repair: R. v. Birmingham & Gloucester Rail Co., 2 Q. B. 47; 9 C. & P. 469; or of misfeasance, such as the obstruction of a highway by a railway company, in a manner not authorized by their Act of Parliament. R. v. Great North of England Rail. Co., 9 Q. B. 315; 16 L. J. (M. C.) 16:

" child " now means a person of 7 and under 14 years (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 128 (1).) A list of the offences to which this provision applies is given in Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure (9th ed.), 148. The section only applies when the justices on summary conviction can pass a sentence of more than three months' imprisonment, and does not apply where the proceeding may result in a detention for a longer period than three months (e.g., the conviction of a person summarily of being an incorrigible rogue, and his commitment to Quarter Sessions for sentence). R. v. Evans and Connor, 30 T. L. R. 326; 10 Cr. App. R. 53. There are several other enactments, such as the Explosives Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 17), s. 92; the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 9; the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 77), s. 15; and the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2, sub-s. 6, which expressly enable a defendant, when accused of an offence punishable on summary conviction under those statutes, to insist upon a trial on indictment. It is the duty of the Court of Summary Jurisdiction before going into the case to inform the accused of his right so to elect : and failure to do so invalidates the subsequent summary proceedings. R. v. Cockshott [1898] 1 Q. B. 582; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 467 : R. v. Beesby [1909] 1 K. B. 849; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 482, which overrules R. v. Fowler, 64 L. J. (M. C.) 9. When the election has been made the justices deal with the case as a charge of an indictable offence (see R. v. Mitchell, ex parte Livesey [1913] 1 K. B. 561; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 153; 23 Cox, 273; 77 J. P. 148); and they may commit not merely for the offence charged as to which the election was made, but for any indictable offence disclosed by the depositions. R. v. Brown [1895] 1 Q. B. 119, 127.

Effect of repeal on pending proceedings.]—Prior to 1889 by the unqualified repeal of the statute on which an indictment was framed, though it took place after the finding of the bill, (but before plea pleaded,) the proceedings fell to the ground and no judgment could be pronounced. R. v. Denton, 18 Q. B. 761; Dears. 3; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 207 : see R. v. Mawgan in Meneage, 8 A. & E. 496; 7 L. J. (M. C.) 98. Where a prisoner was indicted for privately stealing from a shop against 10 W. 3, c. 12 (10 & 11 W. 3, c. 23, Ruffhead), which was repealed after the offence was committed, but before the prisoner was tried, by 1 G. 4, c. 117, s. 1 (rep.), it was held that the prisoner could not be sentenced under the repealed Act. R. v. M'Kenzie, R. & R. 429. But it has been held that an indictment for conspiracy to violate a statute, being a common law offence, will lie after the repeal of the statute, or in respect of an offence committed before the repeal. R. v. Thompson, 16 Q. B. 832; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 183. As to statutes passed since 1889, the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38 (2), provides that where an Act " repeals any other enactment, then unless the contrary intention appears, the repeal shall not . . . (d) affect any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed, or (e) affect any investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of any such . . . penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid;" and that " any such investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the repealing Act had not been passed." See R. v. Webb [1904] 140 C. C. Sess. Pap. 627, Walton, J.; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.), p. 7. Particular clauses to the like effect were common in prior statutes: as to their effect, see R. v. Smith, L. & C. 131; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 105.

A contrary intention would be inferred in the case of treason, felony, or misdemeanors involving personal violence: Pharmaceutical Society v. London & Provincial Supply Association, 5 App. Cas. 857, 869; 49 L. Att.-Gen. v. London & North Western Rail. Co. [1900] 1 Q. B. 78. It would seem, also, that a corporation may be indicted by its corporate name, and fined, for a libel published by its order. See Pharmaceutical Society v. London & Provincial Supply Association, supra, at p. 870, Lord Blackburn: Eastern Counties Rail Co. v. Broom, 6 Ex. 314: Whitfield v. South-Eastern Rail Co., E. Capacity.]—The capacity to commit crime presupposes an act of understanding and an exercise of will; and "the full definition of every crime contains expressly or by implication a proposition as to a state of mind. In all cases whatever, competent age, sanity, and some degree of freedom from coercion are assumed to be essential to criminality." R. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168, 187; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 97, Stephen, J.

EXEMPTIONS AND EXCUSES.

Aliens.]—British law is not construed as applying to the acts of aliens on land outside the King's dominions or at sea except within British territorial waters, or on British ships, or in cases of piracy jure gentium.

A British subject cannot naturalize himself as a subject of a foreign state at war with this country so as to exempt himself from criminal liability for treason. R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444; 20 Cox, 468; 67 J. P. 41. And an alien resident within the King's dominions is guilty of treason if he joins an invading force of his own countrymen, when the King's forces have temporarily retired, for strategical or other reasons. De Jager v. Att.-Gen. for Natal [1907] A. C. 326.

An alien friend is subject to indictment for offences committed in England (R. v. Esop, 7 C. & P. 456: R. v. Barronet, 1 E. & B. 1; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 25), or upon British ships within the admiralty jurisdiction (see post, p. 31), and for piracy jure gentium. Att.-Gen. of Hong Kong v. Kwok a Sing, L. R. 5 P. C. 179, 199: 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 5. This liability appears not to extend to aliens who have diplomatic immunity. See Diplomatic Privileges Act, 1708 (7 Anne, c. 12): Law Mag. and Review (Nov. 1894), p. 43. Sed contrà, see case of Pantaleon da Sa, 5 St. Tr. 461, and cf. 2 St. Tr. 881, n.; Fost. 187. The burden of proof that the accused is an alien appears to lie upon him. See R. v. Lindsay, 14 St. Tr. 987, 994: R. v. Macdonald, 18 St. Tr. 857; except perhaps where the offence is committed outside the realm: but see R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 525; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 218. The liability of an alien enemy is not clearly ascertained. See R. v. Molieres, Fost. 188, n.: R. v. Johnson, 6 East, 583, 593; Ellenborough, C.J.: 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 6.

Infants under seven.]—Infants under the age of discretion are not punishable by any criminal prosecution whatever; 1 Hale, 27: 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 1: and see Mirror, c. 4, s. 16 (Selden Soc. Publ., vol. 7); 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 58 (f). A child under the age of seven years cannot be guilty of any criminal offence; for, under that age an infant is, by incontrovertible presumption of law, doli incapax, and cannot be endowed with any discretion. Reg. 309 b; 1 Hale, 27, 28; 4 Bl. Com. 23: Mirror, c. 4, s. 6; Fost. 349: Reniger v. Fogossa, 1 Plowd. 1: R. v. Carter [1774] 1 Cowp. 220. 223: Marsh v. Loader, 14 C. B. (N. S.) 535: 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 58.

Infants between seven and fourteen.]—Between the ages of seven and fourteen years a child is presumed not to have reached the age of discretion and to be doli incapax; but this presumption may be rebutted by strong and pregnant evidence of a mischievous discretion, expressed in the maxim malitia supplet ætatem; for the capacity to commit crime, do evil and contract guilt, is not so much measured by years and days, as by the strength of the delinquent's understanding and judgment. 4 Bl. Com. 23: 1 Hale, 25, 27. Thus, it has been said that an infant eight years of age might be indicted for murder, and hanged on conviction; Dalt. c. 147; and an infant between the age of eight and nine years was executed for arson, it appearing that he was actuated by malice and revenge, and had perpetrated the offence with craft and cunning. 1 Hale, 25 n. So a girl of thirteen was burnt for killing her mistress; 1 Hale, 26; and where an infant nine years of age killed an infant of the like age, and confessed the felony, it appearing upon examination that he had hid both the blood and the body, the justices were of opinion that he might lawfully be hanged, but respited the judgment that he might be pardoned. Fitz. Cor. 57. See R. v. York, Fost. 70; 4 Bl. Com. 24: R. v. Wild, 1 Mood. 452. Under the present law sentence of death may not be pronounced or recorded against a person under sixteen (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 103). In criminal proceedings against a person under fourteen, the evidence of a mischievous discretion, to rebut the primâ facie presumption of law arising from nonage, should be clear and strong beyond all doubt and contradiction. 4 Bl. Com. 23: 1 Hale, 25, 27: R. v. Vamplew, 3 F. & F. 520. R. v. Gorrie, 83 J. P. 136. Where a child between the age of seven and fourteen years is indicted for felony, two questions are to be left to the jury: first, whether he committed the offence; and secondly, whether at the time he had a guilty knowledge that he was doing wrong. R. v. Owen, 4 C. & P. 236: R. v. Smith, 1 Cox, 260; and see R. v. Gorrie, supra. The fact that the child did the acts constituting the elements of the offence is not in itself any evidence whatever of the guilty state of mind which is essential for conviction. R. v. Kershaw, 18 T. L. R. 357; 37 L. J. Newsp. 120, Bucknill, J. An infant under fourteen is presumed by law to be unable to commit a rape, and therefore cannot be found guilty of it as a principal in the first degree; for though in other felonies malitia supplet ætatem, yet, as to this particular act, the law presumes him impotent, as well as wanting in discretion. This presumption was not affected by 9 G. 4, c. 31, ss. 16, 17 (rep.), which first made the offence complete upon proof of penetration, without evidence of emission; R. v. Groombridge, 7 C. & P. 582; nor by the present enactment, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, by which 9 G. 4, c. 31, is superseded: R. v. Waite [1892] 2 Q. B. 600; 61 L. J. (M. C.) 189; 17

Cox, 554. Nor is any evidence admissible to show that the defendant had in fact arrived at the full state of puberty, and could commit the offence. R. v. Philips, 8 C. & P. 736 : R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118 : R. v. Brimilow, Id. 366; 2 Mood. 122. In R. v. Brimilow it was held that the boy had been properly convicted of an assault under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11 (rep.). Nor can a boy under fourteen be convicted of an assault with intent to commit a rape. R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396. This doctrine has been extended to other offences involving carnal knowledge. R. v. Waite, supra. But a boy under fourteen may be a principal in the second degree in a rape, or like offence, if he aids and assists in the commission of the offence, and it appears that he had a mischievous discretion; for the excuse of impotency will not apply in such a case. 1 Hale, 630 : R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396. See R. v. Allen, 1 Den. 364; 2 C. & K. 869; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 72; 3 Cox, 270 : R. v. Williams [1893] 1 Q. B. 320; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 69. Whether where there is evidence of guilty knowledge he may be held to be an accomplice appears to be doubtful. See R. v. Cratchley, 9 Cr. App. R. 232; and R. v. Tatam, 15 Cr. App. R. 132.

In R. v. Sutton, 3 A. & E. 597; 5 N. & M. 353, there are dicta to the effect that under certain circumstances an infant under fourteen might be liable to indictment in respect of public duties arising out of his occupation of property.

Infants of fourteen or over.]—The incapacity of infants to commit crime ceases upon their attaining the age of fourteen years, at which age they are presumed by the law to be doli capaces, and capable of distinguishing good from evil, and are, with respect to their criminal actions, subject to the same rule of construction as others of more mature age. 1 Hale, 25; Doct. and Stu. c. 26; Co. Litt. 79, 171, 247; Dalt. c. 147; 1 Hawk. c. 1, n. (1). But for the purposes of punishment a distinction is drawn between adults and young persons (of fourteen and under sixteen), and juvenile adults (of sixteen and under twenty-one). See 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, ss. 102, 103, and 8 Edw. 7, c. 59, ss. 1-4.

In some misdemeanours and offences which are not capital an infant is said to be privileged by reason of his nonage, if under twenty-one, because laches is not to be attributed to him. Co. Litt. 357; 4 Bl. Com. 22. But inasmuch as an infant is liable in tort, it is difficult to understand the grounds of this early distinction as to misdemeanours when an infant over seven could be liable for felony. And an infant who is indicted for any notorious breach of the peace, as riot, forcible entry, battery, or for perjury or cheating, or the like, is equally liable as a person of full age; because, upon his trial, the court, ex officio, ought to consider whether he was doli capax, and had discretion to do the act with which he is charged. 1 Hale, 20, 21; 4 Bl. Com. 22; 3 Bac. Abr., Infancy (H.). An infant, though incapable of making a contract of bailment, has been held liable to indictment for larceny as a bailee. R. v. M'Donald, 15 Q. B. D. 323. But an infant cannot lawfully be adjudicated bankrupt, and consequently cannot be convicted as a bankrupt of an offence under s. 159 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), which depends on the existence of bankruptcy and the existence of valid debts by the infant.

R. v. Wilson, 5 Q. B. D. 28; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 13; Lovell v. Beauchamp [1894] A. C. 607; 63 L. J. (Q. B.) 802.

Summary remedy.]—Under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), as amended by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 128 (1), power is given to try summarily, for any indictable offence committed in England except homicide, a child under fourteen if the child's parent or guardian consents to this course (s. 10), and for certain indictable offences a young person over fourteen but under sixteen, if the young person consents (s. 11). Similar provisions are made as to offences in Ireland by 47 & 48 Vict. c. 19, ss. 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, as amended by ss. 133, 134 of the Children Act, 1908.

Persons of unsound mind.]—Every person at the age of discretion is, unless the contrary is proved, presumed by law to be sane, and to be accountable for his actions. R. v. Oxford, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 497; 9 C. & P. 525: R. v. Stokes, 3 C. & K. 185: R. v. Layton, 4 Cox, 149. The presumption in probate cases is the other way, as the person propounding the will must prove the testator competent. Banks v. Goodfellow, L. R. 5 Q. B. 549; 39 L. J. (Q. B.) 237. Therefore a grand jury ought not to ignore a bill of indictment on the ground of the insanity of the accused. R. v. Hodges, 8 C. & P. 195. But if there is an incapacity, or defect of the understanding, as there can be no consent of the will, the act is not punishable as a crime.

This species of non-volition is classified by Coke (Litt. 247) and Hale (1 Hist. P. C. 29) as either natural, accidental, or affected; and as either perpetual or temporary; and is by them reduced to three general heads: 1. A nativitate, vel dementia naturalis; 2. Dementia accidentalis, vel adventitia; 3. Dementia affectata.

1. Dementia naturalis is idiocy, or natural fatuity. An idiot is one who is of non-sane memory from his birth, by a perpetual infirmity, without lucid intervals: Co. Litt. 247; and those are said to be idiots who cannot count twenty, or tell the days of the week, who do not know their fathers or mothers, or the like; but these instances are mentioned as tests of insanity only, and are not always conclusive; and although idiocy or natural fatuity is in general sufficiently apparent, the question, whether idiot or not, is a question of fact triable by a jury, Bac. Abr., Idiot (A); Bro. Abr., Idiot, 4; and ought to be clearly made out, in order to exempt the accused from punishment. R. v. Arnold, 16 St. Tr. 695, 704; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.), 63. A person deaf and dumb from his birth, who has no means of learning to discriminate between right and wrong, or of understanding the penal enactments of the law, as applicable to particular offences, is an idiot; but if it can be shown that he has the use of understanding, which many of that condition discover by signs, then he may be tried, convicted, and punished, although great caution should be observed in such proceedings. 1 Hale, 34; Moore (K. B.) 4, pl. 12; Fitzh. N. B. 233. See R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 102: R. v. Steel, Id. 451: R. v. Dyson [1831] Parke, J., York Spring Ass., 7 C. & P. 305 n.; Matthews' Dig. 410: R. v. Pritchard, 7 C. & P. 303: R. v. Berry, 1 Q. B. D. 447; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 123; 13 Cox, 187; R. v. Governor of Stafford Prison, Ex parte Emery [1909] 2 K. B. 81; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 629.

In the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28), s. 1, idiots are defined as being persons so deeply defective in mind from birth or from an early age as to be unable to guard themselves against common physical dangers.

2. Adventitious insanity, or dementia accidentalis, proceeds from various causes, and is of several kinds or degrees; it is either partial (an insanity upon some one subject, the party being sane upon all others), or total; permanent (usually called madness), or temporary, viz., at certain periods and vicissitudes only, with lucid intervals (usually denominated lunacy). 3 Bac. Abr. 16.

The distinction between lunacy and madness made by Hale and Coke is not now observed, and the one word "insanity" covers both classes of mental aberration.

In the Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5) "lunatic" is defined as meaning an idiot or person of unsound mind (s. 341). But the tests applied for the purposes of that Act are not the same as the tests of insanity from the point of view of criminal responsibility. See Wood-Renton on Lunacy, 5.

3. Dementia affectata. See Drunkenness, post, p. 19.

Where the deprivation of understanding and memory is total, fixed and permanent, it excuses all acts; so likewise a man labouring under adventitious insanity is, during the frenzy, entitled to the same indulgence, in the same degree with one whose disorder is fixed and permanent. Beverley's case, 4 Co. Rep. 125; Co. Litt. 247; 1 Hale, 31. But difficulty arises in distinguishing between a total aberration of intellect and a partial or temporary delusion notwithstanding which the patient may be capable of distinguishing right from wrong; in which case he will be guilty in the eye of the law, and amenable to punishment. Partial insanity, says Lord Hale, is the condition of many, especially of melancholy persons, who generally discover their defects in excessive fear and grief, and yet are not wholly destitute of the use of reason; and this partial insanity seems not to excuse them in the commission of any crime. 1 Hale, 30. Doubtless, he adds, most persons that are felons of themselves, and others, are under a degree of partial insanity when they commit these offences; it is very difficult to define the invisible line that divides perfect from partial insanity; but it must rest upon circumstances duly to be weighed and considered both by the judge and the jury, lest, on the one side, there be a kind of inhumanity towards the defects of human nature, or, on the other side, too great an indulgence given to great crimes. He concludes by suggesting, as the best measure, that such a person as, labouring under melancholy distempers, hath yet as great understanding as ordinarily a child of fourteen years hath, is such a person as can be guilty of treason or felony. 1 Hale, 30, 412.

Considerable uncertainty has been shown by the judges as to the application or acceptance of Hale's rules. In R. v. Arnold, 16 St. Tr. 695, 764, and R. v. Earl Ferrers, 19 St. Tr. 885, it was ruled that a man could not be acquitted on the ground of insanity unless he was totally deprived of understanding and memory, and did not know what he was doing any more than an infant or a brute or wild beast. In R. v. Hadfield, 27 St. Tr. 1281, the test accepted was, that if a man is completely deranged so that he knows not what he does, if he is lost to all sense so that he cannot distinguish good from evil, and cannot judge of the consequences of his actions, then he cannot be guilty of crime, because the will, which to a certain extent is the essence of every crime, is wanting. In R. v. Bellingham, Collinson, Lun. 636, add., and R. v. Bowler, Id. 673; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.), 64, 65, the test applied was whether, when the act was done, the prisoner was capable of distinguishing right from wrong or was under the influence of any delusion which rendered his mind insensible of the nature of his act. Cf. R. v. Parker, Collinson, Lun. 477. And in R. v. Oxford, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 497; 9 C. & P. 525, the ruling was in substance the same. In R. v. Offord, 5 C. & P. 168, it was ruled, that, to excuse a man from punishment upon the ground of insanity, it must be proved distinctly that he was not capable of distinguishing right from wrong at the time he did the act, and did not know it to be an offence against the laws of God and nature. The rule now generally adopted is based on the answers of the judges to the House of Lords given in consequence of Macnaughton's case, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 847; 10 Cl. & F. 200; 8 Eng. Rep. 718. Tindal, C.J., at the trial directed the jury: "If upon balancing the evidence in your minds you should think the prisoner a person capable of distinguishing right from wrong with respect to the act of which he stands charged, he is then a responsible agent." This involves the proposition that if there be a partial degree of reason, a competent use of it sufficient to have restrained those passions which produce the crime; if there be thought and design, a faculty to distinguish the nature of actions, to discern the difference between moral good and evil,—then he will be responsible for his actions. See R. v. Higginson, 1 C. & K. 129. On this direction the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. In consequence of the direction and verdict a discussion took place in the House of Lords, and a series of questions was propounded to and answered by the judges, in relation to the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusions. Below are given the questions asked of the judges and the answers of all except Maule, J., who gave a more qualified answer.

Question 1.—"What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion in respect of one or more particular subjects or persons: as, for instance, where at the time of the commission of the alleged crime the accused knew he was acting contrary to law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit?"

Answer.—"Assuming that your lordships' inquiries are confined to those persons who labour under such partial delusions only, and are not in other respects insane, we are of opinion, that, notwithstanding the party did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit, he is nevertheless punishable, according to the nature of the crime committed, if he knew, at the time of committing such crime, that he was acting contrary to law, by which expression we understand your lordships to mean the law of the land." 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 930. The words italicized appear to have special reference to the cases of Hadfield, Bellingham, and Macnaughton.

Question 2.—"What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury when a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects or persons, is charged with the commission of a crime, (murder, for example,) and insanity is set up as a defence?"

Question 3.—"In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?"

Answers.—To the second and third questions:—"That the jury ought to be told in all cases that every man is presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that, to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. The mode of putting the latter part of the question to the jury on these occasions has generally been, whether the accused, at the time of doing the act, knew the difference between right and wrong, which mode, though rarely, if ever, leading to any mistake with the jury, is not, as we conceive, so accurate when put generally, and in the abstract, as when put as to the party's knowledge of right and wrong in respect to the very act with which he is charged. If the question were to be put as to the knowledge of the accused, solely and exclusively with reference to the law of the land, it might tend to confound the jury, by inducing them to believe that an actual knowledge of the law of the land was essential in order to lead to a conviction, whereas the law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it without proof that he does know it. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do, and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable; and the usual course, therefore, has been to leave the question to the jury, whether the party accused had a sufficient degree of reason to know that he was doing an act that was wrong: and this course, we think, is correct, accompanied with such observations and explanations as the circumstances of each particular case may require." 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 931. The words italicized appear to distinguish between the physical character and legal aspect of the act done. See Mayne, Ind. Cr. Law (4th ed.), p. 178.

Question 4.—"If a person, under an insane delusion, as to the existing facts, commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?"

Answer.—"The answer must, of course, depend on the nature of the delusion; but making the same assumption as we did before, that he labours under such partial delusion only, and is not in other respects insane, we think he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts with respect to which the delusion exists were real. For example, if, under the influence of his delusion, he supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away his life, and he kills that man, as he supposes in self-defence, he would be exempted from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted a serious injury to his character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for such supposed injury, he would be liable to punishment." 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 932. See R. v. Townley, 3 F. & F. 839.

Question 5.—" Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial, and the examination of all the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious, at the time of doing the act, that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time?"

Answer.—" We think the medical man, under the circumstances supposed, cannot in strictness be asked his opinion in the terms above stated, because each of those questions involves the determination of the truth of the facts deposed to, which it is for the jury to decide: and the questions are not mere questions upon a matter of science, in which case such evidence is admissible. But where the facts are admitted or not disputed, and the question becomes substantially one of science only, it may be convenient to allow the question to be put in that general form, though the same cannot be insisted on as a matter of right." 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 932.

These answers have in the main been accepted as laying down the law of England as to the definition of insanity with reference to criminal responsibility. R. v. Townley, 3 F. & F. 839: R. v. Southey, 4 F. & F. 864: R. v. Leigh, 4 F. & F. 915: R. v. Smith, 5 Cr. App. R. 123: R. v. Alexander, 23 Cox, 604: 9 Cr. App. R. 139; and see 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.), 68-82. But they have been the subject of much consideration and criticism by legal and medical writers. (See 2 Stephen, Hist. Cr. Law, 124-186; Mayne, Ind. Crim. Law (4th ed.), pp. 169 et seq.; Wood-Renton on Lunacy, 885, 914.) Sir James Stephen was of opinion (2 Hist. Cr. Law, 186) that Macnaughton's case admitted, as a further exemption, the proposition " that a person should not be punished for any act when he is deprived by disease of the power of controlling his conduct, unless the absence of control has been caused by his own default." So far as this admits the medical theory of uncontrollable impulse, it conflicts with the following cases: R. v. Stokes, 3 C. & K. 185, Rolfe, B.: R. v. Barton, 3 Cox, 275, Parke, B.: R. v. Burton, 3 F. & F. 772, Wightman, J.: R. v. Dove [1884] Bramwell, B.; 3 Stephen Hist. Cr. Law, 429: Wood-Renton, Lunacy, 900; and with the opinions of the judges appointed to report on the Draft Code of 1878; and with recent decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeal. See R. v. Thomas, 7 Cr. App. R. 36: R. v. Coelho, 10 Cr. App. R. 210, at p. 212: R. v. Aughet, 13 Cr. App. R. 101, at p. 106: R. v. Holt, 15 Cr. App. R. 10: R. v. Quarmby, 15 Cr. App. R. 163; but it is supported as a legal proposition by dicta of Denman, C.J., in R. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 525; and Lawrance, J., in R. v. Duncan, Wood-Renton, Lunacy, 901, 908; and see R. v. Hay, 22 Cox, 268; 75 J. P. 480; R. v. Fryer, 24 Cox, 403; R. v. Jolly, 83 J. P. 296, Bray, J.; Tuke, Dict. Psych. Med., vol. 1, p. 314; Journal of Mental Science, vol. 43, p. 420; Mercier, Criminal Responsibility (ed. 1906), p. 167; Taylor, Medical Jurisprudence (7th ed.): Parl. Pap. 1908, c. 4202: and Brown's case [1907] 9 Fraser (Just. Sc.) 67, 76.

Moral insanity—i.e., disorder of the moral rather than of the mental powers

—when a man's intellectual faculties are sound and he knows quite well what he is doing, but his moral sense is affected or diseased, is not yet accepted in England as falling within the rules in Macnaughton's case. R. v. Haynes, 1 F. & F. 666; R. v. Law, 2 F. & F. 836 (and see Wood-Renton, Lunacy, 909): R. v. Burton, 3 F. & F. 772. (a)

The words "nature and quality of the act" in the answer to Questions 2 and 3 do not mean the physical act and the morality of the act respectively, but apply alone to the physical character, and were not intended to distinguish between the physical and the moral aspects of the act. R. v. Codere, 12 Cr. App. R. 21.

Proof of insanity.]—Whether the prisoner was sane or insane in the legal sense at the time the act was committed is a question of fact triable by the jury, and is dependent upon the previous and contemporaneous acts of the party. Evidence of insanity of ancestors or blood relations is admissible. R. v. Ross Tucket, 1 Cox, 103: R. v. Vyse, 3 F. & F. 247. So is evidence of illness exhausting the brain. R. v. Law, 2 F. & F. 836. Medical evidence is not essential. R. v. Dart, 14 Cox, 143. Mere absence of any evidence of motive for a crime is not a sufficient ground upon which to infer mania. R. v. Haynes, 1 F. & F. 666, Bramwell, B.: R. v. Dixon, 11 Cox, 341. A medical witness may be asked whether, assuming certain facts, proved by other witnesses, to be true, they, in his opinion, indicate insanity, but not whether, having

(a) Colonial and American Views.]—The tendency of judges and legislators in the United States and the British Colonies is not to accept the dicta in Macnaughton's case as an adequate definition of insanity with reference to criminal responsibility. In the Queensland Code of 1899 (s. 27), drafted by the Rt. Hon. Sir Samuel Griffith, C.J., of that Colony, after consideration of the English authorities and Continental and American legislation, the view of Sir J. Stephen is in substance adopted. The article runs: "A person is not criminally responsible for an act or omission if at the time of doing the act or making the omission he is in such a state of mental disease or natural mental infirmity as to deprive him of capacity to understand what he is doing or of capacity to control his actions, or of capacity to know that he ought not to do the act or make the omission."

And in R. v. Hay [1899] 16 Cape of Good Hope Rep. (Sup. Ct.) 290, the Rt. Hon. Sir H. de Villiers, C.J., after hearing a full argument dealing with the law of England and the United States and the Roman-Dutch law, laid down as the law of the Cape, and as the tendency of legal opinion elsewhere, the following rules which also in substance coincide with the opinion of Sir J. Stephen:—

"(1) Where the defence of insanity is interposed in a criminal trial the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong is not the sole test of responsibility in all cases.

"(2) In the absence of legislation to the contrary courts of law are bound to recognize the existence of a form of mental disease which prevents the sufferer from controlling his conduct and choosing between right and wrong, though he may have the mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong.

"(3) The defence of insanity is established if it be proved that the accused had by reason of such mental disease lost the power of will to control his conduct in reference to the particular act charged as an offence.

"(4) The capacity of the accused to control his own conduct must be presumed till the contrary is proved."

For a strict statement of the law according to Macnaughton's case, see R. v. Jessamine, 19 Canadian Cr. Cases, 214, Riddell, J.

heard the whole evidence, he is of opinion that the prisoner at the time he committed the alleged act was of unsound mind. Id. R. v. Frances, 4 Cox, 57, Alderson, B., and Cresswell, J.: R. v. Wright, R. & R. 456: R. v. Searle, 1 M. & Rob. 75. But a medical witness, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial and the examination of the witnesses, cannot, in strictness, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious, at the time of doing the act, that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time, because each of these questions involves the determination of the truth of the matter deposed to, which it is for the jury to decide. (See the answer to the fifth question in R. v. Macnaughton, ante, p. 17). Nor can such a witness, although present in court during the whole trial, be asked whether, from the evidence he has heard, he is of opinion that the prisoner at the time he did the act was insane, nor whether the act with which the prisoner is charged was in his opinion an act of insanity, for these are the very points to be decided by the jury. R. v. Frances, supra: R. v. Wright, supra. Counsel will not be allowed, upon a question of insanity, to quote in his address to the jury the opinions of medical writers as expressed in their books. R. v. Crouch, 1 Cox, 94: R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox, 77, Brett, J.

Insanity being matter of defence, the onus of establishing it lies upon the defendant. R. v. Oliver Smith, 6 Cr. App. R. 19. Where evidence to establish insanity has been called for the defence, the prosecution may call rebutting evidence. R. v. Smith, 8 Cr. App. R. 72. And where it is clear from the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution that the defence of insanity will be raised, and it is ascertained that no evidence will be called to establish this defence, the Crown may, before closing its own case, call evidence to negative insanity. R. v. Abramovitch, 76 J. P. 287; 107 L. T. 416; 7 Cr. App. R. 145.

Drunkenness.]—Drunkenness, which produces a perfect though temporary frenzy or insanity (usually denominated dementia affectata or acquired madness), was formerly held not to excuse the commission of any crime; and an offender under the influence of intoxication could derive no privilege from a madness voluntarily contracted, but was regarded as equally answerable to the law as if he had been in the full possession of his faculties at the time; 1 Hale, 32: Co. Litt. 247: 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 6: Reniger v. Fogossa, 1 Plowd. 1. But legal opinion has altered on this subject, and now insanity produced by drunkenness, even though temporary, is a defence just as it is when it is produced by other causes. Evidence of drunkenness which renders the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime charged must be taken into consideration with the other facts proved in order to determine whether or not he had such intent. But evidence of drunkenness falling short of this, and merely establishing that the mind of the accused was affected by drink, so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts. Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard [1920] A. C. 479. In a limited class of case, e.g., in charges of murder directly arising from acts of violence done with intent to do grievous bodily harm, where it is established that the accused was drunk at the time of committing the acts, the presumption that he intended the natural consequences of his act may be rebutted by showing his mind to have been incapable of knowing that what he was doing was dangerous, i.e., likely to inflict serious injury, and the crime thereby reduced to manslaughter. R. v. Meade [1909] 1 K. B. 895; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 476. But this is not a rule of general application, and does not apply to charges of murder where the violent act is done in furtherance of what is in itself a felony of violence, e.g., rape. In such a case drunkenness can be no defence, unless it is of such a degree as to cause incapability of forming the intention to commit the particular felony. So where the accused ravished a girl of thirteen years of age, and in furtherance of the act of rape placed his hand upon her mouth and his thumb upon her throat, thereby causing death by suffocation, and the only defence was drunkenness, it was held to be murder, there being no evidence of a state of drunkenness sufficient to negative the intent to commit the rape. Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard, supra.

There is a distinction between the defence of insanity in the true sense produced by excessive drinking and the defence of drunkenness which produces a condition such that the drunken man's mind becomes incapable of forming a specific intention, and the test of criminal responsibility which is applied to the former should not be applied to the latter defence. Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard, supra (a).

Drunkenness and consequent delusions may assist to make out a defence of provocation or self-defence. R. v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 817: R. v. Pearson, 2 Lew. 144: R. v. Monkhouse, 4 Cox, 55: R. v. Gamlen, 1 F. & F. 90. The Scotch and Irish rulings on this subject are collected in Wood-Renton on Lunacy, 912, 913. If the primary cause of the frenzy is involuntary, or it has become habitual and confirmed, this species of insanity will excuse the offender to the same extent as any other form of insanity. Thus, for instance, if a man through the unskilfulness of his physician, or the contrivance of his enemies, takes that which produces a temporary frenzy, he will not, whilst under the influence of the frenzy, be accountable for his actions. Nor will he be liable to be punished for any crime perpetrated under the influence of insanity which is habitual and fixed, though caused by frequent intoxication, and originally contracted by his own act. 1 Hale, 32. And delirium tremens, caused by drinking, if it produces such a degree of madness, although only temporary, as to render a person incapable of distinguishing right from wrong, relieves him from criminal responsibility for any act committed by him while under its influence. R. v.

(a) See R. v. Egan [1897] 23 Viet. L. R. 159, as to whether and when a woman can be convicted of murder or manslaughter by overlying her child when she has taken it to bed with her while she is drunk (see 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 13). In R. v. Glen, 9 Queensland L. J. 140, a verdict of guilty coupled with a rider that the prisoner was in drink and did not know what he was doing was held to be a finding that he had no animus furandi: cf. R. v. Mathieson [1906] 25 N. Z. L. R. 879; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 89. This point has not been decided in England (R. v. Chapman, 4 Cr. App. R. 54). In R. v. Corbett [1903] Queensland State Rep. 246, Griffith, C.J., said, "Drunkenness is never a defence unless it amounts to unsoundness of mind."

Davis, 14 Cox, 563, Stephen, J. The doctrine of criminal responsibility in case of drunkenness due to alcohol is equally applicable to mental or bodily conditions caused by the drinking of narcotics or non-alcoholic stimulants, or exciting drugs, or their hypodermic injection. 1 Hale, 32.

The Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60), provides for reformatory treatment of persons convicted on indictment who are habitual drunkards. The term "habitual drunkard" means "a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lunacy, is notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at times dangerous to himself or herself or to others, or incapable of managing himself or herself, and his or her affairs." See Eaton v. Best [1909] 1 K. B. 632; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 425. This definition appears to apply only to the habitual use of alcohol, and not to include the use of narcotics. See Wood-Renton, Lunacy, 954. The Act of 1898 does not appear to accept the view that drunkenness falling short of insanity is a defence on a charge of crime, but gives the courts latitude in the treatment of crimes directly or indirectly due to drunkenness, by permitting the reformative sentence as an alternative to the ordinary punishment for crime. Cf. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 26, as to offences by habitual drunkards against persons under sixteen.

Compulsion or coercion.]—The same principle which excuses those who have no mental will in the perpetration of an offence, protects from the punishment of the law those who commit crimes in subjection to the power of others, and not as the result of an uncontrolled free action proceeding from themselves. 4 Bl. Com. 27 : 1 Hale, 44, 51. Thus, if A. by force takes the hand of B. in which is a weapon, and therewith kills C., A. is guilty of murder, but B. is excused; but if a merely moral force is used, as threats, duress of imprisonment, or even an assault to the peril of his life, in order to compel him to kill C., it is no legal excuse. 1 Hale, 434; 1 East, P. C. 225. M'Growther's case, Fost. 13; 18 St. Tr. 391 : R. v. Gordon, 1 East, P. C. 71 : R. v. Tyler, 8 C. & P. 616. This protection also exists in the public and private relations of society : public, as between subject and prince, obedience to existing laws being a sufficient extenuation of civil guilt before a municipal tribunal; and private, proceeding from the matrimonial subjection of the wife to the husband, from which the law presumes coercion, which, in many cases, excuses the wife from the consequences of criminal misconduct. The private relations which exist between parent and child, and master and servant, will not, however, excuse or extenuate the commission of any crime, of whatever denomination; for the command is void in law, and can protect neither the commander nor the instrument. 1 Hale, 44, 516. Obedience to usurped power is an excuse only where actual physical compulsion is used or directly available. See M'Growther's case, supra: Sir H. Vane's case, 6 St. Tr. 119; Kel. (J.) 14 : Axtell's case, Kel. (J.) 13.

Married women.—The mere fact that two persons jointly charged with crime are married does not create any presumption that the wife was coerced by the husband to commit the crime. Brown v. Att.-Gen. of N.Z. [1898] A. C. 234, 237; 67 L. J. (P. C.) 7 : R. v. Mary Baines [1900] 69 L. J. Q. B. 681; 19 Cox,

524; 64 J. P. 408. But, as a general rule, if a crime be committed by a feme covert in the presence of her husband, the law presumes that she acted under his immediate coercion, and excuses her from punishment; 1 Hale, 45, 516; 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 9; R. v. Caroubi, 23 Cox, 177; 76 J. P. 262; 28 T. L. R. 248; R. v. Green, 78 J. P. 170; 30 T. L. R. 170; 9 Cr. App. R. 288. This protection, however, is not to be allowed in crimes which are mala in se, and prohibited by the law of nature, nor in such as are heinous in their character, or dangerous in their consequences; 1 Hale, 45, 47, 48; 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 11; 4 Bl. Com. 29; 1 Harg. St. Tr. 28: R. v. Squire, 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 93, 912. It seems not to apply to murder, R. v. Manning, 2 C. & K. 903, n.: R. v. Alison, 8 C. & P. 418; but has been applied to burglary and larceny (R. v. Knight, 1 C. & P. 116); to forgery (R. v. Hughes, 2 Lew. 229); to felonious assaults (R. v. Smith, Dears. & B. 553); and to robbery (R. v. Torpey, 12 Cox, 45). In some cases the presumption has been extended to misdemeanors: e.g., uttering base coin, R. v. Connolly, 2 Lew. 229; Matth. Dig. 262: R. v. Price, 8 C. & P. 19; and see R. v. Torpey, supra. But the contrary appears to have been held by all the judges in R. v. Cruse, 8 C. & P. 541; 2 Mood. 53; and this is the prevailing opinion. See R. v. Ingram, 1 Salk. 384. So a married woman may be indicted jointly with her husband for keeping a bawdy-house, R. v. Williams, 1 Salk. 384; 10 Mod. 63; or a gaming-house, R. v. Dixon, 10 Mod. 335; for these are offences connected with the government of the house, in which the wife has a principal share. 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 12. So also they may be jointly convicted of an assault. R. v. Cruse, supra. And if, in the absence of her husband, the wife commits an offence, even by his order or procurement, her coverture will be no excuse; Anon., 2 East, P. C. 559: R. v. Morris, R. & R. 270; 2 Leach, 1096; 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 11; even though he appears at the very moment after the commission of the offence; and no subsequent act of his, though it may render him an accessory to the felony of his wife, can be referred to what was done by his wife in his absence. R. v. Hughes, 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 94, 99; 2 Lew. 229. This presumption of coercion of the wife by the husband may be rebutted by evidence; though it is doubtful whether a confession by a wife in presence of her husband should be received as such evidence. R. v. Laugher, 2 C. & K. 225. And if it appears that the wife was principally instrumental in the commission of the crime, acting voluntarily, and not by constraint of her husband, although he was present and concurred, she will be guilty and liable to punishment. 1 Hale, 516: R. v. Cohen, 11 Cox, 99; 16 W. R. 941: R. v. Caroubi, supra. Thus, a married woman who swore falsely that she was next of kin to a person dying intestate, and so procured administration to the effects, was held responsible for the offence, though her husband was with her when she took the oath. R. v. Dicks, 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 97. So where a husband delivered a threatening letter ignorantly, as the agent of the wife, she alone was held to be punishable. R. v. Hammond, 1 Leach, 444. And where the wife in the absence of her husband induced the prosecutor by false representations to meet her at a place, where the husband, the wife being present but taking no active part, by threats of violence induced the prosecutor to execute a valuable security, and the husband and wife were jointly indicted for that offence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 48 (rep.), Brett, J., directed the jury that if they should be of opinion that the wife in the husband's absence took an independent part in carrying out the crime, the fact of her being the wife would not absolve her. R. v. John, 13 Cox, 100. Where stolen goods are received by a married woman in the absence of her husband, and are concealed in his house, without his knowledge, she may be indicted and punished for the offence; but if the husband's ignorance of the transaction is not satisfactorily proved, the law will, in most cases, impute the receiving to him. Dalt. c. 157. Where husband and wife were convicted jointly of receiving stolen goods, it was held that the conviction of the wife could not be supported, though she had been more active than her husband, because it had not been left to the jury to say whether she received the goods in the absence of her husband. R. v. Archer, 1 Mood. 143; R. v. Matthews, 1 Den. 596; 4 Cox, 214: R. v. McClarens, 3 Cox, 425. See R. v. Wardroper, Bell, 249; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 116. But in R. v. Mary Baines (69 L. J. Q. B. 681; 19 Cox, 524; 64 J. P. 408), where a husband and wife were jointly indicted for receiving stolen goods, and there was evidence of a separate receiving by the wife in the absence of her husband, it was held that she was properly convicted in accordance with the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 94 (rep.). And it is submitted that a married woman is indictable for receiving since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), if she knowingly deals with goods stolen by her husband in a business carried on by her under her own name. At common law she is not indictable for receiving from her husband goods stolen by him. R. v. Brooks, Dears. 184: 22 L. J. (M. C.) 121; and see R. v. Archer, 1 Mood. 143. Husband and wife were jointly charged with felonious wounding, with intent to disfigure, and to do grievous bodily harm. The jury found that the wife acted under the coercion of the husband, and that she did not personally inflict any violence on the prosecutor. On this finding the wife was held entitled to an acquittal. R. v. Smith, Dears. & B. 553; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 204. And where the prisoner, a married woman, was indicted together with her husband, who was not in custody, for a robbery with violence, in which she had herself taken a very active part, and the jury returned as their verdict that they were of opinion that the whole matter was pre-arranged by the husband, and that the wife acted under his coercion and control at the time, it was held to amount to a verdict of not guilty. R. v. Torpey, 12 Cox, 45. Where upon an indictment for robbery with violence, D. and his wife were found guilty, the jury finding, however, that the wife had acted under her husband's compulsion, this was held to amount to a verdict of not guilty as to the wife. R. v. Dykes, 15 Cox, 771, Stephen, J. It has frequently been said in recent cases that the doctrine of coercion by the husband should not be extended. R. v. Court, 7 Cr. App. R. 127, 129; R. v. Green, 78 J. P. 170; 9 Cr. App. R. 228. Husband and wife cannot alone be found guilty of conspiracy, for they are considered in law as one person, and are presumed to have but one will. 1 Hawk, c. 72, s. 8.

If a married woman incites her husband to the commission of a felony, she is an accessory before the fact; 1 Hale, 516; 2 Hawk. c. 29, s. 34: R. v. Manning, 2 C. & K. 903, n.; but she cannot be treated as an accessory after the fact for receiving her husband, knowing that he has committed treason or felony; 1 Hale, 47 : R. v. Goode, 1 C. & K. 185; nor for concealing a felon jointly with her husband; Id.; 1 Hawk. c. 1, s. 10. And she is not answerable for her husband's breach of duty, however fatal, though she is privy to his misconduct, if no duty is cast upon her, and she is merely passive. R. v. Squire, 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.), 93, 912.

If a married woman, indicted jointly with her husband, is described in the indictment as his wife, she need not prove her marriage, but will be entitled to protection if it appears that she acted under his coercion; R. v. Knight, 1 C. & P. 116; but the mere description will be no ground for dismissing the indictment as to the wife, for the indictment is joint and several, according to the facts as they may appear. 1 Hale, 46. If she is described as a single woman, she must prove her marriage; R. v. Jones, Kel. (J.) 37; and such evidence must be given as will satisfy the jury of her marriage, although it is not absolutely necessary that the actual marriage should be proved. R. v. Atkinson, 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 100 : R. v. Hassall, 2 C. & P. 434 : R. v. Woodward, 8 C. & P. 561 : R. v. McGinnes, 11 Cox, 391. Evidence of cohabitation and reputation will be sufficient. Morris v. Miller, 4 Burr. 2057, Lord Mansfield, C.J.

Ignorance of law.]—Ignorance of the law will not excuse from the consequences of guilt any person who has capacity to understand the law. 1 Hale, 42 : R. v. Crawshaw, Bell, 303; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 8 Cox, 375. If the offence is committed in England, a foreigner cannot be excused because he does not know our law. R. v. Esop, 7 C. & P. 456; R. v. Barronet, 1 E. & B. 1; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 25. And the same applies if it is committed in an English ship on the high seas, which is in law part of the territory of England. R. v. Lopez, R. v. Sattler, Dears. & B. 525; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 48. Where, however, a defendant was indicted for maliciously shooting at A. B. upon the high seas, and the offence was perpetrated within a few weeks after the passing of 39 G. 3, c. 37, and before notice of it could have reached the place where the offence was committed, the judges held, that as he could not have been tried before that Act was passed, and as he could not have heard of it, he ought to be pardoned. R. v. Bailey, R. & R. 1 : and see Burns v. Nowell, 5 Q. B. D. 444, 454.

Ignorance or mistake of fact.]—Ignorance or mistake of fact may in some cases be allowed as an excuse for the inadvertent commission of a crime, where the accused acted under an honest and reasonable belief in a state of things which if true would have justified the act done. "At common law an honest and reasonable belief in the existence of facts, which if true would make the act for which the prisoner is indicted an innocent act, has always been held to be a good defence. This doctrine is embodied in the somewhat uncouth maxim, actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. Honest and reasonable mistake stands in fact on the same footing as absence of the reasoning faculty as in infancy, or perversion of that faculty as in lunacy." R. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168, 181; 58 L. J. M. C. 97, Cave, J. For instance, if a man, intending to kill a thief in his own house, kills one of his own family, he will be guilty of no offence. 1 Hale, 42, 43; 4 Bl. Com. 27; R. v. Levett, Cro. Car. 538 cit. But this rule proceeds upon a supposition that the original intention was lawful; for if an unforeseen consequence ensues from an act which was in itself unlawful, and in its original nature wrong and mischievous, the actor is criminally responsible for whatever consequences may ensue. 4 Bl. Com. 27.

"Mens rea." (a)]—The general rule of law is that a person cannot be convicted in a proceeding of a criminal nature unless it can be shown that he had a guilty mind; Chisholm v. Doulton, 22 Q. B. D. 736; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 183: R. v. Twose, 14 Cox, 327; but it is impossible now to apply the maxim as to "mens rea" generally to all statutes, and it is necessary to look at the object and terms of each Act to see whether and how far knowledge or a particular intent is of the essence of the offence created; Cundy v. Lecocq, 13 Q. B. D. 207; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 125, Stephen, J.; Craies on Statute Law (4th ed.), p. 433; Maxwell on Statutes (5th ed.), p. 157. It has been held that it is not necessary to prove that a defendant charged with assaulting a constable in the execution of his duty knew that the constable was so acting; R. v. Forbes, 10 Cox, 362, Gurney, Recorder. Where the defendant was indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 55, for unlawfully taking an unmarried girl under the age of sixteen years out of the possession and against the will of her father, it was held to be no defence that the defendant believed on good grounds that the girl was above sixteen years of age. R. v. Prince, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 122. All the judges in that case agreed on the general principle that an honest and reasonable mistake of facts furnishes a good defence for an act committed under such mistake, and which would otherwise be criminal, but they all, except Lord Esher, considered that the object of the legislature being to prevent a scandalous and wicked invasion of parental rights, it was to be supposed that they intended that the wrongdoer should act at his peril. R. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168, 190, Stephen, J.: and see R. v. Dennis, 69 J. P. 256. The majority of the judges seem to have held that in order to make the defence of mistake of fact available in that case (R. v. Prince), the accused must have proved the existence in his mind of an honest and reasonable belief in the existence of circumstances which, if they had really existed, would have made his act not only not criminal but also not immoral. R. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168, 181, Cave, J. A defendant was convicted under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 44 (rep., but containing a provision similar to 53 & 54 Vict. c. 5, s. 315), of receiving two or more lunatics into her house, not being a registered

(a) As to statutory offences the true rule of English law seems to be correctly stated in Art. 23 of the Queensland Code of 1899, except as to public nuisances.

'Subject to the express provisions of this Code relating to negligent acts and omissions, a person is not criminally responsible for an act or omission which occurs independently of the exercise of his will or for an event which occurs by accident.

"Unless the intention to cause a particular result is declared to be an element of the offence constituted in whole or in part by an act or omission, the result intended to be caused by an act or omission is immaterial.

"Unless otherwise expressly declared, the motive by which a person is induced to do or omit to do an act or to form an intention is immaterial so far as regards criminal responsibility."

asylum or hospital, or a house duly licensed under the above Act, or under any previous Act, but it was specially found by the jury who convicted that, though the persons so received were lunatics, the defendant honestly, and on reasonable grounds, believed that they were not lunatics. It was held that, having regard to the scope of the Act, and the object for which it was apparently passed, such mistaken belief was immaterial, and that the conviction was right. R. v. Bishop, 5 Q. B. D. 259; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 45. But where the prisoner was convicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 57, of bigamy, having gone through the ceremony of marriage within seven years after she had been deserted by her husband, and the jury found that at the time of the second marriage she, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, believed her husband to be dead, it was held on a case reserved by the court for the consideration of all the judges, that a bonâ fide belief by the prisoner on reasonable grounds in the death of the husband at the time of the second marriage was a good defence, and that the conviction was wrong. R. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 97. The ratio decidendi of this decision, and the distinction between this case and that of R. v. Prince, ante, p. 25, seems to be contained in the following words of the judgment of Stephen, J., 23 Q. B. D. at p. 191—"The conduct of the woman convicted was not in the smallest degree immoral, it was perfectly natural and legitimate. Assuming the facts to be as she supposed, the infliction of more than a nominal punishment on her would have been a scandal. Why, then, should the legislature be held to have wished to subject her to punishment at all?" It is not, perhaps, easy to draw a distinction between R. v. Tolson and R. v. Bishop, supra, but the same learned judge, at the page last cited, explained the decision in R. v. Bishop as having gone on "the scope of the Act constituting the offence, and the object for which it was apparently passed," cf. Cundy v. Lecocq, supra; and as to R. v. Tolson, see R. v. Wheat and R. v. Stocks [1921] 2 K. B. 119.

This question has been the subject of numerous decisions with regard to offences triable summarily against the statutes relating to licensing. Bond v. Evans, 21 Q. B. SECT. 3.

THE FORM OF AN INDICTMENT.

AN indictment consists of three parts: the commencement, the statement of the offence, and the particulars of the offence. The caption is not part of it. See post, p. 61.

By the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 3—(1) "Every indictment shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains, a statement of the specific offence or offences with which the accused person is charged, together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the charge. (2) Notwithstanding any rule of law or practice, an indictment shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, not be open to objection in respect of its form or contents if it is framed in accordance with the rules under this Act."

Drawing the indictment.]—In ordinary cases, upon furnishing the clerk of assize, clerk of arraigns, or clerk of the indictments at the assizes, or the clerk of the peace at sessions, with the particulars of the offence, he will draw the indictment; but in cases where more than ordinary care may be requisite in framing the indictment, it is better to get it drawn by counsel.

"Where it appears to the court that an indictment contains unnecessary matter, or is of unnecessary length, or is materially defective in any respect, the court may make such order as to the payment of that part of the costs of the prosecution which has been incurred by reason of the indictment so containing unnecessary matter, or being of unnecessary length, or being materially defective as the court thinks fit." 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 6.

"If any clerk of assize, clerk of the crown, clerk of the peace, clerk of the indictments, or other proper officer or their clerks or deputies, shall draw any bill of indictment defective, they shall draw new bills without demanding any fee or reward whatsoever, or forfeit the sum of £5 with full costs of suit." 10 W. 3, c. 12 (c. 23, Ruffhead), s. 8.

RULES UNDER INDICTMENTS ACT, 1915.

"The rules contained in the First Schedule to this Act with respect to indictments shall have effect as if enacted in this Act, but those rules may be added to, varied, or annulled by further rules made by the rule committee under this Act." 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 1.

Sect. 2. Powers of rule committee.]—(1) There shall be established for the purposes of this Act a rule committee consisting of the Lord Chief Justice of England for the time being, and of a judge of the High Court, a chairman of quarter sessions, a recorder, a clerk of assize, a clerk of the peace, and another person having experience in criminal procedure, appointed in each case by the Lord Chief Justice.

(2) The rule committee shall have power from time to time, subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor, to make rules varying or annulling the rules contained in the First Schedule to this Act and to make further rules with respect to the matters dealt with in those rules, and those rules shall have effect subject to any modifications or additions so made.

(3) Any rules made by the rule committee shall be laid, as soon as may be, before both Houses of Parliament, and, if within forty days on which either House has sat since the rules were so laid before the House a petition is presented to his Majesty by that House praying that the rules or any part of them may be annulled, his Majesty may thereupon by Order in Council annul the same, and the same shall thenceforth be void, but without prejudice to the validity of anything done thereunder.

(4) The term of office of any person who is a member of the committee by virtue of appointment shall be such as may be specified in the appointment.

Rule 1. Material, &c. for indictments.]—(1) An indictment may be on parchment or durable paper, and may be either written or printed, or partly written and partly printed.

(2) Each sheet on which an indictment is set out shall be not more than 12 and not less than 6 inches in length, and not more than 14 and not less than 12 inches in width, and if more than one sheet is required, the sheets shall be fastened together in book form.

(3) A proper margin not less than 3 inches in width shall be kept on the left-hand side of each sheet.

(4) Figures and abbreviations may be used in an indictment for expressing anything which is commonly expressed thereby.

(5) There shall be endorsed on the back of an indictment the name of every witness examined or intended to be examined by the grand jury, and the foreman of the grand jury shall write his initials against the name of each witness so examined.

(6) An indictment shall not be open to objection by reason only of any failure to comply with this rule.

1. THE COMMENCEMENT.

Rule 2. The commencement of the indictment shall be in the following form :—

The King v. A.B.

COURT OF TRIAL [e.g., Central Criminal Court, [or] In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, [or] Durham County Assizes held at Durham, [or] Hants Quarter Sessions held at Winchester].

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

A.B. is charged with the following offence [offences] :—

How stated.]—Prior to the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), the statute law relating to venue was expressed as follows by 14 & 15 Vict.

c. 100 (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851), sect. 23.]—"It shall not be necessary to state any venue in the body of any indictment; but the county, city, or other jurisdiction named in the margin thereof shall be taken to be the venue for all the facts stated in the body of such indictment:

"Provided that, in cases where local description is, or hereafter shall be, required such local description shall be given in the body of the indictment;

"And provided also that where an indictment for an offence committed in the county of any city or town corporate shall be preferred at the assizes of the adjoining county, such county of the city or town shall be deemed the venue, and may either be stated in the margin of the indictment, with or without the name of the county in which the offender is to be tried, or be stated in the body of the indictment by way of venue."

By sect. 24 of the same Act it was provided: "No indictment for any offence shall be held insufficient . . . for want of a proper and perfect venue. . . ." [This re-enacted and extended 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 20, which took away the right to object by motion in arrest of judgment, or by writ of error, for the want of a proper or perfect venue. See R. v. Albert, 5 Q. B. 37; Dav. & M. 89; 12 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 117; R. v. Stowell, 5 Q. B. 44; Dav. & M. 189; 12 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 111; R. v. Gregory, 7 Q. B. 274; 14 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 82; R. v. O'Connor, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 935; 5 Q. B. 16.]

These provisions have now been repealed by the Indictments Act, 1915, and the venue is now sufficiently indicated by stating the court of trial at the commencement of an indictment in manner provided by Rule 2, ante, p. 28.

Definition.]—Venue is the common law term for the neighbourhood (visne) from which the jurors are to come (venire). At common law only a jury of the district in which the offence was committed could convict of it. "The old jurisdiction of counties was local; they were like different kingdoms. There was no jurisdiction out of the county, no process out of it." R. v. Weston, 4 Burr. 2507, 2511, Lord Mansfield. Venue or local jurisdiction is quite distinct from national or territorial jurisdiction. Moçambique Co. v. Brit. South Africa Co. [1893] A. C. 602; R. v. Ellis [1899] 1 Q. B. 230; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 103; Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Basle Chemical Works [1898] A. C. 200, 204; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 141.

The Indictments Act, 1915, has expressly left the law or practice relating to jurisdiction untouched. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 8 (1). See post, p. 60.

General rule.]—The courts of common law had apart from statute no power to try any offence not committed within the body of the realm, i.e., their criminal jurisdiction was territorial and not personal. Macleod v. Att.-Gen. of N.S.W. [1891] A. C. 455; 60 L. J. (P. C.) 55; Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Rajah of Faridkote [1894] A. C. 670. Apart from the obsolete jurisdiction of the constable and marshal, no person can be tried under English law for an offence committed on land abroad, except under the authority of a statute. See R. v. Lewis, Dears. & B. 182; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 104; 7 Cox, 277.

The jurisdiction of the courts of British colonies is limited to offences committed within their territories, unless imperial legislation, including the provisions of their Constitution Acts, otherwise provides. Macleod v. Att.-Gen. for N.S.W. [1891] A. C. 455. (a). 60 L. J. (P. C.) 55.

Statutory exceptions.]—To the general rule there are many statutory exceptions. In some statutes jurisdiction is given over offences not triable at common law. In others, latitude is given as to the place of trial of existing offences.

Treason abroad.]—In indictments for high treason or misprision committed out of the realm, the venue might, before the passing of the Local Government Act, 1888, be laid in Middlesex if the trial was to be "where the King's Bench shall sit and be kept;" or by special commission in such shire as the King should appoint. 35 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1. But in consequence of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89, sub-s. 3, and R. S. C., Jan., 1903, the venue in indictments for treason abroad, if the trial was to take place in the King's Bench Division and not before a special commission, was laid in "the county of the county of London and the county of Middlesex." See R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 744; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 167; R. v. Casement [1917] 1 K. B. 98; 86 L. J. (K. B.) 467. 35 H. 8, c. 2, applies to treasons committed in the Isle of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Sark, or Alderney, or in foreign possessions which, although parts of the dominions of the British Crown, are not parts of the realm of England. See 3 Co. Inst. 11, 111; 4 Co. Inst. 124.

Murder.]—"Where any murder or manslaughter shall be committed on land out of the United Kingdom, whether within the King's dominions or without, and whether the person killed were a subject of his Majesty or not, every offence committed by any subject of his Majesty, in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined and punished in any county or place in England or Ireland in which such person shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been actually committed in that county or place." 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 9. A British subject, therefore, who, in a foreign country, within the dominion of a foreign power, murders either a British subject or a foreigner is triable in England under the express provisions of this section. See R. v. Azzopardi, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 21; 2 Mood. 288; 1 C. & K. 203; R. v. Sawyer, R. & R. 294. In R. v. Bernard, 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 887; 1 F. & F. 240, the question was raised whether, under 9 G. 4, c. 31, s. 7 (rep.), a foreigner resident in England could be indicted as accessory (by means of acts done by him in England) to a murder committed by a foreigner on foreigners in France; the prisoner, however, was acquitted. Such a case is now covered by 24 and 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4.

(a) See R. v. Hilaire [1903] 3 N. S. W. State Rep. 228: Re Caruchet, 9 Queensland L. J. 122, Griffith, C.J.: Re Bigamy Law of Canada, 27 Canada, 461.

Where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt upon the sea, or at any place out of England or Ireland, shall die in England or Ireland; or being feloniously stricken, etc., in England or Ireland, shall die of the same at sea, or at any place out of England or Ireland, the offence (whether in the case of principal or accessory) may be dealt with, etc., in the county or place in England or Ireland, in which the death, stroke, poisoning, or hurt happened. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 10. Where a man in a boat at a short distance from the shore was shot by a person on the shore, and died instantly, it was held that the stroke and death were both upon the high seas, and therefore triable under 28 H. 8, c. 15 (post, p. 32), and not under 2 G. 2, c. 21 (rep.) R. v. Coombes, 1 Leach, 388; 1 East, P. C. 367; and see 1 Hawk. c. 37, s. 17.

Burning, etc., King's ships.]—In indictments for burning or destroying the King's ships, magazines, etc., out of the realm (i.e., outside Great Britain), the venue may be laid in any county within the realm. 12 G. 3, c. 24, s. 2.

Offences by colonial governors, etc.]—Oppressions, crimes, and offences committed abroad by colonial governors, lieutenant governors, deputy governors, or commanders in chief, shall be inquired of, heard and determined in the King's Bench Division in England, or before such commissioners and in such county of this realm as shall be assigned by his Majesty's Commission. 11 W. 3, c. 12 (11 & 12 W. 3, Ruffhead). Picton's case, 30 St. Tr. 225; R. v. Eyre, L. R. 3 Q. B. 487; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 159.

Offences in India.]—Misdemeanors committed in India may be tried in the King's Bench Division in England. 13 G. 3, c. 63. And in indictments for offences committed by persons employed in any public service "out of Great Britain" the venue may be laid in Middlesex. 42 G. 3, c. 85, s. 1. See R. v. Shawe, 5 M. & Sel. 403. The counties of London and Middlesex are now one for purposes of trial. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89; R. S. C., Jan., 1903.

Offences against Foreign Enlistment Act.]—Offences against the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), may be tried in any place where the offence was wholly or partly committed, or in any place within the King's dominions where the accused is: and the offence may be averred generally to have been committed in his Majesty's dominions, and the marginal venue may be the county, city or place where the trial is held. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 90, ss. 16, 17; R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 218; 18 Cox, 392.

Offences against Official Secrets Act.]—Offences against the Official Secrets Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28), alleged to have been committed out of the United Kingdom, may by s. 10 of that Act be tried in the High Court of Justice in England, or the Central Criminal Court.

Offences in the Admiralty jurisdiction.]—Apart from statute, offences in the Admiralty jurisdiction were triable by the admiral according to the civil law and not according to the course of the common law, and controversies occasionally arose as to whether the offence was committed within the jurisdiction of the admiral or within the body of the realm. In R. v. Coombes, 1 Leach, 388, it was held that where a shot fired on land killed a man on the sea the offence was triable in the Admiralty jurisdiction. This decision is criticised in Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Basle Chemical Works [1898] A. C. 200, 204; 67 L. J. (Ch.) 141, Halsbury, L.C. The distinction and difficulties are now to a great extent removed by legislation. By 28 H. 8, c. 15, s. 1, it was provided that treasons, felonies, robberies, murders and confederacies thereafter committed in or upon the sea, or in any other haven, river, creek, or place, whereon the admiral had or pretended to have jurisdiction should be inquired of, etc., in such shores and places in the realm as should be limited for that purpose by the King's commission. This mode of trial has been extended to the following offences if committed on the high seas :—Acts of hostility by a subject of this realm against a subject at sea under colour of a foreign commission; 11 W. 3, c. 7, s. 8; 18 G. 2, c. 30, s. 1; see R. v. Evans, 2 East, P. C. 798 : forcibly boarding a merchant ship, and throwing over or destroying the goods; 8 G. 1, c. 24, s. 1 : trading with pirates or fitting out a vessel for that purpose; 8 G. 1, c. 24, s. 1 : master or seaman running away with the ship, goods, etc., or laying violent hands on or confining the master, or making a revolt in the ship, etc.; 11 W. 3, c. 7, s. 9; see R. v. M'Gregor, 1 C. & K. 249: dealing in slaves upon the high seas, or in any place where the admiral has jurisdiction, except as therein mentioned; 5 G. 4, c. 113; see R. v. Zulueta, 1 C. & K. 215 : and to the offence of being accessory (before or after the fact, on land, or at sea) to piracy. 11 W. 3, c. 7, s. 10. See 8 G. 1, c. 24, s. 3. The offences above mentioned, when a commission was issued for their trial under 28 H. 8, c. 15, were inquired of, tried, and determined before the judge of the Admiralty Court, and two of the judges of the common-law courts, under a commission of oyer and terminer : and, in the indictment, no county was inserted in the margin as venue, but instead of it merely the words "Admiralty of England." According to Coke, rivers in this country to the furthest point of land next the sea, creeks and arms of the sea within the body of a county, and the sea-shore between the high and low watermarks when the tide is out, are not within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or within the meaning of the term "high seas." See Constable's case, 5 Co. Rep. 107; Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 4, p. 10; Admiralty case, 12 Co. Rep. 79. According to Hale the Admiralty Court had concurrent jurisdiction in cases of murder and maiming, and exclusive jurisdiction in cases of piracy jure gentium, which is not a common-law offence. 2 Hale, 18. Hale's view is now accepted. See R. v. Bruce, R. & R. 243; 2 Leach, 1093 : R. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 63, 76; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 17; 13 Cox, 403 : Mayne, Ind. Cr. L. [4th ed.] p. 57. The test whether an arm of the sea is within the body of a county is said to be, whether a man on one shore can see what is being done on the other. 2 East, P. C. 804. This has been held to include the Bristol Channel (R. v. Cunningham, Bell, 72; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 66) : Milford Haven (R. v. Bruce, 2 Leach, 1093) : and Roundstone Bay, Galway (R. v. Mannion, 2 Cox, 158 (C. C. R. Ir.)). And see R. v. Schwab [1907] 12 Canada Cr. Cas. 539. As to offences by foreigners on foreign ships within British territorial waters, see 41 & 42 Vict. c. 73 (post, p. 34).

The jurisdiction of the Admiralty extends over British ships, not only on the high seas, (a) but also in foreign rivers, below the bridges, where the tide ebbs and flows, and where great ships go, although the municipal authorities of the foreign country may have concurrent jurisdiction. R. v. Anderson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 161; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 12. As to jurisdiction when a ship is in dock, see U. S. v. Hamilton, 1 Mason, 152, Story, J. If great ships go to the place, proof that the tide ebbs and flows is unnecessary. R. v. Allen, 1 Mood. 494. The jurisdiction extends to all persons on board the ship whether British subjects or foreigners. R. v. Lopez: R. v. Sattler, Dears. & B. 525; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 48: R. v. Lesley, Bell, 220; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 97. And therefore where a foreigner was convicted at the Central Criminal Court of manslaughter, committed on board a British ship in the river Garonne, in France, about 35 miles from the sea, and about 300 yards from the nearest shore, within the flow and ebb of the tide, the conviction was upheld. R. v. Anderson, supra. So also where a larceny was committed by a person unknown on board a British ship lying afloat in the ordinary course of trading, in the open river at Rotterdam, moored to the quay, in a place where large vessels usually lay, and 16 or 18 miles from the sea, between which and the ship there were no bridges, and within the ebb and flow of the tide, it was held that the larceny took place within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, and therefore that a person who afterwards, in England, received the property so stolen could be tried at the Central Criminal Court, as the thief himself, even if he had been a foreigner and not one of the crew, might have been so tried. R. v. Carr, 10 Q. B. D. 76; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 12. The liability of a foreigner is not affected by the fact that he was in the first instance brought illegally and by force on board the ship, unless the offence was committed merely for the purpose of freeing himself from such unlawful restraint. Therefore, where the defendant, a foreigner, having committed a crime in England, had fled to Hamburg, and was there arrested and forced on board an English ship, and while he was kept in custody on board such ship on the high seas, killed the officer who had arrested him, not for the purpose of escaping, but of malice prepense, it was held that, even assuming such arrest and detention to be illegal, he was guilty of murder. R. v. Sattler, supra. Where on a trial for maliciously wounding on the high seas, it was stated by three witnesses that the vessel, on board of which the offence was alleged to have been committed, was a British ship of Shields, and that she was sailing under the British flag, but no proof was given of the registration or ownership of the vessel; it was held that the court had jurisdiction, as the evidence was sufficient to prove that the vessel was British, and that being so, the court would have jurisdiction even if it had appeared that the vessel was not registered. R. v. Seberg, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 264; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 133: R. v. Allen, 10 Cox, 405; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 98.

In R. v. Bjornsen, L. & C. 545; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 180; 10 Cox, 74, the prisoner was one of the crew of a ship built in Holstein, whence she sailed to London. All the officers and crew were foreigners; R., the registered sole owner, was an alien born, but described in the register as "of London, merchant." The ship sailed from London under the British flag. While on the voyage the prisoner killed the master on board the vessel when several thousand miles from England, and 200 miles from land. On the trial of the prisoner for murder these facts were proved, and no evidence was given that R. had been naturalized or had obtained letters of denization; under these circumstances it was held that there was no evidence that the ship was British, and that consequently the prisoner could not be convicted in England. Nor can a foreigner be indicted in this country for casting away a foreign ship in foreign waters, if the act do not amount to piracy; but he may be indicted here for a conspiracy in this country to commit such an offence, provided the conspiracy be not limited to doing the act abroad. R. v. Kohn, 4 F. & F. 68, Willes, J.

A foreigner who kills another foreigner or an Englishman on the high seas on board a foreign ship, is not amenable to the law of England, or triable in England, except in a case of piracy. R. v. Lewis, Dears. & B. 182; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 104; R. v. De Mattos, 7 C. & P. 458; R. v. Depardo, 1 Taunt. 26; R. & R. 134; 9 R. R. 693. This rule applies where the ship has been illegally seized as a slaver by a British vessel. R. v. Serva, 1 Den. 104; 2 C. & K. 53; 1 Cox, 298. The foreigner is liable to extradition where the ship belongs to a state as to which the Extradition Acts have been applied. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, s. 16. A foreigner was indicted at the Central Criminal Court for manslaughter under the following circumstances. He was in command of a foreign ship, passing within three miles of the shore of England on a voyage to a foreign port; and whilst within that distance his ship ran into a British ship and sank her, whereby a passenger on board the latter ship was drowned. The facts of the case were such as, apart from the question of jurisdiction, to amount to manslaughter by English law. It was held by the majority of a court of 13 judges that the offence was not committed on board the British ship, and that there was no jurisdiction in the courts of this country to try the prisoner, a foreigner passing the English coast on the high seas in a foreign ship, though the occurrence took place within three miles of the English coast. R. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 63; L. J. (M. C.) 17; 13 Cox, 403. Parliament approved the view of the minority, and at once passed the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73). Sect. 2 of that Act declares (see R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 560; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32) and enacts that "an offence committed by a person, whether he is or is not a subject of his Majesty, on the open sea, within the territorial waters of his Majesty's dominions, is an offence within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, although it may have been committed on board or by means of a foreign ship, and the person who committed such offence may be arrested, tried, and punished accordingly." The phrases and words "the territorial waters of his Majesty's dominions," "the jurisdiction of the Admiral," "offence," "ship," and "foreign ship," are defined by s. 7 of the same statute. And ss. 3 & 4 place certain restrictions on the prosecution of a person not a subject of his Majesty, and contain provisions as to procedure. The statute does not expressly exclude or include foreign public vessels. As to their position, see The Parlement Belge, 5 P. D. 197 (C. A.); 48 L. J. (P. D. & A.) 18, and Report of Fugitive Slave Commission, 1876, Parl. Pap. 1878, vol. 28. The extent to which municipal jurisdiction outside the three miles' limit is internationally recognised was fully discussed in the Behring Sea Arbitration. And see Mortensen v. Peters, 9 Fraser (Justiciary Sc.), 93; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 103.

The Central Criminal Court has jurisdiction to inquire of, hear, and determine any offence committed, or alleged to have been committed, within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, and to deliver the appointed gaols of the Central Criminal Court of prisoners committed to or detained there for such offences; and all indictments found and proceedings had before the Court are valid. 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 22; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 64, s. 2 (2): R. v. Anderson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 161; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 12: R. v. Carr, 10 Q. B. 76: 52 L. J. (M. C.) 12.

By the Admiralty Offences Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 2), all offences alleged to have been committed on the high seas, and other places within the Admiralty of England, may be heard and determined by his Majesty's justices of the assize or others his Majesty's commissioners by whom any court shall be holden under any of his Majesty's commissions of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery, and they shall have severally and jointly all the powers which by any Act are given to the commissioners named in any commission of oyer and terminer for the trying of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, and may deliver the gaol, in every county and franchise within the limits of their several commissions, of any person committed to or imprisoned therein for any offence alleged to have been committed upon the high seas, etc.; and all indictments found, and other proceedings had, by and before the said justices and commissioners shall be valid (s. 1). By sect. 2 of the same Act "in all indictments preferred before the said justices and commissioners under this Act, the venue laid in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in the county where the trial is had; and all material facts, which, in other indictments, would be averred to have taken place in the county where the trial is had, shall, in indictments preferred under that Act, be averred to have taken place 'on the high seas.'" It has been held that an indictment under this statute need not contain an averment that the offence was committed "within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty." R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 101; 2 C. & K. 165. The provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 2 are left unrepealed by the Indictments Act, 1915, but it is clear from the express language of sect. 3 of the latter Act (ante, p. 27) that an offence committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty need not now even be averred to have taken place "on the high seas." Section 3 of the Admiralty Offences Act, 1844, provides for the commitment for trial of persons charged with such offences; and sect. 4 saves the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 22, supra. Where any person within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England or Ireland, becomes accessory to any felony, whether at common law or by any Act (past or future) and whether committed within that jurisdiction or elsewhere, or begun within it and completed elsewhere, or begun elsewhere and completed within it, his offence shall be felony.

and the venue in the margin of the indictment shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in the county or place in which he is indicted, and his offence shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas." 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 9. This provision, although impliedly repealed, is similarly left standing by the Indictments Act, 1915. As to the trial of offenders in the British dominions beyond the seas for crimes committed on the high seas, or in places in which the Crown has power or jurisdiction out of his Majesty's dominions, see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 96; and 53 & 54 Vict. c. 37.

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 687, all offences against property or person committed in or at any place either ashore or afloat out of his Majesty's dominions by any master, seaman, or apprentice, who at the time when the offence is committed is, or within three months previously has been, employed in any British ship, shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature respectively, and be liable to the same punishments respectively, and be inquired of, heard, tried, determined, and adjudged in the same manner, and by the same courts, and in the same places as if such offences had been committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England; and the costs and expenses of the prosecution of any such offences may be directed to be paid as in the case of costs and expenses of prosecution for offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England. This section applies to offences under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48). See ss. 84, 86 of that Act. See R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32, decided on the similar provision in s. 267 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (rep.) : Ilbert, Government of India (2nd ed.), 242; and as to colonial jurisdiction under the Act, R. v. Hinde (1902) 22 N. Z. L. R. 436. A hulk retaining the general appointments of a ship, registered as a British ship, and hoisting the British ensign, although only used as a floating warehouse, is a British ship within the meaning of the above enactment. R. v. Armstrong, 13 Cox, 184, Archibald, J. 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 686, sub-s. 1, also enacts, that where any person, being a British subject, is charged with having committed any offence on board any British ship on the high seas, or in any foreign port or harbour, or on board any foreign ship to which he does not belong, or, not being a British subject, is charged with having committed any offence on board any British ship on the high seas, and that person is found (that is to say, is found to be at the time of his trial, R. v. Lopez, R. v. Sattler, Dears. & B. 525; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 48; 7 Cox, 431) within the jurisdiction of any court of justice in his Majesty's dominions, which would have had cognizance of such offence if committed on board a British ship within the limits of its ordinary jurisdiction, such court shall have jurisdiction to try the offence as if it had been so committed. Sub-s. 2 saves the effect of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 96.

Each of the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 contains a provision by which all indictable offences in those Acts respectively mentioned committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, are to be deemed to be offences of the same nature and subject to the same punishments as if they had been committed on the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if the offence had been committed in that county or place. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 [Larceny, etc.], s. 115; c. 97 [Malicious Injuries to Property], s. 72; c. 98 [Forgery], s. 50; c. 99 [Offences relating to the Coin], s. 36; c. 100 [Offences against the Person], s. 68. These enactments give jurisdiction to a borough quarter sessions to try a man arrested in the borough for offences against the Acts of 1861 committed at sea. R. v. Peel, L. & C. 231; L. J. (M. C.) 69; 9 Cox, 220. These provisions appear to be no longer necessary in view of 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 686 (1), ante, p. 36, and have not been reproduced in the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), nor in the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50).

Offences during journeys.]—In indictments for felonies or misdemeanors committed on any person, or on or in respect of any property, in or upon any coach, waggon, cart, or other carriage whatever employed in any journey, or on board any vessel whatever employed on any voyage or journey upon any navigable river, canal, or inland navigation, the venue may be laid in any county through which the coach, etc., or vessel shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which the felony or misdemeanor was committed, in the same manner as if it had been actually committed therein; and where the side, bank, centre or other part of the highway, river, etc., shall constitute the boundary of two counties, the venue may be laid in either of the counties through, or adjoining to, or by the boundary of any part whereof, the coach, etc., or vessel shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage. 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 13. This enactment is not confined to the carriages of common carriers, or to public conveyances, but extends to any carriage employed in any journey. R. v. Sharpe, Dears, 415; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 40; 6 Cox, 418. The fact that a person assaulted in a train changes into another carriage of the same train during the journey does not take away the jurisdiction. R. v. French, 8 Cox, 252. Similar provisions are contained in s. 21 of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 69), as to offences on journeys or voyages in which the vehicle or vessel passes through one or more British possessions.

Offences in more than one county or place.]—Where a felony or misdemeanor is committed on the boundary of two or more counties, or within the distance of 500 yards of the boundary, or is begun in one county and completed in another, the venue may be laid in either county, in the same manner as if it had been wholly committed therein. 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 12 (cf. 44 & 45 Vict. c. 69, s. 20). The distance is measured in a direct line, as the crow flies. R. v. Wood, 5 Jur. 225; 10 L. J. (Ex.) 168; cf. Lake v. Butler, 5 E. & B. 92, and 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 34, which governs statutes passed since 1889. The first branch of this enactment extends to the boundaries of counties only, and not to prosecutions in limited jurisdictions. R. v. Welsh, 1 Mood. 175. 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 12, regulates venue only, and does not enable the prosecutor to lay the offence in one county and try it in the other; but only to lay and try it in either. R. v. Mitchell, 2 Q. B. 636; 2 G. & D. 274; 11 L. J. (M. C.) 55. In cases of murder or manslaughter, where the cause of death arises in one county, and the death takes place in another, the prisoner may, under this statute, be indicted in either county. See 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 819.

Persons who anywhere incite, procure, and abet, or assist the commission of a misdemeanor may be indicted in the county in which the misdemeanor is committed. R. v. Johnson, 7 East, 65; 29 St. Tr. 81. Where an offence is done through an innocent agent, the principal may be indicted in the county in which the agent acted, or in that in which the principal procured him to act. Fost. 349: R. v. Brisac, 4 East, 164. In indictments for conspiracies or other misdemeanors, the venue may be laid in any county in which it can be proved that an act was done by any one of the offenders in furtherance of their common design. R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 116. See R. v. Brisac, 4 East, 164. So in indictments for compassing the King's death, or for any of the treasons in 36 G. 3, c. 7, s. 1 (made perpetual by 57 G. 3, c. 6, s. 1), the venue may be laid in any county in which a sufficient overt act can be proved. R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 645; R. v. Vane, Kel. (J.) 14, 15; 6 St. Tr. 119. See Deacon's case, Fost. 9: 18 St. Tr. 365. In an indictment for sending a threatening letter, the venue may be laid either in the county where the prosecutor received it; R. v. Girdwood, 2 East, P. C. 1120; 1 Leach, 142; R. v. Esser, 2 East, P. C. 1125; or in the county from which the offender sent it. So, if a libel, R. v. Burdett, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 124; 4 B. & Ald. 95: R. v. Ellis [1899] 1 Q. B. 230; R. v. Watson, 1 Camp. 215: or a letter containing a challenge (R. v. Williams, 2 Camp. 506) is sent from the county of A. to the county of B., the venue may be laid in either county. So, if an act done in one county causes a nuisance in another county, in an indictment for it, the venue may be laid in either county, although it has been said to be more correct to lay it in the county in which the act was done. Staundf. b. 2, 91.

It has been doubted whether these rules apply to offences part of the essential elements of which take place outside England. R. v. Ellis [1899] 1 Q. B. 230. Cf. Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Basle Chemical Works [1898] App. Cas. 200, 204. But a person who from a foreign country initiates acts which take effect in England and are criminal by the law of England appears to be liable to indictment and punishment in the county or place in England in which the acts took effect. See R. v. Oliphant [1905] 2 K. B. 67; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 15; 21 Cox, 192: R. v. de Marny [1907] 1 K. B. 388; 76 L. J. (K. B.) 210: R. v. Stoddart [1909] 73 J. P. 348; 2 Cr. App. R. 217; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 52 et seq. (a).

Offences in counties of cities or towns.]—Where an offence is committed within the county of a city or town corporate (except in London, Westminster, or the borough of Southwark, 38 G. 3, c. 52, s. 10), the prosecutor may prefer his indictment to the grand jury of the next adjoining county, at the sessions of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, and may have the offender tried there.

(a) And see R. v. Waugh [1909] Victoria L. R. 379, where it was held that W. had been properly convicted in the State of Victoria of an attempt to obtain money by false pretences by a letter written and posted by W. in Victoria, addressed to T. in the State of Tasmania, with intent to induce T. to send money to W. in Victoria.

38 G. 3, c. 52, s. 2. See R. v. Gough, 2 Doug. 791; R. v. Mellor, R. & R. 144 : R. v. Goff, R. & R. 179 : R. v. Pinney, 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 11. Or, if the bill has been found by a grand jury of the county of the city, etc., any court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, holden for such county of the city, etc., may order it to be tried by a jury of the next adjoining county. 38 G. 3, c. 52, s. 3. Under the former law the venue in such cases was required to be stated as prescribed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 23 rep. (ante, p. 28), but under the Indictments Act, 1915, it is sufficient to state the court of trial as prescribed by rule 2 (ante, p. 28). The Court before which the offender is tried and convicted may order the judgment to be executed either in the county of trial or in the county of the city or town corporate in which the offence was committed. 51 G. 3, c. 100, s. 1. By the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, s. 19), "whenever any justice or justices of the peace, or coroner, acting for any county of a city or county of a town corporate, within which his Majesty has not been pleased for five years next before the passing of this Act (1 Aug., 1851) to direct a commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to be executed, and until his Majesty shall be pleased to direct a commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to be executed within the same, shall commit for safe custody to the gaol or house of correction of such county of a city or town any person charged with any offence committed within the limits of such county of a city or town not triable at the court of quarter session of the said county of a city or county of a town, the commitment shall specify that such person is committed pursuant to this Act; and the recognizances to appear to prosecute and give evidence taken by such justice, justices or coroner, shall in all such cases be conditioned for appearance, prosecution, and giving evidence at the court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for the next adjoining county . . . and the justice, justices or coroner, by whom persons charged as aforesaid may be committed, shall deliver or cause to be delivered to the proper officer of the court the several examinations, informations, evidence, recognizances, and inquisitions relative to such persons at the time and in the manner that would be required in case such persons had been committed to the gaol of such adjoining county by a justice or justices, or coroner, having authority so to commit; and the same proceedings shall and may be had thereupon at the sessions of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery for such adjoining county, as in the case of persons charged with offences of the like nature committed within such county."

Section 23 of the same Act extends to prisoners tried in or removed for trial to the adjoining county (under s. 19) the provisions of 38 G. 3, c. 52, and 51 G. 3, c. 100, as to the execution of the sentences to be passed on such persons. By s. 188 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), (1) "Until his Majesty is pleased to direct a commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery to be executed within any borough, being a county of a city or county of a town, all bills of indictment for offences committed within that borough shall be preferred, and all proceedings thereon shall be had in the manner authorized by 38 G. 3, c. 52. (2) For the purposes of that Act, each borough named in the 6th schedule shall be considered as next adjoining the county named in conjunction therewith." Under the 6th schedule, Northumberland is considered the next adjoining county to Berwick-upon-Tweed and Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Gloucestershire, to Bristol; Cheshire, to Chester; Devonshire, to Exeter; and Yorkshire, to Kingston-upon-Hull. As to the mode of stating that the county of trial is next adjoining, see R. v. Goff, R. & R. 179.

Separate commissions of assize, etc., are still issued and executed for the counties of the cities or towns of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Exeter, Bristol, Norwich, Lincoln, Nottingham, Worcester, York, Haverfordwest, and Carmarthen, and for the borough of Leicester.

The other counties of cities or towns are Berwick-upon-Tweed, Kingston-upon-Hull, Gloucester, Canterbury, Chester, Southampton, Lichfield, and Poole.

Offences tried in the High Court.]—In the case of an indictment tried in the High Court, the venue was formerly the county in which the indictment was found, unless a change of venue was ordered (see post, p. 120), or unless the trial was at bar (see post, p. 121). R. v. Amery, 1 T. R. 363; Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 298: Att.-Gen. v. Churchill, 8 M. & W. 171, 193: Dixon v. Farrer, 18 Q. B. D. 43 (C. A.).

Now, in the case of all indictments tried in the High Court, the proper commencement is "In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 2" (ante, p. 28).

Offences in Central Criminal Court District.]—In indictments preferred at the Central Criminal Court (the jurisdiction of which extends to the city of London and counties of London and of Middlesex, and certain specified portions of the counties of Essex, Kent, and Surrey; 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 2; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, s. 23; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89), the district within the limits of its jurisdiction is to be deemed and taken to be one county for all purposes of venue, local description, trial, judgment, and execution not "thereinbefore" specially provided for; and the venue laid in the margin was formerly to be as follows, "Central Criminal Court, to wit;" and all offences which in other indictments would be laid to have been committed in the county where the trial is had, and all material facts which would be in other indictments averred to have taken place in the county where the trial is had, were, in indictments preferred and tried in the said court, to be laid to have been committed and averred to have taken place "within the jurisdiction of the said court." 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 3. This section has been left unrepealed by the Indictments Act, 1915, but the proper commencement of indictments preferred at the Central Criminal Court is now simply "Central Criminal Court," and it is unnecessary to aver that the offence took place "within the jurisdiction of the said court." 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 3, and r. 2 (ante, pp. 27, 28). Persons subject to military law, who have been committed for the murder or manslaughter of any person subject to military law, may, under certain circumstances, where the offence has been committed in England or Wales, out of the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, be indicted and tried before that court. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 65. As to the trial at this court of offences committed out of its jurisdiction, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, see post, p. 118.

The history of the jurisdiction of the court is given in 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1135, Appendix C.

Accessories.]—Offences by accessories before or after the fact to any felony wholly committed within England or Ireland may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished by any court which shall have jurisdiction to try the principal felony, or any felonies, committed in any county or place in which the act by reason whereof such person shall have become such accessory shall have been committed: " and in every other case offences by accessories before the fact may be dealt with, etc., by any court having jurisdiction to try the principal felony or any felonies committed in any county or place in which the accessory shall be apprehended or be in custody, whether the principal felony shall have been committed on the sea or on the land, or begun on the sea and completed on the land, or begun on the land and completed on the sea, and whether within his Majesty's dominions or without, or partly within his Majesty's dominions and partly without." 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 7. See R. v. Wallace, C. & Mar. 200; 2 Mood. 200. An accessory before the fact may however be indicted, etc., in all respects as if he were the principal felon. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 1. As to accessories where the offence is committed in the Admiralty Jurisdiction, see ante, p. 35.

Bigamy.]—In indictments for bigamy, the venue may be laid either in the county where the offender was apprehended, or is in custody, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 57, or in the county in which the second marriage took place. If the defendant, being in custody for a felony, is detained for bigamy, he can be indicted for the bigamy in the county in which he is so detained. R. v. Gordon, R. & R. 48. The law is left unchanged by the Indictments Act, 1915, but it is now only necessary to state the court of trial. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 2 (ante, p. 28).

Coinage offences.]—In indictments for offences with reference to false or counterfeit coin, " where any person shall tender, utter, or put off any counterfeit coin in any county or jurisdiction, and shall also tender, utter, or put off any other counterfeit coin in any other county or jurisdiction on the same day or within ten days next ensuing, or where two or more persons have acted in concert in different counties or jurisdictions to commit any offence against the Coinage Offences Act, 1861, the offence may be laid and charged to have been committed, and the offender may be dealt with, etc., in any one of those counties or jurisdictions." 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 28.

Customs and excise.]—In indictments for violently assaulting or resisting officers of the excise (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 43), or for offences against the Customs Acts (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 258), the venue may be laid in any county. In indictments for offences against the customs committed upon the water at a place which is not or is not certainly known to be within any county, the venue may be laid in any place on land where the offender may be or be brought. 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 229.

Escapes and prison breach.]—In indictments for escapes, breaches of prison, and rescues, the venue might formerly be laid either in the jurisdiction where the offence was committed, or in that where the offender should be apprehended and retaken. 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 44. That statute was wholly repealed by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 73, sched. 3: but provisions similar to s. 44 are in force as to escapes from Parkhurst Prison (1 & 2 Vict. c. 82, s. 18), and from Pentonville Prison (5 & 6 Vict. c. 29, s. 28).

In indictments for being at large before the expiration of a sentence of penal servitude, the venue may be laid either in the county where the defendant was apprehended or in that from whence he was ordered to be sent to penal servitude. 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 22; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 3.

Forgery.]—By s. 14, sub-s. 1, of the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), a person charged with an offence against that Act, or with an offence indictable at common law or under any Act for the time being in force consisting in the forging or altering of any matter whatsoever, or in offering, uttering, disposing of, or putting off any matter whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged or altered, may be proceeded against, indicted, tried, and punished in any county or place in which he was apprehended or is in custody as if the offence had been committed in that county or place, and for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the prosecution, trial, or punishment of the offence, it shall be deemed to have been committed in that county or place: provided that, where the offence charged relates to documents made for the purpose of any Act relating to the suppression of the slave trade, it shall, for the purposes of jurisdiction and trial, be treated as an offence against the Slave Trade Act, 1873. By sub-s. 2, nothing in the section shall affect the laws relating to the government of his Majesty's naval or military forces.

Larceny, etc.]—At common law if a man commits larceny (whether simple or compound) in one county, and carries the goods with him into another, he may be indicted for the simple or compound larceny in the county in which he committed it, or he may be indicted for it as for a simple larceny in the county into which, or in any of the counties through which, he carried the goods; for in contemplation of law, there is such a taking and carrying away as constitute the offence of larceny at common law in every place through which, at any distance of time, the goods were carried by him. R. v. Parkin, 1 Mood. 45; 1 Hale, 507; 2 Hale, 163; 3 Co. Inst. 113; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 52; 4 Bl. Com. 304; 2 East, P. C. 771; Griffith v. Taylor, 2 C. P. D. 194, 202, Cockburn, C.J.: R. v. Fenley, 20 Cox, 252, Jelf, J. The larceny itself is ambulatory, but the aggravated circumstances are fixed and stationary. 1 Hale, 536: R. v. Thomson, 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1304: R. v. Millar, 7 C. & P. 665: R. v. Fenley, supra.

By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 39 (1): A person charged with any offence against this Act may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished in any county or place in which he was apprehended or is in custody as if the offence had been committed in that county or place; and for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the prosecution, trial, or punishment of the offence it shall be deemed to have been committed in that county or place. [The Act applies to larceny, receiving, robbery, burglary, housebreaking, demanding money with menaces, threatening to publish with intent to extort, false pretences, corruptly taking a reward, accessories and abettors of offences under the Act.] (2): Every person who steals or otherwise feloniously takes any property in any one part of the United Kingdom may be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished in any other part of the United Kingdom where he has the property in his possession in the same manner as if he had actually stolen or taken it in that part. (3): Every person who receives in any one part of the United Kingdom any property stolen or otherwise feloniously taken in any other part of the United Kingdom may be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished in that part of the United Kingdom where he so receives the property in the same manner as if it had been originally stolen or taken in that part.

Mutiny.]—In indictments for endeavouring to seduce soldiers or sailors from their duty, or for inciting or stirring them up to mutiny, the venue may be laid in any county in England, whether the offence be committed on the high seas or in England. 37 G. 3, c. 70, s. 2.

Perjury.]—By s. 8 of the Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), where an offence against that Act or any offence punishable as perjury or as subornation of perjury under any other Act of Parliament is committed in any place either on sea or land outside the United Kingdom, the offender may be proceeded against, indicted, tried, and punished in any county or place in England where he was apprehended or is in custody as if the offence had been committed in that county or place, and for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment of the offence, it shall be deemed to have been committed in that county or place.

Post-office offences.]—By the Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 72, "(1) An offence against this Act may be tried either in the county or place in which it was actually committed, or in the county or place in which the alleged offender is apprehended or is in custody, or (when the offence is in respect of a mail, mail bag, postal packet or money order, or any chattel, money, or valuable security sent by post) in any county or place through which or any part thereof the mail, mail bag, postal packet, money order, chattel, money or valuable security passed in due course of conveyance by post. . . . (2) Where an offence is committed on any highway, harbour, canal, river, arm of the sea or other water, constituting the boundary of two or more counties or places, it may be tried in any of the said counties or places. (3) The offence of being accessory to or of aiding or abetting an offence against this Act may be tried in any county or place in which the last mentioned offence may be tried."

Slave trade.]—Offences in connection with the slave trade may be tried either where committed, or in Middlesex, or in any place where the accused for the time being is if it be within the King's dominions, or a place where his Majesty has jurisdiction under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 88, s. 26. See 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 280.

Unlawful oaths.]—Offences against the Unlawful Oaths Acts of 1797 & 1802, if committed on the high seas or outside the realm, or in England, may be tried by a court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery for any county in England in the same manner as if committed in such county. 37 G. 3, c. 123, s. 6; 52 Geo. 3, c. 104, s. 7.

2. THE STATEMENT OF THE OFFENCE.

Statutes.

7 Geo. 4, c. 64 (Criminal Law Act, 1826).

Sect. 21. Description of offences.] . . . Where the offence charged has been created by any statute, or subjected to a greater degree of punishment, or excluded from the benefit of clergy, by any statute, the indictment or information shall, after verdict, be held sufficient to warrant the punishment prescribed by the statute, if it describe the offence in the words of the statute.

[This section, although left unrepealed by the Indictments Act, 1915, has in effect been rendered obsolete by the provisions of that statute, infra. As to the effect of it, see R. v. Martin, 8 A. & E. 481.]

5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90 (Indictments Act, 1915).

Sect. 3. General provisions as to indictments.]—(1) Every indictment shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains, a statement of the specific offence or offences with which the accused person is charged, together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the charge.

(2) Notwithstanding any rule of law or practice, an indictment shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, not be open to objection in respect of its form or contents if it is framed in accordance with the rules under this Act.

Rule 4. Mode in which offences are to be charged.]—(1) A description of the offence charged in an indictment, or where more than one offence is charged in an indictment, of each offence so charged, shall be set out in the indictment in a separate paragraph called a count.

(2) A count of an indictment shall commence with a statement of the offence charged, called the statement of offence.

(3) The statement of offence shall describe the offence shortly in ordinary language, avoiding as far as possible the use of technical terms, and without necessarily stating all the essential elements of the offence, and if the offence charged is one created by statute, shall contain a reference to the section of the statute creating the offence.

It will be seen, by reference to the forms of indictment throughout this book, that the Indictments Act, 1915, is intended to secure brevity, simplicity, and lucidity in describing offences. Ordinary language is to be used, and technical terms are as far as possible to be avoided. Thus the crime of murder is not to be described as "wilful" or "felonious" murder, or as murder "of malice aforethought," but simply as "murder." Where the offence charged is one created by statute, the statement of offence in the indictment is to contain a reference to the section of such statute, e.g., in the case of felonious wounding, the offence should be described as "wounding with intent, contrary to section 18 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861"; and in the case of unlawful wounding, as "wounding, contrary to section 20 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861."

The statement of the offence follows immediately after the presentment of the grand jury (ante. p. 28), and is in the following form :—

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

First Count.

Arson, contrary to section 2 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861. [If the indictment contains only one count, the words "First Count" should be omitted.]

3. PARTICULARS OF THE OFFENCE.

(a) How Stated.

5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90 (Indictments Act, 1915).

Rule 4—(4) After the statement of the offence, particulars of such offence shall be set out in ordinary language, in which the use of technical terms shall not be necessary :

Provided that where any rule of law or any statute limits the particulars of an offence which are required to be given in an indictment, nothing in this rule shall require any more particulars to be given than those so required.

(5) The forms set out in the appendix to these rules or forms conforming thereto as nearly as may be shall be used in cases to which they are applicable, and in other cases forms to the like effect or conforming thereto as nearly as may be shall be used, the statement of offence and the particulars of offence being varied according to the circumstances in each case.

(6) Where an indictment contains more than one count the counts shall be numbered consecutively.

Particulars of the offence should be stated immediately below the statement of the offence as follows :—

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B. on the 9th day of March A.D. 1916 in the County of London maliciously set fire to a dwelling-house, one C. D. being therein.

Common law.]—At common law, in the indictment, all the ingredients of the offence with which the defendant was charged, the facts, circumstances and intent constituting it, were required to be set forth with certainty and precision, without any repugnancy or inconsistency, and the defendant charged directly and positively with having committed it.

At common law these rules were strictly enforced in favorem vitæ (see 2 Hale, 193). They are now relaxed to the extent below indicated under the several sub-headings.

Words of art.]—In an indictment for murder, the words "did murder" (murdravit), Dy. 261 a; in an indictment for rape the words "did ravish" (rapuit), Staundf. 26 a; and in an indictment for larceny the words "feloniously did take and carry away" (felonicè cepit et asportavit), 4 Bl. Com. 305, were held to be absolutely necessary on the ground that they were technical words, essential to the definition of the offence, without which these offences respectively could not be described upon the record: and if they were omitted, the defendant could demur or move to quash the indictment, or move in arrest of judgment, or if convicted appeal. In future the use of technical terms is to be avoided as far as possible. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 4 (3), ante, p. 44.

Statutory offences.]—Indictments Act, 1915, rule 5. Provisions as to statutory offences.]—(1) Where an enactment constituting an offence states the offence to be the doing or the omission to do any one of any different acts in the alternative, or the doing or the omission to do any act in any one of any different capacities, or with any one of any different intentions, or states any part of the offence in the alternative, the acts, omissions, capacities, or intentions, or other matters stated in the alternative in the enactment, may be stated in the alternative in the count charging the offence.

(2) It shall not be necessary, in any count charging a statutory offence, to negative any exception or exemption from or qualification to the operation of the statute creating the offence.

Rule 5 (1) does not authorise the inclusion of two or more separate offences in one count, even though they are charged in the alternative. R. v. Molloy [1921] 2 K. B. 364; post, p. 573 (n).

Exceptions and exemptions.]—By rule 5 (2) of the Indictments Act, 1915 (supra), it shall not be necessary in any count charging a statutory offence, to negative any exception or exemption from or qualification to the operation of the statute creating the offence.

This rule extends to exceptions generally the previous practice with regard to provisos in the case of statutory offences. The former law is stated in Thibault v. Gibson, 12 M. & W. 88, 94, by Lord Abinger, C.B., in the following terms:—

"In all cases where proceedings are taken against a party for the recovery of a penalty under a statute, if there be any exception in the clause which gives the penalty exempting certain cases from its operation, the declaration or information must show that the particular case is not within the exception. But where it comes by way of proviso in a subsequent part of the Act, it is not necessary to notice it in the declaration or information, but it is matter which the defendant must allege as ground for defence."

In R. v. James [1902] 1 K. B. 540, the effect of the authorities on this subject was held to be that it is not necessary for the prosecution to negative a proviso, even though the proviso be contained in the same section of the Act of Parliament creating the offence, unless the proviso is in the nature of an exception which is incorporated directly or by reference with the enacting clause. See R. v. Hall, 1 T. R. 320; Steel v. Smith, 1 B. & Ald. 94. In R. v. Audley [1907] 1 K. B. 383, this rule was applied to the proviso to s. 57 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), that the section should not extend to a second marriage outside England or Ireland by a person not a British subject; and it was held unnecessary in an indictment for bigamy at Gibraltar to aver that the prisoner was a British subject. Bigham, J., said that all the provisos to the section were matters of confession and avoidance to be alleged and proved by the defence.

Ownership or occupation of property.]—Indictments Act, 1915, rule 6. Description of property.]—(1) The description of property in a count in an indictment shall be in ordinary language and such as to indicate with reasonable clearness the property referred to, and if the property is so described it shall not be necessary (except when required for the purpose of describing an offence depending on any special ownership of property or special value of property) to name the person to whom the property belongs or the value of the property.

(2) Where property is vested in more than one person, and the owners of the property are referred to in an indictment it shall be sufficient to describe the property as owned by one of those persons by name with others, and if the persons owning the property are a body of persons with a collective name, such as " Inhabitants," " Trustees," " Commissioners," or " Club," or other such name, it shall be sufficient to use the collective name without naming any individual.

Notwithstanding the above rule, Form No. 9 (relating to larceny) and Form No. 10 (relating to burglary and larceny) of the forms of indictment printed in the appendix to the Indictments Act, 1915, contain the name of the owner of the property, and it will probably be found convenient in practice to name the owner where he is known. Form No. 10 contains a statement of the value of the property, because the offence under s. 8 (2) (c) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), depends on special value of property.

Property of deceased persons.]—An indictment for stealing the shroud of a dead person may state it to be the property of the executor or administrator; 2 Hale, 181 (a). If there is no will and no administration, it may be laid to be the goods of the person who defrayed the expenses of the burial (R. v. Haynes, 12 Co. Rep. 113), or formerly of the ordinary, if the shroud were purchased with the money of the deceased: 2 Hale, 181. So, if a coffin is stolen, it may be described in the same manner. But if the property is described in ordinary language and so as to indicate with reasonable clearness the property referred to, e.g., "the shroud covering the dead body of A. B.," it is unnecessary to name the owner. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 6 (1), supra.

Larceny from bailees.]—Property stolen out of the possession of a bailee may be described in the indictment as the property either of the bailor or bailee; 2 Hale, 181; although the goods were never actually in the real owner's possession, but in the possession of the bailee only. R. v. Remnant, R. & R. 136; R. v. Wymer, 4 C. & P. 391. See Pollock and Wright on Possession in the Common Law. As, for instance, goods left at an inn, R. v. Todd, 2 East, P. C. 653, or entrusted to a person for safe keeping, R. v. Taylor, 1 Leach, 356 : R. v. Statham, Id. 357 cit.; or to a carrier for carriage, R. v. Deakin, 2 East, P. C. 653; 2 Leach, 862; see R. v. Spears, 2 Leach, 825; 2 East, P. C. 568; cloth to a tailor to make into clothes; linen to a laundress to wash, R. v. Packer, 2 East, P. C. 653; 1 Leach, 357 n.; goods pawned and the like—may be said to be the goods and chattels of the person to whom they are so entrusted, etc., or of the owner, at the option of the prosecutor. See 2 Hale, 181; 1 Hale, 513; 2 East, P. C. 652; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 47; R. v. Wilkins, 1 Leach, 520; 2 Ib., 875 cit.; 2 East, P. C. 678.

Married women.]—Where the person named as owner appears to be a married woman, the defendant must formerly, unless the indictment was amended, have been acquitted, because in law the goods were the property of the husband; 1 Hale, 513; and must have been described as such except where the woman had married after the larceny and before indictment found. R. v. Turner, 1 Leach, 536, and see R. v. French, R. & R. 491; R. v. Wilford, Ib. 517. This rule of the common law that the wife could have no property was made subject to exceptions by statute where the husband and wife had been judicially separated, or where the wife had obtained a protection order; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 21, 25; and is now virtually abolished by 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75 (Married Women's Property Act, 1882), which enacts, s. 12, that—"Every woman, whether married before or after this Act, shall have in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies, and also (subject, as regards her husband, to the proviso hereinafter contained) the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort. In any indictment or other proceeding under this section it shall be sufficient to allege such property to be her property; and in any proceeding under this section a husband or wife shall be competent to give evidence against each other, any statute or rule of law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that no criminal proceedings shall be taken by any wife against her husband by virtue of this Act while they are living together, as to or concerning any property claimed by her, nor while they are living apart, as to or concerning any act done by the husband while they were living together, concerning property claimed by the wife, unless such property shall have been wrongfully taken by the husband when leaving or deserting, or about to leave or desert his wife :" and (s. 16) that " a wife doing any act with respect to any property of her husband which, if done by the husband with respect to property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act, shall in like manner be liable to criminal proceedings by her husband." And by the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 36—(1) " a wife shall have the same remedies and redress under this Act for the protection and security of her own separate property as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole : Provided that no proceedings shall be taken by any wife against her husband while they are living together as to or concerning any property claimed by her, nor while they are living apart as to or concerning any act done by the husband while they were living together concerning property claimed by the wife, unless such property has been wrongfully taken by the husband when leaving or deserting or about to leave or desert his wife. (2) A wife doing an act with respect to any property of her husband, which if done by the husband would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act, shall be in like manner liable to criminal proceedings by her husband." It is not necessary that an indictment against a wife for stealing the goods of her husband should contain averments that the prisoner was the wife of the prosecutor, or that she took the goods in question when leaving or deserting, or about to leave or desert, her husband. R. v. James [1902] 1 K. B. 541; 71 L. J. (Q. B.) 211; 20 Cox, 156; 66 J. P. 217. If goods described in an indictment as goods of A. B. turn out to be the separate property of his wife living with him, the indictment may be amended : R. v. Murray [1906] 2 K. B. 385; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 593; 21 Cox, 250; 70 J. P. 295.

Joint Owners.]—The Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), r. 6 (2), ante, p. 47, extends and makes of general application the provisions of the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 Geo. 4, c. 64), ss. 14, 15 (rep.), and gets rid of numerous special Acts relating to the property of joint owners.

Most of the trading companies, familiarly known as joint-stock companies, are incorporated under the Companies Acts, now consolidated in 8 Edw. 7, c. 69 (see ss. 16, 17), but they may now be described by their corporate name, whether incorporated under that Act or not. The existence of a company under its corporate name is sufficiently proved by parol evidence that it has carried on business under that name. R. v. Langton, 2 Q. B. D. 296; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 136; 13 Cox, 345. But it is preferable to prove the existence and name of the company by the certificate of incorporation given under 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, ss. 16, 17. R. v. May, 64 J. P. 570.

Description of persons.]—Indictments Act, 1915, rule 7 : The description or designation in an indictment of the accused person, or of any other person to whom reference is made therein, shall be such as is reasonably sufficient to identify him, without necessarily stating his correct name, or his abode, style, degree, or occupation; and if, owing to the name of the person not being known, or for any other reason, it is impracticable to give such a description or designation, such description or designation shall be given as is reasonably practicable in the circumstances, or such person may be described as " a person unknown."

The defendant should be described in the indictment by his christian name and surname. 2 Hale, 175. But these need not necessarily be stated correctly, provided that he is described in a manner which is reasonably sufficient to identify him. When a corporation is indicted it should be described by its proper corporate name or style, subject to the above provisions of rule 7. But where the inhabitants of a parish are indicted for not repairing a highway, or the inhabitants of a county for not repairing a bridge, it was always enough to describe them as the inhabitants of a parish or county without naming any of them. 2 Rolle Abr. 79 : 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 68.

The surname may be such as the defendant has usually gone by or acknowledged; and if there be a doubt which one of two names is his real surname, the second may be added in the indictment after an alias dictus, thus : "Richard Wilson, otherwise called Richard Layer" (Bro. Misnom. 47).

In indictments for offences against the persons or property of individuals, the christian name and surname of the person injured should be stated, if known; 2 Hawk. c. 25, ss. 71, 72. A bastard is quasi nullius filius, and can have no name or reputation immediately on birth : Co. Litt. 36; but may soon acquire a name by reputation. R. v. Scarborough, 3 Cox, 72. A newly born child may be sufficiently described as "then lately before born of the body of A. B. and not named."

Where the person injured has a name of dignity, as a peer, baronet, or knight, he should be described by it. "His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge" has been considered sufficient without setting forth any of his christian names. R. v. Frost, Dears. 474; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 116.

Description of document. —Indictments Act, 1915, rule 8 : Where it is necessary to refer to any document or instrument in an indictment it shall be sufficient to describe it by any name or designation by which it is usually known or by the purport thereof, without setting out any copy thereof.

At common law, written instruments wherever they formed a part of the gist of the offence charged (see R. v. Coulson, 1 Den. 592; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 182), had to be set out verbatim. Thus, in the case of forgery, the instrument forged must, before 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 123, s. 3 (rep.), have been set out in the indictment in words or figures : R. v. Mason, 1 East, 180, n.; 2 East, P. C. 975 : R. v. Powell, 1 Leach, 77 : R. v. Hart, Id. 145 : R. v. Lyon, 2 Leach, 597, 608; and on an indictment for not executing a warrant, the nature and tenor of the warrant must have been shown. R. v. Burrough, 1 Vent. 305 : Com. Dig. Indictment (G. 3). The strictness of the common law rule was relaxed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, ss. 5, 7 (rep.), by ss. 42, 43 (rep.) of the Forgery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 98), and by s. 17 (1) of the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27). Under these enactments it is sufficient to describe an instrument referred to in an indictment by any name or designation by which it is usually known without setting out a copy or facsimile.

General rule as to description.]—Indictments Act, 1915, rule 9. General rule as to description.]—Subject to any other provisions of these rules, it shall be sufficient to describe any place, time, thing, matter, act, or omission whatsoever to which it is necessary to refer in any indictment, in ordinary language in such a manner as to indicate with reasonable clearness the place, time, thing, matter, act or omission referred to.

Certainty as to age of person injured.]—Where it is essential to constitute the offence that the person injured should have been under a certain age, the person should be stated in the indictment to be under that age. R. v. Martin, 9 C. & P. 213. See R. v. Sarah Waters, 1 Den. 356; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 53; 3 Cox, 300.

Statements as to time.]—The date of the commission of the offence should be stated in the indictment. Staundf., 95 a. R. v. Hollond, 5 T. R. 607; R. v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 63, 69: R. v. Haynes, 4 M. & Sel. 214. But it was never necessary that it should be laid according to the truth unless time was of the essence of the offence: in other cases if the time stated were previous to the finding of the indictment, a variance between the indictment and evidence in the time when the offence was committed was not material, 2 Co. Inst. 318; 3 Co. Inst. 230: Sir H. Vane's case, Kel. (J.) 16: R. v. Aylett, supra: R. v. Dossi, 13 Cr. App. R. 158. For this reason, in practice all the facts in an indictment usually were stated to have occurred at the same time, time and special venue being laid as to the first fact, and afterwards referred to by the words "then and there," as to the others.

The time, if laid, should be the day of the month and year upon which the act is supposed to have been committed. In burglary the offence should be stated to have been committed "in the night." Where a time is limited for preferring an indictment, the time laid should appear to be within the time so limited. See R. v. Brown, M. & M. 163; and post, p. 63.

In cases of offences against children under Part II. of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), or of offences mentioned in the First Schedule to that Act, where any such offence is continuous, it is not necessary to specify in the indictment the date of the acts constituting the offence. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 32, sub-s. 4. This provision is specially safeguarded by rule 12 of the Indictments Act, 1915 (post, p. 62).

Statements as to place.]—At common law it was necessary to lay with certainty statements of place in the indictment, but it was never necessary that the averments should be according to the truth unless local description was of the essence of the offence, for if the place stated were within the county or other extent of the court's jurisdiction, a variance between indictment and evidence was not material if the place proved were within the jurisdiction of the court. 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 84. Under the Indictments Act, 1915, it is quite sufficient to state the county in which the offence was committed.

Value.]—It is unnecessary to state value, except where it is of the essence of the offence (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, rule 6 (1), ante, p. 47), such as an offence against the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 13 (a), or the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 154, sub-s. 4. Where value is essential to constitute the offence, and the value is ascribed in the indictment to many articles collectively, the offence must be made out as to all or a sufficient number of the articles, for the grand jury have ascribed the value to all the articles collectively. R. v. Forsyth, R. & R. 274.

Money.]—Until 1851, money was described in an indictment as so many "pieces of the current gold," or "silver," or "copper coin of the realm, called ——," and the particular species of coin must have been specified. See R. v. Fry, R. & R. 482: R. v. Warshaner, 1 Mood. 466: R. v. Radley, 1 Den. 450; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 154. And if a larceny of particular pieces of coin, as sovereigns, half-sovereigns, crowns, etc., was charged, the indictment was not supported by proof of the stealing of a sum of money, which must have consisted of some or other of the coins mentioned in the indictment, without proof of the stealing of some one or more of the specific coins named. R. v. Bond, 1 Den. 517; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 138.

But by s. 18 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), it is provided that "in every indictment in which it shall be necessary to make any averment as to any money or any note of the Bank of England or any other bank, it shall be sufficient to describe such money or bank note simply as money, without specifying any particular coin or bank note: and such allegation, so far as regards the description of the property, shall be sustained by proof of any amount of coin or of any bank note, although the particular species of coin of which such amount was composed, or the particular nature of the bank note, shall not be proved." And by the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 40 (2), "an allegation in an indictment that money or bank notes have been embezzled or obtained by false pretences can so far as regards the description of the property be sustained by proof that the offender embezzled or obtained any piece of coin or any bank note or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or bank note may have been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to any person and such part has been returned accordingly."

Notes of a provincial bank, which were not at the time of the commission of the offence in circulation for value, but which were paid in at one branch of the bank, and were in course of transmission to another branch, at which they had originally been issued, in order that they might there be re-issued or otherwise disposed of—it not being the practice of the bank to re-issue at one branch notes originally issued at another—were held to be bank notes within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18. R. v. West, Dears. & B. 109; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 6.

Statement of intent.]—Indictments Act, 1915, rule 10. Statement of intent.]—It shall not be necessary in stating any intent to defraud, deceive or injure to state an intent to defraud, deceive or injure any particular person where the statute creating the offence does not make an intent to defraud, deceive or injure a particular person an essential ingredient of the offence.

The rule will not apply to an indictment framed under s. 24 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), for administering poison or other destructive or noxious thing to any person, with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy such person.

Charge of previous convictions, etc.]—Indictments Act, 1915, rule 11. Charge of previous convictions, etc.]—Any charge of a previous conviction of an offence or of being a habitual criminal or a habitual drunkard shall be charged at the end of the indictment by means of a statement—in the case of a previous conviction that the person accused has been previously convicted of that offence at a certain time and place without stating the particulars of the offence, and in the case of a habitual criminal or habitual drunkard, that the offender is a habitual criminal or a habitual drunkard, as the case may be.

This provision merely reproduces the former practice under the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 59), s. 10, sub-s. 3, and the Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60), s. 1, sub-s. 2, the provisions of which, with regard to indictments, are repealed by the Indictments Act, 1915.

Figures and abbreviations in indictment.]—It was formerly held that no part of the indictment should be in figures; and therefore numbers, dates, etc., were stated in words at length. 2 Hale, 170.

Now, by rule 1 (4) of the Indictments Act, 1915 (ante, p. 28), figures and abbreviations may be used in an indictment for expressing anything which is commonly expressed thereby.

The indictment must not be double (a); that is to say, no one count of the indictment should charge the defendant with having committed two or more separate offences. See R. v. Molloy [1921] 2 K. B. 364; and post, p. 573 (n). So, two defendants cannot be jointly charged with murder or manslaughter by means of an injury done by one of them to the deceased on one day and another injury done by the other of them on a different day. R. v. Devett, 8 C. & P. 639. Nor should the accused be charged in one count with many offences of the same kind (not being continuous offences) committed against the same person on different dates extending over a very considerable period of time (e.g., "on divers dates between January, 1909, and October 4th, 1910," and, in another count, "on divers dates between the 4th October, 1910, and the end of February, 1913"). R. v. Thompson [1914] 2 K. B. 99; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 643; 9 Cr. App. R. 252. But where the offences charged consist of one single act they may be made the subject of a single count. For instance, where the prisoner was charged in one count with uttering a number of forged receipts, and it was proved that all the forged receipts were uttered at one and the same time, in one bundle, the count was held good. R. v. Thomas, 2 East,

(a) Informations for offences punishable on summary conviction are governed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 10, which forbids the inclusion of two offences in one information. As to the effect of the section see Smith v. Perry [1906] 1 K. B. 262; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 124; R. v. Cable [1906] 1 K. B. 719; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 381.

P. C. 934. So, the indictment may charge the prisoner, in the same count, with felonious acts with respect to several persons—as in robbery, with having assaulted A. and B., and stolen from A. one shilling, and from B. two shillings—if it was all one transaction. R. v. Giddins, C. & Mar. 634. A man may be indicted for the battery of two or more persons in the same count where the battery is one transaction, or for a libel upon two or more persons when the publication is one single act, without rendering the count bad for duplicity. R. v. Benfield, 2 Burr. 980, 983, 984: where R. v. Clendon, 2 Str. 870; 2 Ld. Raym. 1572, was held not law: and see R. v. Jenour, 7 Mod. 400. A count charging a man with one endeavour to procure the commission of two offences is not bad for duplicity, because the endeavour is the offence charged. R. v. Fuller, 1 B. & P. 180; 2 Leach, 790.

An exception to the rule as to duplicity is to be found in indictments for burglary, in which it is usual and proper to charge the defendant with having broken and entered the house with intent to commit a felony, and also with having committed the felony intended. Laying several overt acts in a count for high treason is not duplicity, Kel. (J.) 8, because the charge consists of the compassing, etc., and the overt acts are merely evidence of it; and the same applies to conspiracy. Another exception is to be found in the case of continuous offences under Part II. of the First Schedule of the Children Act, 1908, where dates need not be specified in the indictment but a series of acts may be treated as constituting one continuous offence. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 32 (4): 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 12; post, p. 61.

In criminal cases, the mode of objecting to duplicity is the same as in civil proceedings prior to the Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76; i.e., by demurrer: or the court on motion may quash the indictment, which is now the usual procedure. Duplicity cannot be made the subject of a motion in arrest of judgment; Nash v. R., 4 B. & S. 935; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 94; but it is a ground of appeal under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 3 (a). R. v. Thompson [1914] 2 K. B. 99; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 643; 78 J. P. 212; 30 T. L. R. 223; 9 Cr. App. R. 252. Duplicity is distinct from the joinder in one indictment of counts for different offences, as to which see post, p. 57.

Indictments Act, 1915, s. 5. Orders for amendment of indictment, separate trial, and postponement of trial.]—(1) Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, it appears to the court that the indictment is defective, the court shall make such order for the amendment of the indictment as the court thinks necessary to meet the circumstances of the case, unless, having regard to the merits of the case, the required amendments cannot be made without injustice, and may make such order as to the payment of any costs incurred owing to the necessity for amendment as the court thinks fit.

(2) Where an indictment is so amended, a note of the order for amendment shall be endorsed on the indictment, and the indictment shall be treated for the purposes of the trial and for the purposes of all proceedings in connection therewith as having been found by the grand jury in the amended form.

(3) Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, the court is of opinion that a person accused may be prejudiced or embarrassed in his defence by reason of being charged with more than one offence in the same indictment, or that for any other reason it is desirable to direct that the person should be tried separately for any one or more offences charged in an indictment, the court may order a separate trial of any count or counts of such indictment.

(4) Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, the court is of opinion that the postponement of the trial of a person accused is expedient as a consequence of the exercise of any power of the court under this Act to amend an indictment or to order a separate trial of a count, the court shall make such order as to the postponement of the trial as appears necessary.

(5) Where an order of the court is made under this section for a separate trial or for the postponement of a trial—

(a) if such an order is made during a trial the court may order that the jury are to be discharged from giving a verdict on the count or counts the trial of which is postponed or on the indictment, as the case may be; and

(b) the procedure on the separate trial of a count shall be the same in all respects as if the count had been found in a separate indictment, and the procedure on the postponed trial shall be the same in all respects (if the jury has been discharged) as if the trial had not commenced; and

(c) the court may make such order as to costs and as to admitting the accused person to bail, and as to the enlargement of recognizances and otherwise as the court thinks fit.

(6) Any power of the court under this section shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any other power of the court for the same or similar purposes.

Wide powers of amending misdescriptions in indictments were conferred upon courts of Assize and Quarter Sessions by the now repealed provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 46), the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45), and the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100). But even under those statutes an amendment which altered the nature or quality of the offence charged was not usually made: e.g., where the defendant was indicted for a forgery charged as a statutable felony, but the offence turned out to be a forgery at common law, and therefore only a misdemeanor, the judge refused to order the word "feloniously" to be struck out of the indictment. R. v. Wright, 2 F. & F. 320. Nor could an indictment drawn as for a misdemeanour be amended by the court by inserting "feloniously," even if the omission of that word were obviously accidental. See R. v. Garland [1910] 1 K. B. 154. Nor could an indictment be amended by substituting for one of two offences created by the same enactment the other offence so created. R. v. Benson [1908] 2 K. B. 270; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 644. An indictment for obtaining money by false pretences was amended by striking out a statement of a false pretence that certain articles were worth a certain sum of money. It was held that the amendment ought not to have been made, but the conviction was affirmed on the ground that no substantial miscarriage of justice had resulted from the amendment. R. v. Cohen, 3 Cr. App. R. 180. As to the common law, see Wilkes' case, 19 St. Tr. 1075; 4 Burr. 2527. In an indictment for obtaining money, etc., by false pretences, it was held necessary to allege that the obtaining was "with intent to defraud," and that where those words were omitted the indictment could not be amended by inserting them. R. v. James, 12 Cox, 127, Lush, J.

It may be doubted whether any of the above decisions will be followed in future under the very ample powers given by the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 5 (1), supra. An amendment of a matter which is not material may, semble, be made after verdict. See R. v. Dossi, 13 Cr. App. R. 158.

(d) Joinder of two or more defendants in one indictment.

Where several persons join in the commission of an offence, all or any number of them may be jointly indicted for it, or each of them may be indicted separately. Thus, if several commit a robbery, burglary, or murder, they may be indicted for it jointly, 2 Hale, 173, or separately; and the same where two or more together commit a battery, or are together guilty of extortion or the like. R. v Atkinson, 1 Salk. 382. And though they have acted separately, yet if the grievance is the result of the acts of all jointly, all may be indicted jointly for the offence. R. v. Trafford, 1 B. & Ad. 874. Where money has been obtained under false pretences, and the false pretences were conveyed by words spoken by one defendant in the presence of the others, all of whom acted in concert together, they may all be indicted jointly. Young v. R., 3 T. R. 98. The same rule applies where two or more persons join in singing a libellous song; R. v. Benfield, 2 Burr. 980, 985, or in any other mode of publishing a defamatory libel. But if the publication by each party be distinct, as if two booksellers, not being partners, sell the libel at their respective shops, they must be indicted separately. But two or more cannot be jointly indicted for perjury; R. v. Philips, 2 Str. 921, or for speaking seditious or blasphemous words, or the like, because such offences are in their nature several. And even where several commit a joint act, which act is not of itself illegal, but becomes so merely by reason of some circumstances applicable to each individual severally and not jointly, they must be indicted separately; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 89. Thus several partners could not be indicted jointly for exercising their trade, without having served an apprenticeship. R. v. Atkinson, 1 Salk. 382; R. v. Weston, 1 Str. 623.

Principals in the first and second degree, and accessories before and after the fact may all be joined in the same indictment; 2 Hale, 173; or the principals may be indicted separately, and the accessories may be indicted either before or after the conviction of the principals as for a substantive offence (24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, ss. 2, 3). It is said that several may be jointly indicted for severally erecting common inns, ad commune nocumentum, if it is said that they separaliter erexerunt, etc.: and the same as to keeping disorderly houses, etc.; 2 Hale, 174; but it is much better, and more usual in practice, to indict the proprietor of each house separately.

Misjoinder of defendants may be made the subject of demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment or appeal; or the court may quash the indictment (see post, p. 98). But where there are different counts against different persons in the same indictment, this, though it may be a ground for moving to quash the indictment, is no cause for demurrer, R. v. Kingston, 8 East, 41, if the counts are such in substance as may be joined.

By section 40 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), in an indictment for feloniously receiving any property under the Act, any number of persons who have at different times so received such property or any part thereof may be charged and tried together. Where several persons are indicted for burglary and larceny, one may be found guilty of burglary and larceny, and the others of the larceny only. R. v. Butterworth, R. & R. 520. On an indictment against A. and B. for larceny, with another count against B. for receiving, A. was acquitted; B. was found guilty, on evidence which proved that he was an accessory before the fact to the larceny, and a receiver, and the verdict against him was entered generally; it was held that he was not (since 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, repealed but re-enacted by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 1) entitled to an acquittal for the larceny. R. v. Hughes, Bell, 242; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 71 : R. v. Godspeed, 85 J. P. 232; 27 T. L. R. 255; 6 Cr. App. R. 133.

(e) Joinder of several offences in different counts in one indictment.

We have already seen (ante, p. 53) that if a defendant is charged with two or more distinct offences in the same count of an indictment, the count will be bad for duplicity. Different considerations apply to charging a defendant with different offences in different counts of the same indictment. Each count in an indictment is for the purposes of evidence and judgment a separate indictment; Latham v. R., 5 B. & S. 635 : and see hereon Selvester v. U.S., 170 U. S. 262, where is pointed out the error in R. v. Hayes (1727, 2 Ld. Raym. 1518), where the contrary was held.

Indictments Act, 1915, sect. 4. Joinder of charges in the same indictment.] Subject to the provisions of the rules under this Act, charges for more than one felony or for more than one misdemeanor, and charges for both felonies and misdemeanors, may be joined in the same indictment, but where a felony is tried together with any misdemeanor, the jury shall be sworn and the person accused shall have the same right of challenging jurors as if all the offences charged in the indictment were felonies.

Rule 3. Joinder of charges in one indictment.]—Charges for any offences, whether felonies or misdemeanors, may be joined in the same indictment if those charges are founded on the same facts, or form or are a part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character.

Joinder of different treasons.]—In an indictment for high treason there may be different counts, each charging the defendant with a different species of treason against the King and his government, such as compassing the King's death, levying war, adhering to the King's enemies, within 25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2, and the conspiracies to imprison or do bodily harm to the King, within 36 G. 3, c. 7, s. 1. And this power was extended by statute to treason felony, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, s. 5 (repealed by 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90). See R. v. Mitchel, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 599, 619.

Joinder of different felonies.]—Although before the Indictments Act it was no objection in point of law to an indictment that it charged the prisoner with several distinct felonies in different counts; R. v. Heywood, L. & C. 451; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 133; 9 Cox, 479: R. v. Holman, 9 Cox, 201 (C. C. R.): Castro v. R., 6 A. C. 229, 244; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) at p. 504: R. v. Lockett [1914] 2 K. B. 720; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 1193; 78 J. P. 196; 30 T. L. R. 233; 9 Cr. App. R. 268, yet it had been a general rule of practice not to allow a prisoner to be charged with different felonies in different counts of an indictment; as, for instance, a murder in one count and a burglary in another, or a burglary in the house of A. in one count, and a distinct burglary in the house of B. in another, or a larceny of the goods of A. in one count and a distinct larceny of the goods of B., at a different time, in another, because such a course of proceeding is calculated to embarrass the prisoner in his defence. The true test in each case was whether or not the accused was so embarrassed. R. v. Lockett, supra. It was well established by a long series of decisions that the joinder of two felonies in one indictment (except where the same facts may constitute several felonies, Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B. 799, 812) is so necessarily unfair to the prisoner that the judge ought, upon an application being made to him, to put the prosecutor to his election and send them to two trials; Castro v. R., 6 A. C. at p. 244; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) at p. 504: R. v. Elliott, 1 Cr. App. R. 15, 16. Thus, where an indictment charged the prisoner in three several counts with three several felonies in sending three separate threatening letters, Byles, J., compelled the prosecutor to elect upon which count he would proceed; R. v. Ward, 10 Cox, 42. But the prosecution should not be put to their election where it is plain from the nature and circumstances of the offence charged that the accused is not embarrassed in his defence (e.g., where the acts relied upon as proving the different offences charged are in substance the same). R. v. Lockett, supra.

Now under the Indictments Act any offences, whether felonies or misdemeanors, may be joined in the same indictment provided they are founded on the same facts or form or are part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character. Rule 3, ante, p. 57.

And by s. 5, sub-s. 3 (ante, p. 55), where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, the court is of opinion that the accused may be prejudiced or embarrassed in his defence by reason of being charged with more than one offence in the same indictment, or that for any other reason it is desirable to direct that he should be tried separately for any one or more offences charged in an indictment, the court may order a separate trial of any count or counts of such indictment.

The proper course is to enter up the verdict and judgment separately on each count. O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1: Latham v. R., 5 B. & S. 635.

Joinder of counts for felony and misdemeanor.]—The joinder of a count for felony, with a count for misdemeanor, would formerly have been held bad on demurrer, or, after a general verdict, on motion in arrest of judgment. Young v. R., 3 T. R. 98, 108; Starkie Cr. Pl. (2nd ed.) 43. The reason was that the challenges and the incidents of trial are not the same in felony and misdemeanor, and therefore felony and misdemeanor could not be tried together. Castro v. R., 6 A. C. at p. 244. But now charges for both felonies and misdemeanors may be joined in the same indictment if those charges are founded on the same facts, or form or are a part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character. In such a case the accused is to have the same right of challenging jurors as if all the offences charged were felonies, and the court to have power to order a separate trial of any count or counts in the indictment if such a course seems desirable. Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), ss. 4, 5; r. 3, ante, pp. 57, 54. Thus a person may now be charged in one count of an indictment with forging a cheque, in a second count with uttering the forged cheque, and in a third count with obtaining or attempting to obtain money by the false pretence that the cheque was genuine. Counts for larceny and for obtaining by false pretences may similarly be joined in the same indictment, although such a precaution is now hardly necessary, owing to the effect of the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 44 (3), (4).

Joinder of different misdemeanors.]—It has long been established that indictments for misdemeanor may contain several counts for different misdemeanors, even, as it seems, though the judgments upon each are different. Young v. R., 3 T. R. 98, 105, 106 : R. v. Towle, R. & R. 314; 3 Price, 145; 2 Marsh. (C. P.) 466 : R. v. Johnson, 3 M. & Sel. 539 : R. v. Kingston, 8 East, 41, 46 : and see R. v. Benfield, 2 Burr. 980, 984 : R. v. Jones, 2 Camp. 131; Pritchard Q. S. (2nd ed.) 151; Starkie Cr. Pl. (2nd ed.) 43. Even where several persons were charged in different counts with offences of the same nature, the court held that it was no ground for a demurrer, though it might be for an application to the discretion of the court to quash the indictment. R. v. Kingston, 8 East, 41, 46. And the provisions of the Indictments Act, 1915, as to joinder of offences in the same indictment apply equally in the case of misdemeanors. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, ss. 4, 5; r. 3 (ante, pp. 57, 54). Still, if an indictment for misdemeanor contains several counts charging distinct misdemeanors against the defendant committed on totally different occasions and relating to different subject matters, and the presiding judge sees that the accused may be embarrassed in his defence by the number of charges, the probability is that he would order a separate trial of one or more of the counts under s. 5, sub-s. 3 of that Act (ante, p. 54). See R. v. Castro, 5 Q. B. D. 490, 501, 510 : Castro v. R., 6 A. C. 229, 245; 49 L. J. (Q. B.) 747; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) 497 : R. v. Warren, 71 J. P. 566. Though not illegal, it is hardly fair to put a man upon his trial on an indictment containing forty counts, involving several distinct charges of false pretences; for it would be almost impossible that he should not be grievously prejudiced as regards each one of the charges by the evidence which is being given upon the others. In such a case it would not be unreasonable for the defendant to make an application that each count or set of counts should be taken separately; Hawkins, J., R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214, 216; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 81. There can, of course, be no objection to any number of charges which are founded on the same facts or form or are a part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 3 (ante, p. 57).

Where the presiding judge orders a separate trial of any count or counts under sub-s. 3 of s. 5 of the Indictments Act, 1915 (supra), he may, under sub-s. 4, make an order for the postponement of the trial. See ante, p. 54.

Where a prisoner is indicted for an offence, it is not necessary to add another count for an attempt to commit it; because upon an indictment for felony or misdemeanor, if upon the trial it appears that the defendant merely attempted to commit the offence, but did not complete it, the jury may acquit him of the offence charged, and find him guilty of the attempt. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9. Upon an indictment for any misdemeanor, if the facts given in evidence to prove the misdemeanor amount in law to a felony, the defendant shall not on that account be acquitted of the misdemeanor, unless the court think fit to discharge the jury, and order the defendant to be indicted for the felony. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12. See R. v. Garland [1910] 1 K. B. 154; 26 T. L. R. 130.

When persons jointly indicted plead not guilty the court has power to order them to be separately tried where the interests of justice seem to require that course to be taken. See Kel. (J.) 8, 9 (treason); R. v. Ahearne, 2 Ir. C. L. Rep. 381; 6 Cox, 7 (conspiracy): R. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox, 217. Separate trials are sometimes ordered where evidence admissible against one of the accused would not be admissible against the others, or where the separate trial would enable the accused to call for the defence persons jointly indicted with him, or the crown to call an accomplice, or where persons jointly indicted for felony refuse to join in their challenges. The matter is one within the discretion of the judge at the trial. R. v. Gibbons and Proctor, 82 J. P. 287; 13 Cr. App. R. 134. See now Indictments Act, 1915, s. 5 (3), set out ante, p. 54.

(f) Miscellaneous provisions.

Indictments Act, 1915, sect. 7. Provisions as to Vexatious Indictments Acts.]—Nothing in this Act shall prevent an indictment being open to objection if it contravenes or fails to comply with the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, as amended by s. 1 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, or any other enactment: Provided that an indictment shall not be open to objection under those Acts on the ground that a count is joined with the rest of the indictment which could not at the time of the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, be lawfully joined, if that count can be lawfully joined under the law for the time being in force.

Sect. 8. Savings and interpretation.]—(1) Nothing in this Act or the rules thereunder shall affect the law or practice relating to the jurisdiction of a court or the place where an accused person can be tried, nor prejudice or diminish in any respect the obligation to establish by evidence according to law any acts, omissions, or intentions which are legally necessary to constitute the offence with which the person accused is charged, nor otherwise affect the laws of evidence in criminal cases.

(2) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression "the court" means the court before which any indictable offence is tried or prosecuted.

(3) The provisions of this Act relating to indictments shall apply to criminal informations in the High Court and inquisitions, and also to any plea, replication, or other criminal pleading, with such modifications as may be made by rules under this Act.

Sect. 9. Extent, etc.]—(2) This Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

Rule 12. Saving for s. 32 (4) of 8 Edw. 7, c. 67.]—Nothing in these rules or in any rules made under section two of this Act shall affect the provisions of sub-section (4) of section thirty-two of the Children Act, 1908.

Rule 14. Interpretation.]—The Interpretation Act, 1889, applies for the interpretation of these rules as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.

THE CAPTION.

THE caption is no part of the indictment. 2 Hale, 165: O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 35; Arm. & Trevor (Ir.) 41. It is merely a copy of the entry of the style, and commission of the court where the indictment is preferred, and of the proceedings leading up to the finding of the bill (R. v. Martin, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 925, 1091; 12 Ir. L. R. 399), which is prefixed as a kind of preamble to the indictment upon the record, when the record is returned in obedience to a writ of a certiorari. The following is a form of the caption to an indictment in a court of quarter sessions:—

"WESTMORELAND: Be it remembered that at the general quarter sessions of the peace of our sovereign lord the King, holden at Appleby, in and for the county aforesaid, the —— day of ——, in the —— year of the reign of our sovereign lord George the Fifth, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith, before A. B. and C. D., Esquires, and other their fellows, justices of our said lord the King, assigned to keep the peace of our said lord the King in the said county, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanors, in the said county committed, by the oath of" [the grand jurors, naming them] "good and lawful men of the county aforesaid, sworn and charged to inquire for our said lord the King, and for the body of the county aforesaid, it is presented, in manner and form as appears by the indictment hereunto annexed."

By the Court,
A.B., Clerk of the Peace.

(See 2 Hale, 165 : R. v. Fearnley, 1 Leach, 425 ; 1 T. R. 316 ; and the forms, 4 Went. 41, 105, 132, 150, 174, 222; 6 Went. 1, 357, 373; 2 Hawk. c. 25, ss. 118, 126, 127, 128; 2 Salk. 605 : R. v. Warre, 2 Str. 698. The words "sworn and charged" are not essential. R. v. Martin, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 925, 1091, and cases there cited. See also the form of caption suggested in Short & Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 605.)

In R. v. McKeever [1871] Ir. Rep. 5 C. L. 86, a caption describing a session as held before "A. B., Esq., deputy chairman" of Quarter Sessions, was held sufficient.

A proper caption should show that the court of trial had jurisdiction, and that the indictment was found by a sufficient number of grand jurors. It has been usual to insert the names of twelve grand jurors at the least in the caption, and Hale says that this is necessary; for it may be that the presentment was by a less number than twelve, in which case it is not good; 2 Hale, 167; but in Aylett v. R., 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 529; 1 Eng. Rep. 1479; 6 A. & E. 247 n., where it was objected (upon a writ of error) that the caption did not contain the names of any of the jurors, the House of Lords, after consulting the judges, affirmed the judgment of the court of King's Bench, that this was not essential; and in R. v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 236, Denman, C. J., agreed that the insertion of the names is not necessary. See also R. v. Darley, 4 East, 174, 176 n. : R. v. Davis, 1 C. & P. 470. The caption ought to state them to be jurors of the county; Whitehead v. R., 7 Q. B. 582. It should also state them to be good and lawful men (probi et legales homines), Id., 2 Hale, 167, and early cases collected in Huband, Grand Jury (Ir.), 201, 202. But the court will presume them to be so even if the statement is not made. Mansell v. R., 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 831; 8 E. & B. 54; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 4 : and see Martin v. R., 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 925; 12 Ir. L. R. 399. No objection can be sustained to the caption of an indictment for an allegation that the grand jurors were "sworn and affirmed," without showing that those who were sworn were persons who ought to have been affirmed, or that those who were affirmed were persons who ought to have been sworn. Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 322; Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 13. As to the mode of rectifying a mistake in the caption, see R. v. Justices of Middlesex, 5 B. & Ad. 1113, and R. v. Marsh, supra.

The caption if erroneously drawn up may be amended. R. v. Darley, supra : R. v. Davis, supra: Faulkner's case, 1 Wms. Saunders (6th ed.) 248.

There is, it would seem, only one original general caption for the whole sessions. R. v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 236, 249, Williams, J., Coleridge, J. Objection may be taken to the caption by demurrer; R. v. Fearnley, 1 T. R. 316; and formerly could be taken by writ of error, whether the error were of fact or law. R. v. Marsh, supra, at p. 243, Denman, C. J. : R. v. McKeever [1871] Ir. Rep. 5 C. L. 86.

SECT. 5.

WITHIN WHAT TIME THE BILL MUST BE PREFERRED.

AT common law, there is no time limited for commencing a suit by the King (nullum tempus occurrit regi); and therefore, in all cases of treason, felony, and misdemeanor, where a time is not limited by statute, a prosecution may be commenced at any length of time after the offence. In the case of offences punishable summarily, the summary proceedings must be instituted within six months of the offence, unless it is a continuing offence; London County Council v. Worley [1894] 2 Q. B. 826; and see 73 J. P. 562, 574; or unless another limitation is given by statute for the particular prosecution. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11; see Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure (9th ed.). In criminal cases within the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, the laying of the information is the commencement of the prosecution; Beardsley v. Giddings [1904] 1 K. B. 847; 20 Cox, 645: Brooks v. Bagshaw [1904] 68 J. P. 514: R. v. Priestley [1886] 49 J. P. 148; but quære when, though the information is laid before, process is granted after, the expiration of the time limited. The oldest authorities seem to treat the arrest as the commencement of the prosecution at common law; 2 Hale, 72; but under the different statutes creating limitations (stated below) there have been somewhat varying interpretations of what constituted the commencement of the prosecution.

The following are the chief statutory limitations on the prosecution of indictable offences :—

Treason.]—Indictments for such high treasons as caused corruption of blood (with the exception of treason, by "designing, endeavouring, or attempting any assassination on the body of the King by poison, or otherwise" (7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 6)), must be found by the grand jury within three years next after the offence committed, if the offence has been committed within England, Wales, Berwick-upon-Tweed (7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 5), or Scotland (see 7 Anne, c. 21, Fost. 249); but if committed on the high seas or in a foreign country, there is no time limited to the prosecution.

Misdemeanors by British officials in India.]—Certain offences by British officials in India may be prosecuted in England within three years (see 24 G. 3, sess. 2, c. 25, s. 82); or six years (33 G. 3, c. 52, s. 141) after the offence. See Ilbert, Government of India (2nd ed.) 256. In 21 G. 3, c. 70, s. 7, the limitation is five years after commission of the offence or arrest in England.

Blasphemy.]—An "information" for blasphemy by words spoken must be laid within four days of the speaking, and the prosecution must be within three months of the information. 9 W. 3, c. 35 (9 & 10 W. 3, c. 32, Ruffhead), s. 2. Cf. 19 G. 2, c. 21, s. 12, as to profane swearing.

Riot.]—Prosecutions for offences against the Riot Act (1 G. 1, st. 2, c. 5) must be commenced within twelve months after the offence committed (s. 8).

Strictly speaking, this would mean lunar months. See Bruner v. Moore [1904] 1 Ch. 305; 73 L. J. (Ch.) 377.

Unlawful drilling.]—Prosecutions under the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1820 (60 G. 3 & 1 G. 4, c. 1), must be "commenced within six calendar months after the offence committed" (s. 7).

Night poaching.]—Prosecutions by indictment under the Night Poaching Act, 1828, must be "commenced within twelve calendar months after the commission of the offence." 9 G. 4, c. 69, s. 4.

Revenue offences.]—"Indictments or informations brought or exhibited for any offence against the Customs Acts, in any court or before any justice, shall be brought or exhibited within three years next after the date of the offence committed." 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 257. See R. v. Thompson, 16 Q. B. 832; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 183; 5 Cox, 166, on the similar provisions of a repealed Customs Act. Proceedings for the recovery of any fine or penalty incurred under the Income Tax Acts may be commenced within three years next after the fine or penalty is incurred. 7 Edw. 7, c. 13, s. 23 (I).

Penal statutes.]—All indictments or informations upon any penal statute, whereby the forfeiture is limited to the King, must be brought within two years after the offence committed; if the forfeiture is limited to the King and the prosecutor, the suit must be within one year; and in default thereof, the same must be sued for by the King within two years after that year ended; but where a statute limits a shorter time, the suit must be brought within such time limited. 31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5. This Act does not apply to penalties under the Income Tax Acts (supra) and is repealed (by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 36) as to informations instituting summary proceedings.

Charges against officials.]—Prosecutions for "any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution, of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty, or authority, shall not lie or be instituted unless commenced within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of, or 'in case of a continuance of injury or damage'" (e.g., in case of a public nuisance) "within six months next after the ceasing thereof." 56 & 57 Vict. c. 61, s. 1 (a). This Act expressly or impliedly repeals the particular limitation clauses in prior public general Acts. See s. 2, Schedule.

Corrupt or illegal practices at elections.]—A proceeding against a person in respect of the offence of a corrupt or illegal practice or any other offence at parliamentary elections must be commenced within one year after the offence was committed, or if it was committed in reference to an election with respect to which an inquiry is held by election commissioners must be commenced within one year after the offence was committed, or within three months after the report of such commissioners is made, whichever period last expires, so that it be commenced within two years after the offence was committed. The issue of a summons, warrant, writ, or other process, shall be deemed to be a commencement of a proceeding, where the service or execution of the same on or against the alleged offender is prevented by the absconding or concealment or act of the alleged offender; but save as aforesaid the service or execution of the same on or against the alleged offender, and not the issue thereof, shall be deemed to be the commencemnt of the proceeding. 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 51. The same period of limitation applies to proceedings for similar offences at municipal elections, as the above section is incorporated in the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70), by s. 30 of the later Act; and it also applies to municipal elections in the city of London; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, s. 35; and to offences in connection with elections for county councils (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 75), district or parish councils and boards of guardians (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 48), and metropolitan boroughs (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14).

Offences against girls.]—Prosecution for the offences of unlawfully and carnally knowing, or attempting to have unlawful carnal knowledge, of any girl who is of or above the age of thirteen years and under the age of sixteen years, may not be commenced more than six months after the commission of the offence. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5, as amended by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 27; see R. v. Chandra Dharma [1905] 2 K. B. 335; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 450. Commencement of a prosecution for rape within the six months is sufficient though in the result the accused is indicted and convicted under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5. R. v. West [1898] 1 Q. B. 174; 18 Cox, 675.

Marriages.]—Prosecutions for the felony of unduly solemnising marriage must be commenced "within the space of three years after the offence committed." 4 G. 4, c. 76, s. 21. A like limitation applies to prosecutions for offences under the Marriage Act, 1836 (6 & 7 W. 4, c. 85, s. 41).

Merchandise Marks.]—No prosecution for an offence against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, shall be commenced after the expiration of three years next after the commission of the offence, or of one year next after the first discovery thereof by the prosecutor, whichever expiration first happens. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 28, s. 15.

Commencement of prosecution.]—The commencement of the prosecution is the preferring of the indictment when it is sent up without a preliminary inquiry: or the laying of the information; or, it would seem, the arrest of the accused or the application for summons or warrant in respect of the offence. See R. v. West [1898] 1 Q. B. 174, 177. The time is calculated by excluding the day on which the offence is said to have been committed, and including the day on which the prosecution begins. Pellew v. Inhabitants of East Wonford, 9 B. & C. 134: Williams v. Burgess, 12 A. & E. 635: Radcliffe v. Bartholomew [1892] 1 Q. B. 161; 61 L. J. (M. C.) 63. Sundays are included in computing the time unless expressly excluded. R. v. Middlesex Justices,

2 Dowl. (N. S.) 719, 724; Maxwell on Statutes (5th ed.), p. 562. An amendment of an information does not necessarily prevent the information as originally laid from being the commencement of the prosecution. R. v. Wakeley [1920] 1 K. B. 688; 89 L. J. (K. B.) 97; 84 J. P. 31; 14 Cr. App. R. 121. In Acts passed since 1850 "month" means calendar month. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3.

The provisions of the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 G. 4, c. 69), s. 4, are satisfied if information is laid and warrant is issued and executed within the year. R. v. Brooks, 1 Den. 217; C. & K. 402; 2 Cox, 436. So, where the warrant of commitment for the offence was within the time limited, but the indictment not till afterwards, this was held sufficient. R. v. Austin, 1 C. & K. 621. But the mere issuing of a warrant to apprehend the defendant has been held not to be a commencement of the prosecution, unless it is shown to have been executed within the time limited for the commencement of the prosecution. R. v. Hull, 2 F. & F. 16: R. v. Casbolt, 11 Cox, 385. And proof of the existence of a warrant to apprehend the defendants is not evidence of the commencement of such a prosecution, although the warrant was issued within the twelve months prescribed by that section, and although it recites the laying of the information. The information itself must be given in evidence. R. v. Parker, L. & C. 459; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 135. Where a man was indicted in 1869 for night poaching alleged to have been committed in 1863, and pleaded guilty, he was allowed to withdraw that plea and to plead not guilty, and an acquittal was directed on failure to produce an information and warrant showing that the prosecution had been commenced within twelve calendar months. R. v. Casbolt, 11 Cox, 385. In R. v. Killminster, 7 C. & P. 228, an indictment for night poaching was preferred against the defendant within twelve months after the commission of the offence, and was ignored; four years afterwards another bill was found against him for the same offence, and upon an objection that the proceeding was out of time, Coleridge, J., doubted whether the first indictment was not a proceeding sufficient to entitle prosecutor to proceed: he reserved the point, but the defendant was acquitted upon the merits. See also Adam v. Bristol Inhabitants, 2 A. & E. 389; 4 N. & M. 144; 4 L. J. (K. B.) 35.

As to "commencement of proceedings" within the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20), see R. v. O'Connor [1913] 1 K. B. 557; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 335; 23 Cox, 334.

SECT. 6.

FINDING THE INDICTMENT.

Vexatious Indictments.

AT common law any person was at liberty to prefer a bill of indictment before a grand jury against another for any indictable offence, without any previous inquiry before a justice into the truth of the accusation. Such indictments are usually referred to as voluntary bills. This right is not taken away by the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), which provides for the procedure in the case of a preliminary inquiry by justices as to indictable offences. By the Assizes and Sessions Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 1 (5), "any person having by law the right to present a bill of indictment to a grand jury in a case where no person has been 'committed for trial,' and proposing to do so at any assizes or quarter sessions, shall give notice of his intention to do so to the proper officer more than five days before the commission day or day appointed for holding the court of quarter sessions as the case may be."

The right to prefer voluntary bills is liable to abuse, because as the grand jury only hear the evidence for the prosecution, and the accused is unrepresented before them, a person innocent of the charge made against him, and who has had no notice that any proceedings were about to be instituted, might find that a grand jury had been induced to find a true bill against him, and so to injure his character and put him to great expense and inconvenience in defending himself against a groundless accusation. Accordingly the right has by legislation been taken away in the case of many crimes. The Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), provides (s. 1) that "no bill of indictment for any of the offences following" (see list infra) "shall be presented to or found by any grand jury, unless the prosecutor or other person presenting such indictment has been bound by recognizance to prosecute or give evidence against the person accused of such offence, or unless the person accused has been committed to or detained in custody, or has been bound by recognizance to appear to answer to an indictment to be preferred against him for such offence, or unless such indictment for such offence, if charged to have been committed in England, be preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a judge of one of the superior courts of law at Westminster (i.e., now of the High Court of Justice) or of his majesty's attorney-general or solicitor-general for England, or unless such indictment for such offence, if charged to have been committed in Ireland, be preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a judge of one of the superior courts of law in Dublin (i.e., now of the Supreme Court of Ireland), or of his majesty's attorney-general or solicitor-general for Ireland or (in the case of an indictment for perjury) by the direction of any court, judge or public functionary, authorized by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100—repealed and re-enacted by the Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6)), to direct a prosecution for perjury." The offences within the Act of 1859 are:

(a) Perjury and subornation of perjury (repealed and re-enacted by 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6);

(b) Conspiracy;

(c) Obtaining money or other property by false pretences (but not the mere attempt to obtain: R. v. Burton, 13 Cox, 71 C. C. R.);

(d) Keeping a gambling house or a disorderly house;

(e) Any indecent assault.

To these have been added:

(f) All misdemeanors under Part 2 of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 18), and the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59, s. 164);

(g) All libels or alleged libels, apparently including blasphemous, defamatory, seditious and obscene libel (44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 6);

(h) All misdemeanors under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17);

(i) All offences punishable on indictment under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28, s. 13);

(j) Offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 34, s. 2 (2));

(k) Offences under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 4 (1)); and (l) Misdemeanors under Part 2 of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 35).

In the case of offences under heads (j) and (k) the sanction of the attorney-general is also required, unless in cases under (k) the prosecution is commenced by the director of public prosecutions (6 Edw. 7, c. 34, s. 2 (1); 8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 6). (a).

A committal for trial by justices sitting in and acting for one petty sessional division of a county on a charge arising in another petty sessional division of the same county is a good committal under 22 & 23 Vict c. 17, s. 1. R. v. Beckley, 20 Q. B. D. 187; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 22. By s. 2 of the Act of 1859, "where any charge or complaint shall be made before any one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace that any person has committed any of the offences aforesaid within the jurisdiction of such justice, and such justice shall refuse to commit or to bail the person charged with such offence to be tried for the same, then in case the prosecutor shall desire to prefer an indictment respecting the said offence, it shall be lawful for the said justice, and he is hereby required, to take the recognizance of such prosecutor to prosecute the said charge or complaint, and to transmit such recognizance, information and depositions, if any, to the court in which such indictment ought to be preferred, in the same manner as such justice would have done in case he had committed the person charged to be tried for such offence." Where a prosecutor bonâ fide prefers before a justice a charge in respect of an offence in the above list, alleged to have been committed within his jurisdiction, and the justice dismisses the charge for want of evidence,—even where there is no evidence in support of the charge,—the dismissal is equivalent to a refusal to commit, and the prosecutor is entitled under s. 2 to require the justice to take his recognizance to prosecute the charge. R. v. Lord Mayor of London, ex parte Gostling, 13 Cox, 77; 54 L. T. 646; 50 J. P. 711. And where a magistrate committed the accused for trial for certain offences, and no further evidence was called in respect of other charges, and the magistrate was not asked to commit on other charges, and expressed no opinion on them, but counts were subsequently added to the indictment in respect of such other charges, it was held that these facts amounted to refusal to commit, and the counts thus added were quashed. R. v. Coyne, 69 J. P. 151, Fulton, Recorder. Where a magistrate has refused to grant process he cannot be compelled to do so, nor to take recognizances under the Act, unless an indictable offence is disclosed by the information: Ex parte Wason, L. R. 4 Q. B. 573: and see R. v. Battier or Bather, 42 L. T. 532; 44 J. P. 490: Ex parte Reid, 49 J. P. 600. Where a justice refuses to grant process for an offence within the Vexatious Indictments Acts, the prosecutor may (1) obtain the sanction of the attorney-general to prefer a bill; (2) obtain (on an ex parte application) the consent of a judge of the High Court (K. B. D.) to prefer a bill. R. v. Bray, 3 B. & S. 255; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 11; or (3) apply for an order to the justice to hear and determine the application according to law. R. v. Adamson, 1 Q. B. D. 201; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 46: R. v. Bennett, 72 J. P. 362: R. v. Bros, 66 J. P. 54.

(a) See 6 Edw. 7, c. 34, s. 2 (1): 8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 6. The first of these enactments requires the sanction of the attorney-general. The second requires such sanction or action by the director of public prosecutions. Both nevertheless apply the Vexatious Indictments Act. The effect seems to be to make a preliminary inquiry essential, even in the case of a public prosecution.

In considering the sufficiency of a recognizance to prosecute under s. 1 of the Vexatious Indictments Act, reference may be made to the accompanying depositions to ascertain the particulars of the offences charged. R. v. Bell, 12 Cox, 37.

If a prosecutor is bound over under s. 2 after a refusal to commit for trial, but fails to send up a bill to the grand jury at the sessions for which he is bound before that body is discharged, the court cannot enlarge his recognizances to the next sessions. R. v. Eayres, 64 J. P. 217. The fiat of the attorney-general may be issued even in cases where the magistrates have already refused to commit for trial. R. v. Rogers, 66 J. P. 825, Fulton, Recorder. Where the prosecution is instituted on the fiat of the attorney-general, it has been held to be sufficient to lodge the fiat with the clerk of the court of trial, and unnecessary to produce or prove it at the trial. R. v. Dexter, 19 Cox, 360; see also R. v. Metz, 84 L. J. (K. B.) 1462; 79 J. P. 384; 31 T. L. R. 401; 11 Cr. App. R. 164.

It is not necessary that the performance of any of the conditions mentioned in the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, should be averred in the indictment or proved before the petty jury. Knowlden v. R., 5 B. & S. 532; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 219; 9 Cox, 483. If a defendant committed for obtaining a chattel by false pretences is indicted in one count for that offence, and in another count for obtaining another chattel by false pretences, without any authority having been obtained under the statute to prefer such second charge [excepting where the second charge is founded upon facts disclosed in the depositions, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, infra], the proper course is for the judge at the trial to direct the second count to be quashed, and not to put the prisoner to plead to it. If, however, the two counts are allowed to go to the jury, and evidence is given respecting each charge, and the jury convict on each count, the conviction cannot be supported on either—not on the second, because it ought to have been quashed; nor on the first, because improper evidence has been received. R. v. Fuidge, L. & C. 390; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 74; 9 Cox, 430. When the indictment is preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a judge of one of the superior courts, it is for the judge, to whom the application is made for such direction or consent, to decide what materials ought to be before him, and it is not necessary to summon the party accused, or to bring him before the judge. R. v. Bray, 3 B. & S. 255; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 11. Where three persons were committed for conspiracy, and afterwards the solicitor-general, acting under this statute, directed a bill to be preferred against a fourth person who had not been committed, and all four were indicted together for the same conspiracy, such a course was held to be unobjectionable. Knowlden v. R., supra.

The Act of 1859 was found to be attended by the inconvenience that it was frequently objected on the trial of a prisoner charged with an offence falling under its provisions, that when before the magistrates he had not been charged with, nor committed by them for, the precise offence stated in the indictment, although it was abundantly evident from the depositions that the charge made in the indictment was substantially, although perhaps not in form, gone into before the magistrates. This inconvenience was remedied by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), which, after reciting that it is found that delay and inconvenience are frequently caused by the provisions contained in s. 1 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, in cases not within the mischief for remedy whereof that Act was made and passed, and that it is expedient to restrict the operation thereof, enacts (s. 1) that, "the said provisions of the said first section of the said Act shall not extend or be applicable to prevent the presentment to or finding by a grand jury of any bill of indictment containing a count or counts for any of the offences mentioned in the said Act, if such count or counts be such as may [now] be lawfully joined with the rest of such bill of indictment, and if the same count or counts be founded (in the opinion of the court in or before which the same bill of indictment be preferred) upon the facts or evidence disclosed in any examinations or depositions taken before a justice of the peace, in the presence of the person accused or proposed to be accused by such bill of indictment, and transmitted or delivered to such court in due course of law; and nothing in the said Act shall extend or be applicable to prevent the presentment to or finding by a grand jury of any bill of indictment, if such bill be presented to the grand jury with the consent of the court in or before which the same may be preferred." See hereon, R. v. Brown [1895] 1 Q. B. 119; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 1; 18 Cox, 81. This section is to be read with 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, for the purposes of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62 (Debtors Act, 1869), s. 18. R. v. Bell, 12 Cox, 37, Montague Smith, J. Where A. had been committed for trial for conspiracy with B. who had not been arrested, it was held that the court of trial could, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, give leave to prefer an indictment against B. for conspiracy. R. v. Kopelewitch, 69 J. P. 216, Fulton, Recorder. The "consent of the court," mentioned in the last part of s. 1, is not a mere formality, and if the court grants such consent without having before it materials on which it may exercise a discretion, the indictment, or any counts contained in it, preferred in pursuance of such consent may be quashed. R. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox, 156. But it is not necessary to obtain the consent of the court to the addition of counts for offences within the Vexatious Indictments Act before the bill is presented to the grand jury, if the facts on which the counts are founded appear upon the depositions. R. v. Clarke, 59 J. P. 248, Collins, J. Semble, it is necessary so to obtain such consent where it is desired to prefer a fresh bill of indictment, whether it charges offences disclosed upon the depositions or not, as is the practice at the Central Criminal Court. Charges preferred before the justices on which they have refused to commit cannot be joined in an indictment with those on which the justices did commit, unless the prosecutor has been bound over as to the dismissed charges. R. v. Crabbe, 59 J. P. 247, Fulton, C. S. : R. v. Coyne, 69 J. P. 151, ante, p. 69.

The words "legal proceedings" in section 1 of the Vexatious Actions Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 51), which enables the High Court under certain circumstances to order that no legal proceedings shall be instituted without the leave of the High Court by a person who has habitually and persistently instituted vexatious legal proceedings, do not include criminal proceedings. In re Boaler, 30 T. L. R. 580 (C. A.).

The law relating to vexatious indictments is not affected by the Indictments Act, 1915, which provides that "nothing in this Act shall prevent an indictment being open to objection if it contravenes or fails to comply with the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (ante, p. 67), as amended by s. 1 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (ante, p. 70), or any other enactment : provided that an indictment shall not be open to objection under those Acts on the ground that a count is joined with the rest of the indictment which could not at the time of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, be lawfully joined, if that count can be lawfully joined under the law for the time being in force." 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 7 (ante, p. 60).

The grand jurors have duties and powers with reference to four classes of indictments :—

1. Presentments made by them of their own knowledge and information without the intervention of any prosecutor or the examination of any witnesses. Their powers as to presentment in the case of highway indictments are limited by 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 50, s. 99; and 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 78 (3).

2. Voluntary bills sent before them without any preliminary inquiry before justices (ante, p. 67).

3. Bills sent before them after a preliminary inquiry followed by a committal for trial under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42).

4. Bills sent before them after a preliminary inquiry not followed by committal for trial but falling within the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Acts, 1859, as amended and extended by subsequent legislation (ante, p. 69 et seq.).

Summoning the grand jury.]—The grand jurors are summoned by the sheriff, or if he is disqualified for any cause, by the coroner. See R. v. McGuire [1898] 34 New Brunswick, 430, and as to objections to the grand jurors, infra.

A grand jury is not summoned for the purpose of indictments in the High Court of Justice (King's Bench Division) unless the master of the Crown Office has before the fourth day of the sittings (term) received notice of some business intended to be brought before them, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 52. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd. ed.) 85.

By the Assizes and Quarter Sessions Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 1, provision is made for dispensing with the attendance of grand jurors if not more than five days before the commission day, in the case of assizes, and before the day appointed for holding the court in the case of quarter sessions, it appears to the proper officer (or the clerk of assize or clerk of the peace) that the attendance of the grand jurors will not be required by reason of there being no business to be transacted for which they will be required.

Qualification.]—Grand jurors must be probi et legales homines, and ought to be of the same county where the crime was committed. At common law a grand juror must not be an alien or an outlaw; he must be returned by the proper officer, and not at the instance of the prosecutor. Bacon, Abr. III., Juries A., 725.

The grand jurors of county sessions of the peace must be qualified under s. 1 of the Juries Act, 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50). In quarter-session boroughs every burgess may be a grand juror unless exempt or disqualified (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 186, sub-s. 1). Grand jurors at assizes need not be freeholders, Anon., R. & R. 177. British peers are not liable, but an Irish peer, who is a member of the House of Commons, is liable to serve upon the grand jury at the assizes. Lord Headley's case [1806] R. & R. 117. "No man who has been or shall be attainted of any treason or felony, or convicted of any crime that is infamous, unless he shall have obtained a free pardon, nor any man who is under outlawry, is or shall be qualified to serve on juries or inquests in any court or on any occasion whatsoever." 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 10. Since the abolition of attainder (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 1) and the repeal of statutes referring to infamous crimes, it is difficult to say whom this section disqualifies. But see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 30, s. 29 (3).

Objections to grand jurors.]—In Ireland it has been held that the proper mode of objecting to a grand juror is by plea in abatement and not by challenge. R. v. Sheridan, 31 St. Tr. 543. In England it is not clear that the objection would not be taken by way of challenge: 2 Hale, 155; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 16:

R. v. Lewis, 7 St. Tr. 250 : R. v. Sheares, 27 St. Tr. 255, 267; 8 Rep. Crim. Law Commrs., 1841, c. 2, art. 15. It may also be taken in arrest of judgment : R. v. Jackson, 25 St. Tr. 885. (a)

Swearing the grand jury.]—The grand jurors must be sworn or affirmed before they can find a bill of indictment laid before them. The form of oath administered to the foreman, as modified by the Oaths Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 39) is as follows :—

"I, as foreman of the grand inquest for our Sovereign lord, the King, for the body of this county of ——, swear by Almighty God that I will diligently enquire and true presentment make of all such matters and things as shall be given me in charge, or shall otherwise come to my knowledge touching this present service. The King's counsel, my fellows' and my own I will observe and keep secret: I will present no one through envy, hatred, or malice: nor will I leave any one unpresented through fear, favour or affection, gain, reward, or the hope thereof: but I will present all things truly and indifferently as they shall come to my knowledge, according to the best of my skill and understanding." [So Help me God.] (See 2 Hale, 161.) The grand jurors if they wish may be sworn in the old form, q.v. Archb. Cr. Pl. (23rd ed.) 98.

The other jurors take a similar oath. When all the grand jurors are sworn they are charged by the presiding judge as to the bills of indictment to be sent before them and advised as to whether the evidence (as disclosed by the depositions taken before the committing magistrates) is such as to constitute a primâ facie case against the accused : but they are entitled to exercise their own discretion on each bill when it comes before them. After being charged they retire to the grand jury chamber to receive and consider the bills.

Swearing the witnesses.]—It has always been usual in England to swear the witnesses to be called before the grand jury : R. v. Dickinson, R. & R. 401. In Ireland they were neither sworn nor examined until 1816 (56 G. 3, c. 87).

At common law it was necessary that some officer of the court (which term includes the crier), after the indictment was engrossed (R. v. Tew, Dears. 429; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62), should administer the oath to the witnesses in open court, and then the indictment was laid before the grand jury by the proper officer. The Grand Juries Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 54), dispensed with the swearing of the witnesses in open court (s. 2). Under that Act the "foreman" of the grand jury, or any other member of the grand jury who may for the time being act on behalf of the foreman in the examination of witnesses in support of any bill or indictment (s. 3), is authorised and required to administer an oath (or an affirmation, where by law it is required or allowed to be taken in lieu of an oath (s. 3)) to all persons who appear before the grand jury to give evidence in support of any bill of indictment, and all such persons, attending before any grand jury to give evidence, may be sworn and examined upon oath by the grand jury touching the matters in question. The Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), rule 1 (5), superseding similar provisions in the Grand Juries Act (supra), provides that there shall be endorsed on the back of an indictment the name of every witness examined or intended to be examined by the grand jury, and the foreman of the grand jury shall write his initials against the name of each witness so examined. The Grand Juries Act (supra) does not affect the fees by law payable to any officer of any court for swearing witnesses. Similar provisions are made as to Ireland by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 37, which repealed 56 G. 3, c. 87.

Proceedings before the grand jury.]—Administration of Justice Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 81), s. 4 (1): Where any person charged before any justice or justices with an offence pleads guilty or admits the truth of the charge before the justice or justices and is committed for trial, the clerk to the justice or justices shall, before the day fixed for the holding of the assizes or quarter sessions at which the person so committed is to be tried, transmit to the clerk of the assize or clerk of the peace, as the case may be, a certificate stating that the person so committed so pleaded guilty or admitted the truth of the charge, and the grand jury, on the production to them of the certificate, shall forthwith, without hearing or examining any witnesses, return a true bill as respects that charge. (2) This section shall come into operation on the date on which the Grand Juries (Suspension) Act, 1917, expires, or, if His Majesty in Council so directs, on such earlier date as may be specified in the Order, and, if any Order is so made, the Grand Juries (Suspension) Act, 1917, shall cease to have effect on the date so specified. By order in Council December 23rd, 1921 (St. R. & O. 1921, No. 1879 L. 27, this section came into operation on the 23rd December, 1921. Indictments for offences within the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17), or requiring the sanction of the attorney-general or the director of public prosecutions, must not be sent before the grand jury unless the conditions prescribed by the statutes (ante, pp. 67, 70) have been satisfied; and, if presented or found in contravention of the statutes, may be quashed. See post, p. 98.

After the indictment has been taken to the grand jury room, it comes under the consideration of the grand jury in its turn. The witnesses for the prosecution are then called in, in the order in which their names are indorsed on the indictment, and are sworn and examined by the grand jury. Refusal to be sworn is punishable as contempt of court. R. v. Lord Preston, 12 St. Tr. 645. As a general rule the solicitor for the prosecution is not admitted to the grand jury chamber; but at the Central Criminal Court the solicitor is admitted in difficult and very complicated cases by written order of the clerk of the court. (Rules, Dec. 12, 1892, r. 6). If there appears to a majority of the grand jury (consisting of twelve at least) "probable evidence" of the offence charged (2 Hale, 157), the clerk of the grand jury will indorse on the indictment, "True bill;" but if the majority are of opinion that the offence has not been sufficiently proved, the words "No true bill" are in that case indorsed on the indictment. Afterwards, the foreman, accompanied by other grand jurors, carries the indictments so endorsed into court, and delivers them to the clerk of the court, who thereupon states to the court the substance of each, and the indorsement upon it, and the grand jurors who bring in the bills express their assent to his statement. In strict legal parlance, an indictment is not so called, until it has been found a "true bill" by the grand jury; before that it is named a "bill of indictment" merely.

The grand jury may present an indictment on their own knowledge, nor can any inquiry be made as to whether witnesses were properly sworn before them (see form of oath, ante, p. 73, R. v. Russell, C. & Mar. 247: R. v. Bullard, 12 Cox, 353): but they may if they think fit require the same evidence, written and parol, as may be necessary to support the indictment at the trial. They are not, however, usually very strict as to the documentary evidence; they often admit copies where the originals alone are evidence; and sometimes even evidence by parol of a matter which should be proved by written evidence. But as they may insist on the same strictness of proof as must be observed at the trial it is prudent in all cases to be provided, at the time the bill is preferred, with the same evidence with which it is intended afterwards to support the indictment. In R. v. Clements, 2 Den. 251; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 193, the deposition of the prosecutrix, which had been allowed by the judge to be read in evidence before the grand jury after a statement by counsel for the prosecution that she was so ill as to be unable to travel, that the deposition had been taken by the magistrate in the presence of the prisoners, who had an opportunity for cross-examination, and was signed by the prosecutrix and the magistrate, and that witnesses to prove all the above facts were in attendance, was held to have been rightly so read; but the point as to whether evidence on oath should have been first given does not seem to have been raised. In R. v. Philip, 1 F. & F. 105, Erle, J., the evidence of a medical man was held necessary as a condition precedent to the deposition being read before the grand jury (cf. R. v. Wilson, 12 Cox, 622, Lush, J.). In R. v. Beaver, 10 Cox, 274, Byles, J., held that the deposition could not be laid before the grand jury unless the presiding judge had, by evidence taken in the presence of the accused, satisfied himself of the existence of the facts required by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, to make the deposition admissible. But this decision is adversely criticised in a note (p. 275), and in a subsequent case, R. v. Bullard, 12 Cox, 353, the same judge, on the foreman of the grand jury coming into court and asking for the deposition of an absent witness, without whose evidence they had no materials for finding the bill, granted the application, without any proof that the deposition was admissible as evidence under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, observing that the grand jury were not bound by any rules of evidence, that they were a secret tribunal, and might lay by the heels in gaol the most powerful man in the country by finding a bill against him, and for that purpose might even read a paragraph from a newspaper. So in R. v. Gerrans, 13 Cox, 158, where it was stated by counsel for the prosecution that a witness was unable to attend the trial through illness, Denman, J., permitted his deposition to be presented to the grand jury without any preliminary proof that the witness was ill, or that his deposition had been regularly taken, and directed that the grand jury should be told that the court permitted them to look at the deposition, and to act upon it if they thought proper. And in R. v. Lynch (K. B. D. 19, Dec., 1902), Alverstone, C.J., allowed the deposition of a witness absent through illness to be read before the grand jury without requiring to hear evidence as to his condition, stating that such evidence was unnecessary.

Where a witness refuses to give evidence before the grand jury, they cannot use his deposition as evidence to enable them to find the bill. R. v. Rendle, 11 Cox, 209, Channell, B.

An improper mode of swearing the witnesses before the grand jury will not vitiate the indictment. R. v. Russell, C. & Mar. 247. See O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 11 Cl. & F. 155; 8 Eng. Rep. 155. A witness who gives false evidence before a grand jury is indictable for perjury (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6, s. 1), and the other witnesses examined on the same bill are good witnesses to prove it. R. v. Hughes, 1 C. & K. 519; but a grand juror is not an admissible witness in such a case: Id.; and see R. v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 236, 237.

If witnesses will not come forward voluntarily to give evidence before the grand jury, the course is to sue out a subpœna or subpœna duces tecum, either at the crown office in London (see Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 405) or with the clerk of assize for the assizes, or with the clerk of the peace for the sessions, and serve each of them with a copy, or subpœna ticket, as it is termed. If the witness is in prison, he may, if in civil custody, be brought up by hab. corp. ad testificandum; or if in criminal custody, he may be brought up by an order from a judge, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 9: and whether in civil or criminal custody, under an order of a secretary of state, under s. 11 of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41).

The grand jury have nothing to do with the defence (2 Hale, 157) and are not entitled to hear the evidence of the defendant's witnesses, nor of the defendant himself, under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36). R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 83. Nor, it would seem, is it necessary to have him in court when the grand jurors are sworn. See R. v. Mathurin [1903] 12 Quebec L. R. (K. B.) 494. Nor is it their business to inquire into the sanity of the accused, which is for a petty jury to determine: nor have they any authority to ignore a bill on the ground of insanity. R. v. Hodges, 8 C. & P. 195.

Finding the bill.]—The bill must be found by a majority of the jurors, and that majority must consist of twelve at least; 2 Hale, 161: R. v. Clyncard, Cro. Eliz. 654; for which reason it is that the number of persons on the grand jury by inveterate practice never exceeds twenty-three, nor is less than twelve; 2 Burr. 1088 n.: R. v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 236, 241, Denman, C.J.; 6 L. J. (M. C.) 153.

The finding must be indorsed on the indictment, and is "parcel of the indictment and the perfection of it," and "touches it principally, for it is the life of it." R. v. Ford, Yelv. 99. And the bill as found must be delivered in open court; R. v. Thompson, 1 Cox, 268; and it should be signed by the foreman; but absence of the signature is not fatal if the bill was delivered by the foreman in open court and read in his presence. R. v. Sidoli, 1 Lew. 55.

It is said that the grand jury cannot find billa vera as to part, and ignoramus as to the other part of an indictment; for they ought to find the whole or nothing. 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 2; R. v. Ford, Yelv. 99 : R. v. Serjant, 1 Sid. 414. Thus, where upon an indictment for libel, they found "quoad the words billa vera," "sed utrum malitiose ignoramus," the finding was held void. 1 Leon, 287. But this has reference only to the same count in the indictment : for it is clear that they may find billa vera as to one count, and ignoramus to another. R. v. Fieldhouse, 1 Cowp. 325. They cannot, however, find the bill conditionally; as, for instance, "si messuagium sit in possessione domini regis, tunc billa vera." R. v. Lord Cromwell, Yelv. 15. Upon an indictment for murder against A. and B., the grand jury found billa vera as to A., and as to B., manslaughter only. The court, after holding that such a finding was possible, decided that the best course was to proceed on the indictment so far as it found murder, and to have a new indictment on the manslaughter charge. R. v. Carew, 3 Bulstr. 206; 1 Rolle Rep. 407. In R. v. Bubb, 4 Cox, 455, 457, a similar finding was on the authority of the case above cited, and 1 Chit. Cr. L. 322, treated as good for the murder and nugatory as to the manslaughter. And they may find billa vera as to A., and ignoramus as to B.; R. v. Cholmley, Cro. Car. 464; or they may find bills against one or both of them for manslaughter, although, in such a case, it is more usual for the grand jury to return the indictment to the court, with a desire that it may be altered to a bill for manslaughter, and, when so altered (which may readily be done), to find a true bill generally. Upon an indictment for murder, however, the jury even under the old law could not find billa vera se defendendo. R. v. Powle, 2 Rolle Rep. 52. Nor can they do so now, as such a finding would be practically a finding of no offence. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 7.

Since 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38 (post, p. 107) the grand jurors at quarter sessions can find bills which the sessions have no jurisdiction to try. R. v. Allum, 2 Cox, 62, Parke, B. : R. v. Atkinson, 1 Wms. Saund. (6th ed.) 249, note 1. Prior to that Act the contrary was held. R. v. Rigby [1839] 8 C. & P. 770 : R. v. Bainton, 2 Str. 1088. Where such a bill is found the proper course is to transmit it to the assizes for trial, or for the judge of assize to remove it to the assizes by certiorari under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 2 (post, p. 110). See R. v. Wildman, 12 Cox, 354, Keating, J. For form of order to transmit, see Archb. Q. S. (6th ed.) 550; Pritchard, Q. S. (2nd ed.). Indictments found at the sessions, and transmitted by the justices to the assizes, must be tried at the assizes, although not removed by certiorari. R. v. Wetherell, R. & R. 381. The power of the justices at quarter sessions to remit indictments found there for trial at the assizes is not affected by the Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12) : see s. 5 of that Act. Such transmission is, however, a matter in the discretion of the justices, and the judge of assize has now power to order it, even although the defendant may, after the finding of the indictment at sessions, have been bound by recognizance to appear and plead to it at the assizes. R. v. Wildman, supra.

Although the grand jury have been formally discharged, yet if they have not separated, they may be recalled and charged with other bills. R. v. Holloway, 9 C. & P. 43.

If a bill is thrown out, it can be preferred to the same grand jury during the same assizes or sessions. R. v. Simmonite, 1 Cox, 30; sub nom. R. v. Newton, 2 M. & Rob. 503, Wightman, J. There are, however, authorities to the contrary: R. v. Humphreys, C. & Mar. 601, Patteson, J.: R. v. Austin, 4 Cox, 387.

The grand jury are not liable to action or prosecution for anything done by them with reference to finding a bill of indictment. Floyd v. Barker, 12 Co. Rep. 23; Earl of Macclesfield v. Starkey, 10 St. Tr. 1329, 1413.

Evidence by grand jurors as to what passed in the grand jury room will not be received. R. v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 236, 237: and see R. v. Brown [1907] 7 N. S. W. State Rep. 290.

Copy of indictment for accused person.]—By rule 13 of the Indictments Act, 1915, (1) "It shall be the duty of the clerk of assize, after a true bill has been found on any indictment, to supply to the accused person, on request, a copy of the indictment free of charge.

"(2) The cost of any copy supplied to the accused person whether under this rule or otherwise shall be treated as part of the costs of the prosecution for the purpose of s. 1 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908. [See post, p. 267.]

"(3) In the application of this rule to quarter sessions, the clerk of the peace shall be substituted for the clerk of assize."

SECT. 7.

PROCESS, AFTER INDICTMENT FOUND, TO COMPEL APPEARANCE OF THE ACCUSED.

Proceedings by writ.]—If a defendant against whom an indictment has been found is present in court, or is in the custody of the court, he may at once be arraigned upon the indictment, without any previous process. 2 Hawk. c. 27; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 338. Where the defendant is in the custody of another court, the course is to remove him by habeas corpus ad respondendum, and bring him up to plead. "Where recognizances shall have been entered into for the appearance of any person to take his trial for any offence at any court of criminal jurisdiction, and a bill of indictment shall be found against him, and such person shall be then in the prison belonging to the jurisdiction of such court, under warrant of commitment, or under sentence for some other offence, it shall be lawful for the court, by order in writing, to direct the governor of the said prison to bring up the body of such person, in order that he may be arraigned upon such indictment without writ of habeas corpus, and the said governor shall thereupon obey such order." 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 10. The attendance of the prisoner can also, it would seem, be obtained under a secretary of state's order. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 41, s. 11. Where a prisoner after his committal for trial, but before trial, has been removed to a lunatic asylum by warrant from the secretary of state, under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 29 (rep.), whether he was or was not under recognizance to appear he could be brought up for trial by a habeas corpus issued by the judge of assize. R. v. Peacock, 12 Cox, 21, Brett, J. But it is doubtful whether this power exists in the case of a warrant of the secretary of state, issued under s. 2 of the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 64). See Ex parte Collins (Q. B. D. Feb. 16, 1899); 34 L. J. Newsp. 132; 43 Sol. Journ. 280.

When an indictment for a misdemeanor has been found, a writ of venire facias ad respondendum may be issued either by the King's Bench Division, a judge of assize, or a court of quarter sessions. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 32, 83, 84; Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 87, 98, 165; Com. Dig. Process, A. 1; 5 Edw. 3, c. 11. On default in appearance a writ of distringas may be issued. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 85; and on default of appearance within four days of a return to the writ of distringas, a writ of capias ad respondendum may be issued. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 86.

In the case of indictments in the High Court against the inhabitants of a county, parish, or district, or against a corporation aggregate, writs of venire facias and distringas are issued to compel appearance. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 87. When the indictment is found in or removed to the High Court, the proper procedure in the case of defendants not parties to the removal, nor bound by recognizances to answer, is by issue of a writ of venire facias, or in the case of an information by issue of a subpœna to answer, or venire facias: r. 83. If the defendant does not appear within four days of a return by the sheriff to a venire facias the prosecutor may issue a writ of distringas: r. 85. And if default in appearance is made after execution of the distringas the prosecutor may sue out a capias ad respondendum: r. 86.

The form of a writ of venire facias is as follows :—

George the Fifth, etc., to the sheriff of ——, greeting. We command you that you cause to come before us in [the King's Bench Division of our High Court of Justice at the Royal Courts of Justice, London] on the —— day of ——, A. B. to answer to us for certain misdemeanors whereof he is indicted: and have you there then this writ. See Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 52. Witness, etc.

This writ was issued by ——.

The form of a writ of distringas to answer is as follows :—

George the Fifth, etc., to the sheriff of the county of ——, greeting. We command you that you distrain A. B., of ——, in your county [yeoman], by all his lands and chattels in your bailiwick, so that neither he nor any one for him do put his hands to the same until you shall have another command from us for that purpose, and that you answer to us for the issues thereof, so that you may have him before [our justices assigned to keep our peace, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses and other misdemeanors in the said county committed, at —— in your said county], on the —— day of —— next ensuing, to answer unto us concerning certain misdemeanors [or felonies] whereof he is indicted, and to hear his judgment for his many defaults, and have you there then this writ. Witness C. D. and E. F. [two justices of the peace] at ——, the —— day of ——, in the —— year of our reign [see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 56].

If the defendant appears to the writ of distringas, a supersedeas may be obtained, either to stay the execution of the writ, or to procure a return of the amount levied. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 104, and form 171 : Bac. Abr. tit. Attorney, B. But if the defendant fails to appear within the time limited, and the sheriff makes a return that he has no lands, a writ of capias ad respondendum may be issued, and if he cannot be taken upon the first capias, second and third writs of capias called alias and pluries, may issue. 4 Bl. Com. 389 : as to the duties and power of the sheriff, see Bengough v. Rossiter, 4 T. R. 506; 2 H. Bl. 419; R. v. Yandell, 4 T. R. 521. Upon an indictment for felony a writ of capias is issued in the first instance; but this mode of proceeding is now rarely adopted, except as a step towards outlawry. See post, p. 85.

The following is the form of the writ of capias :—

George the Fifth, etc., to the sheriff of the county of ——, greeting. We command you that you take A. B., of ——, in your county [labourer], if he shall be found in your bailiwick, and him safely keep, so that you may have him before [our justices assigned to keep our peace, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses and other misdemeanors in the said county committed at —— in your county], on the —— day of —— next ensuing, to answer to us concerning certain misdemeanors [or felonies] whereof he is indicted, and have you then there this writ. Witness C. D. and E. F. [two justices of the peace] at ——, the —— day of ——, in the —— year of our reign [see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 57].

If the proceedings above fail the prosecutor can proceed to outlawry, post, p. 85.

Proceeding by warrant of a justice.]—Proceedings in ordinary cases are regulated by s. 3 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), by which it is provided that " where any indictment shall be found by the grand jury in any court of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery, or in any court of general or quarter sessions of the peace, against any person who shall then be at large, and whether such person shall have been bound by any recognizance to appear to answer to the same or not, the person who shall act as clerk of the indictments at such court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or as clerk of the peace at such sessions, at which the said indictment shall be found, shall at any time afterwards, after the end of the sessions of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery or sessions of the peace at which such indictment shall have been found, upon application of the prosecutor, or of any person on his behalf, and on payment of a fee of one shilling, if such person shall not have already appeared and pleaded to such indictment, grant unto such prosecutor or person a certificate ((F) infra) of such indictment having been found; and upon production of such certificate to any justice or justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place in which the offence shall in such indictment be alleged to have been committed, or in which the person indicted in and by such indictment shall reside or be, or be supposed or suspected to reside or be, it shall be lawful for such justice or justices, and he and they are hereby required to issue his or their warrant ((G) infra) to apprehend such person so indicted, and to cause him to be brought before such justice or justices, or any other justice or justices for the same county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place, to be dealt with according to law: and afterwards, if such person be thereupon apprehended and brought before any such justice or justices, such justice or justices, upon its being proved upon oath or affirmation before him or them that the person so apprehended is the same person who is charged and named in such indictment shall, without further inquiry or examination, commit ((H) infra) him for trial, or admit him to bail, in manner hereinafter mentioned. . . ." (See Bail, post, p. 87).

Form of certificate of indictment being found.]—I hereby certify that at [a court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, or a court of general quarter sessions of the peace], holden in and for the [county] of ——, at ——, in the said [county], on —— a bill of indictment was found by the grand jury against A. Backing justice's warrants.]—If a person against whom a justice's warrant has been issued with respect to an indictable offence has escaped or gone into, or resides, or is supposed to reside or be "in any place in England or Wales, out of the jurisdiction of the justice issuing such warrant," upon proof alone being made on oath of the handwriting of the justice issuing such warrant, it is lawful for any justice of the peace for the county or place in which the person against whom the warrant has been issued is, or is supposed to be, to indorse the warrant in the following form (K); and such indorsement shall be sufficient authority for the execution of the warrant in that county or place. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 11. An arrest under a warrant not backed by a justice of the county or borough within which it is executed is illegal. R. v. Cumpton, 5 Q. B. D. 341; 49 L. J. (M. C.) 41. A warrant issued by a Metropolitan Police Magistrate in respect of an offence committed within the Metropolitan Police District may be executed outside that district without backing by any of the constables to whom it is directed. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 17.

Under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, ss. 12, 13, 14, English warrants may be backed in Ireland, Scotland, or the Isles of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney or Sark. English warrants may also be executed in Ireland, after indorsement by the inspector-general or a deputy or assistant inspector of the Irish Constabulary, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 19, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 19, s. 1.

The form of indorsement used is as follows:—

(K)

—— to wit: Whereas proof upon oath hath this day been made before me, one of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the said [county] of ——, that the name of J. S. to the within warrant subscribed is of the handwriting of the justice of the peace within mentioned: I do therefore hereby authorize W. T., who bringeth to me this warrant, and all other persons to whom this warrant was originally directed, or by whom it may lawfully be executed, and also all constables and other peace officers of the said [county] of ——, to execute the same within the said last-mentioned [county], and to bring the said A. B., if apprehended within the same [county], before me [or before some other justice or justices of the peace of the same county], to be dealt with according to law. Given under my hand this —— day of ——, 19—. J. L.

Offenders fleeing from the United Kingdom.]—Where the offender has fled to a British possession or a place to which the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts apply, the warrants for his arrest are executed under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 69). As to this Act, see R. v. Cohen [1907] 71 J. P. 190 : R. v. Phillips [1858] 1 F. & F. 105 : Ex parte Percival [1907] 1 K. B. 696; 71 J. P. 148; 23 T. L. R. 238 : R. v. Spilsbury [1898] 2 Q. B. 615.

Where the accused has fled to a foreign country to which the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts do not apply, his surrender is obtainable under the Extradition Treaty in force with such country, or in some cases by application to the foreign government, independently of any treaty. The procedure to be followed depends on the terms of the treaty or the requirements of the foreign government. See Clarke on Extradition (4th ed.); Biron and Chalmers on Extradition. The Orders in Council bringing each treaty into effect and setting out its text are published as Statutory Rules and Orders. The Extradition Acts of 1870, 1873, and 1895, in the main regulate only procedure for extradition from British dominions, but they forbid the trial of fugitives surrendered by foreign states, except on charges founded on the facts on which their surrender was made.

Where the defendant is already in prison.]— . . . If the person against whom an indictment has been found is "confined in any gaol or prison for any other offence than that charged in the said indictment, at the time of such application and production of the said certificate to such justice or justices as aforesaid (ante, p. 81) it shall be lawful for such justice or justices, and he and they are hereby required, upon it being proved before him or them upon oath or affirmation that the person so indicted and the person so confined in prison are one and the same person, to issue his or their warrant ((I.) infra), directed to the gaoler or keeper of the gaol or prison in which the person so indicted shall then be confined as aforesaid, commanding him to detain such person in custody until by his Majesty's writ of habeas corpus he shall be removed therefrom, for the purpose of being tried upon the said indictment, or until he shall otherwise be removed or discharged out of his custody by due course of law." 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 3.

Form of warrant to detain a person indicted who is already in custody for another offence.]—To the keeper of the [common gaol or house of correction], at ——, in the said [county] of —— : Whereas it hath been duly certified by J. being now duly proved, upon oath before [me] that the said A. B. so indicted as aforesaid and the said A. B. in your custody in the [common gaol] aforesaid, until by his Majesty's writ of habeas corpus he shall be removed therefrom for the purpose of being tried upon the said indictment or until he shall otherwise be removed or discharged out of your custody by due course of law. Given under my hand and seal this —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, at ——, in the [county] aforesaid.

Proceeding by bench warrant.]—By a long course of practice, it is an established rule that any court of record before which an indictment is found may forthwith issue a bench warrant for arresting the party charged, and bringing him immediately before such court, to answer such indictment. 8th Rep. Crim. Law Commrs. 99; Dick. Sess. 230 (6th ed.); and see 5 Edw. 3, c. 11; 34 Edw. 3, c. 1; Cro. Cir. Comp. 15 (10th ed.); 1 Chitty Cr. L. 340; Pritchard Q. S. (2nd ed.) 194; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 87; Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 32, 76. In 3 Burn's J., tit. Process, 1338 (30th ed.), it is said that the practice refers only to cases of misdemeanor. If the warrant is issued at the assizes, it is signed by a judge: if at sessions, by two justices of the peace. Hawkins, Book II., c. 27, s. 8, says that the warrant is granted when the court is sitting. This statement applies to commissions of the peace, and is only another way of saying that the court is not continuous, and the act must be done in sessions. Where a party against whom the indictment has been found is already under recognizance to appear and answer any indictment that may be preferred against him, and he does not appear, the prosecutor may bespeak a bench warrant, which will be signed by the justices at the close of the sessions; for the sessions being in law but one day, the defendant has the whole period of the sessions to appear. 2 Salk. 607; Cro. Cir. Comp. 15 (10th ed.). When a prosecutor applies for a bench warrant at the Central Criminal Court, a recognizance to prosecute with effect against the defendant is required. Reg. Gen., Jan. 1847; C. & Mar. 254. It is said that at that court the warrant is only current for the session in which it is issued. See R. v. Nichols, 64 J. P. 217, Fulton, Recorder; Encycl. Laws of England (2nd ed.), vol. ii., p. 156. This opinion probably rests on the theory that the court is not a continuing court, which was held to be erroneous by Wright, J., in R. v. Madge & Armstrong, Q. B. D. May 8, 1894, 29 Law Journ. Newsp. 301; Times, May 9, 1894, cited R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. at 440. It is not now the practice to grant a bench warrant unless immediate arrest is necessary, or it is shown that the party charged was about to quit the country; R. v. Whittaker, 2 F. & F. 1; and it is not granted for the arrest of defaulting witnesses. R. v. Crawford, 6 Cox, 481 (Ir.).

The following is the form of a bench warrant:—

County of London.]—To all constables, headboroughs, and other his Majesty's officers and ministers within the county of London, and to every one of them whom it may concern: These are to will and require, and in his Majesty's name to charge and command you, upon sight hereof, to bring before us his Majesty's justices of the peace for the county aforesaid, at the sessions of the peace [or general quarter sessions of the peace] now holden at the Sessions House on Clerkenwell Green, in and for the said county, the body of A. B., who stands indicted before us at this same session for a trespass and assault [nature of the offence], if the court be then and there sitting, or if not, before us or some other of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the same county, to find sufficient sureties for his personal appearance at this present sessions, to answer the said indictment and all such other matters as on his Majesty's behalf shall be objected against him: and if he cannot be taken during this present session, that then, as soon after as he shall be taken, you bring or cause him to be brought before us or some other of his Majesty's justices of the peace of the said county to find sufficient sureties: that is to say, two sureties in £—— each for his personal appearance at the next session of the peace to be holden for the said county, to answer as aforesaid, and further to be dealt with according to law. Hereof you are not to fail at your peril. Dated in open session at the Sessions House, Clerkenwell Green, aforesaid, this —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——.

C. D. and E. F.

Warrant by judge of the High Court.]—Under 48 G. 3, c. 58, s. 1, any judge of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice upon affidavit or certificate of the fact (R. v. Redfern, 2 A. & E. 387) that an indictment has been found, or information filed in that court, against any person for an offence other than treason or felony, may issue his warrant under his hand and seal for apprehending him and taking him before a judge of the high court or a justice of the peace, to be by him held to bail with two sufficient sureties in such sum as the court specifies in the warrant for appearance in the King's Bench Division at the time mentioned in the warrant to answer the indictment or information: and if such defendant neglects or refuses to provide bail, the judge or justice before whom he is brought may commit him to prison. Where an indictment has been removed into the High Court, on production of a certificate from the crown office that the indictment has been filed, a judge of the King's Bench Division may, by warrant under his hand, cause the party indicted to be arrested, and, in default of bail, commit him for trial. Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 75, 76. R. v. Downey, 7 Q. B. 281; 15 L. J. (M. C.) 29; 4 Bl. Com. 319. See Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 75, 76. The above statute does not preclude the use of a capias ad respondendum (ss. 1, 3), but that is now only needed as a step to outlawry. For form of warrant, see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 32, 74, 75, 76, and Form 43; see Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 92; 8 Rep. Crim. Law Commrs. 348.

Outlawry.]—Where an indictment for treason, felony, or misdemeanor has been found by a grand jury against any person, whether a peer or a commoner, and summary process proves ineffectual to the apprehension of the defendant, process of outlawry is issued:—outlawry being a punishment inflicted upon an offender by the law for contumacy, in refusing to render himself amenable to the justice of the King's courts (a) Doct. & Stud. dial. 2, cap. 3; Bac. Abr. Outlawry; Com. Dig., Utlagary; 1 Chitty Crim. L. 347; 2 Hale, 194; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 113. An outlawry in treason or felony still amounts to a conviction and attainder of the offence charged in the indictment, as much as if the offender had been found guilty by a jury; 4 Bl. Com. 319; 2 Hawk. c. 48, ss. 21-25; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 1; but outlawry, in a case of misdemeanor, does not enure as a conviction for the offence, but merely as a conviction of the contempt for not answering. R. v. Tippin, 2 Salk. 494. Process of outlawry may be awarded by justices of oyer and terminer, and also by justices of the peace at quarter sessions, on indictments taken before them; 3 Burn's J., Process, 1339 (30th ed.); Dick. Q. Sess. (6th ed.) 228; but the practice of proceeding to outlawry in courts of quarter sessions seems to have become obsolete: 8 Rep. Crim. L. 103; and the usual course is to remove the indictment found at sessions by certiorari, and proceed to outlawry in the King's Bench Division. The most scrupulous exactness was required in all the proceedings in outlawry, which might be set aside on writ of error for any informality. 1 Chitty Crim. L. 347. Although outlawry is still an integral, and has been described as an essential, part of the criminal law (R. v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527, 2551, Lord Mansfield, C.J., 19 St. Tr. 1075), proceedings in outlawry are exceedingly rare, and may almost be said to be extinct. Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 270. It is therefore sufficient to refer to that work, which contains a full account of the proceedings in outlawry, and to the Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 88-110, which now regulate the practice in outlawry and reversal of outlawry, when the proceedings are in the King's Bench Division. Under s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Statute Law Revision Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 3), the Lord Chancellor may, if he thinks fit, by order extend the Crown Office Rules in force for the time being, as to proceedings in Outlawry, to proceedings in outlawry in courts of assize, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, and in other courts in England, with such modifications as to him may seem expedient, and as from the date of the order the old statutes as to outlawry scheduled to that Act are to be repealed. No order has been made by the Lord Chancellor, and the old statutes remain in force as to the courts last named.

(a) As to New South Wales law of outlawry, see R. v. Jemmy Governor [1900] 21 N. S. W. R. (Law), 278.

BAIL.

Nature of bail.]—Bail are sureties taken by a person duly authorised, for the appearance of an accused person at a certain day and place, to answer and be justified by law. Hale's Sum. 96; Dalt. c. 166, pt. 2. The defendant is placed in the custody of his bail; who may re-seize him (1 Hale, 124; Dalton, c. 166, pt. 2) if they have reason to suppose that he is about to fly, and may bring him before a justice, who will commit the prisoner in discharge of the bail: R. v. Butcher, Peake (3rd ed.) 226. Any attempt to rescue him from their custody is illegal. Id.

Where persons who have become bail for any defendant discharge themselves by taking and surrendering him before the court or magistrate by whom he has been bailed, it is competent for the defendant to find new sureties. 2 Hale, 124; Hawk. c. 15, s. 3.

When granted.]—Bail in treason or felony is discretionary in the High Court or courts having jurisdiction to try the offence. R. v. McCartie [1859] 11 Ir. C. L. R. 188, 192: R. v. Platt, 1 Leach, 157; Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 280. It is questionable whether bail in misdemeanor is of right at common law. See R. v. Spilsbury [1898] 2 Q. B. 615, 620: R. v. Badger, 4 Q. B. 468, 472; 12 L. J. (M. C.) 66; 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1387: Re Frost, 4 T. L. R. 757, Coleridge, L.C.J.; and see 31 Car. 2, c. 2; 2 Hawk. c. 15, ss. 7, 13, 16, and post, p. 89.

Refusal or delay by any judge or magistrate to bail any person bailable is at common law an offence against the liberty of the subject. 4 Bl. Com. 297. It is also a violation of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2) and of the Bill of Rights (1 W. & M., Sess. 2, c. 2). But the duty of a magistrate as to admitting a prisoner to bail is judicial, and not merely ministerial, and therefore an action will not lie against him without proof of malice for refusing to admit to bail a person charged with a misdemeanor, and entitled to be admitted to bail. Linford v. Fitzroy, 13 Q. B. 240; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 108; R. v. Badger, 4 Q. B. 468; 12 L. J. (M. C.) 66: Osborne v. Gough, 3 B. & P. 551. See Bac. Abr., Bail; Com. Dig. Bail, F. 5, K. 6.

Bail is not to be withheld merely as a punishment. The requirements as to bail are merely to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial. R. v. Rose, 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 289; 17 Cox, 717 (C. C. R.).

The proper test of whether bail should be granted or refused is whether it is probable that the accused will appear to take his trial. Re Robinson, 23 L. J. (Q. B.) 286: R. v. Scaife, 10 L. J. (M. C.) 144; 9 Dowl. Pr. Cas. 553.

The test should be applied by reference to the following considerations:

(1) The nature of the accusation. R. v. Barronet, 1 E. & B. 1; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 15; Dears. 51: R. v. Butler [1881] 8 L. R. Ir. 39; 14 Cox, 530.

(2) The nature of the evidence in support of the accusation. Re Robinson (supra): R. v. Butler (supra): R. v. McCormick [1864] 17 Ir. C. L. R. 411.

(3) The severity of the punishment which conviction will entail. Re Robinson (supra). The character or behaviour of the accused is said to be irrelevant. (Id.)

(4) Whether the sureties are independent, or indemnified by the accused. See R. v. Butler, 8 L. R. Ir. 39; 14 Cox, 530: Hermann v. Jeuchner, 15 Q. B. D. 561; 54 L. J. (Q. B.) 340: Consolidated Exploration, &c., Co. v. Musgrave [1900] 1 Ch. 37; 64 J. P. 89: R. v. Porter [1910] 1 K. B. 369; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 241; 26 T. L. R. 200; 3 Cr. App. R. 237.

It is not usual to grant bail on charges of murder; Re Barthelemy, 1 E. & B. 8; Dears. 60; or after indictment found; R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558 (and see post, p. 93), except where the trial is adjourned. Anon., 2 Lew. 260. If insufficient bail has been taken, or if the sureties become afterwards insufficient, the accused may be ordered by any magistrate to find sufficient sureties, and in default may be committed to prison; and the justice who admitted a defendant to bail upon insufficient securities is responsible if the defendant does not appear. Hale's Sum. 97.

Who may be bail.]—The bail must be of ability sufficient to answer for the sum in which they are bound. 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 4. They are usually householders; but it is for the magistrate or judge to act upon his discretion as to the sufficiency of the bail; R. v. Saunders, 2 Cox, 249; 1 Burn's J., Bail, 373 (30th ed.); 1 Chitty Crim. L. 99; and the proposed bail may be examined upon oath as to his means, though in criminal cases justification of bail is said not to be essential. R. v. Hall, 2 W. Bl. 1110; 1 Chitty Crim. L. 100; but see Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 287. The court or magistrate may, at discretion, order that reasonable notice shall be given to the prosecutor and the police, to enable him or them to inquire or object as to the sufficiency of the bail. No person convicted of any crime by which he had become infamous was allowed to be surety for any person charged or suspected of an indictable offence. R. v. Edwards, 4 T. R. 440. It is not expedient to accept the solicitor of the accused as bail for his client. R. v. Scott-Jarvis (Q. B. D., Times, 20th Nov., 1876): Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure (8th ed.) 364. A person who has been indemnified by the accused is not accepted as his bail; supra (4): while an agreement by an accused person to indemnify his bail is illegal in that it tends to produce a public mischief, and the parties to the agreement are therefore guilty of the offence of conspiracy, although they may have entered into the agreement without any wrongful intent. R. v. Porter [1910] 1 K. B. 369; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 241; 22 Cox, 295. Persons in custody cannot be bail. Infants cannot be bail; nor could a married woman at common law; but since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, married women, having separate estate, are accepted as bail. Personation of bail is a felony under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 34.

By s. 24 of the Criminal Justice Administration Act. 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), for removing doubts it is declared that where as a condition of the release of any person he is required to enter into a recognizance with sureties, the recognizances of the sureties may be taken separately, and either before or after the recognizances of the principal, and if so taken the recognizances of the principal and sureties shall be as binding as if they had been taken together and at the same time. By s. 19 of the same Act, bail may be made continuous (post, p. 90).

Bail by justices of the peace: when discretionary.]—"Where any person shall appear or be brought before a justice of the peace charged with any felony, or with any assault with intent to commit any felony, or with any attempt to commit any felony, or with obtaining or attempting to obtain property by false pretences, or with a misdemeanor in receiving property stolen or obtained by false pretences, or with perjury or subornation of perjury, or with concealing the birth of a child by secret burying or otherwise, or with wilful or indecent exposure of the person, or with riot, or with assault in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise wages, or assault upon a peace officer in the execution of his duty, or upon any person acting in his aid, or with neglect or breach of duty as a peace officer, or with any misdemeanor for the prosecution of which the costs may be allowed out of the county rate, such justice of the peace may, in his discretion, admit such person to bail, upon his procuring and producing such surety or sureties as in the opinion of such justice will be sufficient to ensure the appearance of such accused person at the time and place when and where he is to be tried for such offence; and thereupon such justice shall take the recognizance (S. 1, 2, post, pp. 90, 91) of the said accused person and his surety or sureties, conditioned for the appearance of such accused person at the time and place of trial, and that he will then surrender and take his trial, and not depart the court without leave." . . . 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 23; and see 1 Chitty Crim. L. 95; 4 Bl. Com. 298: Linford v. Fitzroy, 13 Q. B. 240; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 108: R. v. Rose, 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 289; 18 Cox, 717; and Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 280 et seq., 322 et seq. [The costs of all felonies and misdemeanors may now be allowed out of the local rate; 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1.]

By s. 23 of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58) where a court of summary jurisdiction commits a person charged with any misdemeanor for trial and does not admit him to bail the court shall inform the person accused of his right to apply for bail to a judge of the High Court of Justice.

In the case of persons apparently under sixteen admission to bail and detention without bail are regulated by the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), ss. 94-96.

When compulsory.]— . . . "Where any person shall be charged before any justice of the peace with any indictable misdemeanor other than those hereinbefore mentioned, such justice, after taking the examinations in writing as aforesaid, instead of committing him to prison for such offence, shall admit him to bail in manner aforesaid, or if he have been committed to prison and shall apply to any one of the visiting justices of such prison, or to any other justice of the peace for the same county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough or place, before the first day of the sitting or session at which he is to be tried, or before the day to which such sitting or session may be adjourned, to be admitted to bail, such justice shall accordingly admit him to bail in manner aforesaid." . . . 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 23: and see 2 Hale, 127; 4 Bl. Com. 298; Burn's J. (30th ed.) Bail; 1 Chitty Crim. L. 97; and remarks of Lord Denman, Linford v. Fitzroy, supra.

Under the Bail Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 7, s. 1), "where a justice has power under s. 23 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), to admit to bail for appearance, he may dispense with sureties, if it is his opinion the so dispensing will not tend to defeat the ends of justice:" and it is his duty to admit to bail in all cases where there is a reasonable belief that the accused will attend to take his trial.

Persons apparently under sixteen who are apprehended without warrant must with certain exceptions be admitted to bail by the police until the time of appearance before a justice. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 94.

When forbidden.]—"No justice or justices of the peace shall admit any person to bail for treason, nor shall such person be admitted to bail, except by order of one of his Majesty's secretaries of state, or by the High Court of Justice (King's Bench Division), or a judge thereof in vacation." 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 23; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, ss. 16, 34; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, s. 19.

Bail on remand.]—11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 23, applies only where the accused is committed for trial: and does not apply to bail on remand. There is some difference of opinion as to the power of the High Court to interfere where justices have refused bail on remand. See Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure (9th ed.): but in R. v. Beall (Q. B. D., July, 1899), Channell, J., said that if the power existed the Court would be very slow to interfere with the justices' decision, and see Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 281.

Continuous Bail.]—By s. 19 of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), where a person is remanded on bail the recognizance may be conditioned for his appearance at every time and place to which during the course of the proceedings the hearing may be from time to time adjourned, without prejudice, however, to the power of the court to vary the order at any subsequent hearing.

Form of recognizance of bail taken by a justice of the peace.]—The following is the form of the recognizance to be entered into by bail before a justice of the peace, prescribed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42:—

Be it remembered, that on the —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, A. B. of —— [labourer], L. M. of —— [grocer], and N. O. of —— [butcher], personally came before [us] the undersigned, two of his Majesty's justices of the peace for the said [county], and severally acknowledged themselves to owe to our lord the King the several sums following: (that is to say), the said

A. B. the sum of —— and the said L. M. and N. O. the sum of —— each of good and lawful money of Great Britain, to be made and levied of their several goods and chattels, lands and tenements respectively, to the use of our said lord the King, his heirs and successors, if he the said A. B. fail in the condition indorsed. Taken and acknowledged the day and year first above mentioned, at ——, before us, J. S.
J. N.

The condition of the within-written recognizance is such, that whereas the said A. B. was this day charged before [us], the justices within mentioned for that [etc., as in the warrant]; if therefore the said A. B. will appear at the next court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery [or court of general quarter sessions of the peace] to be holden in and for the county of ——, and there surrender himself into the custody of the keeper of the [common gaol] there, and plead to such indictment as may be found against him by the grand jury for or in respect of the charge aforesaid, and take his trial upon the same, and not depart the said court without leave, then the said recognizance to be void. or else to stand in full force and virtue.

(S. 2.)

Notice of the said recognizance to be given to the accused and his bail.]—Take notice, that you, A. B. of ——, are bound in the sum of ——, and your sureties [L. M. and N. O.] in the sum of —— each, that you A. B. appear [etc., as in the condition of the recognizance], and not depart the said court without leave; and unless you the said A. B. personally appear and plead, and take your trial accordingly, the recognizance entered into by you and your sureties shall be forthwith levied on you and on them. Dated this —— day of ——, 19—. J. S.

The condition of the recognizance, as respects the sureties, is performed by the appearance of the accused, though he stands mute. Bac. Abr., tit. Bail: 2 Hawk. c. 15, s. 84.

Mode of admitting to bail where the defendant has been committed to prison.]—"In all cases where a person charged with any indictable offence shall be committed to prison to take his trial for the same, it shall be lawful, at any time afterwards and before the first day of the sitting or session at which he is to be tried, or before the day to which such sitting or session may be adjourned, for the justice or justices of the peace who shall have signed the warrant for his commitment, in his or their discretion, to admit such accused person to bail in manner aforesaid (ante, p. 89), or if such committing justice or justices shall be of opinion that for any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned (ante, p. 89) the said accused person ought to be admitted to bail, he or they shall in such cases, and in all other cases of misdemeanors, certify (S. 3, post, p. 92) on the back of the warrant of commitment his or their consent to such accused party being bailed, stating also the amount of bail which ought to be required. It shall be lawful for any justice of the peace, attending or being at the gaol or prison where such accused party shall be in custody, on production of such certificate to admit such accused person to bail in manner aforesaid; or if it shall be inconvenient for the surety or sureties in such a case to attend at such gaol or prison to join with such accused person in the recognizance of bail, then such committing justice or justices may make a duplicate of such certificate (S. 4, infra) as aforesaid, and upon the same being produced to any justice of the peace for the same county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place, it shall be lawful for such last-mentioned justice to take the recognizance of the surety or sureties in conformity with such certificate, and upon such recognizance being transmitted to the keeper of such gaol or prison, and produced, together with the certificate on the warrant of commitment as aforesaid, to any justice of the peace attending or being at such gaol or prison, it shall be lawful for such last-mentioned justice thereupon to take the recognizance of such accused party, and to order him to be discharged out of custody as to that commitment as hereinafter mentioned." 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 23. When the justice has consented to bail under this section, the recognizances can now be taken before the clerk to the justices or the governor of the prison in which the accused is. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 42; Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1886, rr. 13, 13A. As to cases where the indictment is removed for trial at the Central Criminal Court, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, see the 9th section of that Act.

Certificate of consent to bail by the committing justice indorsed on the commitment.]—I hereby certify that I consent to the within-named A. B. being bailed by recognizance, himself in —— and [two] sureties in —— each.

(S. 4.)

The like, on a separate paper.]—Whereas A. B. was on the —— committed by me to the [house of correction] at —— charged with [etc., naming the offence shortly] : I hereby certify that I consent to the said A. B. being bailed by recognizance, himself in —— and [two] sureties in —— each. Dated the —— day of ——, 19—.

NOTE.—In cases where the justice acts under the Bail Act, 1898 (ante, p. 90) the words as to sureties can be omitted.

Recognizance to be transmitted to committing justices.]—" And in all cases where such accused person in custody shall be admitted to bail by a justice of the peace other than the committing justice or justices as aforesaid, such justice of the peace so admitting him to bail shall forthwith transmit the recognizance or recognizances of bail to the committing justice or justices, or one of them, to be by him or them transmitted, with the examinations, to the proper officer." 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 23.

Warrant of deliverance where a person in prison is bailed.]—" Where a justice or justices of the peace shall admit to bail any person who shall then be in prison, charged with the offence for which he shall be so admitted to bail, such justice or justices shall send or cause to be lodged with the keeper of such prison a warrant of deliverance (S. 5, infra) under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, requiring the said keeper to discharge the person so admitted to bail, if he be detained for no other offence, and upon such warrant of deliverance being delivered or lodged with such keeper he shall forthwith obey the same." 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 24.

Form of warrant of deliverance on bail being given for a prisoner already committed.]—To the keeper of the [house of correction] at ——, in the said [county] of ——. Whereas A. B., late of —— [labourer], hath before [us, two] of his Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, entered into his own recognizances [and found sufficient sureties] for his appearance at the next court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery [or court of general quarter sessions of the peace], to be holden in and for the county of ——, to answer our sovereign lord the King, for that [etc., as in the commitment], for which he was taken and committed to your said [house of correction] : These are therefore to command you, in his said Majesty's name, that if the said A. B. do remain in your custody in the said [house of correction], for the said cause, and for no other, you shall forthwith suffer him to go at large. Given under our hands and seals this —— day of ——, in the year of our Lord ——, at ——, in the [county] aforesaid.

Bail by the court of trial.]—The court of trial has the power of granting bail, stated ante, p. 87, and is guided in its exercise by the considerations there stated. It is not, however, usual to grant bail after indictment found if the offence is of a serious nature. R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558 : R. v. Guttridge, 9 C. & P. 228 : R. v. Owen, Id. 83 : R. v. Bowen, Id. 509, where the effect of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2), was discussed. Cf. R. v. McCartie [1859] 11 Ir. Rep. C. L. 188.

Bail by the High Court.]—The High Court of Justice exercises (in the King's Bench Division) the powers as to bail of the old Court of King's Bench; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, ss. 16, 34; and the practice, except as below indicated, is not altered by the Judicature Acts (see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, s. 19), or the Cr. Off. Rules, 1906. The extent of the discretion of the court has been stated ante, pp. 87 et seq.

The court may in its discretion direct a prisoner to be admitted to bail before a justice of the peace, where it would be inconvenient to bring the prisoner and his bail before the court or judge in town; or, on just cause being shown, to order that a party not in custody shall be admitted to bail on surrendering to a warrant. At common law the powers of the court were exercised by means of a writ of habeas corpus. Hale's Sum. 104; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 98; Burn's J., tit. Bail (30th ed.) 369. Under the present practice of the Court, " applications for bail in felony or misdemeanor where the party is in custody, shall be in the first instance by summons before a judge at chambers for a writ of habeas corpus, or to show cause why the defendant should not be admitted to bail either before a judge at chambers or before a justice of the peace, in such an amount as the judge may direct." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 111. No summons to show cause before a judge at chambers for bail in felony shall be issued without the leave of a judge upon an ex parte application. Rule 266. For the requisite forms on application for bail, see Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Nos. 69 to 75. Affidavits must be intituled "In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 6.

If the judge at chambers refuses bail, a further application may be made to a divisional court, or any other branch of the High Court or the Lord Chancellor, not by way of appeal, but de novo; Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 287; but there is no appeal to the Court of Appeal from the decision of a divisional court of the King's Bench Division upon an application for bail by a prisoner. R. v. Foote, 10 Q. B. D. 378; 52 L. J. (Q. B.) 528.

To avoid expense and inconvenience it is now the practice in almost all cases, instead of applying for a writ of habeas corpus, to apply for a summons before a judge in chambers, to show cause why the prisoner should not be admitted to bail before a justice of the peace. If the order be made, upon its being produced to a justice, he will admit the prisoner to bail.

Where there is no inconvenience in the appearance of the prisoner and his bail in the court, counsel applies for a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, and also for a writ of certiorari, directed to the magistrate or coroner, as the case may be, to bring before the court the depositions on which the prisoner has been committed. The affidavits are entitled as in the case of a bail summons, and should verify the depositions (R. v. Barthelemy, 1 E. & B. 8; Dears. 60), and should be accompanied by a certified copy of the commitment, to which the accused is entitled as of right, under 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 4 (see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 22, Forms 172, 173), and by a copy of the depositions. If these are not obtained, a certiorari to bring them up is necessary.

Twenty-four hours' notice of bail, in cases of murder or manslaughter, must be served on the widow, if any there be, or next of kin of the deceased, and in other cases upon the prosecutor, and also on the coroner, or committing magistrate—personal service is not requisite. Returns having been duly made to the writs, when the prisoner is brought into court counsel moves that he be admitted to bail, and if there be no opposition the court will in its discretion admit the prsoner to bail, and the officer of the court will take the recognizance. In cases of felony the court sometimes requires four sureties; but for the inferior offences two are sufficient. R. v. Shaw, 6 Dow. & Ry. 154; Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 285. The application to admit the prisoner to bail may be opposed by counsel, and affidavits may be used in answer to the application. When a prisoner is brought up to be bailed at chambers, the proceedings are nearly the same as those in court. Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 287.

Bail in case of removed indictments.]—See post, Certiorari, p. 115.

Bail on coroner's inquisition.]—See post, p. 147.

Estreat of recognizance.]—If the condition of a recognizance entered into either by a party or by his sureties be broken, the recognizances may be forfeited, and on forfeiture the obligees become debtors to the Crown for the sums in which they are respectively bound.

Former practice.]—The ancient mode of enforcing a forfeited recognizance was to order its estreat into the Exchequer. The word "estreat" (extractum) means a true note of entries in the rolls of a court containing orders in favour of the revenues of the Crown : Termes de la Ley. It was the duty of the clerks of all the King's courts to make up an accurate estreat roll showing the nature and details of all fines, forfeitures, etc., enforced by the court, and to return it to the Exchequer. The roll had to be verified by oath (4 W. & M. c. 24, s. 4); wilful mis-statements were punishable (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 22, s. 5); and failure to make the returns was ground for amercement (3 G. 1, c. 15, s. 12) : Encycl. Laws of England (2nd. ed.), vol. 5, p. 361.

The sums not received before the return of the roll were levied by the sheriff under the orders of the Court of Exchequer until 1822 (3 G. 4, c. 46). The Court of Exchequer had jurisdiction over recognizances forfeited before justices of the peace in or out of sessions. The jurisdiction was abolished by 3 G. 4, c. 46, s. 2. R. v. Yorkshire, West Riding JJ., 7 A. & E. 583, 590; 7 L. J. (M. C.) 9 : R. v. Thompson, 3 Tyr. 53 : R. v. Hankins, M'Cl. & Y. 27. But this change in the law did not affect the power of the court to bring up the recognizance by certiorari from sessions : Ex parte Pellow, M'Cl. 111, 683 : R. v. Brooke, 59 J. P. 6, and did not affect the assizes : R. v. Hankins, supra.

The powers of the Court of Exchequer passed in 1875 to the H. C. J. (Exchequer Division), and in 1880 to the K. B. D. (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, ss. 16. 32; Order in Council, 16 Dec., 1880; Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904) vol. 12, p. 1, tit. Supreme Court, England).

Present practice—Superior Courts.]—The practice of Parliament, the Supreme Court, and courts of assize, respecting the estreat of recognizances, is governed by the Fines Act, 1833 (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 99), which repealed 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 22. By ss. 26, 27, 28, provision is made for the rendering of an account to the Treasury, by the King's coroner and attorney, and the King's Remembrancer, of fines, amerciaments, penalties, and recognizances set, imposed or forfeited in the High Court, and for the estreat by those officers under order of the court or a judge of such fines, etc., levied and not received, and for their payment over of the fines, etc., as directed by the Treasury. By s. 29 it is provided, that an account in writing of all recognizances forfeited to or for the use of the crown, by or before any judge or judges of assize throughout England, shall within fourteen days next after such recognizances are forfeited be made out by the clerk of assize, with the names and residences of the parties liable to make payment thereof, and he shall make out two copies, one to be sent to the Treasury, and such recognizances shall, within the time last aforesaid, be duly certified and estreated by the clerk of assize into the Court of Exchequer. Under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 32, clerks of assize ceased to estreat fines, etc., into the Court of Exchequer, and now enrol the fines and send a copy to the sheriff unless under s. 38 the Treasury requires return of the estreat to the King's Remembrancer. The Court of Exchequer, under a writ of privy seal, had power over penalties and forfeitures occurring at assizes, and could compound, or, in its discretion, discharge, any recognizances. 33 H. 8, c. 39, ss. 40-42 : R. v. Hankins, M'Cl. & Y. 27, and n., p. 31. The Treasury has a concurrent power under 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 99, ss. 33, 38.

The court has a discretion as to whether to order the estreat of a recognizance. In R. v. Doyen, Lewes assizes, 1899, 34 L. J. Newsp. 645, a Frenchman was admitted to bail, his father being taken as surety, and went to France, where he became dangerously insane, so that, through no fault of the surety, he could not be produced at the trial. Wills, J., refused an application to estreat the recognizance, and said he could not make any order on the justices' clerk as to the amount, which was deposited with him.

In R. v. Sangiovanni [1904] 68 J. P. 54, an estreat of the recognizances of sureties for a person committed for trial had been ordered on his failure to surrender. Fulton, Recorder, directed that the estreat should not issue, on being satisfied that the sureties had taken all reasonable steps to secure the attendance of the defendant. On finding that he had left for the United States, they had informed the police, and had telegraphed at their own expense to have the defendant detained on arrival. In consequence of their action he was not allowed to land, and was forced to return in the ship; but this being a Belgian vessel, it took him to a Belgian port.

The estreat of recognizances on the Crown side of the King's Bench Division is regulated by the Crown Office Rules, 1906.

"Every recognizance acknowledged on the removal of an indictment, order, or other proceeding, or to prosecute any information granted by the King's Bench Division, or for the appearing or answering of any party in the said Division, or for good behaviour, or for any other purpose, shall after the acknowledgment thereof, be transmitted to the crown office and filed there." R. 112. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 289.

"No recognizance shall henceforth be forfeited, estreated, or put upon the estreat roll without the order of the court or a judge, nor unless an order or notice shall have been previously served upon the parties by whom such recognizances shall have been given, calling upon them to perform the conditions thereof, and no default shall be considered to be made in performing the conditions of a recognizance by reason of the trial of any indictment or presentment or the argument of any order or conviction or other proceeding having stood over where such indictment has been made a remanet, or such indictment or order has stood over by order of the court, or by consent in writing of the parties." R. 113.

By r. 115, "Whenever it has been made to appear to the court or judge that a party has made default in performing the conditions of any recognizance, into which he has entered, filed in the crown office, the court or a judge upon notice to the cognizor and his sureties, if any, may order such recognizance to be estreated into the Exchequer without issuing any writ of scire facias: provided that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to take away or prejudice the right of any party to have questions of fact tried by a jury in such cases as he might before the Crown Office Rules of 1886 have so required." . . . The rule goes on to provide for the trial of such questions of fact, and concludes "nothing herein contained shall be deemed to take away the jurisdiction of the court or judge to order the estreat of any recognizance when the breach of its conditions has been committed in the face of the court or judge." See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 290.

"No proceedings shall be taken in the crown office by scire facias upon recognizance." R. 116.

Where the conditions of a recognizance entered into before a court of assize or quarter sessions have been broken the recognizance can be enforced by the King's Bench Division, which issues a certiorari to bring up the recognizance. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 289: R. v. Mul Luchman [1909] 44 L. J. Newsp. 60.

Practice at general or quarter sessions.]—The practice for courts of quarter sessions as to the estreat of recognizances other than those of the defendant and his sureties is governed by s. 31 of the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 G. 4, c. 64), which provides that "in every case where any person bound by recognizance for his or her appearance, or for whose appearance any other person shall be bound to prosecute or give evidence in any case of felony or misdemeanor, or to answer for any common assault, or to articles of the peace, or to abide an order in bastardy (this form of recognizance was abolished by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 70), shall therein make default, the officer of the court by whom the estreats are made out shall prepare a list in writing, specifying the name of every person so making default and the nature of the offence in respect of which every such person, or his or her surety, was so bound, together with the residence, trade, profession or calling of every such person or surety, and shall in such list distinguish the principals from the sureties, and shall state the cause, if known, why each such person has not appeared, and whether by reason of the non-appearance of such person the ends of justice have been defeated or delayed: and every such officer shall and is hereby required before any such recognizance shall be estreated to lay such list, if at a court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery in any county besides Middlesex and London" (i.e., City) . . . "before one of the justices of these courts respectively; if at a court wherein a recorder or other corporate officer is the judge or one of the judges, before such recorder or other corporate officer; and if at a session of the peace, before the chairman or two other justices of the peace who shall have attended such court; who are respectively authorized and required to examine such list, and to make such order touching the estreating or putting in process of any such recognizance as shall appear to them respectively to be just; and it shall not be lawful for the officer of any court to estreat or put in process any such recognizance without the written order of the justice, recorder, corporate officer, chairman, or justice of the peace before whom respectively such list shall have been laid."

Subject to the special provisions of the Act above quoted, the general practice of courts of quarter sessions is governed by the Levy of Fines Act, 1822 (3 G. 4), c. 46, which directs (s. 2) that the clerk of the peace or town clerk shall copy on a roll such forfeited recognizances, and shall within such time as shall be fixed by the court of quarter sessions, not exceeding twenty-one days from the adjournment of such court, send a copy of such roll, with a writ of distringas and capias [see forms scheduled to 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21], or a writ of fieri facias and capias, to the sheriff of such county, which shall be the authority to him for proceeding to the immediate levying and recovering of such forfeited recognizances. Section 8 of the same Act requires the sheriff to return the writ and roll on the first day of the quarter sessions with a return of what has been done under it, and s. 5 of the Levy of Fines Act, 1823 (4 G. 4, c. 37), requires the clerk of the peace or town clerk to send to the Treasury within twenty days after the holding of quarter sessions a copy or extract of all rolls returned by the sheriff, with an account of the causes of the discharge by the court of any forfeiture, and the reason of the sheriff for any failure to levy a forfeited recognizance. In municipal boroughs in which the town clerk and clerk of the peace are not the same person, the latter is to discharge the duties imposed on the town clerk by the Act of 1822 : see 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 222. By s. 17 of the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45), the provisions of the Acts of 1822 and 1823 as to the procedure with respect to forfeited recognizances are applied also to fines and amercements : as to which see Re Nottingham Corporation [1897] 2 Q. B. 502 : R. v. Dover, 1 Cr. M. & R. 726 ; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 726 ; 4 Chit. Cr. L. 487.

In the case of a recognizance by the defendant the order to forfeit is made after he is called, and on his failure to appear during the sessions, without any further notice or summons. In the case of sureties, ss. 5, 6, of 3 G. 4, c. 46, gives a right of appeal to the sessions to all persons whose recognizances have been forfeited if they give proper security : and on the appeal the court may discharge the whole or part of the forfeiture, and discharge the obligee if in custody, and by s. 2 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 30) courts of quarter sessions are empowered to forfeit recognizances by principals or sureties to keep the peace or be of good behaviour, on proof of the conviction of the principal of any offence which is by law a breach of the conditions of the recognizance. The procedure of the Acts of 1822 (3 G. 4, c. 46) is applied to recognizances so forfeited.

INDICTMENT, IN WHAT CASES QUASHED.

In what cases.]—It was the rule of the common law that if an indictment or inquisition was bad on the face of it, or if there was any such insufficiency, either in the caption or in the body of an indictment or inquisition, as would make erroneous any judgment whatsoever given on any part thereof, the court might in its discretion quash the indictment. 2 Hawk. c. 25, ss. 146-149 ; 1 Chit. Cr. L. (2nd ed.) 298 : R. v. Taylor, 9 Dowl. 600. An indictment against six for exercising a trade was quashed because it was a distinct offence in each, and could not be made the subject of a joint prosecution. R. v.

Tucker, 4 Burr. 2046 : R. v. Weston, 1 Str. 623. In R. v. Philips, 2 Str. 921, judgment was arrested on an indictment of six for perjury (to which four pleaded and were convicted), on the ground that the offence was in its nature several, and two could not be indicted together for it. And in several instances indictments have been quashed, because the facts stated in them did not amount to an offence punishable by law : see R. v. Burkett, Andr. 230 : R. v. Sarmon, 1 Burr. 516 : R. v. Wright, 1 Burr. 543 : R. v. Philpotts, 1 C. & K. 112; for instance, an indictment against an overseer for misconduct in preparing electoral registers was quashed on the ground that the offence, if any, was not punishable on indictment. R. v. Hall [1891] 1 Q. B. 747; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 129. An indictment under 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, which charged the defendant with "corrupt practices," at a parliamentary election, without setting out the nature of such corrupt practices as "bribery," etc., was quashed as being too general. R. v. Norton, 16 Cox, 59, Pollock, B., approved by the majority of the judges in R. v. Stroulger, 17 Q. B. D. 327; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 137. An indictment for obtaining money by false pretences was quashed by the judge at the trial, after the case for the prosecution had closed, on the judge discovering that the indictment did not contain the words "with intent to defraud." R. v. James, 12 Cox, 127, Lush, J. An indictment for libel was quashed, the expressions used in the alleged libel not being primâ facie libellous, and the indictment containing no averments or innuendoes showing that those expressions were intended to impute improper conduct to the prosecutor. R. v. Yates, 12 Cox, 233, Quain, J. But now, under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 5 (1), wide powers of amendment are given, and defects which would formerly have been fatal will ordinarily be met by the application of those powers. See ante, p. 54.

If the application is made on the part of the prosecution, the court will quash the indictment in all cases where it appears to be so defective that the defendant cannot be convicted on it, and where the prosecution appears to be bonâ fide, and not instituted from malicious motives, or for the purposes of oppression. If the prosecution is instituted by the attorney-general, an application to quash the indictment is never made upon the part of the prosecutor, because the attorney-general may himself enter a nolle prosequi, which will have the same effect (see post, p. 122). R. v. Stratton, 1 Doug. 239; cf. R. v. Colling, 2 Cox, 184, as to the procedure where the indictment has been removed by certiorari.

An application to quash may, it would seem, be made upon the part of the prosecution at any time before the defendant has been actually tried upon the indictment. See R. v. Webb, 3 Burr. 1468; 1 W. Bl. 460. But after judgment for the prisoner on demurrer, the indictment cannot be quashed at the instance of the prosecutor. R. v. W. Smith, 2 M. & Rob. 109. Where the application is made to the High Court, the rule is absolute in the first instance, if the defendant has not appeared and pleaded. R. v. Stowell, 1 Dowl. (N. S.) 320.

Before an application of this kind is made on the part of the prosecution, a new bill for the same offence must have been preferred against the defendant and found. R. v. Wynn, 2 East, 226. And when the court, upon such an application, orders the former indictment to be quashed, it is usually upon terms, namely, that the prosecutor shall pay to the defendant such costs as he may have incurred by reason of the former indictment. R. v. Webb, 3 Burr. 1468; 1 W. Bl. 460. R. v. Dunn, 1 C. & K. 730; that the second indictment shall stand in the same plight and condition to all intents and purposes that the first would have done if it were not quashed: R. v. Glenn, 3 B. & Ald. 373: R. v. Webb, supra; and (particularly where there has been any vexatious delay upon the part of the prosecutor, Id.) that the name of the prosecutor be disclosed. R. v. Glenn, supra.

Where the application is made upon the part of the defendant, the courts have almost uniformly refused to quash an indictment, where it appeared to be for some grave crime, such as treason or felony; Com. Dig. Indictment (H.); 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 146; 1 East, P. C. 110: R. v. Sheares, 27 St. Tr. 255, 266; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 298: R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 744: R. v. Johnson, 1 Wils. 325; or for forgery, perjury, subornation, or nuisance to highways. R. v. Belton, 1 Salk. 372: Anon., 1 Vent. 369; cf. 1 Sid. 54: R. v. Thomas, 3 D. & R. 621; R. v. Burnby, 5 Q. B. 348; 13 L. J. (M. C.) 29: R. v. Withers, 4 Cox, 17. They have also refused to quash indictments for cheating: R. v. Orbell, 6 Mod. 42; for selling flour by false weights: R. v. Crookes, 3 Burr. 1841; for extortion or oppression: R. v. Wadsworth, 5 Mod. 13; for not executing a magistrate's warrant: R. v. Bailey, 2 Str. 1211; against overseers for not paying money over to their successors: R. v. King, 2 Str. 1268; and the like. They have also refused to quash indictments for not repairing highways or bridges, or for other public nuisances, R. v. Belton, 1 Salk. 372: Anon., 1 Vent. 369: R. v. Bishop, Andr. 220: R. v. Sutton, 4 Burr. 2116, unless there is a certificate that the nuisance is removed; R. v. Leyton, Cro. Car. 584; R. v. Wigg, 2 Salk. 460; 1 Ld. Raym. 1165; nor will they quash an indictment for forcible entry, R. v. Dyer, 6 Mod. 96, unless perhaps, when the possession has been afterwards given up.

But when it is made clear, either on the face of an indictment or by affidavit, that it has been found without jurisdiction, the court will quash it on motion by the defendant after plea pleaded; although in a doubtful case they will leave him to test its validity by demurrer (R. v. Brownlow, 11 A. & E. 119, 127, 128) or motion in arrest of judgment (R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444: R. v. Sheares, 27 St. Tr. 359) or by appeal. It is said that a motion to quash will not be granted upon a trial of an indictment, at nisi prius, if the objections taken appear on the record. R. v. Souter, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 423; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 140. It is no ground for quashing an indictment for non-compliance with the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1, ante, p. 67) that the charge arising in one petty sessional division of a county, the committal is by justices sitting in and acting for another petty sessional division of the same county, such a committal being good in point of law. R. v. Beckley, 20 Q. B. D. 187; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 22.

How.]—The application to quash an indictment is made to the court where the bill is found; except in cases of indictments at sessions or in other inferior courts, in which cases the application may be made to the High Court of Justice (King's Bench Division) after removing the record by certiorari. But a court of quarter sessions has itself authority to quash an indictment found there, before plea pleaded. R. v. Wilson, 6 Q. B. 620; 14 L. J. (M. C.) 3.

It was formerly held that the application, if made upon the part of the defendant, must in all cases be made before plea pleaded; Fost. 231: R. v. Rookwood, cas. temp. Holt, 684; 13 St. Tr. 139; and see R. v. Thompson [1914] 2 K. B. 99; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 643; 110 L. T. 272; 78 J. P. 212; 30 T. L. R. 223; 9 Cr. App. R. 252; but this, while just and convenient, is not essential: R. v. Chapple, 17 Cox, 455; and where it is clear that an indictment has been found without jurisdiction, or has a substantial and apparent defect, the court will quash it on motion by the defendant after plea pleaded: R. v. Heane, 4 B. & S. 947; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 115; and even after the case for the prosecution had closed. R. v. James, 12 Cox, 127. As to appeal, see R. v. Thompson, supra. Where an indictment had already, upon the application of the defendant, been removed into the Court of King's Bench by certiorari, the court refused to entertain a motion by the defendant to quash the indictment after a forfeiture of his recognizance by not having carried the record down for trial; Anon, 1 Salk. 380; and a motion to quash after certiorari, trial and conviction has been refused. R. v. Marsh, 6 A. & E. 236.

By sub-s. 1 of s. 5 of the Indictments Act, 1915 (ante, p. 54) the court may before trial or at any stage of a trial amend a defective indictment unless, having regard to the merits of the case, the required amendments cannot be made without injustice, and may make such order as to the payment of any costs incurred owing to the necessity for amendment as the court thinks fit.

By sub-s. 2, where an indictment is so amended, a note of the order for amendment shall be endorsed on the indictment, and the indictment shall be treated for the purposes of the trial and for the purposes of all proceedings in connection therewith as having been found by the grand jury in the amended form.

SECT. 10.

INDICTMENT, WHEN AND WHERE TRIED.

When.]—Indictments for high treason or felony are usually tried at the same assizes or sessions at which they are preferred to and found by the grand jury. This practice accords with the requirements of s. 6 of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2).

The same course is now pursued as to misdemeanors. By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 27, "no person prosecuted shall be entitled to traverse or postpone the trial of any indictment found against him at any session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, or session of gaol delivery: provided always, that if the court, upon the application of the person so indicted or otherwise, shall be of opinion that he ought to be allowed a further time, either to prepare for his defence or otherwise, such court may adjourn the trial of such person to the next subsequent session, and upon such terms as to bail or otherwise as to such court shall seem meet, and may respite the recognizances of the prosecutor and witnesses accordingly, in which case the prosecutor and witnesses shall be bound to attend to prosecute and give evidence at such subsequent session without entering into any fresh recognizance for that purpose." This enactment abolished the old practice which entitled the defendant in cases of misdemeanor to postpone his trial till the next assizes or sessions. 4 Bl. Com. 351.

Postponement of trial.]—The trial may, however, be postponed to the next assizes or sessions at the instance of the prosecutor or the defendant, on showing to the court a sufficient cause for the delay, such as the sudden illness of the prisoner, or the unavoidable absence or illness of a necessary and material witness, the existence of prejudice in the jury, and the like. See 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 6 : R. v. D'Eon, 3 Burr. 1513 : R. v. Jolliffe, 4 T. R. 285 : R. v. Morphew, 2 M. & Sel. 602 : R. v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591 : R. v. Streek, 2 C. & P. 413 : R. v. Stevenson, 2 Leach, 546 : R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558 : R. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83 : R. v. Macarthy, C. & Mar. 625 : R. v. Mobbs, 2 F. & F. 18 : R. v. Langhurst, 10 Cox, 353 : R. v. Taylor, 11 Cox, 340 : R. v. Dripps, 13 Cox, 25 (Ir.). In R. v. Palmer, 6 C. & P. 652, the Central Criminal Court postponed until the next session the presentment of a bill for arson to the grand jury, upon the ground of the illness of a witness sworn to be material, and refused to examine her deposition to ascertain whether she deposed to material facts. In R. v. Heesom, 14 Cox, 40, it was held by Lush, J., that the presentment of a bill to the grand jury cannot be postponed to the next assizes, on the ground that other and like charges may before that time be brought against the prisoner, and that if no bill was presented the prisoner would be entitled to her discharge on bail. His lordship said that the case of R. v. Palmer, supra, was an application founded on the absence of a material witness for the Crown, which was provided for by s. 6 of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2). But see R. v. Doran, 10 Cr. App. R. 67. Where a witness for the Crown, on the ground of whose illness it is sought to postpone the trial, was not examined before the committing magistrate, the court will require an affidavit as to what the witness is expected to prove. R. v. Savage, 1 C. & K. 75 : R. v. Lawrence, 4 F. & F. 901. In R. v. Taylor, 15 Cox, 8, Baggallay, L.J., postponed the presentment of a bill to the next assizes, on the ground that all the witnesses resided at a workhouse in which small-pox had broken out, and that their attendance at the assizes would be dangerous to the public, as they might carry infection, and admitted the prisoner to bail on his own recognizances to appear at the next assizes. The production by the prosecution at the trial of evidence not produced before the magistrate, and not communicated to the prisoner previously to the trial, may be ground for a postponement of the trial in the interests of the defendant. R. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox, 403. Where the defendant was indicted for having carnal knowledge of a girl under ten years old, an application by the prosecution for the postponement of the trial, with a view to the instruction of the girl, was refused. R. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246; and see R. v. Cox, 62 J. P. 89, and 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2267, 2268. It seems that the trial may be postponed, on the defendant's application, after the jury have been charged with the indictment, and before any evidence has been given in the case. R. v. Fitzgerald, 1 C. & K. 201. See R. v. Downey, 3 Cr. & Dix. (Ir.) 314. Where the application is made by the defendant, he will be remanded and detained in custody until the next assizes or sessions; but where the application is made by the prosecutor, it is in the discretion of the court either to detain the defendant in custody or admit him to bail, or to discharge him on his own recognizances. R. v. Beardmore, 7 C. & P. 497 : R. v. Parish, Id. 782 : R. v. Osborne, Id. 799 : R. v. Bridgman, C. & Mar. 271. After a bill has been found, if the offence is of a serious nature, or an absent witness has been kept out of the way by the defence, the court will not admit the prisoner to bail. R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558 : R. v. Guttridge, 9 C. & P. 228 : R. v. Owen, Id. 83 : R. v. Bowen, Id. 509. See Bail, ante, p. 87.

By sub-s. 4 of s. 5 of the Indictments Act, 1915 (ante, p. 54), where before trial or at any stage of a trial the court is of opinion that a postponement is expedient as a consequence of the indictment having been amended or a separate trial of a count ordered under the Act, the court shall make such order as to postponement as appears necessary.

By sub-s 5, where an order of the court is made under this section for a separate trial or for the postponement of a trial—(a) if such order is made during a trial the court may discharge the jury from giving a verdict on the count or counts of which the trial is postponed or on the indictment, as the case may be; (b) the procedure on the separate trial of a count shall be the same in all respects as if the count had been found in a separate indictment, and the procedure on the postponed trial shall be the same in all respects (if the jury has been discharged) as if the trial had not commenced; (c) the court may make such order as it thinks fit as to costs, bail, enlargement of recognizances and otherwise.

By sub-s. 6, any power of the court under this section shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any other power of the court for the same or similar purposes.

Under the Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12), if a person committed for trial at sessions is not tried at the next sessions, the next court of assize may on his application try or discharge him or release him on bail, unless the delay is due to special reasons, such as the removal of the indictment by certiorari, or the impossibility of producing the witnesses for the crown. S. 3 (1) (3). If the next court of quarter sessions has not tried him before the next subsequent assizes, the judge of assize must try or discharge him. S. 3 (2).

Section 6 of the Habeas Corpus Act, 1679 (31 Car. 2, c. 2), provides for the release of persons committed for trial for high treason or felony if they are not indicted at the latest in the second term, assizes, or sessions after their committal.

Where.]—Indictments for felonies and misdemeanors are tried within the jurisdiction in which the offence is committed, or in which by some statute it may lawfully be tried (ante, pp. 29 et seq.), and before the court in which the indictment is preferred, or into which it has been removed by certiorari or order of removal.

The following statement will show the courts competent to try any indictable offence, subject to the rules as to venue and national jurisdiction stated ante, pp. 29 et seq.

High Court.]—The High Court of Justice (K. B. D.), as the successor of the Court of King's Bench, has jurisdiction to try all indictable offences against the law of England. This jurisdiction is concurrent with that of the courts of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or courts of quarter sessions. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 86. The jurisdiction is not exercised except (1) Where the indictment is removed into the court by certiorari; (2) Where the indictment is found in the counties of London or Middlesex by a grand jury summoned under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 52, and R. S. C., Jan. 15, 1903, made under s. 89 (3) of the Local Government Act, 1888; (3) In the case of criminal informations filed in the court (see post, pp. 127 et seq.). The court has special jurisdiction to try the following offences :—Treason and misprision of treason committed out of the realm (35 H. 8, c. 2 : R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444); wilful neglect or delay to deliver or transmit writs for the election of members of parliament (53 G. 3, c. 89, s. 6); oppressions and crimes by governors, etc., of colonies, or persons in public employment out of Great Britain (11 W. 3, c. 12; 42 G. 3, c. 85; 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 10; offences by officials of the crown in India (10 G. 3, c. 47, s. 4; 13 G. 3, c. 63, s. 39; 21 G. 3, c. 70, s. 7). As to offences in India, see Ilbert, Government of India (2nd ed.) 255 et seq. None of the above Acts, except 35 H. 8, c. 2, appears to extend to treason or felony. R. v. Shawe, 5 M. & Sel. 403. Prosecutions under them have been rare. See R. v. Jones, 8 East, 31; Picton's case, 30 St. Tr. 225 : R. v. Eyre, L. R. 3 Q. B. 487 : R. v. Turner [1889] 24 L. J. Newsp. 466, 469, 479; Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 85.

Courts of Assize, etc.]—Courts acting under a commission of assize only try such criminal offences as are sent to them for trial on a transcript of a record of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 110; post, tit. Certiorari, p. 110). The ordinary circuit courts of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery have jurisdiction to try any offence triable at common law, or by statute, in the county or other district for which they are commissioned, and not specifically excluded from their jurisdiction. Courts of assize, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, were made part of the High Court by ss. 16, 29 of the Judicature Act, 1873 : R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 560 : R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432, 436 : R. v. Davies [1906] 1 K. B. 32. Special commissions of oyer and terminer, etc., can be issued, but are now rare. The jurisdiction of these courts is concurrent with that of quarter sessions as to cases wherein the latter have jurisdiction.

The sittings of courts of assize are regulated by Orders in Council. As to the dispensing with the holding of the court when there is no business, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 41, ss. 1, 2, ante, p. 72.

Central Criminal Court.]—The Central Criminal Court is created by a commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for the district allotted to it, and for the prisons appointed as its prisons (4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, ss. 2-4; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 64, s. 2: R. v. Boaler, 17 Cox, 569; R. v. Marshall, 34 L. J. Newsp. 48). It has also a special admiralty jurisdiction (4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 22). The history of the court is to be found in 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1135; and see Leverson v. R., L. R. 4 Q. B. 394. Under the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 16, 29, it has become a branch of the High Court. R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432, 439, 442.

The court must hold sessions at least twelve times a year (4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 15). The sessions are fixed annually by four or more judges of the High Court in October of each year (44 & 45 Vict. c. 68, s. 18).

Courts of Quarter Sessions: (a) Relation to courts of assize.]—Where the quarter sessions of a county occur while the judge of assize is proceeding with the trial of prisoners in that county, after the grand jury have been discharged, it has been considered proper that the quarter sessions should not proceed with the trial of prisoners, but after disposing of their other business, should adjourn to a future day. See 9 C. & P. 790. But as the authority of a county or borough court of quarter sessions is not in law determined or suspended by the commission of assize, a trial at the sessions, during the continuance of the assizes in the same county, is valid in law. Smith v. R., 13 Q. B. 738; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 207. As regards quarter sessions within the Central Criminal Court district, this rule is expressly recognized by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 21.

It was the duty of the sheriff under 3 H. 7, c. 3, and is the duty of the governor of the prison, to lay before the court of assize or quarter sessions a calendar of prisoners in the prison for trial before it: 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 38, s. 3; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, s. 19; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 62.

(b) Sittings.]—County quarter sessions must be held in the first week after 31st March, 24th June, 11th October and 28th December respectively (11 G. 4, and 1 W. 4, c. 70, s. 35), unless the justices at special meeting alter the date so that the sessions may be held not earlier than fourteen days before nor later than fourteen days after the week in which they would otherwise be held (8 Edw. 7, c. 41, s. 3). These provisions do not preclude the justices from holding other general sessions or from holding quarter sessions by adjournment at other dates. See 1 & 2 Vict. c. 4; Archbold Q. S. (6th ed.) 64. As to forming a second court, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 73, ss. 9-11.

The dates of borough quarter sessions are fixed by the recorder subject to the directions of the Home Secretary (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 165): see Archbold Q. S. (6th ed.) 20. For table of boroughs which have separate courts of quarter sessions, see Archbold Q. S. (6th ed.) 614. As to forming a second court, see 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 168.

When not more than five days before the time fixed for holding quarter sessions, it appears that there is no business to be transacted, the court need not be held, and a notice may be sent dispensing with the attendance of jurors, 8 Edw. 7, c. 41, ss. 1, 2.

Some judges of assize have considered it their duty to deliver the gaols of the prisoners whom they found there, although the offences for which such prisoners had been committed were within the jurisdiction of quarter sessions, and although the prosecutor and his witnesses had been bound over to prosecute and give evidence at quarter sessions. The English decisions on this question are collected in R. v. Clifford [1895] 16 New South Wales Rep. (Law) 12.

The Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12), provides (s. 1) that whenever any person has been committed to gaol or admitted to bail by a justice or justices under s. 22 or s. 25 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, charged with an indictable offence triable at quarter sessions, the persons bound over to prosecute and give evidence shall be bound over to attend for that purpose at the next practicable court of quarter sessions having jurisdiction to try such person for such offence, unless such justice or justices for special reasons think fit otherwise to direct; and where the persons are so bound over, the person charged shall be tried at the said court of quarter sessions, and a court of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery shall not be required to deliver such person from gaol, unless the High Court of Justice shall by order direct that such person shall be indicted and tried at a court of oyer and terminer or general gaol delivery having jurisdiction to try him for such offence. Sub-s. 2 of s. 1 prescribes the procedure where the High Court has made the order mentioned in sub-s. 1. Section 3 prescribes the course of procedure where a prisoner having been committed to gaol on a charge for an indictable offence, and persons having been bound over to prosecute and give evidence at quarter sessions, the prisoner is not tried at those sessions.

(c) Jurisdiction.]—The present form of the Commission of the Peace (prescribed by Order in Council of Feb. 22, 1878, and printed in Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904) vol. 1, tit. Clerk of the Crown), authorizes the justices to inquire "of all and in manner of crimes and trespasses, and all and singular other offences of which the justices of our peace may or ought lawfully to inquire," . . . except in cases of difficulty, which are to be transmitted to the assizes, "and to hear and determine all and singular the crimes, trespasses, and offences aforesaid according to the laws and statutes of our realm, as in the like case it has been accustomed or ought to be done." As to the jurisdiction of courts of quarter sessions under the commission of the peace, see Archbold Q. S. (6th ed.): Keen v. R., 10 Q. B. 928; 2 Cox, 341.

A court of county or borough quarter sessions has jurisdiction to try any indictable offence except those in the annexed list. The justices of the Soke of Peterborough are said to have a wider jurisdiction; see Gaches, Soke of Peterborough, p. 52, 40 L. J. Newsp., 8 July, 1905. But this has been questioned. See R. v. Holdich, 15 Cr. App. R. 122. The jurisdiction of quarter sessions rests on the Quarter Sessions Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1), except in the cases in italics, which depend on the particular statutes specified :—

1. Treason, or misprision of treason;

2. Murder;

3. Capital felony, or any felony, which when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by penal servitude for life (20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, ss. 2, 6);

4. Offences against the King's title, prerogative, person, or government, or against either House of Parliament;

5. Offences subject to the penalties of præmunire;

6. Blasphemy, and offences against religion;

7. Administering or taking unlawful oaths;

8. Any offence against the Perjury Act, 1911, or any offence which under any enactment for the time being in force is declared to be perjury or to be punishable as perjury or as subornation of perjury (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6, s. 10);

9. Any offence against the Forgery Act, 1913, or any offence which under any enactment for the time being in force is declared to be forgery or to be punishable as forgery (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27, s. 13);

10. Offences against the False Personation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 36, s. 3);

11. Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or to any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern;

12. Offences against s. 9 of the Night Poaching Act, 1828 (9 G. 4, c. 69);

13. Bigamy and offences against the laws relating to marriage;

14. Abduction of women and girls, and indictable offences against the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 17); and incest (8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 4 (2));

15. Endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child;

16. Composing, printing, or publishing blasphemous, seditious, or defamatory libels;

17. Bribery [except bribery of and by members, etc., of corporations, within 52 & 53 Vict. c. 69, s. 6]; and undue influence (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, s. 10);

18. Corrupt practices at parliamentary or municipal elections, including elections of county, district, and parish councils, and of boards of guardians (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, s. 10; 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 53; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, ss. 30, 35, & 36, sch.; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 75; 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 48), or elections in the City of London (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, s. 35; 50 & 51 Vict. c. xiii.); or of metropolitan borough councils (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14);

19. Misdemeanors against the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 34, s. 2 (5)). (a)

20. Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies and combinations to commit any offence which the justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person;

(a) Under this Act the sessions have no jurisdiction to inquire of such offences which seems to preclude the grand jury from finding a bill for an offence under the Act. Quarter sessions have jurisdiction to try offences under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act [1889] (52 & 53 Vict. c. 69). See s. 6 of that Act.

21. Stealing or fraudulently taking, or injuring or destroying, records or documents belonging to any court of law or equity, or relating to any proceeding therein;

22. Stealing, or fraudulently destroying or concealing, wills or testamentary papers or any document or written instrument being or containing evidence of the title to any real estate, or any interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments;

23. Misdemeanors against ss. 20, 21, and 22 of the Larceny Act, 1916 (which relate to fraudulent conversion, fraudulent conversion by trustee, factors obtaining advances on the property of their principals), 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 38;

24. Offences against the Official Secrets Acts, 1911 and 1920 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 10 (3); 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 74).

By the Burglary Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 57), quarter sessions were given jurisdiction to try a person charged with burglary; but the Act directed that a justice of the peace when committing for trial a person charged with that offence should commit him for trial before a court of assize unless owing to the absence of any circumstances which make the case a grave or difficult one he thinks it expedient in the interests of justice to commit him for trial before a court of quarter sessions; and the Assizes Relief Act, 1889, shall then apply. These provisions are now repealed, but re-enacted, by the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 38.

Offences against the bankruptcy laws are triable at quarter sessions: see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 20, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 96 (Stat. Law Rev.), which repealed the provision to the contrary in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

The jurisdiction of quarter sessions to try a person for the common law misdemeanor of attempting to commit suicide is not taken away by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 11-16, which render an attempt to commit murder a felony, punishable by penal servitude for life; for attempting to kill one's self is not an attempt to commit murder within the meaning of that statute. R. v. Burgess, L. & C. 258; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 55. Where an indictment charged that the defendants conspired by divers false pretences to defraud the prosecutor of his money; and it was objected that the facts ought to have been set out, so as to show that the false pretences were within the jurisdiction of the sessions, by which the indictment had been tried, the court of Queen's Bench held that, after verdict it must be taken that the jury had found the defendants guilty on facts, proving a conspiracy to defraud by such false pretences as were cognizable by the sessions. Latham v. R., 5 B. & S. 635; 33 L J (M. C.) 197.

A court of quarter sessions cannot try an indictment against a corporation. See ante, p. 10, post, p. 111.

Courts of quarter sessions have power to transmit to the assizes for trial indictments found before them which they have no jurisdiction to try (ante, p 107, or which from the nature of the charge should more properly be tried at assizes. The power arises under the commission of the peace, and is preserved by s. 5 of the Assizes Relief Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12). It is specifically given as to quarter sessions within the Central Criminal Court district by 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 19. These powers are distinct from the procedure by certiorari, infra.

Indictments found at the sessions and transmitted by the justices to the assizes must be tried at the assizes, although they have not been removed by certiorari. R. v. Wetherell, R. & R. 381. An indictment was found at quarter sessions against the defendant, who was, upon a certificate of such finding, taken before a justice under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 3, and bound by recognizances to appear and plead at the assizes. The indictment was not transmitted to the assizes, but remained in the custody of the clerk of the peace. It was held that the transmission of the indictment to the assizes was in the discretion of the justices, and that the judge of assize had no power to order such transmission, and that the indictment having been found at sessions and not transmitted for trial at the assizes, it could not be tried at the assizes. Another indictment against the defendant for the same offence having however been found by the grand jury at the assizes, it was held, that the defendant being bound by the above-mentioned recognizance, must be called upon it to plead to such second indictment. R. v. Wildman, 12 Cox, 354, Keating, J.

Change of place of trial.]—The King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice has jurisdiction to change the place of trial of any felony or misdemeanor, whenever it is necessary for the purpose of securing, so far as possible, a fair and impartial trial. R. v. Holden, 5 B. & Ad. 347, 354, Denman, C.J.: and see R. v. Boughton [1895] 2 Ir. Rep. 386; ex parte Gyde, 72 J. P. 504. For this purpose a writ of certiorari must issue to remove the indictment into the King's Bench Division, unless the court or a judge think fit to direct the trial to be held at the Central Criminal Court, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, post, p. 118. Indictments may be removed from the Crown Court of Assize without a certiorari, because the court is made part of the High Court by the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 16, 29. R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 560; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 32. An order, however, for their removal is requisite, which is obtained in the same way, and is subject to the same conditions as certiorari. See Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 12-19, post, pp. 115, 119. Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 106, 543.

CERTIORARI.

THE writ of certiorari is an original writ, usually issuing out of the King's Bench Division, when the crown would be certified of any record in any other court of record. Fitz. N. B. 245 a; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 34. It may also, under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 16, be issued by the judges of the High Court who are in the commission of the Central Criminal Court, and by the recorder of the city of London, to remove from courts of quarter sessions having jurisdiction within the Central Criminal Court district, indictments found in such courts for offences cognizable by the Central Criminal Court under the Act; and under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 2, may be issued by a judge of assize in respect of indictments found or taken before courts of quarter sessions (for any county or borough within his commission) in respect of offences which they have no jurisdiction to try (ante, p. 106). There seems, however, to be no power to remove by certiorari the order of a justice committing a person for trial for an indictable offence. See R. v. Roscommon Justices [1894] 2 Ir. Rep. 158. The power to remove by certiorari an indictment found at quarter sessions is not affected by 52 & 53 Vict. c. 12 (Assizes Relief Act, 1889). See s. 5. The writ is directed in the King's name to the judges or officers of inferior courts, requiring them to return the records of a certain indictment or inquisition depending before them, in order that the party may have the benefit of a trial in the King's Bench Division, or before such justices as his Majesty shall assign to hear and determine the cause. For the removal of indictments into the King's Bench Division the writ is sued out of the King's Bench Division and issued from the crown office: that division of the High Court, as successor to the old Court of King's Bench, having a general superintendence over all other courts of criminal jurisdiction, whether ancient or newly created (2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 22), and being the sovereign ordinary court of justice in criminal causes. 4 Bl. Com. 320: 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 34. This writ is frequently used in order the better to consider and determine the validity of indictments and the proceedings thereon, and to prevent a partial and insufficient trial, which it is apprehended would take place in the original jurisdiction. 1 Chit. Cr. L. 371; 2 Hale, 210. The effect of the writ is to remove all proceedings such as are described therein, which have taken place between the teste and return, although they may have been commenced after the teste. R. v. Battams, 1 East, 298; 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 73. It may be applied for before or after the finding of any indictment for misdemeanor; 60 G. 3 and 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 4. The writ is of no effect unless it is delivered to the court below before the time for its return has expired.

Form of the writ.]—The following is the form of the writ of certiorari to remove an indictment into the King's Bench Division, addressed to the justices of quarter sessions:—

George the Fifth, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the seas King defender of the faith, to the keepers of our peace and our justices assigned to hear and determine divers crimes, trespasses, and other offences committed within our county of D., and to every of them, greeting: We, being willing for certain reasons that all and singular indictments of whatsoever felonies [or misdemeanors] whereof A. B. is [if indictment not yet preferred, add, or may be] before you indicted (as it said) be determined before us in the King's Bench Division of our High Court of Justice, and not elsewhere, do command you and every of you that you or one of you do forthwith send under your seals, or the seal of one of you, before us in our said court at the Royal Courts of Justice, London, all and singular the said indictments, with all things touching the same, by whatsoever name the said A. B. may be called therein, together with this our writ, that we may cause further to be done thereon what right of and according to the law and custom of England we shall see fit to be done. Witness, Alfred Tristram, Baron Trevethin, at the Royal Courts of Justice, London, the day of , in the year of our Lord, 19—.

The writ must bear the following indorsements :—

By order of court [or of Mr. Justice , as the case may be.]
At the instance of the prosecutor [or defendant].
Recognizance by the prosecutor [or defendant] in the sum of £ , with [two] sureties in the sum of £ each.

This writ was issued by E. F., of , agent for C. D., of , solicitor for the prosecutor [or defendant].

[For other forms of the writ, see Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Forms 7, 8, and 9.]

In what cases granted.]—The writ of certiorari is demandable as of right by the crown (Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 15 : R. v. Eaton, 2 T. R. 89 : R. v. Thomas, 4 M. & S. 442); and issues as of course where the attorney-general or other officer of the crown applies for it, either as prosecutor or as conducting the defence on behalf of the crown; Id.: R. v. Lewis, 4 Burr. 2456, 2458; and this, even though the certiorari be expressly taken away by statute; for, as a general rule, the crown is not bound by statute unless expressly named therein : Maxwell on Statutes (5th ed.) p. 220 : Craies on Statute Law (4th ed.) 349 et seq. (For form of attorney-general's fiat for application for certiorari, see Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 23.) By analogy to this rule, the certiorari was formerly granted almost of course to private prosecutors, who were said to represent the crown, at whose suit all indictments are preferred. But now, "no indictment, except indictments against bodies corporate not authorized to appear by solicitor in the court in which the indictment is preferred, shall be removed into the King's Bench Division, either at the instance of the prosecutor or of the defendant (other than the attorney-general acting on behalf of the crown), unless it be made to appear to the court or a judge, by the party applying, that a fair and impartial trial of the case cannot be had in the court below, or that some question of law of more than usual difficulty and importance is likely to arise upon the trial, or that a view of the premises in respect whereof any indictment is preferred, or a special jury, may be required for a satisfactory trial of the same." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 13, which supersedes 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 4 (rep.), as to which see R. v. Gate Fulford, 6 Cox, 510. The reason for the provision as to bodies corporate is that they cannot appear by attorney in courts of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or at sessions of the peace. R. v. Birmingham and Gloucester Rail. Co., 9 C. & P. 469, Parke, B. In R. v. Puck & Co., Ltd., 28 T. L. R. 197, some doubt was expressed as to whether a limited company could not now plead to an indictment at the Central Criminal Court, but the point was not decided.

The difficult points of law likely to arise must be specifically pointed out in order to induce the court to grant a certiorari, and must be stated in the rule. R. v. Joule, 5 A. & E. 539 : R. v. Josephs, 8 Dowl. 178. If it is clearly made out that there is a fair and reasonable probability of partiality and prejudice in the jurisdiction within which the indictment would otherwise be tried, the certiorari will be granted. R. v. Lewis, 2 Str. 704 : R. v. Fawle, 2 Ld. Raym. 1452 : R. v. Waddington, 1 East, 167 : R. v. Penprase, 4 B. & Ad. 573; 1 Nev. & M. 312 : R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 444 : R. v. Holden, 5 B. & Ad. 347; 2 Nev. & M. 167 : R. v. Lever, 1 Wil., Wol. & Hod. 35 : R. v. Palmer, 5 E. & B. 1024 : as where a member of the court of magistrates was interested in the result of the trial : R. v. Jones, 2 Har. & Wol. 293 : but see R. v. Fellows, 1 Har. & Wol. 648; 4 Dowl. 607, contra: or where a magistrate, in the commission for the county, was indicted at the quarter sessions and circulated among the other magistrates a printed account of the charges. R. v. Grover, 8 Dowl. 325. So where the prosecutor or his solicitor is sheriff or under-sheriff, and could attend the grand jury when they considered the bill (R. v. Webb, 2 Str. 1068), the writ will be granted. Under some circumstances the court will grant a certiorari for the removal of an indictment for conspiracy : R. v. Wilks, 5 E. & B. 690; 25 L. J. (Q. B.) 47 : R. v. Rowlands, 17 Q. B. 671; 2 Den. 364; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 81, even where one of several defendants makes the application without the consent of the others. R. v. Foulkes, 1 L. M. & P. 720; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 196 : R. v. Boxall, 4 A. & E. 513 : R. v. Probert, Dears. 30 : R. v. Jewell, 7 E. & B. 140; 26 L. J. (Q. B.) 177. In those cases the writ was allowed on the application of one of several defendants, who was a responsible person, he entering into a recognizance to pay costs in case of the conviction of himself or of any of the other defendants. See Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 14, post, p. 115, and Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 19.

In what cases refused.]—An indictment for not repairing bridges and the highways at the end thereof, where the inhabitants of the county are chargeable with the repair of the same, is not removable by certiorari, out of the county where such bridges or highways lie. 1 Anne, st. 1, c. 18, s. 5 : R. v Hamworth, 2 Str. 900 : R. v. Cumberland, 6 T. R. 194; 3 B. & P. 354 (H. L.).

But this Act cannot apply where the indictment is of the inhabitants of the county from which the petty jury comes. See Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 16. An indictment against any person for keeping a bawdy-house, gaming-house, or other disorderly house is not removable by certiorari at the instance of the defendant. 25 G. 2, c. 36, s. 10. But where an indictment for keeping a disorderly house had been removed from the Middlesex Sessions to the Central Criminal Court, under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 36, s. 16, the court granted a certiorari to remove the indictment into the Queen's Bench at the instance of the defendant, holding that where the indictment has been once removed by the prosecutor, 25 G. 2, c. 36, s. 10, which takes away the writ of certiorari, does not apply. R. v. Brier, 14 Q. B. 568; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 121. If an indictment charging an offence in which the certiorari is taken away by statute contains counts charging an offence where it is not taken away, the writs may still issue. R. v. Saunders, 5 D. & R. 611.

The writ is rarely if ever issued to remove an indictment after judgment in the court below except for the purpose of carrying the judgment into execution: Short and Mellor, Cr. Pl. (2nd ed.) 16; 2 Hawk. 288: R. v. Gwynne, 2 Burr. 749: R. v. Nicholls, 2 Str. 1227: R. v. Nichols, 13 East, 412 n, 417 n.: R. v. Pennegoes, 1 B. & C. 142: R. v. Lucas, 2 Fox & Sm. (K. B., Ir.) 30: Ex parte Collins, Q. B. D., Dec. 19, 1899; 34 L. J. Newsp. 132.

In Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 17 n., reference is made to a suggestion in an unreported case of R. v. Boaler [1888] that the writ might lie where error would not. But in R. v. Boaler [1892] 17 Cox, 569; 56 J. P. 792, it was held that certiorari will not go to the Central Criminal Court to bring up an indictment after judgment. In R. v. Seton, 7 T. R. 373, the court quashed a certiorari granted before, but not lodged till after judgment in an indictment for misdemeanor, and in R. v. Unwin, 7 Dowl. 578, a certiorari was refused in a case where the defendant had surreptitiously secured an acquittal by failing to give the notice of trial usual at the sessions where he was indicted.

The court could grant, but usually refused to issue, the writ for removal of an indictment for felony or misdemeanor after verdict and before judgment. 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 28; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 380: R. v. Oxfordshire, 13 East, 411: R. v. Garside, 2 A. & E. 266: R. v. Nichols, supra: R. v. Boaler, 17 Cox, 569. It is doubtful whether this jurisdiction can or should be exercised since the creation of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

The court will not, ordinarily, on the application of the defendant, grant a certiorari for the removal of an indictment for perjury, forgery, or other heinous misdemeanor where the delay would tend to defeat the prosecution, 2 Hawk. c. 27, s. 28: R. v. Pusey, 2 Str. 717; or for murder, R. v. Mead, 3 D. & R. 301: R. v. Thomas, 4 M. & Sel. 442; unnatural crime, R. v. Holden, 5 B. & Ad. 347; 2 Nev. & M. 167, or the like. See R. v. Penprase, 4 B. & Ad. 573; 1 Nev. & M. 312. The creation of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved rendered the High Court unwilling to grant the writ on the ground of questions of law arising on an indictment; and the passing of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, will no doubt increase that unwillingness, especially in the case of the Central Criminal Court or Courts at which a judge of the High Court will sit. See R. v. Kingston (Duchess), 1 Cowp. 283; 20 St. Tr. 355: R. v. Templar,

1 Nev. & P. 91 : R. v. Wartnaby, 2 A. & E. 435; and Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 19.

Time when granted.]—The writ may be sued out in cases of misdemeanor, though at the time the indictment is not in esse; and it is sufficient if the indictment be found at any period before the writ is returnable. 60 G. 3, & 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 4. The proper time for either party to apply for a certiorari is before issue joined on the indictment : 1 Chit. Cr. L. 380; but the certiorari is not too late, if delivered before the jury are sworn to try the case. 60 G. 3, c. 4, s. 3 (rep.) : see R. v. Passman, 2 Dowl. 529; 1 A. & E. 603; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 16.

Mode of obtaining the writ.]—In all cases (except where the attorney-general applies for the writ on behalf of the crown) the application must be founded upon affidavit, suggesting some adequate ground for removal. See ante, p. 111.

The following form of an affidavit in support of an application for a certiorari to remove an indictment into the King's Bench Division, is given in Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 2.

In the High Court of Justice,
King's Bench Division.

I, A. B., of, etc. make oath and say as follows:

1. That at the general quarter sessions of the peace holden at in and for the county of , on or about the day of , a bill of indictment was preferred to the grand jury who returned a true bill [or that it is intended to prefer a bill of indictment, as the case may be].

2. That in my judgment and belief, nice and intricate questions or points of law will arise on the trial of the said indictment, which will render it important that the same should be tried before one of the learned judges of the High Court of Justice, and particularly, that a question will, as I am advised, be raised as to whether [state the particular question that will arise, or that a question will arise upon the construction of an Act of Parliament].

3. That, in my judgment and belief, it will be material and necessary that the said indictment should be tried by a special jury, which cannot be had, unless the said indictment be removed into this honourable court. And that I [or as the case may be] will cause a special jury to be had if the said indictment shall be so removed.

4. That I verily believe that it will be important and necessary that a view of the place and premises in question should be had by some of the jurymen to be impanelled, to try the issue joined upon the said indictment, which I am informed and believe can only be had by the said indictment being removed into this honourable court.

[NOTE.—Where the view is to be had in the county where the bill is preferred certiorari is unnecessary. See R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 113.]

5. That, by reason of [here state what has occurred to create prejudice], I verily believe that strong prejudices have been created in the minds of some of the justices who may preside at the sessions upon the trial of the said indictment. And also among that class of persons in the said place, from whom the common jurors are selected for the trials at the said sessions, and some of whom are likely to be called upon the jury for the trial of the said indictment, unless the same be removed into this honourable court. And therefore, that a fair and impartial trial of the same cannot be had at the said sessions.

6. That [add any other allegation which may be likely to induce the court or a judge to grant the writ of certiorari, consistent with the facts and circumstances of the case required to be removed.]

[Omit any of the foregoing allegations which may not be applicable to the case.]

The affidavits, if sworn in England, must be sworn before a judge, district registrar, commissioner to administer oaths (see 52 & 53 Vict. c. 10, Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889), first or second class clerk in the Crown Office Department, or officer empowered under the Rules of the Supreme Court to administer oaths. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 7. As to the persons before whom affidavits may be sworn out of England, see r. 5, and R. S. C. O. 38, r. 6. The affidavits must be intituled "In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 6. "Every application for a writ of certiorari, or for an order to remove an indictment into the King's Bench Division, at the instance of any person other than the attorney-general on behalf of the crown, shall, during the sittings, be made to a divisional court of the said division by motion for an order nisi to show cause, and in the vacation or when there is no sitting of a divisional court to a judge at chambers for a summons to show cause: Provided that where, from special circumstances, the court or a judge may be of opinion that the writ should issue forthwith, the order may be made absolute, or an order be made in the first instance, either ex parte or otherwise, as the court or judge may direct." Id., r. 12. No summons to show cause before a judge at chambers shall be issued for a writ of certiorari without the leave of a judge upon an ex parte application. Id. r. 266 (b). For forms of summonses at chambers, see Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1886, Forms 3 & 5, and for form of judge's order for certiorari to remove indictment into the King's Bench Division, see Id. Form 4; and for form of judge's order to remove indictment from assizes or Central Criminal Court into the King's Bench Division, see Id. Form 6.

Allowance.]—"No writ of certiorari for the removal of an indictment into the King's Bench Division at the instance of a defendant or defendants before trial had, shall be allowed by the Court to whom it may be directed, unless the defendant or defendants, at whose instance the writ of certiorari shall have been awarded, shall have entered into a recognizance before a judge of the High Court, or before the court before whom such defendant or defendants shall stand indicted, or before one or more justices of the peace of the county or place in which such indictment may be found, or in which such defendant or defendants reside, in such sum and with such sufficient sureties as the court or judge awarding the writ shall, by endorsement on the writ, order or direct, conditioned to appear and plead (and in cases of felony in open court) to the said indictment, and give notice of trial, and proceed to trial of the indictment at the next assizes to be held for the county wherein the indictment was found, or if in London or Middlesex forthwith at the sittings of the High Court of Justice, and personally to appear from day to day at the trial of such indictment, and if necessary in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, and not depart till he or they shall be discharged by the court, and to pay the costs of the prosecution subsequent to the removal of the indictment, if he or they be convicted." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 14.

A certiorari obtained by one of several co-defendants removes the indictment as to all. R. v. Boxall, 4 A. & E. 513.

"No writ of certiorari for the removal of an indictment into the King's Bench Division at the instance of any prosecutor (other than the attorney-general acting on behalf of the Crown or the prosecutor of an indictment against a body corporate) shall be allowed by the court to whom it may be directed unless the prosecutor at whose instance the writ of certiorari shall have been awarded, shall before the allowance of such writ by the court to whom it may be directed, enter into a recognizance in the manner and for such sum as in the preceding rule, provided and directed, conditioned on the return of such writ, to make up the record, and give notice of trial and proceed to trial of the indictment at the next assizes to be held for the county wherein the indictment was found, or if in London or Middlesex forthwith at the sittings of the High Court of Justice, and to pay the costs of the defendant subsequent to the removal of the indictment, if he be acquitted." R. 15.

Rules 14, 15 generalize a provision made as to certain misdemeanors by 21 Jac. 1, c. 8, s. 4, and as to appeals from judgments and orders of quarter sessions by 5 G. 2, c. 19, ss. 2, 3.

On removing an indictment containing seven counts into the High Court, the prosecutors bound themselves to pay the defendant's costs if she were acquitted on the indictment. Defendant having been acquitted on five out of the seven counts, it was held that this was not an acquittal upon the indictment within the meaning of the recognizance, and that she could not claim her costs of the counts on which she had been acquitted. R. v. Bayard [1892] 2 Q. B. 181; 17 Cox, 502.

"If the person at whose instance any writ of certiorari for the removal of an indictment shall have been awarded, shall not before the allowance thereof enter into a properly conditioned recognizance, the court to which such writ or order may be directed shall proceed to the trial of the indictment, as if such writ had not been awarded." R. 16.

The "allowance" of the writ mentioned in this rule means by the court or person to whom it is directed. R. v. Abergele, 5 A. & E. 795 : R. v. Dunn, 8 T. R. 217 : R. v. Jones, 9 Dowl. 504.

The provisions of rules 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 shall in like manner apply in the case of a removal of an indictment into the King's Bench Division before trial had by order without writ of certiorari when such writ may not be required or used. R. 17.

When a certiorari, or an order to remove from the assizes, is granted, the divisional court or judge at chambers on granting it fixes the amount of the recognizances (to be entered into before a judge, or a justice of the county or place in which the party resides), and the amount of the recognizances is indorsed on the writ. By r. 15, supra, the prosecutor of an indictment against a body corporate is not bound to enter into recognizances on the removal of an indictment by certiorari, because the corporation can plead only in the High Court. R. v. Birmingham & Gloucester Rail. Co., 9 C. & P. 469. The rule in this respect follows the construction put upon 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 5 (rep.), in R. v. Mayor, etc., of Manchester, 7 E. & B. 453; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 65. As to the mode of entering into recognizances when they are required from a parish, etc., or other such large quasi corporate body, see R. v. Abergele, 5 A. & E. 795. When they are required from a corporation, it is the practice to allow one of the members of the corporation, on behalf of himself and the rest of the corporation, to enter into the recognizance, with such sureties as may be required. Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 26.

For the forms of recognizances by prosecutor and defendant on certiorari to remove indictment into the King's Bench Division, see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Forms 10, 11, 12.

The following is the form of the rule to compel the defendant to put in better bail :—

The King against A. B. — Unless the defendant shall put in better bail within four days next after notice of this rule given to him or to his solicitor, let a procedendo issue.

TREVETHIN.

The recognizance must be lodged, together with the writ, with the clerk of the peace or clerk of assize, as the case may be; and after they are lodged all proceedings upon the indictment in the court below are stayed.

"Every recognizance acknowledged on the removal of an indictment, order, or other proceeding, or to prosecute any information granted by the King's Bench Division, or for the appearing or answering of any party in the said Division, or for good behaviour, or for any other purpose, shall after the acknowledgment thereof be transmitted to the Crown Office and filed there." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 112.

Where a defendant has entered into insufficient recognizances, the court will discharge them, and compel him to give better security. R. v. Hooper, 1 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 491.

Return to writ.]—The return is made by indorsing on the writ of certiorari the following memorandum :—The execution of this writ appears by the schedules hereunto annexed. The answer of A. B., Esquire, one of the keepers of the peace and justices within mentioned. This memorandum must be signed and sealed by A. B. The schedules mentioned in it as thereunto annexed are the indictment and other documents to be returned in pursuance of the certiorari. See Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 21.

Sending back the record.]—If the writ of certiorari has been improvidently issued, e.g., if it appears to have been obtained by misrepresentation of the facts, the court (or a judge at chambers, R. v. Scaife, 18 Q. B. 773; 2 Den. 513; 3 C. & K. 211; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 221) may award a writ of supersedeas to the certiorari and a procedendo to carry back the indictment, and so send back the record to the original jurisdiction, there to be dealt with as if no certiorari had issued. See 1 Burn's J. 648 (30th ed.); 4 Co. Inst. 67. The same course may be taken if the defendant neglects to perform the condition of the recognizance, or if bad or insufficient bail be put in. R. v. Jones, 9 Dowl. 504: R. v. Dunn, 8 T. R. 217: R. v. Abergele, 5 A. & E. 795: Com. Dig. Certiorari (G.): 1 Chitty Cr. L. 397. And where the defendants in a case originally removed from quarter sessions by certiorari, having obtained a rule in the Queen's Bench for a new trial, neglected to bring down the record and proceed to trial at the assizes, a writ of procedendo was awarded, and the record was sent back to sessions, where the parties were tried and sentenced to transportation. R. v. Scaife, supra.

For the form of writ of supersedeas to certiorari and procedendo to carry back indictment, see Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 169.

Trial at Central Criminal Court of indictments removed by certiorari.]—By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, s. 1 ("The Palmer Act"), the Court of King's Bench in term time, or any judge thereof in vacation, is authorized, whenever any indictment or inquisition for any felony or misdemeanor committed or supposed to have been committed at any place out of the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court shall have been removed by certiorari in the King's Bench to order, if it appear to be expedient to the ends of justice, that such indictment or inquisition shall be tried at the Central Criminal Court. Or such court or judge may, in any such case of felony or misdemeanor, order a certiorari to issue to the court before which the indictment or inquisition shall be pending, or shall thereafter be found, or to the coroner before whom such inquisition shall have been or shall thereafter be taken, to remove the indictment or inquisition directly into the Central Criminal Court (s. 3). Under this section the Court has power to order the removal into the Central Criminal Court of an indictment, notwithstanding that abortive trials have already taken place at the court to which the order is addressed. The court has a very wide discretion, the only condition being that the court deems it expedient to the ends of justice. R. v. Barnett [1919] 1 K. B. 640; 83 J. P. 134; 35 T. L. R. 344. Provisions are made for the transmission of the indictment or inquisition, and for the return of the recognizances, depositions, etc., into that court (ss. 2, 4); for the removal of the offender to the prison appointed for the Central Criminal Court (s. 5); for his arraignment, pleading and trial at the Central Criminal Court (19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, ss. 6, 7); for the allowance of the expenses of prosecutions (s. 13); and otherwise in relation to the objects of the Act. The powers of the Court of King's Bench were transferred to the High Court of Justice (King's Bench Division) by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 34. The court has refused to make it a condition, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, s. 24 (rep. and superseded by Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 14, 15, ante, p. 116), that the prosecutor should furnish the defendant with evidence which it was suggested had been obtained by the prosecutor since the depositions were taken. R. v. Palmer, 5 E. & B. 1024.

"An application for an order that an indictment or inquisition removed into the King's Bench Division shall be tried at the Central Criminal Court, or a motion to remove an indictment or inquisition by certiorari into the Central Criminal Court for trial under 19 [& 20] Vict. c. 16, shall, during the sittings, be made to the King's Bench Division by motion for an order nisi: and in the vacation, [? or] when there is no sitting of a divisional court, to a judge at chambers for a summons; and the order may be made absolute or granted upon such terms as to recognizance or otherwise as the court or judge may consider reasonable." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 19. No appeal lies from the refusal of the King's Bench Division to grant a certiorari to remove an indictment to the Central Criminal Court under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16. R. v. Rudge, 16 Q. B. D. 459; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 112.

Costs.]—The liability of the parties to costs on the removal of an indictment by certiorari was first imposed by 21 Jac. 1, c. 8, s. 4, and 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3 (rep.), and was extended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 5 (rep.). It is now regulated by Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 14, 15 (ante, p. 116), and by 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 6, post, pp. 116 et seq. Under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 5, it was held that the prosecutor was entitled to costs in the case of an indictment removed by the defendant by certiorari, where the defendant was convicted, though the prosecutor was not the party aggrieved or injured. R. v. Oastler, L. R. 9 Q. B. 132; 43 L. J. (Q. B.) 42; and as s. 5 is embodied in Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 14, 15 (ante, p. 116), R. v. Oastler would be an authority on the construction of those rules. If a defendant dies after verdict and before judgment, his bail will be liable for the costs to the extent of their recognizances; R. v. Turner, 3 B. & C. 160; R. v. Finmore, 8 T. R. 409; but under ordinary circumstances the prosecutor is not entitled to costs till the court has pronounced judgment, for it may be that judgment will be arrested. R. v. Turner, 15 East, 570. If an indictment against several defendants is removed into the King's Bench Division without the consent of all of them, those who did not consent to the application for the certiorari are not liable for the costs, even though they have pleaded to the indictment and have been convicted upon it. R. v. Hassell, 5 Dowl. 531. But under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 5 (rep.), where the certiorari was applied for at the instance of one of two defendants, the judge might in his discretion make it a condition of the recognizance that the defendant applying for the writ should pay the prosecutor's costs, in case either he or the other defendant should be convicted, R. v. Jewell, 7 E. & B. 140; 26 L. J. (Q. B.) 177; and an express provision to that effect is contained in Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 14, ante, p. 115. The prosecutor is not entitled under the recognizance to the costs of any counts of the indictment on which the defendant has been acquitted. R. v. Hawdon, 11 A. & E. 143, nor to costs incurred prior to the certiorari. R. v. Passman, 1 A. & E. 603, 606, n.: R. v. Higgins, 5 Dowl. 375; 6 L. J. (M. C.) 9. The defendant is to pay all reasonable costs occasioned by the removal of the indictment by the certiorari, or incurred in consequence of it, in order to carry the prosecution to its legal conclusion : R. v. Gilbie, 5 M. & Sel. 520; and the amount of costs is not limited by the recognizance. R. v. Teal, 13 East, 4. If a prosecutor, being entitled to costs, dies after taxation of costs, his personal representatives are entitled to them. As to the effect on the defendant's liability of 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 6 (1), vide post, pp. 284, et seq.

The prosecutor's liability to pay costs to the defendant, if acquitted, only arises where the prosecutor has entered into the recognizance with the condition mentioned in Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 15, ante, p. 116, or in cases falling within 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 6 (2), which is not limited to trials in courts of assize or quarter sessions. To entitle the defendant to costs he must be acquitted on all counts of the indictment. R. v. Bayard [1892] 2 Q. B. 181; 17 Cox, 572. If the prosecutor has merely entered into a recognizance conditioned to prosecute with effect, and to do and perform such orders and things as the court shall direct, he is not liable to costs. R. v. East Stoke, 6 B. & S. 536; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 190.

The costs are taxed in the Supreme Court Taxing Office, and payment is enforced by estreat of the recognizances under Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 112—115, which is effected by order of the court made after calling upon the party liable to perform the conditions. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 6, which permitted attachment, was repealed in 1892. As to costs of a special jury, see R. v. Moate, 3 B. & Ad. 237; 1 L. J. (K. B.) 78.

As to the cases in which the defendant may, by reason of poverty or bankruptcy, have relief from the payment of the costs, see R. v. Thornton, 4 Ex. 820; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 113 : R. v. Hills, 2 E. & B. 176; 22 L. J. (Q. B.) 322.

As to the general law with respect to the payment of the costs of indictments, and as to the costs in cases where the indictment, after its removal by certiorari, is tried at the Central Criminal Court, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, ss. 25, 26, see post, pp. 267 et seq.

Change of venue.]—The removal of an indictment by certiorari at common law does no more than change the court of trial, and does not affect the venue. The original practice was to try the indictment at bar in the Court of King's Bench, unless after issue joined a writ of nisi prius were issued with the attorney-general's consent to try in the proper county. 2 Co. Inst. 424. The court was by 6 H. 8, c. 6 empowered thus to remit indictments for felonies. In the case of an offence committed outside the Central Criminal Court District, if it is desired to change the venue, this can be effected by obtaining an order under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, s. 3, for the trial of the offence in that court. On the removal of a case from that court the venue is determined by the court on issuing the certiorari and stated in the writ. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 18, which provides that "every writ of certiorari for removing an indictment from the Central Criminal Court shall specify the county or jurisdiction in which the same shall be tried; and a jury shall be summoned, and the trial proceed, in the same manner in all respects as if the indictment had been originally preferred in that county or jurisdiction." The true construction of this rule is, that the King's Bench Division has discretion to name in the certiorari the county or jurisdiction in which the trial is to take place, and that by the jurors summoned from that jurisdiction the same issues shall be tried that would have been tried in the Central Criminal Court had the indictment not been removed. R. v. Castro, L. R. 9 Q. B. 350, 355; 43 L. J. (Q. B.) 105, 107.

In cases not dealt with as above it is necessary to obtain an order to change the venue, which may be made by a judge of assize without certiorari, or by the King's Bench Division after the grant of a certiorari and joinder of issue. Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 106. The right to make such an order appears to be established as to felonies. See R. v. Penprase, 4 B. & Ald. 573: R. v. Holden, 5 B. & Ad. 347: and R. v. Barrett, Ir. Rep. 4 C. L. 285; 18 W. R. 671: R. v. Fay, Ir. Rep. 6 C. L. 436: R. v. M'Eneany [1878] 2 L. R. Ir. 236: R. v. Phelan, 14 Cox, 579 (Ir.). And it is certainly established as to misdemeanors. But it is not exercised unless (1) demanded as of right by the attorney-general acting on behalf of the crown; (2) the inhabitants of a county are indicted and all are interested in the verdict: R. v. Southampton (Inhabitants) 17 Q. B. D. 424; (3) a view in another county is necessary: Clerk v. R., 9 H. L. C. 184; 31 L. J. (Q. B.) 175: R. v. Sheldon, 32 L. T. (N. S.) 27; or (4) a fair trial cannot be had in the original venue. R. v. Simpson, 5 Jur. 462: R. v. Dunn, 11 Jur. 287: R. v. Patent Eurika Co., 13 L. T. (N. S.) 365: R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 444; 2 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 130: R. v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1330: R. v. Duggan, Ir. Rep. 7 C. L. 94: R. v. Boughton [1895] 2 Ir. Rep. 386. Mere possibility of prejudice is not a sufficient reason for change of venue. R. v. King, 2 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 217: R. v. Stephenson, 5 Jur. 341: and see R. v. Casey, 13 Cox, 614: R. v. Walter, 14 Cox, 579: Ex parte Gyde, 72 J. P. 504. Any extra expense caused by the change falls on the person who applies for it. R. v. Newton, 1 Cox, 195. It is usual, but not necessary, to change the venue to the nearest county on the same circuit in which a fair trial can be had. Anon., 6 Jur. 131: R. v. Browne, 6 Jur. 168: R. v. Palmer, 5 E. & B. 1024, 1028, Campbell, C.J. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 106. As to the trial in a county at large of offences committed in counties of cities, see ante, p. 38. An application change the venue is made during the sittings to a Divisional Court of the King's Bench Division, in vacation to a judge. Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 107.

Trial at bar.]—A trial at bar can be obtained only by order of the Court, Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 150. Where an indictment has been removed by certiorari into the King's Bench Division the attorney-general, if prosecuting on behalf of the crown, has the right to demand a trial at bar as a matter of course; r. 151. R. v. Hales, 2 Str. 816: R. v. Castro, L. R. 9 Q. B. 350. In other cases the procedure is by motion for a rule nisi, and the court may impose terms on making the rule absolute (rr. 151, 152); and see rr. 153-155: Anderson v. Gorrie, 10 T. L. R. 383: Dixon v. Farrer, 17 Q. B. D. 661: Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 297. The most recent instances of trials at bar are R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 218: and West Rand Co., Ltd. v. R. [1905] 2 K. B. 391; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 753. In

R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444, no demand was made by the attorney-general for a trial at bar, as treason committed abroad is triable before the King's Bench Division under 35 H. 8, c. 2, s. 1.

Removal without certiorari.]—Where a defendant has been convicted at the assizes and has entered into a recognizance to keep the peace, the King's Bench Division can, on breach of the recognizance being committed, by order, and without issuing a writ of certiorari, direct that the indictment and record of the trial be filed in the crown office in order that the defendant may be further dealt with. R. v. Chambers, Ex parte Klitz [1919] 1 K. B. 638.

POWERS OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL OVER PROSECUTIONS.

When sanction of attorney-general necessary.]—In the following cases a prosecution may not be instituted without the sanction of the attorney-general. Offences under the Explosives Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 3, s. 7); the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 69, s. 4); the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 34, s. 2); the Official Secrets Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 8); under s. 327 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5) and s. 2 (1) (a) of the Moneylenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51, s 2 (3)); fraudulent concealment of documents of title (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 24); frauds by a trustee under an express trust in writing (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, ss. 21 (a), 46); incest unless the director of public prosecutions commences the prosecution (8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 6). In the case of offences by aliens within the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73), the consent of a secretary of state is necessary (s. 3).

Where a prosecution is instituted on the fiat of the attorney-general it is sufficient to lodge the fiat with the clerk of the court of trial and it need not be proved at the trial. R. v. Dexter, 19 Cox, 360. See also R. v. Metz, 84 L. J. (K. B.) 1462; 79 J. P. 384; 11 Cr. App. R. 164.

Intervention of attorney-general.]—The attorney-general or the director of public prosecutions under the special or general directions of the attorney-general is always entitled to take over and continue a private prosecution. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1923 et seq. As to the position of the attorney-general with reference to cases within the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859, see ante, pp. 67 et seq.

Nolle prosequi.]—A nolle prosequi to stay proceedings upon an indictment or information pending in any court may be entered, by leave of the attorney-general, at the instance of either the prosecutor or the defendant, at any time after the bill of indictment is found, and before judgment. R. v. Dunn, 1 C. & K. 730 : R. v. Colling, 2 Cox, 184; but not before the indictment has been presented : R. v. Wylie, 83 J. P. 295. "This power of the attorney-general is not subject to any control by the courts; but does not interfere with the right of a judge to allow a case to be withdrawn on the application of a private prosecutor." R. v. Comptroller of Patents [1899] 1 Q. B. 909, 914, per Smith, L.J. If the office of attorney-general is vacant, semble that the solicitor-general may give leave to enter a nolle prosequi; Id., and see 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22, s. 9. Leave is never given except upon good cause shown, and is never refused when the interests of justice require it. A nolle prosequi is distinct from, and has not the same effect as, offering no evidence and submitting to acquittal. Elworthy v. Bird, 2 Bing. 258; 9 Moore (C. P.) 430. It appears to be preferable to an applicant to discharge the recognizances of the prosecutor and witnesses. See R. v. Freakley, 6 Cox, 75. The following is the form of the attorney-general's fiat or warrant to the King's coroner and attorney in the King's Bench Division to enter a nolle prosequi, in order to admit a prisoner, indicted for a conspiracy, as a witness for the crown :—

Whereas at the general quarter sessions of the peace holden for the West Riding of the county of York, etc., an indictment was found by the grand jury of the said Riding against H. S., T. S., G. E. and S. C., for a conspiracy falsely to charge J. H. to be the father of a bastard child, whereof the said H. S. was pregnant, which indictment has since been removed into the King's Bench Division of his Majesty's High Court of Justice; and whereas it is represented to me on the part of the prosecutor of the said indictment, that he considering that the said H. S. was rather an object of the conspiracy of the other defendants than a willing actress in it, and from recent information that she is comparatively innocent; and considering that the ends of justice would be best answered were she in a situation to undergo examination as a witness upon the subject-matter of the indictment, is desirous, with the advice of his counsel, to have a nolle prosequi entered as against the said H. S., and that he prays the same accordingly; these are therefore to authorize and require you to enter or cause to be entered a nolle prosequi upon the said indictment as to the said H. S. And for so doing this shall be your warrant. Dated, etc.

To Sir L. W. K., Knight, coroner and attorney of our lord the King, in the King's Bench Division, of his Majesty's High Court of Justice.

Where the application is made at the instance of the prosecutor, the opinion of counsel as to the desirability of having the defendant examined as a witness is laid before the attorney-general, who will order the nolle prosequi to be entered without issuing any summons to the defendant : but where the application proceeds from the defendant, the attorney-general will direct his clerk to summon the prosecutor to show cause before him at his chambers why proceedings should not be stayed, and on hearing the parties will grant his warrant, if he thinks the circumstances of the case demand it.

The attorney-general may, however, on an ex parte application by the defendant, and without calling the prosecutor before him, enter a nolle prosequi to an indictment. R. v. Allen, 1 B. & S. 850; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 129.

The usual occasion of granting a nolle prosequi is either where in cases of misdemeanor a civil action is depending for the same cause: R. v. Fielding, 2 Burr. 719: Jones v. Clay, 1 B. & P. 191; or where any improper and vexatious attempts are made to oppress the defendant, as by repeatedly preferring defective indictments for the same supposed offence: R. v. Guerchy, 1 W. Bl. 545; or if it is clear that an indictment is not sustainable against the defendant. R. v. Pond, 1 Comyns Rep. 312; 1 Chitty Cr. L. 479. Where an indictment is preferred against a defendant for an assault, and at the same time an action of trespass is commenced in one of the civil courts for identically the same assault, upon affidavit of the facts, and hearing the parties, the attorney-general may, if he sees fit, order a nolle prosequi to be entered to the indictment, or compel the prosecutor to elect whether he will pursue the criminal or civil remedy. R. v. Fielding, 2 Burr. 719; 1 Chitty Cr. L. 479.

The following may be the form of the affidavit in such a case:—

I, A. B., of the parish of ——, in the county of ——, etc., make oath and say, that I, this deponent, did see the clerk of the peace of the county of —— sign a certificate hereto annexed, on the —— day of ——, at ——, and that since [or before] the time of preferring the indictment, in the said certificate mentioned, I was served with a copy of a writ of summons, issuing out of the King's Bench Division of his Majesty's High Court of Justice, at the suit of C. D., the prosecutor of the said indictment, requiring me within eight days to cause an appearance to be entered for me in the said King's Bench Division, in an action of trespass at the suit of the said C. D.; and that on the —— day of —— I, this deponent, did receive a notice of a declaration being filed against me at the suit of the said C. D., the prosecutor of the said indictment, in the master's office of the said King's Bench Division, for assaulting him, the said C. D., which said declaration and indictment, I say, are for the same assault and not for different offences.

A certificate from the clerk of assize or clerk of the peace, stating the substance of the indictment, and the time when it was preferred, must be annexed to this affidavit. Cro. Circ. Comp. 25 (10th ed.) For form of certificate, see ante, p. 123. And if the attorney-general thinks the case a proper one for his interference, he will sign a warrant under his hand and seal, directed to the clerk of the peace, if the indictment has been found at sessions, directing him to enter a stet processus. R. v. Fielding, 2 Burr. 719: Jones v. Clay, 1 B. & P. 191. If the cause of the application is the vexatious conduct of the prosecutor, the attorney-general may direct the proceedings to be removed into the King's Bench Division, where counsel will be heard in support of the nolle prosequi. R. v. Guerchy, 1 W. Bl. 545. A nolle prosequi may be entered as to one of several defendants at any time before trial. R. v. Teal, 11 East, 307. And on motion for a new trial in the King's Bench on an indictment for a conspiracy against several defendants, counsel for the crown, at the suggestion of the court, and having received the assent of the attorney-general (the attorney-general appearing as counsel for one of the defendants) entered a nolle prosequi as to two defendants, when the rule for a new trial was refused as to the rest; R. v. Rowlands, 17 Q. B. 671, 685; 2 Den. 364; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 81: and see R. v. Hempstead, R. & R. 344: and R. v. Butterworth, R. & R. 520. In R. v. Leatham, 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 205; 8 Cox, 498; 3 E. & E. 658, when the defendant had been found guilty on several counts of an information for bribery, the solicitor-general entered a nolle prosequi on one of them after a rule nisi for a new trial: and in R. v. Rowlands, supra, on application for a rule nisi to arrest the judgment on an indictment for a conspiracy, a nolle prosequi was entered on three counts of an indictment, as to the sufficiency of which some doubts were entertained, and the court pronounced judgment on the remaining good counts, a verdict having been taken on each count

The following is the form of entering a nolle prosequi on record, given in Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 120:—

Afterwards on the —— day of ——, before our said lord the King at the Royal Courts of Justice, London, come as well the said coroner and attorney of our said lord the King, in the King's Bench Division of his Majesty's High Court of Justice, who for our said lord the King in this behalf prosecutes in his proper person, as the said A. B. by his solicitor. And the said coroner and attorney for our said lord the King says that he will not further prosecute (ait se nolle ulterius prosequi) the said A. B. upon the indictment [or information] aforesaid. Whereupon all and singular the premises being seen and fully understood by the court now here, it is considered and adjudged, by the said court here, that all proceedings upon the said indictment [or information] against the said A. B. be altogether stayed, and that the said A. B. be discharged of and from the said indictment [or information].

[NOTE.—In the case of an information filed by the attorney-general his name must be used instead of that of the King's coroner and attorney.]

A nolle prosequi puts an end to the prosecution (see Gilchrist v. Gardner, 12 N. S. W. Rep. (Law) 184, and English authorities there cited); but does not operate as a bar or discharge or an acquittal on the merits. Goddard v. Smith, 6 Mod. 261; 3 Salk. 245: R. v. Ridpath, 10 Mod. 152; and the party remains liable to be re-indicted. It has been said that fresh process may be awarded on the same indictment. Goddard v. Smith, supra; Com. Dig. Indict. (K.): but this dictum appears not to be law. See the judgment in R. v. Allen, 1 B. & S. 850; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 129: R. v. Mitchel, 3 Cox, 93; 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 545; and Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 142.

CHAPTER II.

CRIMINAL INFORMATION.

PRELIMINARY.

PROSECUTIONS by information in respect of indictable misdemeanors or upon penal statutes, are not now in use before courts of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or before courts of quarter sessions (Archbold, Quarter Sessions (6th ed.) 482, 483). Informations on penal statutes are subject to the provisions of 18 Eliz. c. 5 and 31 Eliz. c. 5, except where the proceedings are of a civil nature, or are taken under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. Informations for misdemeanor are still occasionally filed in the King's Bench Division of the High Court. These are dealt with in sects. 2 and 3, post. Informations in that court in customs and revenue cases are treated as civil proceedings for purposes of evidence and appeal : see The Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104), ss. 31, 32, 34 (which got rid of doubts expressed in Att.-Gen. v. Radloff, 10 Ex. 84; 23 L. J. (Ex.) 240), and s. 259 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36); and judgments thereon for the Crown are not convictions within the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. R. v. Hausmann [1909] 73 J. P. 516; 3 Cr. App. R. 3 : see Att.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667; 54 L. J. (Q. B.) 205. R. v. Hausmann was a proceeding under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 186, to recover penalties for smuggling. Informations in quo warranto are now civil proceedings : 47 & 48 Vict. c. 61, s. 15.

INFORMATION EX OFFICIO.

What and in what cases.]—The information ex officio is a formal written suggestion on behalf of the King of a misdemeanor committed, filed by the King's attorney-general (or, in the vacancy of that office, by the solicitor-general, R. v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527; 19 St. Tr. 1075; 2 Eng. Rep. 244; 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 360) in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, without the intervention of a grand jury. The attorney-general for the Duchy of Lancaster cannot file an ex officio information in the High Court. Att.-Gen. of Duchy of Lancaster v. Duke of Devonshire, 14 Q. B. D. 195; 54 L. J. (Q. B.) 271.

It lies at common law for misdemeanors only, and not for treason or felony; Com. Dig. Information (A. 1): R. v. Prynn, 5 Mod. 459; R. v. Berchet, 1 Show. 106: R. v. Magee, Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 416; nor for misprision of treason: for wherever any capital offence is charged, or an offence so highly penal as misprision of treason, the law of England requires that the accusation should be warranted by the oath of twelve men, before the defendant can be put to answer it; 2 Hawk. c. 26, s. 3. The usual objects of an information ex officio are properly such enormous misdemeanors as peculiarly tend to disturb or endanger the King's government, or to molest or affront him in the regular discharge of his royal functions; 4 Bl. Com. 308; such, for instance, as seditious or blasphemous writings or speeches (R. v. Horne, 2 Cowp. 672; 20 St. Tr. 651: R. v. Wilkes, supra: R. v. Burdett, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1: R. v. Waddington, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1339; 1 B. & C. 26: R. v. Mary Ann Carlile, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1033); seditious riots not amounting to high treason; libels upon the King or his ministers, the judges, or other high officers, reflecting upon their conduct in the execution of their official duties (R. v. Harvey, 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1: R. v. Hunt, 31 St. Tr. 367, 408: R. v. Lord George Gordon, 22 Id. 177); libels on foreign sovereigns or ambassadors (R. v. Peltier, 28 St. Tr. 529: R. v. Vint, 27 Id. 627); obstructing public officers in the execution of their duties; obstructing the King's officers in the collection, etc., of the revenues; bribery at parliamentary elections (R. v. Leatham, 8 Cox, 425, 498: R. v. Charlesworth, 1 B. & S. 460); bribery, corrupt or oppressive conduct or neglect of duty by magistrates and public officials (R. v. Pinney, 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 11); or misconduct by public officials outside Great Britain. See 11 W. 3, c. 12; 42 G. 3, c. 85: R. v. Shawe, 5 M. & Sel. 403; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 85. In R. v. Brown, Q. B. Feb. 1858; 7 Cox, 442; sub nom. R. v. Esdaile, 1 F. & F. 213, informations ex officio were filed against directors of a banking company, for a conspiracy to defraud the shareholders by false reports of the pecuniary condition of the bank and otherwise. In R. v. Parnell, 14 Cox, 505, an ex officio information was laid in Ireland for conspiracy to commit an offence against the State. Ex officio informations are now rarely filed in England. The latest was R. v. Cate & Tarry, 9 July, 1887, for a libel imputing corruptibility to the Middlesex Justices. See Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 151, 169.

Form.]—Under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 8 (3), the provisions of that Act applying to indictments apply to criminal informations in the High Court with such modifications as may be made by rules under the Act. By rules dated 23rd May, 1916, rule 1 (5) of the Rules in the Schedule to the Indictments Act (ante, p. 28) does not apply to criminal informations; but rule 2 and the other rules in the schedule do apply.

The form is now therefore assimilated to that of an indictment, except that the heading is as follows :—

The King v. A. B.
In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division.
Criminal Information filed by the King's Attorney-General.
A. B. is charged with the following offence.

Statement of offence.

As in the case of an indictment. See passim.

Filing.]—This information is filed in the crown office, without any leave previously obtained of the court for that purpose; and the court will not entertain a motion by the attorney-general for a criminal information at the suit of the crown : R. v. Philipps, 3 Burr. 1564 : R. v. Phillips, 4 Burr. 2089; 1 Deacon Cr. Law, 672 n. : R. v. Magee, Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 416; nor will the court, upon the application of the defendant, restrain the attorney-general from filing an ex officio information upon the ground that a criminal information has already been granted for the same cause. R. v. Alexander, MS., E. T. 1830. But in that case, after both informations had been filed, the court stayed the criminal information until further order. See post, p. 134.

Copy to be filed.]—By rule 2 of the Indictments Rules, dated May 23, 1916, the attorney-general or any person procuring any criminal information to be exhibited, received, or filed at the crown office shall deliver to the master of the crown office a true copy thereof for each accused person, who shall on request be supplied therewith free of charge.

Quashing.]—The court will not quash an ex officio information at the instance of the prosecutor, because the attorney-general may, if he will, enter a nolle prosequi; R. v. Stratton, 1 Doug. 239; 21 St. Tr. 1046; and even upon the motion of the defendant, they will seldom quash it, but will generally put the defendant to demur, etc., see Com. Dig. Information (D. 4) : R. v. Gregory, 1 Salk. 372. After demurrer the information may be amended. R. v. Holland, 4 T. R. 457. The attorney-general is also entitled as of right to amend the information on paying costs. Att.-Gen. v. Ray, 11 M. & W. 464; and the provisions of the Indictments Act, 1915, with regard to amending indictments (ante, p. 54) apply to criminal informations. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, ss. 5, 8 (3).

Procedure.]—When the information has been filed, the defendant, after appearance, upon application to the court, is entitled to a copy of it free of expense. 60 G. 3 and 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 8; 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 13. See also rule 2 of the Indictments Rules, 1916, ante, p. 128. This provision applies also to indictments for misdemeanor prosecuted by the attorney-general (or solicitor-general) in the King's Bench Division. Id. If the attorney-general delays bringing the information to trial, the defendant cannot take it down by proviso; R. v. M'Leod, 2 East, 202; but if it is not brought to trial within twelve calendar months next after the plea of not guilty has been pleaded, the defendant may, after twenty days' notice to the attorney-general or solicitor-general, apply to the court, which may authorize the defendant to bring on the trial, and he may bring it on accordingly, unless a nolle prosequi is entered. 60 G. 3 and 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 9. See also Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, as to pleading (rr. 117—122) and procedure (rr. 32—39), for securing the speedy trial of the defendant, and his being speedily brought up for judgment, when he is in custody. The attorney-general is entitled, if he wishes, to a trial at bar; R. v. Johnson, 1 Str. 644: Paddock v. Forrester, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 557; 1 Man. & G. 583: R. v. Pinney, 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 17 n.; and to bring on the case out of its turn. Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 171. As to the venue and procedure on a trial at bar, vide ante, pp. 120, 121. At the trial the attorney-general has the right of reply, even though the defendant calls no witnesses. R. v. Marsden, M. & M. 439

Costs.]—On the trial of an ex officio information in the High Court there is no jurisdiction to give costs for or against the crown, nor to direct their payment out of local funds; 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, ss. 1, 6. As to the position of the crown with respect to costs, see Hullock, 557: R. v. Beadle, 26 L. J. (M. C.) 111: Thomas v. Pritchard [1903] 1 K. B. 209; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 23: R. v. Archbishop of Canterbury [1902] 2 K. B. 503, 572; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 932: Johnson v. R. [1904] A. C. 817, 824; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 389.

INFORMATION BY THE MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE.

What and in what cases.]—An information by the master of the crown office is a formal written suggestion of a misdemeanor committed, filed in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice at the instance of an individual, with the leave of the court, by the master of the crown office (King's coroner and attorney) without the intervention of a grand jury. The right of private prosecutors to file informations for trespass, battery, or other misdemeanors without the leave of the court was taken away by 4 W. and M. c. 18, ss. 1, 5. See R. v. Robinson, 1 W. Bl. 541.

Like the information ex officio (ante, p. 127) this kind of information lies for misdemeanor only (2 Hale, 151; 2 Hawk. c. 26, ss. 7-12), and not for treason, felony, or misprision of treason. The court has power to give leave to file a criminal information of this description for any misdemeanor whatever, but usually grants leave only in the case of gross and notorious misdemeanors, riots, batteries, libels, and other immoralities of an atrocious kind, not specially concerning the state: Ex parte Crawshay, 8 Cox, 356; nor peculiarly tending to disturb the government, for those are left to the care of the attorney-general (R. v. Harvey, 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 2 B. & C. 257; 3 D. & R. 464), but which, on account of their magnitude or pernicious example, deserve the most public animadversion. 4 Bl. Com. 309. In substance informations are granted only in cases which before the abolition of the Star Chamber went to that court as too serious for the ordinary courts, or because justice could not be obtained in them. See R. v. Sedley, 1 Sid. 168; 17 St. Tr. 155 n.; Baildon, Star Chamber Reports. In a few cases informations have been granted for non-repair of roads or bridges where the grand jury has ignored a bill of indictment. R. v. Upton St. Leonards, 10 Q. B. 827: and see Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 151 et seq. The cases in which they have been granted fall under the following heads:—

Blasphemy.]—Publishing a blasphemous libel: R. v. Richard Carlile, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1423; 3 B. & Ald. 161; or an invective upon the established religion of the country. R. v. Waddington, 1 Str. Tr. (N. S.) 1339; 1 B. & C. 26: R. v. Curl, 2 Str. 788; 17 St. Tr. 153.

Bribery and corruption.]—An attempt to bribe a privy councillor to obtain a patent of an offence under government: R. v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 2494; an attempt to bribe at an election for members to serve in parliament: R. v. Robinson, 1 W. Bl. 541: R. v. Isherwood, 2 Ld. Ken. 202: R. v. Pitt, 1 W. Bl. 380; 3 Burr. 1335; bribing persons, either by money or promises, to vote at elections of officers of corporations: R. v. Plympton, 2 Ld. Raym. 1377: R. v. Mayor of Tiverton [1723] 8 Mod. 186; bribery in the election of an alderman, who, by virtue of his office, is a justice of the peace; R. v. Steward, 2 B. & Ad. 12; attempting to bribe jurymen: R. v. Young, 2 East, 14, cit.; or clerks in public offices: R. v. Beale, 1 East, 183, cit.; endeavouring to procure the appointment of certain persons to be overseers of the poor, with a view to derive a private advantage to the party. R. v. Jolliffe, 1 East, 154 n.; 4 T. R. 285.

Immorality.]—Where a music-master, in consideration of a sum of money, assigned over his female apprentice to a gentleman under pretence of her receiving lessons from him in music, but really for the purposes of prostitution, the court upon application granted a criminal information against the gentleman, the music-teacher, and the attorney who drew up the assignment. R. v. Delaval, 3 Burr. 1434; 1 W. Bl. 410, 439: and see R. v. Sedley, 1 Sid. 168; 17 St. Tr. 155 n.

Libel.]—The court at one time used to grant criminal informations for libels reflecting on the conduct of private individuals, if attended with circumstances of aggravation. R. v. Benfield, 2 Burr. 980 : R. v. Miles, 1 Doug. 284 : R. v. Haswell, Id. 387 : R. v. Staples, Andr. 228. With the repeal of the Acts de scandalis magnatum and change in opinion and circumstances the rule established by modern decisions is that a criminal information for libel will not be granted at the suit of private persons, but only on the application of persons in a public office or position; R. v. Labouchere, 12 Q. B. D. 330; 53 L. J. (Q. B.) 362 : Ex parte Freeman Mitford, 30 T. L. R. 693; for instance, for libels reflecting on the conduct of magistrates in the execution of their duties : R. v. Waite, 1 Wils. (K. B.) 22; of conduct of the mayor of a city during his term of office; R. v. O'Brien, Cooke & Alcock (Ir. K. B.) 128; of members of parliament in the execution of their duties in parliament; R. v. Haswell, 1 Doug. 387; of persons high in office under government in the execution of their several duties; of a public body; R. v. Williams, 5 B. & Ald. 595; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1291; and the like. See R. v. Jenour, 7 Mod. 400 : R. v. Dennison, Lofft, 148 : R. v. Kinnersley, 1 W. Bl. 294, and n. : R. v. Russell, 93 L. T. 407; 21 T. L. R. 749; 69 J. P. 450.

Offences against the administration of justice.]—Informations have been granted for prejudging a criminal case by representing in a theatrical exhibition a man in the act of committing the offence. R. v. Williams, 2 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 30 : and cf. Monson v. Tussauds, Ltd. [1894] 1 Q. B. 671. And in R. v. Tibbits & Windust [1902] 1 K. B. 77 (C. C. R.) it was held to be an indictable offence to attempt to pervert the course of justice by publishing articles affecting the conduct and character of persons about to be tried. The court followed R. v. Williams, supra, and R. v. Fisher, 2 Camp. 563. So, where a defendant to an information immediately before the trial distributed handbills in the assize town, vindicating his own conduct, and reflecting on that of the prosecutor, the court, considering the handbills to have been distributed by the defendant for the purpose of influencing the jury in his favour at the trial, granted a criminal information against him. R. v. Jolliffe, 4 T. R. 285. So, the court granted a criminal information against a person for publishing the proceedings before a coroner, with comments prior to the trial, although the statement was correct, and no malicious motive shown: for such publications have a tendency improperly to influence the public mind, and particularly the jury by whom the cause is afterwards to be tried. R. v. Fleet, 1 B. & Ald. 379. See R. v. Wright, 8 T. R. 293. It is now found more expeditious in such a case to proceed for contempt of court where the proceedings affected is in one of the branches of the High Court : R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432 : R. v. Freeman's Journal [1902] 2 Ir. Rep. 82 : R. v. Davies [1906] 1 K. B. 32. But the existence of the summary remedy is no bar to proceedings by indictment or information : R. v. Tibbits, supra. Informations have also been granted for procuring a grand jury to throw out bills : Anon., Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 644, 727; for attempting to suborn witnesses in a civil suit : R. v. Phillips, Cas. (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 241; and for attempting to induce witnesses to keep out of the way : R. v. Lawley, 2 Str.

904; and also for a conspiracy to obtain a false verdict by unlawful means, viz., by getting two of the conspirators on to the jury. R. v. Opie, 1 Wms. Saund. 300 k.

An information has been granted for publishing an invective against judges and juries, with a view to bring into suspicion and contempt the administration of justice. R. v. White, 1 Camp. 359; 30 St. Tr. 1131. And where an order was made by a corporation, and entered on their books, stating that J. S. (against whom a jury had given a verdict with large damages in an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, which verdict had been confirmed in the Court of Common Pleas) was actuated by motives of public justice, etc., in preferring the indictment, the court, deeming the order to be a libel reflecting upon the administration of justice, upon application granted a criminal information against the parties concerned in making it. R. v. Watson, 2 T. R. 199. See also R. v. Gray [1900] 2 Q. B. 36.

A criminal information will not be granted for words imputing misconduct to a justice of the peace in his office, unless tending to a breach of the peace, or spoken to the magistrate when sitting as such. Ex parte Duke of Marlborough, 5 Q. B. 955; Ex parte Chapman, 4 A. & E. 773.

Misconduct by judicial officers.]—There are no modern precedents of indictments or informations against judges of a superior court of record for oppression or extortion under colour of office. See Anderson v. Gorrie [1895] 1 Q. B. 668; Mayne, Ind. Cr. L. [1896] 342. For an early precedent, see Y. B. 14 & 15 Edw. 3 (ed. Pike), Preface. An information will lie against a judge of an inferior court of record for misconduct in office. A rule for a criminal information against a county court judge, for misconduct in his office, was discharged on the ground that the applicant had made the same misconduct the subject of a memorial to the Lord Chancellor, praying for inquiry, and so had elected his remedy. R. v. Marshall, 4 E. & B. 475; 24 L. J. (Q. B.) 242; see Anon., 4 A. & E. 576 n.

The court can grant a criminal information against a justice of the peace for any illegal act committed by him from fraudulent, corrupt or vindictive motives, or for manifest illegality and oppression, or gross abuse of power, or partiality and wilful abuse of discretion, or wilful disobedience of the orders of a superior court. R. v. Wykes, Andr. 238 : R. v. Soane, Id. 272 : R. v. Cozens, 2 Doug. 426 : R. v. Jones, 1 Wils. (K. B.) 7 : cf. R. v. Newton, 1 Str. 413 : R. v. Staffordshire JJ., 1 Chit. (K. B.) 217. The following cases illustrate the occasions on which the power has been exercised :—

1. A justice acting where he had direct interest. R. v. Davis, Lofft, 62 : R. v. Whateley, 4 Man. & Ry. 431 : R. v. Hoseason, 14 East, 605, or failing without lawful excuse to return to the assizes examinations taken by him. R. v. Going, Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 563.

2. Grant or refusal of alehouse licences, from corrupt motives or resentment. R. v. Young, 1 Burr. 556, 560, 561 : R. v. Nottingham JJ., Say, 216 : R. v. Holland, 1 T. R. 692 : R. v. Davis, R. v. Williams, 3 Burr. 1317 : R. v. Hann, 3 Burr. 1716. In Boulter v. Kent Justices [1897] A. C. 556, it was held that justices sitting for the grant or renewal of liquor licences do not sit as a court: cf. R. v. Howard [1902] 2 K. B. 363 (C. A.); so that it may be doubted whether the old cases as to information are now of authority. But see R. v. Manchester JJ. [1899] 1 Q. B. 571: R. v. Nicholson [1899] 2 Q. B. 455.

3. Illegal appointment of overseers from corrupt and improper motives. R. v. Somersetshire JJ., 1 D. & R. 443: cf. R. v. Jolliffe, 1 East, 154, cit.

4. Corruptly making a false return to a mandamus. R. v. Lancashire JJ., 1 D. & R. 485.

5. Abuse of authority by an obviously improper conviction: R. v. Webster, 3 T. R. 388: R. v. Martin, Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 726: or an obviously illegal sentence: R. v. Mather, 2 Barnard (K. B.) 249; or by interfering with order of another justice: R. v. Brooke, 2 T. R. 190; or by refusing bail from improper motives: R. v. Badger, 4 Q. B. 468; 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1387; or by destroying a house on not finding the men he was searching for: Anon., Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 645; or by abusing the prosecutor in a case before him. R. v. Manley (Id.) 646.

But to induce the court to act there must be primâ facie evidence that the justice acted from corrupt motives (C. O. R. 1906, r. 37, post, p. 135), and not from mistake or ignorance of law or in bonâ fide exercise of discretion. R. v. Palmer, 2 Burr. 1162: R. v. Davie, 2 Doug. 588: R. v. Brooke, 2 T. R. 190: R. v. Jackson, 1 T. R. 653: R. v. Seton, 7 T. R. 373: R. v. Barker, 1 East, 186: R. v. Baylis, 3 Burr. 1318: R. v. Fielding, 2 Id. 719: R. v. Borron, 3 B. & Ald. 432; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1347: Ex parte Fentiman, 2 A. & E. 127. If the act complained of was done at general or quarter sessions the evidence of deliberate misconduct or corruption must be very strong. R. v. Seaford JJ., 1 W. Bl. 432: R. v. Shrewsbury JJ., 2 Barnard (K. B.) 272: R. v. Phelps, 2 Ld. Kenyon, 570: R. v. Eyres, 2 Barnard (K. B.) 250.

Misconduct by ministerial officers.]—The court will grant an information against ministerial officers, for any act of oppression, or for any illegal act committed by them in the execution of their duties, from corrupt, vindictive, or other improper motives; but not where they act from ignorance or mistake merely. R. v. Friar, 1 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 702. Informations have been granted against overseers for forcing a pauper to marry another pauper then pregnant with a bastard; R. v. Tarrant, 4 Burr. 2106; for a conspiracy by parish officers to marry persons settled in different parishes; R. v. Compton, Cald. 246: R. v. Herbert, 2 Ld. Ken. 466; and for procuring one to marry an idiot chargeable to the parish; R. v. Watson, 1 Wils. (K. B.) 41; but it has long been settled practice to refuse informations in such cases, and to leave the applicant to seek his remedy by indictment: see Cald. 447 n. (a); 2 Nolan, 262.

The court has granted a criminal information against a person for refusing to take upon himself the office of sheriff, because the vacancy of the office occasioned an interruption of public justice, and the year would be nearly expired before an indictment could be brought to trial. R. v. Woodrow, 2 T. R. 731. See R. v. Grosvenor, 2 Str. 1193; 1 Wils. (K. B.) 18: R. v. Shacklington, Andr. 201 n.

Discretion of the court.]—The grant of the information is in the discretion of the court, and is not of right nor ex debito justitiæ, as the remedy is extraordinary and is alternative to proceedings by indictment. In the exercise of this discretion the court has refused to grant a criminal information for an illegal act committed by a person under a bonâ fide conviction that he was merely exercising a legal right; R. v. Parkyns, 3 B. & Ald. 668; and where the application was made against a poor man residing at a distance, to whom it would be very inconvenient, if not impossible, to show cause against the rule, or to appear afterwards to receive judgment if convicted. See R. v. Compton, Cald. 246 : Cf. Lofft, 155. The court has refused it also against the members of a corporation, for a misapplication of the corporation funds, it being rather a subject for an application in the Chancery Division. R. v. Watson, 2 T. R. 199. The court has also refused to grant it where the applicant himself was not free from imputation; Lofft, 314; or had already taken civil proceedings; Anon., 4 A. & E. 576 n.; or had, before applying for the rule, entered into a correspondence with the person sought to be made defendant. Ex parte Haviland, 44 J. P. 789. So, where an application was made for a criminal information on a charge of raising great sums by subscription for trading purposes, as being one of those schemes denounced by 6 G. 1, c. 18, s. 18 (rep.), the court refused to grant it, as the statute had not been acted upon for a great length of time, and was now sought to be enforced by a private relator, who seemed not to have been deluded by the project, but to have subscribed with a view to an application to the court. R. v. Dodd, 9 East, 516. See R. v. Webb, 14 East, 406. Informations have been granted for sending a challenge to fight a duel. R. v. Younghusband, 4 N. & M. 850 : R. v. Holmes, Rowe (Ir. K. B.) 239 : R. v. Rowe, Id., 288, 418 : R. v. Harman, Id., 441 : R. v. Staunton, 1 Ir. Law Rec. (O. S.) 7 : R. v. Maunsell [1839] 1 Ir. Law Rec. 257 : Armstrong v. Kiernan, 7 Cox, 6 (Ir). But an information for a challenge has been refused, when it appeared that the party applying had previously written letters to the other, provoking him to fight; but the court said that, if both parties had applied for informations, they would have granted them. R. v. Hankey, 1 Burr. 316. And an information has been refused, where the application was made by notorious gamesters against other gamesters, for a conspiracy to cheat them at a race. R. v. Peach, 1 Burr. 548. Even in cases which would warrant an information, if the court think it will be sufficient punishment for the defendant to pay the costs already incurred by the prosecutor, they will discharge the rule nisi upon these terms, if acceded to by the defendant. R. v. Morgan, 1 Doug. 314 : R. v. Cozens, 2 Doug. 426.

When and how to be moved for, etc.]—"No application shall be made for a criminal information against a justice of the peace for misconduct in his magisterial capacity unless a notice containing a distinct statement of the grievances, or acts of misconduct complained of, be served personally upon him, or left at his residence with some member of his household, six days before the time named in it for making the application." Crown Office Rules, 1906, r. 36. This rule perpetuates what had been the established practice both in England and Ireland. R. v. Heming, 5 B. & Ad. 666; 3 L. J. (M. C.) 3: R. v. Rae, Ir. Rep. 8 C. L. 524.

"The application for a criminal information shall be made to a Divisional Court by a motion for an order nisi, within a reasonable time after the offence complained of, and if the application be made against a justice of the peace for misconduct in his magisterial capacity, the applicant must depose on affidavit to his belief that the defendant was actuated by corrupt motives, and further, if for an unjust conviction, that the defendant is innocent of the charge." R. 37. The first part of this rule adopts the practice as laid down in R. v. Harries, 13 East, 270: R. v. Marshall, 13 East, 322: R. v. Smith, 7 T. R. 80: R. v. Bishop, 5 B. & Ald. 612: R. v. Saunders, 10 Q. B. 484. The motion must be founded upon an affidavit disclosing all the material facts of the case. It is a strong, although not a conclusive, reason for rejecting an application for leave to file a criminal application that the applicant does not reside in this country. R. v. Labouchere, 12 Q. B. D. 320; 53 L. J. (Q. B.) 362. If the court grants the order nisi, it is afterwards, upon showing cause, discharged or made absolute, as in ordinary cases. But the court cannot compel the prosecutor to proceed to make it absolute. R. v. Sherwood, 2 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 78. The latter part of the rule embodies the practice as stated in R. v. Saunders, 2 Cox, 249.

The motion must be made by counsel, and is not entertained if made by a private individual. R. v. Lancaster JJ., 1 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 602: Anon., 2 Ir. Law Rec. (O. S.) 479. The words "innocent of the charge" continue the practice as laid down in R. v. Athay, 2 Burr. 653: R. v. Webster, 3 T. R. 388, as to the necessity of removing or quashing the conviction before a rule will be granted: see R. v. Heber, 2 Str. 915. The abolition of the division of the legal year into terms so far as relates to the administration of justice by s. 26 of the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), appears to render it unnecessary to refer (for the purposes of r. 37) to the old division into terms in computing the time within which an application may be made for a criminal information against a magistrate for anything done in execution of his office. On the construction of that section see Re College of Christ, Brecknock, and Martin, 3 Q. B. D. 16; 46 L. J. (Q. B.) 591.

The motion must in all cases be made upon affidavits disclosing all the material facts of the case; if a material fact is suppressed or misrepresented, the court will discharge the rule: R. v. Wroughton, 3 Burr. 1683, very probably with costs against the applicant: R. v. Wroughton (supra); or perhaps, in an extreme case, against his solicitor: R. v. Anderson [1840] 2 Ir. Law Rep. 262: R. v. Thomas, 7 A. & E. 608. And, as the court is in a manner substituted for a grand jury, it will in general expect that the fact so disclosed shall amount to such evidence as would satisfy a grand jury, if an indictment was preferred for the offence. R. v. Willett, 6 T. R. 294: R. v. Williamson, 3 B. & Ald. 582. The affidavit must connect the person complained of with the offence by legal evidence. R. v. Stanger, L. R. 6 Q. B. 352; 40 L. J. (Q. B.) 96. Therefore where a rule nisi had been granted calling upon S. to show cause why an information should not be exhibited against him for publishing a libel in a newspaper, and the affidavit simply showed that copies of the newspaper had been purchased at the publishing office of the paper, that by a footnote printed at the end of the copies S. was stated to be the printer and publisher of them, and that the deponent believed that S. was the printer and publisher, the court discharged the rule on the ground that the affidavit was insufficient. Id. The question was raised, but not decided, whether, under such circumstances, recourse can be had to the affidavits used by the defendant in showing cause, to supply the defect in those for the prosecution. Id. An information may be granted upon the uncontradicted affidavit of one who was particeps criminis. R. v. Steward, 2 B. & Ad. 12. If the subject of the application is a libel upon an individual charging him with a particular offence, the court always requires the prosecutor to deny the charge upon oath, before they will grant the information; R. v. Miles, 1 Doug. 284 : R. v. Haswell, Id. 387. But it is otherwise if the charge is general or be against a public body of men; R. v. Williams, 5 B. & Ald. 595; 1 D. & R. 197; or if it relates to anything said, or supposed to have been said, by the prosecutor in parliament as a member : R. v. Haswell, 1 Doug. 387. As to the practice on such applications, see R. v. The World, 13 Cox, 305 : R. v. Labouchere, 12 Q. B. D. 320. Where a criminal information was applied for against a magistrate, for improperly convicting a person, the court refused to grant it, unless the party complaining would make an exculpatory affidavit denying the charge. R. v. Webster, 3 T. R. 388. The affidavit upon which the order nisi is moved for must not be intituled in any cause. R. v. Harrison, 6 T. R. 60 : R. v. Robinson, Id. 642, cit.; but must be intituled, " In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division : " and see also R. v. Jones, 2 Str. 704 : King (qui tam) v. Cole, 6 T. R. 642; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 162.

If it is intended to file a joint information against several persons, the application should be joint against all in the first instance : for, where distinct rules were obtained against five persons severally, and one information thereupon filed against them jointly, the court, upon application, set aside the proceedings. R. v. Heydon, 3 Burr. 1270.

Proceedings for a criminal information once instituted cannot be withdrawn or compromised without the sanction of the Court. R. v. Newton, 67 J. P. 453.

A rule for a criminal information was granted, and discharged upon an affidavit of the truth of the charge; subsequently it was discovered that the affidavit in answer to the rule was false, and the court granted another rule, which was made absolute. R. v. Eve, 5 A. & E. 780.

The Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64, s. 8), forbids prosecution by indictment of libels in registered newspapers without the leave of a judge of the High Court; see Ex parte Pulbrook [1892] 1 Q. B. 86; 61 L. J. (M. C.) 91. That Act repealed s. 3 of the Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 60), which did not prevent proceedings by criminal information. R. v. Yates, 11 Q. B. D. 750; 52 L. J. (Q. B.) 778 : Yates v. R., 14 Q. B. D. 648; 54 L. J. (Q. B.) 258. It has been assumed, but has not been decided, that s. 8 of the Act of 1888 does not bar proceedings by criminal information. Odgers on Libel (4th ed.) 663.

Form.]—Under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 8 (3)), the provisions of that Act shall apply to criminal information in the High Court and to any plea, replication or other criminal pleading, with such modifications as may be made by rules under the Act. By rules made May 23, 1916, rule 1 (5) in the first schedule to the Act is not to apply to criminal information in the High Court, but rule 2 is made to apply with the substitution of "Criminal Information filed by the King's Coroner and Attorney" for "Presentment of the Grand Jury." And by rule 5 of the rules dated May 23, 1916, the other rules relating to indictments are to apply to criminal informations and to any plea, replication, or other pleading relating thereto. The form, therefore, is now:

In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division.
Criminal information filed by the King's Coroner and Attorney.
A. B. is charged with the following offence.

Statement of offence.

As in the case of an indictment. See passim.

Filing, etc.]—After the court has made the rule absolute, the information may be filed at the crown office, upon the prosecutor's entering into the usual recognizances for costs. "With the exception of ex officio informations filed by the attorney-general on behalf of the crown no criminal information . . . shall be exhibited, received, or filed at the Crown Office Department without express order of the King's Bench Division in open court, nor shall any process be issued upon any information other than an ex officio information, until the person procuring such information to be exhibited shall have filed at the Crown Office Department a recognizance in the penalty of 50*l.* effectually to prosecute such information and to abide and observe such orders as the court shall direct, such recognizance to be entered into before the King's coroner and attorney or the master of the Crown Office, or a justice of the peace of the county, borough, or place in which the cause may have arisen." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 35. See form of recognizance, App. to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Form 27.

Appearance and pleading.]—When the information is filed, process issues to compel the appearance of the defendant, if an appearance be not already entered for him. He then either pleads to it, or applies to quash it; and on issue joined, the proceedings are brought on to trial. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 167; Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 35-39, 79, 83, 84. "If the prosecutor on any information not ex officio does not proceed to trial within a year after issue joined, or if the prosecutor causes a nolle prosequi to be entered, or if the defendant be acquitted (unless the judge at the time of trial certifies that there was reasonable cause for the information), the court, on motion for the same, may award the defendant his costs to the amount of the recognizance entered into by the prosecutor on filing the information." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 38. See also rr. 33, 34, for securing the speedy trial of the defendant, and his being speedily brought up for judgment, when in custody.

In what cases quashed or stayed.]—The court will very seldom quash an information filed by the master of the crown office; indeed, in some of the books it is laid down that they will not quash it in any case. See R. v. Nixon, 1 Str. 185 : R. v. Fountain, 1 Sid. 152. They have, however, interfered in this manner in a very few cases, under peculiar circumstances. See R. v. Roper, 2 Str. 1072 : R. v. Williams, 1 Burr. 385. If quashed on the motion of the prosecutor, it must be upon payment by him of the defendant's costs, at least to the extent of the recognizance. (See ante, p. 99.) Where a criminal information had been granted, and the attorney-general afterwards, for the same cause, filed an information ex officio, the court stayed the former until further order. R. v. Alexander, MS., E. T. 1830. It seems to have been laid down as a rule of practice of the court, that a person who applies for a criminal information must waive his right of action in that court for the same cause, unless the court should, on hearing the whole matter, be of opinion that it was a proper subject to be tried in a civil action, and should specifically give him leave to do so; and it was said that, if an information was granted, it was of course to stay the proceedings in an action for the same cause. R. v. Sparrow, 2 T. R. 198. And in R. v. Mahon [1836] 4 A. & E. 575, the court refused to pass sentence in a conviction for assault by the O'Gorman Mahon while a civil action was pending for the assault. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed) 152. However, where a rule for a criminal information for a libel was discharged on cause shown, this was held not to preclude the applicant from bringing an action in another court for the publication of the same libel. Wakley v. Cooke, 16 M. & W. 822; 16 L. J. (Ex.) 225.

Appeal.]—On conviction on a criminal information for an indictable offence an appeal lies to the Court of Criminal Appeal; 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 20 (2).

Costs.]—At common law the defendant upon acquittal is not entitled to any costs beyond the extent of the recognizance. R. v. Filewood, 2 T. R. 145 : see R. v. Brooke, 2 Id. 190. See also R. v. Savile, 18 Q. B. 703, and Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 38, ante, p. 137. In cases of informations for libel a more extensive remedy for costs was given by the Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 8), which enacted, that in case of any indictment or information by a private prosecutor for the publication of any defamatory libel, if judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to recover from the prosecutor the costs sustained by the defendant by reason of such indictment or information; and upon a special plea of justification to such indictment or information, if the issue be found for the prosecutor, he shall be entitled to recover from the defendant the costs sustained by the prosecutor by reason of such plea, such costs so to be recovered by the defendant or prosecutor respectively to be taxed by the proper officer of the court before which the said indictment or information is tried. Under this section it was held, that, on a criminal information for libel, the defendant, having recovered judgment, was entitled to costs, though the only plea on the record was not guilty, and though the judge had certified, under 4 W. & M. c. 18, s. 2 (rep.), that there was reasonable cause for exhibiting the information : R. v. Latimer, 15 Q. B. 1077; 20 L. J. (Q. B.) 129; and that where, on such an information, judgment was given for the defendant, he was entitled to costs incurred previously to the filing of the information, as well as to costs incurred subsequently to the filing of the information. R. v. Steel, 1 Q. B. D. 482; 45 L. J. (Q. B.) 391. The provisions of s. 8 were embodied in Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 39; but s. 8 was repealed as to England by s. 10 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 15). The part as to acquittal is re-enacted by s. 6 (2) of that Act, but that as to conviction after plea of justification is replaced by a more general provision in s. 6 (1). Section 6 applies to prosecutions on criminal information as well as to prosecutions on indictment; vide post, pp. 284 et seq.

CHAPTER III.

CORONER'S INQUISITION.

CORONERS are ancient officers of the common law: so called because they deal principally with the pleas of The Crown, and were of old time the principal conservators of the peace within their county: 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 1; Stephen, 1 Hist. Cr. L. 217; Seld. Soc. Publ. vol. 9.

Coroner's inquisition as a mode of criminal prosecutions.]—The finding of a coroner's inquest is equivalent to the finding of a grand jury; and a defendant may be prosecuted for murder or manslaughter upon such inquisition, which is the record of the finding of a jury sworn to inquire concerning the death of the deceased, super visum corporis. Such an inquisition amounts to an indictment (R. v. Ingham, 5 B. & S. 257; 33 L. J. (Q. B.) 183), and by Coke, and the older law-writers, is frequently designated by that name, and a defendant is arraigned upon it in the same way as upon an indictment, and may plead, or take exception to it precisely as if it had been found by a grand jury, and he may be tried and sentenced on such inquisition. Re Ward, 30 L. J. Ch. 775, 776, Lord Campbell. It is the practice at assizes, where a prisoner stands charged upon a coroner's inquisition with murder or manslaughter, in order to guard against any failure of justice, also to prefer a bill of indictment for the same offence before the grand jury. It is usual when a bill of indictment for the offence charged in the inquisition has been ignored, to offer no evidence on the coroner's inquisition, but it is occasionally found convenient to proceed on the inquisition, and cases have occurred when this was done and the defendant was convicted. If a true bill is found the defendant is arraigned on both the indictment and the inquisition at the same time; 1 East, P. C. 371. If the bill is ignored the defendant must still be arraigned on the inquisition. Where a defendant is arraigned and tried upon one only and acquitted he must afterwards be arraigned upon the other; to which, however, he may effectually plead autrefois acquit. 2 Hale, 246; 4 Bl. Com. 301; 1 Chitty Cr. L. (2nd ed.) 163: R. v. Cole, 3 Camp. 371; 2 Leach, 1095: R. v. Maynard, R. & R. 240.

Authority and duty of coroner in holding inquests in cases of murder and manslaughter.]—The duty of a coroner, in cases "where any be slain or suddenly dead," was pointed out with great particularity by the statute 4 Edw. 1 (De Officio Coronatoris), which is said to have been merely declaratory, and in affirmance of the common law. (See Seld. Soc. Publ. vol. 9, p. xiv. et seq.) That statute was repealed by s. 45 of the Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict.

c. 71), a consolidating Act. Section 3 of the latter statute provides that " where a coroner is informed that the dead body of a person is lying within his jurisdiction, and there is reasonable cause to suspect that such person has died either a violent or an unnatural death, or has died a sudden death of which the cause is unknown (see Re Hull, 9 Q. B. D. 689), or that such person has died in prison (R. v. Robinson, 19 Q. B. D. 322), or in such place or under such circumstances as to require an inquest in pursuance of any Act, the coroner, whether the cause of death arose within his jurisdiction or not, shall, as soon as practicable, issue his warrant for summoning not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three good and lawful men to appear before him at a specified time and place, there to inquire as jurors, touching the death of such person as aforesaid " (sub-s. 1).

Upon the statute 4 Edw. 1. (De Officio Coronatoris), it was held that a coroner was bound to take his inquest upon view of the dead body, and that an inquest otherwise taken is void; R. v. Ferrand, 3 B. & Ald. 260; and it is still the law that the coroner and jury shall, at the first sitting of the inquest, view the body. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 1 (post, p. 143). It was also held under the old statute that a coroner might inquire as well respecting accessories before the fact to a murder or manslaughter, or respecting a principal in the second degree, aiding and abetting a murder or manslaughter, as concerning the actual murderer or slayer; but that he had no power to inquire concerning accessories after the fact; and the same rule appears to continue under 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 3 of which enacts that the inquisition shall in cases of murder or manslaughter set forth " the persons, if any, whom the jury find to have been guilty of such murder or manslaughter, or of being accessories before the fact to such murder." It was held before the passing of the Coroners Act, 1887, that if the dead body, whereon an inquest ought to be held, be interred, or suffered to putrefy before the coroner viewed it, the township, or, if the death occurred in a prison, the gaoler should be amerced; and that it was a misdemeanor to burn or otherwise dispose of a dead body, upon which an inquest ought to be held, with intent to prevent the coroner from holding the inquest (see R. v. Price, 12 Q. B. D. 247; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 51 : R. v. Stephenson, 13 Q. B. D. 331; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 176; Cremation Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 8), s. 10); or in any other way to obstruct the coroner or his jury in the view or inquiry; Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 6, 86. The ratio decidendi of these cases will apply to similar cases arising since the passing of the Act. The coroner himself may be indicted for misdemeanor if guilty of corruption or wilful neglect of duty or of misbehaviour in abstaining from holding an inquest where it is his duty to do so. See 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 8, sub-s. 2. On the other hand, the holding of inquests unnecessarily was most strongly censured by Lord Ellenborough in R. v. Kent JJ., 11 East, 229. The coroner has not an absolute right to hold inquests in every case in which he chooses to do so. It would be intolerable if he had power to intrude without adequate cause upon the privacy of a family in distress, and to interfere with their arrangements for a funeral. Nothing can justify such interference except a reasonable suspicion that there may have been something peculiar in the death,—that it may have been due to other causes than common illness. In such cases the coroner not only may, but ought to hold an inquest. R. v. Price, 12 Q. B. D. 247, 248, Stephen, J. And a coroner is justified in holding an inquest if he honestly believes in the truth of information given to him which, if true, would make it his duty to hold such inquest. R. v. Stephenson, 13 Q. B. D. 331. A coroner, also, may lawfully, within a reasonable time after the death, order a dead body to be disinterred in order to view it, not only for the purpose of taking an inquest where none has been held before, but of taking a good inquest where an insufficient one has been taken before. Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 27. For, where the first inquest was not held super visum corporis, or is afterwards quashed by the High Court (K. B. D.), the coroner may hold another. 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 23; 2 Hale, 58 : Anon., 1 Str. 533. But where an inquest has been held super visum corporis, and a verdict recorded, the coroner cannot, mero motu, hold a second inquest. 2 Hale, 59 : R. v. White, 3 E. & E. 137; 29 L. J. (Q. B.) 257 : and see R. v. Coulson, 55 J. P. 202. Where a coroner rejected evidence which he ought to have admitted and the jury returned an open verdict the inquisition was quashed by the Q. B. D., and a melius inquirendum awarded before the same coroner and another jury. R. v. Carter, 13 Cox, 220. By s. 6 of the Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), "where his Majesty's High Court of Justice, upon application made by or under the authority of the attorney-general, is satisfied either (a) that a coroner refuses or neglects to hold an inquest which ought to be held; or (b) where an inquest has been held by a coroner that by reason of fraud, rejection of evidence, irregularity of proceedings, insufficiency of inquiry or otherwise, it is necessary or desirable, in the interests of justice, that another inquest should be held, the court may order an inquest to be held touching the said death . . . and where an inquest has been already held may quash the inquisition on that inquest." That section also makes provisions as to the costs of the application, the coroner before whom the inquest provided for by it is to be held, and the proceedings at such inquest. See Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 54. R. v. Wood, 73 J. P. 40. Having regard to the terms of s. 6, it seems doubtful whether if a coroner neglects to take an inquisition, it can now be taken by the justices of gaol delivery, of oyer and terminer, or of the peace, as stated in Bac. Abr. Coroner; 2 Hark. c. 9, s. 23 (5) et seq.

In view of the powers given to the secretary of state to license exhumation (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81, s. 25), and the terms of s. 6 of the Coroners Act, 1887, it has been doubted whether a coroner has now the power, proprio motu, to order exhumation. See Brooke Little on Burials. The form of order in Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 247, is not a statutory form. The coroner has also a duty to hold inquests on all prisoners dying in a prison (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 3 : R. v. Graham [1905] 69 J. P. 324 : R. v. Robinson, 19 Q. B. D. 322); including persons executed under sentence of a court of justice (31 & 32 Vict. c. 24, s. 5; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 1, s. 3; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 64, s. 2); on lunatics dying in his district if he considers there is any reasonable ground of suspicion (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5, ss. 84, 319); and on the bodies of infants nursed for hire, unless a satisfactory medical certificate of the cause of death is available (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 6).

Proceedings at the inquest.]—"When not less than twelve jurors are assembled they shall be sworn by or before the coroner diligently to inquire touching the death of the person on whose body the inquest is about to be held, and a true verdict to give according to the evidence." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 3, sub-s. 3. Though the jury cannot consist of less than twelve persons, it may consist of any greater number not exceeding twenty-three. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 3, sub-s. 1 (ante, p. 141). "The coroner and jury shall, at the first sitting of the inquest, view the body, and the coroner shall examine on oath touching the death all persons who tender their evidence respecting the facts, and all persons having knowledge of the facts whom he thinks it expedient to examine." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 1. The coroner has power to require and compel the attendance of such witnesses as he deems necessary for the investigation of the truth of each case, and may fine them for non-attendance or for refusing to answer questions. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 19, sub-s. 2. The Act of 1887, s. 4, sub-s. 1 (supra), requires that the evidence at the inquest shall be given upon oath. This leaves the law as it stood before 1887. Wakley v. Cooke, 4 Ex. 511; 19 L. J. (Ex.) 91: Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.). But the fact that evidence not upon oath was received by the coroner is no ground for a certiorari to bring up the inquisition. R. v. Ingham, 5 B. & S. 257; 9 Cox, 508. It might, however, furnish ground for an application to the High Court of Justice for an order for another inquest under 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 6, supra. "Where it appears to the coroner that the deceased was attended at his death or during his last illness by any legally qualified medical practitioner, the coroner may summon such practitioner as witness; but if it appears to the coroner that the deceased person was not attended at his death or during his last illness by any legally qualified medical practitioner, the coroner may summon any legally qualified medical practitioner who is at the time in actual practice in or near the place where the death happened, and any such medical witness as is summoned in pursuance of this section, may be asked to give evidence as to how, in his opinion, the deceased came to his death." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 21, sub-s. 1. "The coroner may, either in his summons for the attendance of such medical witness or at any time between the issuing of that summons and the end of the inquest, direct such medical witness to make a post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased with or without an analysis of the contents of the stomach or intestines. Provided that where a person states upon oath before the coroner, that in his belief the death of the deceased was caused partly or entirely by the improper or negligent treatment of a medical practitioner or other person, such medical practitioner or other person shall not be allowed to perform or assist at the post-mortem examination of the deceased." Id. sub-s. 2. "If a majority of the jury sitting at an inquest are of opinion that the cause of death has not been satisfactorily explained by the evidence of the medical practitioner or other witnesses brought before them, they may require the coroner in writing to summon as a witness some other legally qualified medical practitioner named by them, and further to direct a post-mortem examination of the deceased, with or without an analysis of the contents of the stomach or intestines, to be made by such last mentioned practitioner, and that whether such examination has been previously made or not, and the coroner shall comply with such requisition, and in default shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Id. sub-s. 3.

"It shall be the duty of the coroner in a case of murder or manslaughter to put into writing the statement on oath of those who know the facts and circumstances of the case, or so much of such statement as is material, and any such deposition shall be signed by the witness and also by the coroner." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 2. [As to the admissibility in evidence of depositions taken before coroners, see post, p. 148.]

As to summing up by the coroner, see Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 40.

"After viewing the body and hearing the evidence the jury shall give their verdict, and certify it by an inquisition in writing, setting forth, so far as such particulars have been proved to them, who the deceased was, and how, when, and where the deceased came by his death, and if he came by his death by murder or manslaughter, the persons, if any, whom the jury find to have been guilty of such murder or manslaughter, or of being accessories before the fact to such murder." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 3. If twelve at least of the jury do not agree on a verdict, the coroner may adjourn the inquest to the next assizes for the county or place for which the inquest is held, and if after hearing the charge of the judge or commissioner of assize twelve of the jury fail to agree on a verdict they may be discharged without a verdict. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 5 : Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 44.

Requisites and form of inquisition in cases of murder and manslaughter.]—The form of an inquisition is contained in the second schedule of 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, and by sect. 37 of that Act :—"the schedules to this Act shall be construed and have effect as part of this Act, and the forms given in any of those schedules, or such other forms as the Lord Chancellor from time to time directs may be used in all matters to which they apply, and when so used shall be sufficient in law." "The inquisition shall be under the hands, and in the case of murder or manslaughter also under the seals, of the jurors who concur in the verdict, and of the coroner." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 18, sub-s. 1.

By the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 8 (3)), the provisions of that Act shall apply to . . . inquisitions . . . with such modifications as may be made by rules under the Act. By rules dated May 23, 1916, rule 3 (1) : Rule 1 (5) and rule 2 in the First Schedule to the Act shall not apply to coroners' inquisitions. By rule 3 (2) : In coroners' inquisitions the form of inquisition provided by the Coroners Act, 1887, may be used with such alterations as may be made under that Act, but any offence charged thereon shall be stated in accordance with the form of indictment relating thereto prescribed by the Indictments Rules, 1915-1916. By rule 5 : Except as in these rules otherwise provided, the Indictments Rules, 1915-1916, relating to indictments shall apply to . . . inquisitions.

"An inquisition need not be on parchment, and may be written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, and may be in the form contained in the second schedule to this Act, or to the like effect, or in such other form as the Lord Chancellor from time to time prescribes, or to the like effect, and the statements therein may be made in concise and ordinary language." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 18 (2). Formerly an inquisition in the case of murder or manslaughter had to be on parchment, but this is now repealed by the Indictments Act, 1915. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 8 (3). An inquisition consists of three parts—the caption or incipitur, the verdict of the jury, and the attestation.

Venue.]—The venue should be in the county or jurisdiction within which the inquisition is holden. See ante, pp. 28 et seq. To avoid difficulty in cases where the cause of death arose within one county or jurisdiction, and the body was lying dead within another county or jurisdiction, the Act of 1887 provides that "the coroner only within whose jurisdiction the body of a person upon whose death an inquest ought to be holden is lying shall hold the inquest, and where a body is found dead in the sea, or any creek, river, or navigable canal within the flowing of the sea where there is no deputy coroner for the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, the inquest shall be held only by the coroner having jurisdiction in the place where the body is first brought to land;" s. 7, sub-s. 1; and "for the purpose of holding coroners' inquests, every detached part of a county shall be deemed to be within the county by which it is wholly surrounded, or, where it is partly surrounded by two or more counties within the county with which it has the longest common boundary." Sec. 40, sub-s. 1.

Verdict.]—The inquisition must show of what place the person who took it was coroner, and that he had competent jurisdiction. 2 Ld. Raym. 1305. It is essential that the inquest shall be taken upon view of the body (2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 23), for the coroner can take an inquisition super visum corporis only (excepting where the inquest is ordered by the High Court of Justice, ante, p 142), the view being absolutely necessary to give him jurisdiction. (R. v. Ferrand, ante, p. 141). If the body of the deceased is identified, and his christian name and surname is known, or the name by which he was usually known is ascertained, they ought to be correctly stated; but the provisions of the Indictments Act, 1915, relating to descriptions in indictments apply to inquisitions. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 8 (3); see ante, pp. 47 et seq. It is essential to every inquisition that it be found by twelve jurors at the least; 2 Hale, 161 n.; 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 5.

Attestation.]—The names of the jurors ought to be inserted in the body of the inquisition, and the inquisition ought to be subscribed by them with their names. R. v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247. It was held in the last-mentioned case that the jurors ought to subscribe their names in full. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 18, sub-s. 1 (ante, p. 144) merely directs that the inquisition shall be under their hands, and in the case of murder or manslaughter also under their seals. See 2 Co. Inst. 388. Where the inquisition is taken before a deputy coroner, the proper mode of signing the attestation is "R. D. (L.S.), coroner, by E. M. his deputy duly appointed," etc. R. v. Perkins, 7 Q. B. 165; 14 L. J. (M. C.) 87. As to the jurisdiction of deputy coroners, and the mode of proving it, see 55 & 56 Vict. c. 56, s. 1. When the inquest takes place in a county other than that in which the offence is charged by the inquisition, the inquisition should be returned to the court of assize for the county in which the offence is charged. R. v. Wight, 59 J. P. 746.

Process upon a coroner's inquisition.]—"Where a coroner's inquisition charges a person with the offence of murder or manslaughter, or of being accessory before the fact to a murder (which latter offence is in this Act included in the expression 'murder'), the coroner shall issue his warrant for arresting or detaining such person (if such warrant has not previously been issued) and shall bind by recognizance all such persons examined before him as know or declare anything material touching the said offence, to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery at which the trial is to be, then and there to prosecute or give evidence against the person so charged." 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 5, sub-s. 1. For form of recognizances to prosecute and give evidence, Id. Sched. 2. "The coroner shall deliver the inquisition, depositions, and recognizances, with a certificate under his hand that the same have been taken before him, to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, before or at the opening of the court." Id. s. 5, sub-s. 3. By Home Office circular of May, 1891, coroners are requested to see that the depositions are legibly written and accompanied by all exhibits. If the coroner does not take them properly, and return them to the proper court or person, he is liable to fine under 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 9. When an inquisition is returned to the justices of oyer and terminer, or of gaol delivery, if the person against whom the coroner's jury have found their verdict of guilty has been taken, he is tried before them; but if he cannot be taken, the inquisition is to be certified by them into the King's Bench Division, and process may then be awarded as upon an indictment. See ante, p. 78; 2 Hale, 64; 1 Chitty Cr. L. 163; and for all the forms of proceeding upon inquests, see Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) and Sched. 2 of 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71.

Person charged with murder or manslaughter entitled to copy of inquisition and of depositions.]—By the Indictments Rules, 1916, dated May 23, 1916, rule 4: It shall be the duty of the clerk of assize to supply on request free of charge to a person committed for trial on a coroner's inquisition a copy of so much of the inquisition as charges him with an offence, and the cost of such copy shall be treated as part of the costs of the prosecution for the purpose of section 1 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908. The Coroners Act, 1887, s. 18 (5), provides for copies of the inquisition and depositions at a charge not exceeding three halfpence for every folio of ninety words.

This has not been repealed by the Indictments Act, 1915; but, so far as the inquisition is concerned, is practically superseded by rule 4 of the Indictments Rules, supra.

By the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, s. 1 (3), post, p. 268, where a prisoner has obtained a certificate for legal aid under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903, the costs which may be directed to be paid out of local funds include the costs of a copy of the depositions.

Depositions to be sent to Director of Public Prosecutions.]—Where a prosecution for murder or manslaughter is undertaken by the Director of Public Prosecutions, the coroner must send the inquisition and depositions to that officer. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22, s. 5. By the Regulations of Jan. 25, 1886, under the Prosecution of Offences Acts, 1879, 1884 and 1908 (see Douglas Summ. Jur. Proc. (9th ed.); Stat. Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 4, tit. Criminal Procedure, England, p. 7), it is the duty of the Director of Public Prosecutions to take up charges of murder, and it has been the practice, since the issue of a Home Office circular of September, 1884, for the coroner to send to that officer copies of depositions taken on inquisitions of murder or manslaughter. See Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 52.

Bail where the coroner has committed a person to prison.]—The provisions as to bail contained in the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), and the Bail Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 7), ante, pp. 87 et seq., do not apply to cases of commitment upon an inquisition by the warrant of a coroner; but by 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 5, sub-s. 2, "Where the offence is manslaughter, the coroner may, if he thinks fit, accept bail by recognizance with sufficient sureties for the appearance of the person charged at the next court of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery at which the trial is to be, and thereupon such person if in the custody of an officer of the coroner's court or under a warrant of commitment issued by such coroner, shall be discharged therefrom." As to the form of such recognizances, and the notices to be given to the persons bound thereby, see Id. s. 18, sub-s. 4, and Sched. 2. Where the jury find a verdict of murder, or where the coroner refuses bail, the High Court (K. B. D.) can grant bail. The procedure is the same as in other cases of bail. It is now usual to proceed by summons for bail, and not by writ of habeas corpus and certiorari. See ante, p. 93.

Trial of Inquisition.]—On the trial of an inquisition, the court has the same powers of amendment as in the case of the trial of an indictment. See 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, ss. 5, 8 (3), (ante, pp. 54, 144). And by s. 20 of 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71,—"If in the opinion of the court having cognizance of the case an inquisition find sufficiently the matters required to be found thereby, and where it charges a person with murder or manslaughter sufficiently designates that person and the offence charged, the inquisition shall not be quashed for any defects, and the court may order the proper officer of the court to amend any defect in the inquisition, and any variance occurring between the inquisition and the evidence offered in proof thereof, if the court are of opinion that such defect or variance is not material to the merits of the case, and that the defendant or person traversing the inquisition cannot be prejudiced by the amendment in his defence or traverse on the merits, and the court may order the amendment on such terms as to postponing the trial to be had before the same or another jury as to the court may seem reasonable, and after the amendment the trial shall proceed in like manner, and the inquisition, verdict, and judgment, shall be of the same effect, and the record shall be drawn up in the same form, in all respects, as if the inquisition had originally been in the form in which it stands when so amended." The jurisdiction to amend belongs only to the court of trial, R. v. Directors of G.W.R., 24 Q. B. D. 410; 16 Cox, 410. If the inquisition is defective it may be brought up with the depositions by certiorari to the King's Bench Division of the High Court and quashed; R. v. Clerk of Assize of Oxford Circuit [1897] 1 Q. B. 370; 18 Cox, 518: and cf. Six-mile Bridge Case, 6 Cox, 122 (Ir.). Where the defects are on the face of the inquisition the application is usually made to the court to which it is returned, and before plea pleaded. See Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.) 54, 55.

Admissibility of depositions at trial.]—Depositions taken before a coroner do not fall within 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, but are admissible at the trial if the deponent is dead, on proof that the person against whom they are tendered in evidence was present at the inquest and had opportunities afforded him for cross-examining the deponent. R. v. Cowle, 71 J. P. 172: R. v. Black, 74 J. P. 71; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2244. This rule applies only to statements in the deposition which would have been admissible on a viva voce examination of the deponent. R. v. Black, supra.

Costs.]—As to the costs of a trial on a coroner's inquisition, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, post, pp. 267 et seq.

CHAPTER IV.

PLEAS, REPLICATIONS, ETC.

SECT. 1.

ORDER AND TIME OF PLEADING.

CRIMINAL proceedings have been specially excepted from statutes changing the system of pleading (e.g., 4 & 5 Anne, c. 3; 4 Anne, c. 16, Ruffhead), and are still to a great extent subject to the common law rules of pleading; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 434. At common law no more than one plea can be pleaded to any indictment or criminal information for misdemeanor. R. v. Charlesworth, 1 B. & S. 460; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 26: R. v. Strahan, 7 Cox, 85. In felonies if the defendant pleads specially in bar, he may (R. v. Charlesworth, supra), and should in strictness, at the same time, plead over to the felony. See post, p. 160; and R. v. Drury, 3 C. & K. 196, 200; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 189.

When brought to the bar and arraigned, after any question raised as to his capacity to plead has been decided, the prisoner either confesses the charge in the indictment or some other charge of which he can lawfully be convicted on that indictment (see 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 39 (1)), or stands mute, or does not answer directly to the charge (see 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 2); or pleads to the jurisdiction—or demurs—or pleads specially in bar—or pleads the general issue, i.e., that he is "not guilty." Except under the express provisions of a statute, it is not permissible to plead double or to join any other plea with the general issue. R. v. Strahan, 7 Cox, 85. And see R. v. Banks, [1911] 2 K. B. 1095; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 120; 22 Cox, 653; 6 Cr. App. R. 276. When the defendant has pleaded "not guilty," he is not entitled afterwards, and while that plea is standing, to plead specially in bar. Id. When he has any special matter to plead in bar, or if the indictment be demurrable, he should plead, or demur at the time of arraignment, before the plea of not guilty. See R. v. Binkes, 2 Smith (K. B.) 620.

Where a defendant prosecuted in the King's Bench Division of the High Court in England or Ireland, by information or indictment, for any misdemeanor there found or removed into that court, appears in court in term time in person to answer the indictment or information, he cannot "imparle" to a following term, but must plead or demur thereto within four days from the time of his appearance; and in default of his pleading or demurring within four days, judgment may be entered against him for want of a plea. If he appears to the indictment by attorney, he cannot "imparle" to the following term, but may forthwith be ruled to plead; and a plea or demurrer may be enforced, or judgment by default entered thereupon, in the same manner as before the passing of the Act might have been done, had the defendant appeared by his attorney in the preceding term. 60 G. 3 and 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 1. But the court or a judge may, for sufficient cause, allow further time to plead or demur. 60 G. 3 and 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 2. These provisions do not apply to prosecutions for non-repair of a bridge or highway. 60 G. 3 and 1 G. 4, c. 4, s. 10; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 105.

PLEA TO THE JURISDICTION.

When available.]—Where an indictment is taken before a court which has no cognizance of the offence, the defendant may plead to the jurisdiction without answering at all to the crime alleged; 2 Hale, 268; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 437; as if a man were indicted for treason at the quarter sessions, or for a rape at the sheriff's tourn, or the like; Id.; or if another court have exclusive jurisdiction of the offence. 4 Bl. Com. 333.

But it is seldom necessary to have recourse to this plea. For it is bad unless it shows a court or jurisdiction in which the defendant could lawfully be tried. If the offence were committed out of the jurisdiction of the English courts, the defendant may take advantage of this matter under the general issue; R. v. Johnson, 6 East, 583; or if the defect of jurisdiction appears upon the face of the record, he may demur, or (it would seem) move in arrest of judgment; R. v. Hewitt, R. & R. 158; and if convicted may appeal. If, on the other hand, the offence were committed within the local jurisdiction of the court, but the court has not cognizance of it (which can occur only in the case of indictments in inferior courts, such as a court of quarter sessions), the defendant may have advantage of it upon general demurrer; R. v. Fearnley, 1 T. R. 316; 1 Leach, 425; or the High Court, upon the indictment being removed by certiorari, will quash it: R. v. Bainton, 2 Str. 1088. And the court before which the indictment is preferred will, in general, give the defendant advantage of the objection at the trial, under the general issue. In R. v. Balfour, Q. B. D. Oct. 15th, 1895, Bruce, J., it was proposed to put in a plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that the indictment contained counts for offences in respect of which the defendant had not been extradited from the Argentine Republic; but the doubtful counts were withdrawn, and the plea was not in fact pleaded. In R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 218; objections on the ground of want of jurisdiction were taken (1) on motion to quash the indictment; and (2) when this failed, under the plea of not guilty.

Form.]—By s. 8 (3) of the Indictments Act, 1915, ante, p. 144, the provisions of that Act are applied to any plea, replication, or other criminal pleading. The form of a plea to the jurisdiction is as follows:—

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

A. B. says that the court ought not to take cognizance of the indictment against him because [state in ordinary language the matter of the plea].

The form of the replication to this plea is:—

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

H. A. (the Clerk of the Court) joins issue on behalf of the King.

If a plea to the jurisdiction is quashed on demurrer or otherwise fails the defendant may be ordered to plead over instanter. R. v. Johnson, supra.

SECT. 3.

DEMURRER.

BY a demurrer to an indictment or information the defendant refers it to the court to pronounce whether, admitting the matters of fact alleged against him to be true, they do, in point of law, constitute him guilty of an offence sufficiently charged against him. 1 Starkie Cr. Pl. 315 (2nd ed.). By a demurrer to a plea the prosecutor refers it to the court to determine whether the plea is good in law. Demurrers are of two kinds: 1. Special, usually called demurrers in abatement, based on some formal defect in the indictment: these, like pleas in abatement, are obsolete, on account of the wide powers of amendment given formerly by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), and now by the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90); see ante, p. 54. 2. General, founded on some substantial defect in the indictment or last preceding pleading. And if the party pleads to the indictment, or replies to a plea in bar, it will then be too late to demur unless the court consents to withdrawal of the plea or replication.

General demurrers.]—Where there is a defect in substance apparent on the face of the indictment, the defendant may take advantage of it by general demurrer, but if he pleads over, instead of demurring or moving to quash the indictment (as to which see ante, p. 98), the defect will in numerous cases be cured by verdict; e.g., in cases within 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21, ante, p. 44. Even independently of that enactment, it is a general rule of pleading at common law—in criminal as in civil cases—that, where an averment which is necessary for the support of the pleading is imperfectly stated, and the verdict on an issue involving that averment is found, if it appears to the court after verdict that the verdict could not have been found on this issue without proof of this averment, the defective averment, which might have been bad on demurrer, is cured by the verdict. Heymann v. R., L. R. 8 Q. B. 102, 105: R. v. Goldsmith, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 74; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 94: Taylor v. R. [1895] 1 Q. B. 25; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 11. In the cases of defects in substance apparent on the face of the indictment which do not fall within one of the classes mentioned either in 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21 (ante, p. 44) or in Heymann v. R. (supra), and are therefore not cured by verdict, the defendant may, instead of demurring, plead "not guilty;" and then if convicted, move in arrest of judgment, thus giving himself the same advantage which he could have had upon demurrer, after having had a chance of an acquittal on his plea of not guilty. The usual adoption of this course in practice appears to be one of the main causes of the infrequency of demurrers in criminal practice. An additional reason for its adoption lies in the fact that points of law raised at the trial may on conviction be made the subject of appeal or case stated. R. v. Martin, 1 Den. 398; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 137. For these reasons, coupled with the wide powers of amendment in all cases of defective indictments under sub-s. 1 of s. 5 of the Indictments Act, 1915, ante, p. 54, demurrers may in practice be regarded as obsolete.

Time.]—The proper time for the defendant to demur is when arraigned and called upon to plead. But the court has a discretion to allow a plea to be withdrawn in order that the defendant may demur. Thus, in R. v. Purchase, C. & Mar. 617, where a man indicted for felony had in the absence of his counsel pleaded to a demurrable indictment, the judge, on counsel's application, allowed him to demur, before the evidence was gone into. But this would not be permitted in order to take advantage of a merely verbal objection. R. v. Odgers, 2 M. & Rob. 479, and see R. v. Brown, 1 Den. 291, 293 n. It was in some cases held that a defendant might demur and plead to the indictment at the same time. R. v. Phelps, C. & Mar. 180: R. v. Adams, Id. 299. But this was denied to be law by Cresswell, J., in R. v. Odgers (supra), and see R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 795, 853; 2 Cox, 45; Bullen & Leake Pleading (3rd ed.) 692.

Form.]—A demurrer in the High Court must be written or printed on paper and filed at the Crown Office, and a copy delivered to the opposite party, and, if settled by counsel, must be signed by him. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 117, 119. A demurrer in other courts must also be written or printed on durable paper or parchment and filed. As to demurring ore tenus, see R. v. Swan, Fost. 105; 1 Chit. Cr. L. (2nd ed.) 440. The following are forms of demurrers and joinders :—

A. B. says that the indictment is not sufficient in law and that he is not bound by law to answer it.

Effect.]—A demurrer, on the part either of the crown or of the defendant, has the effect of laying open to the court not only the pleading demurred to, but the entire record, for their judgment upon it as to the matter of law; Hob. 56; 1 Saund. 284, n. 5; and if two or more of the pleadings are bad in substance the court will give judgment against the party who committed the first fault. Thus, for instance, if the indictment is bad, there shall be judgment for the defendant, although the plea in bar is also insufficient : Piggot's case, 5 Co. Rep. 29 a. Even if it appears upon the face of the record that the court have no jurisdiction of the offence charged in the indictment, the defendant may take advantage of this matter upon the demurrer. R. v. Fearnley, 1 T. R. 316; 1 Leach, 425.

Judgment.]—The judgment for the defendant upon demurrer is, that he be dismissed and discharged from the premises. The judgment against the defendant in misdemeanors is final as on demurrer in civil cases : R. v. Taylor, 3 B. & C. 502; 5 D. & R. 422; but the court has the power to permit the defendant afterwards to plead over. R. v. Birmingham and Gloucester Rail. Co., 3 Q. B. 224; 10 L. J. (M. C.) 136 : R. v. Mitchel, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 545. Demurrers in felonies have been so rare, that it has been doubted what judgment ought to be pronounced against the defendant. The older authorities went to show it to be final; 2 Hawk. c. 31, s. 5; but by some this was questioned, and it was said that, in favorem vitæ, the defendant should plead over to the felony. Id. s. 6; 2 Hale, 255, 257; 4 Bl. Com. 334 : R. v. Taylor, 5 D. & R. 422; 3 B. & C. 502 : R. v. Gibson, 8 East, 107 : see R. v. Purchase, C. & Mar. 617 : R. v. Bowen,

1 C. & K. 501, 504. In R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 795; 4 Cox, 24, which was an indictment for a felony not capital, the judges sitting on the commission of oyer and terminer in Dublin, agreed that the defendant was entitled to plead over to the felony, after judgment against him on demurrer to the indictment. But in R. v. Fadermann, 1 Den. 569; 3 C. & K. 353, it was held that on general demurrer to an indictment for felony, the judgment for the crown was final; and see Mulcahy, v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 323 n.

SPECIAL PLEAS IN BAR.

When used.]—As all matters of excuse and justification may be given in evidence under the general issue, a special plea in bar seldom occurs in practice. In fact, the only instance (with the exception of the pleas of autrefois acquit, etc., post, pp. 155 et seq.) in which a special plea in bar seems requisite in criminal cases is, where a parish or county is indicted for not repairing a road or bridge, etc., and wishes to throw the onus of repairing upon some person or persons not bound of common right to repair it; in which case they must plead specially the liability of the party to repair, and the reason of his liability, so as to take the case out of the common law presumptions, that every highway is repairable by the parish, and every bridge by the county in which it is situate.

Form.]—The following are forms of special pleas in bar, replications, and rejoinders :—

Special Plea.

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

A. B. says that the King ought not further to prosecute the said indictment against him because [state the matter of the plea in ordinary language].

Replication.

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

H.A. (the Clerk of the Court) joins issue on behalf of the King.

When the plea is to an indictment in the King's Bench Division, the replication is similar, substituting the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, and the Master of the Crown Office, King's Coroner and Attorney for the Central Criminal Court and the Clerk of the Court.

In making up the record it is usual to add what is known as the similiter: "And the said A. B. doth the like. Therefore, let a jury come." See Stephen, Pleading (5th ed.), 271. No judgment after verdict upon any indictment can be stayed or reversed for want of a similiter. 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21; (ante, p. 44).

Having thus given the forms of special pleas, etc., generally, it remains to treat of those which usually occur in practice, in this order:—

1. Autrefois acquit, infra.
2. Autrefois convict, p. 160.
3. Autrefois attaint, p. 163.
4. Pardon, p. 164.

1. Autrefois acquit.

"It is an established rule of the common law that a man may not be put twice in peril for the same offence." 2 Hawk. c. 35.

The principle on which the right to plead autrefois acquit or autrefois convict depends, is that a man should not be put twice in jeopardy for the same matter, and it does not rest on any doctrine of estoppel. But it seems always to have been held that a previous acquittal can only be pleaded in bar to a subsequent indictment (1) where the acquittal is for the exact offence charged in the subsequent indictment; or (2) where the subsequent indictment is based on the same acts and omissions in respect of which the previous acquittal was made, and some statute directs that the defendant shall not be tried or punished twice in respect of the same acts or omissions. The statutory provisions on the subject are as follows: The Piracy Act, 1744 (18 G. 2, c. 30), directs that persons tried and acquitted or convicted for piracy, felony, and robbery under the Act shall not be liable to be tried again "for the same fact" as high treason. The Incitement to Mutiny Act, 1797 (37 G. 3, c. 70), contains a similar provision (s. 2), as do the Unlawful Oaths Acts, 1797 (37 G. 3, c. 123, s. 7) and 1812 (52 G. 3, c. 104, s. 8), and the Treason Felony Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, s. 7). The Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), provides (s. 12) that a person tried for misdemeanor shall not be entitled to acquittal because the evidence proves a felony, and shall not be tried again on the same facts for felony unless the court so directs, and s. 9, while permitting conviction of an attempt on a charge for the full offence, forbids a second trial for the attempt. By s. 33 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), it is provided that "where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts or under an Act and at common law (whether any such Act was passed before or after the commencement of this Act (January 1, 1890)) the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Acts or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence." Perhaps this enactment would have been clearer if for the word "offence" at the end had been substituted the words "act or omission." But it does no more than extend to statutory offences the common-law rule as laid down in R. v. Miles, 24 Q. B. D. 423; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 56.

If, therefore, a man has been tried and found to be not guilty of an offence by a court competent to try him, the acquittal is a bar to a second indictment for the same offence. And the rule applies not only to the offence actually charged in the first indictment, but to any offence of which he could have been properly convicted on the trial of the first indictment. Thus an acquittal on a charge of murder is a bar to a subsequent indictment for manslaughter: 2 Hale, 246; but is not a bar to an indictment for arson arising out of the same facts: R. v. Serné, 107 Cent. Crim. Ct. Sess. Pap. 418, Charles, J. It is immaterial whether the first acquittal were in a summary proceeding or on indictment: Wemyss v. Hopkins, L. R. 10 Q. B. 378; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 101. If the crimes were so distinct that the evidence necessary to prove one will not prove the other, it cannot properly be said that they were so far the same that an acquittal of one is a bar to a prosecution for the other. R. v. Vandercomb, 2 East, P. C. 519, 520; 2 Leach, 708; R. v. Barron [1914] 2 K. B. 570; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 786; 10 Cr. App. R. 81. See also R. v. Bird, 2 Den. 94; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 70 (C. C. R.): R. v. Emden, 9 East, 437: R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634: R. v. Drury, 3 C. & K. 193; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 189: R. v. Miles, 24 Q. B. D. 423; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 56; and 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1982 et seq. Whether the facts are the same in both trials is not a true test: the test is rather whether the acquittal on the first charge necessarily involves an acquittal on the second charge. R. v. Barron, supra. An acquittal of the whole of an offence does not necessarily involve an acquittal of every part of it. R. v. Salvi, 10 Cox, 481.

In R. v. Miles, 3 Cr. App. R. 13, the defendant after acquittal on an indictment for larceny was again tried on exactly the same evidence for an offence against s. 7 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112,) for being found in a public place with intent to commit a felony, and it was held that the first acquittal was no bar to the second trial.

An acquittal upon an indictment for burglary and larceny may be pleaded to an indictment for larceny of the same goods: because, upon the former indictment the defendant might have been convicted of the larceny. But if the first indictment were for a burglary, with intent to commit a larceny, and did not charge an actual larceny, an acquittal on it would not be a bar to a subsequent indictment for the larceny; 2 Hale, 246: R. v. Vandercomb, supra; because the defendant could not have been convicted of the larceny on the first indictment. But in R. v. O'Brien, 15 Cox, 29 (C. C. R.) an acquittal for larceny at common law and feloniously receiving the goods so stolen was held no bar to a subsequent indictment for stealing a fixture, framed on 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31, now repealed and replaced by the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 8). An acquittal upon an indictment for manslaughter is, it seems, a bar to an indictment for murder on the same facts: Holcroft's case, 2 Hale, 246; 3 Co. Rep. 46 b, cit.: R. v. Tancock, 13 Cox, 217. Whether a person accused of a minor offence is acquitted or convicted he may not be charged again on the same facts in a more aggravated form. R. v. Elrington, 1 B. & S. 688; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 14, Cockburn, C.J.: R. v. Miles, 24 Q. B. D. 423; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 56. But this rule does not apply when the subsequent charge is of murder or manslaughter. R. v. Morris, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 90;

36 L. J. (M. C.) 84; 10 Cox, 480: R. v. Salvi, 10 Cox, 481 n. A person cannot, after acquittal on an indictment for felony or misdemeanor, be indicted for an attempt to commit it, for he might have been convicted for the attempt on the indictment for the felony. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9. Nor can a person indicted and acquitted for robbery, afterwards be indicted for an assault with intent to rob: 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44 (1); a person indicted and acquitted for a misdemeanor, which upon the trial appears to be a felony, cannot afterwards be indicted for the felony: 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12. A person indicted and acquitted for embezzlement cannot afterwards be indicted for larceny; or if tried and acquitted for larceny, cannot afterwards be indicted for embezzlement, upon the same facts: 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44 (2). R. v. Gorbutt, Dears. & B. 166; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 47. A person indicted for stealing and acquitted cannot be afterwards indicted on the same facts for obtaining the same thing by false pretences: 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44 (3). The rules are equally applicable, though the first indictment is against the defendant jointly with others, and the second against him alone; for upon the second indictment he may be convicted of an offence committed by him separately or jointly with others; and the plea avers the identity of the offence charged in both the indictments. R. v. Dann, 1 Mood. 424. An acquittal on an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 35, for the felony of unlawfully and maliciously putting across any railway anything with intent to obstruct any engine using such railway, is no bar to a subsequent indictment upon the same facts, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 36, for the misdemeanor of unlawfully obstructing an engine using a railway. R. v. Gilmore, 15 Cox, 85, Huddleston, B. And where a conviction for unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl was quashed in a case where serious injuries were also inflicted upon her, a plea of autrefois acquit to a subsequent charge of felonious wounding was held to be bad as the facts were entirely distinct. R. v. Norton, 5 Cr. App. R. 97. So also an acquittal of sodomy is not a bar to an indictment for gross indecency as there are essential elements in the former charge which are not essential in the latter. R. v. Barron, supra. Nor is an acquittal of conspiracy to do an act a bar to an indictment for aiding and abetting the commission of the same act. R. v. Kupferberg, 13 Cr. App. R. 166.

An acquittal by a competent jurisdiction outside England is a bar to an indictment for the same offence before any tribunal in England. R. v. Roche, 1 Leach, 134; R. v. Hutchinson, 3 Keb. 785; 1 Leach, 135, cit.; Bull. (N. P.) 245. See also R. v. Aughet, 82 J. P. 174; 13 Cr. App. R. 101. But in this case the defendant should produce an exemplification of the record of his acquittal under the public seal of that state or kingdom where he has been tried and acquitted. See Beak v. Thyrwhit, 3 Mod. 194: S. C. sub nom. Beake v. Tyrrell, 1 Show. 5; Bull. (N. P.) 245: R. v. Roche, 1 Leach, 134. Even an erroneous acquittal, standing unreversed, is a sufficient foundation for this plea: Y. B. 9 H. 5, no. 2, pl. 7; 2 Co. Inst. 318, 319; 2 Hale, 247: R. v. Drury, 18 L. J. (M. C.) 39; 3 C. & K. 193. An acquittal on an indictment for non-repair of a highway binds no right. R. v. Burbon [1816] 1 Man. & G. 392: R. v. Hutchings, 6 Q. B. D. 300, 306: and see R. v. Ollis [1900] 2 Q. B. 758.

An acquittal upon an indictment in a wrong county cannot be pleaded to a subsequent indictment for the offence in another county. Com. Dig., Indictment (L.); 2 Hale, 245 : R. v. Welsh, 1 Mood. 175.

The acquittal of a man as principal is no bar to a subsequent prosecution against him (a) as accessory after the fact; 2 Hawk. c. 35, s. 11; nor (b) according to the ancient law, as accessory before the fact. Hale says that such an acquittal is a bar to a subsequent prosecution against him as an accessory before the fact. 1 Hale, 625; 2 Hale, 244; Kel. (J.) 35. This, however, is not the view of either Foster or Hawkins : Fost. 361; 2 Hawk. c. 35, s. 11; and in R. v. Birchenough, 1 Mood. 477; 7 C. & P. 575, where, to an indictment charging the defendant as an accessory before the fact to child murder, he pleaded autrefois acquit upon an indictment charging him with having been present, aiding and abetting in the said murder, the judges held that the plea was no bar, and had been properly overruled at the trial. And by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 1, an accessory before the fact may be indicted as a principal felon.

An acquittal (or judgment for the defendant on demurrer, R. v. Richmond, 1 C. & K. 240) upon an insufficient indictment, is no bar to another indictment for the same offence. Vaux's case, 4 Co. Rep. 44b, 45a; and see R. v. Coogan, 1 Leach, 448 : R. v. Taylor, 3 B. & C. 502. An insolvent debtor, who had been indicted for omitting goods from his schedule and acquitted, afterwards pleaded autrefois acquit to another indictment for omitting other goods from the same schedule; and Patteson, J., held that the plea was no bar to the second indictment, but said that such a course ought not to be adopted except under very peculiar circumstances. R. v. Champneys, 2 M. & Rob. 26. And generally it may be laid down, that whenever, by reason of some defect in the record, either in the indictment, the place of trial, the process, or the like, the defendant was not lawfully liable to suffer judgment for the offences charged against him in the first indictment as it stood at the time of its finding, he has not been in jeopardy, in the sense which entitles him to plead the former acquittal (or conviction) in bar of a subsequent indictment. R. v. Drury, 3 C. & K. 193; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 189 : R. v. Green, Dears. & B. 113; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 17; 7 Cox, 186 : and see R. v. Marsham, ex parte Pethick Lawrence, [1912] 2 K. B. 362; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 957.

Where a conviction has been quashed on appeal, the appellant is in the same position with regard to a plea of autrefois acquit as if he had been acquitted by the jury. R. v. Barron, supra.

Form.]—"In any plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, it shall be sufficient for any defendant to state that he has been lawfully convicted or acquitted, as the case may be, of the offence charged in the indictment. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 28.

The following is the form of the plea of autrefois acquit :—

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

A. B. says that the King ought not further to prosecute the indictment against him, because he has been lawfully acquitted of the offence charged therein.

The plea may be made ore tenus; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1994; but should be on paper or parchment, and be signed by counsel. The court, however, will not reject the plea because it is informal, but will assign counsel to prepare it in a proper form for the defendant. R. v. Chamberlain, 6 C. & P. 93.

If the indictment be for treason or felony, the defendant, besides this plea of autrefois acquit, should also plead over to the treason or felony. R. v. Vandercomb, 2 Leach, 708, 712: R. v. Drury, ante, p. 149. In such a case therefore, continue the plea thus: "And as to the offence of which the said A. B. now stands indicted he says that he is not guilty." If, however, the defendant pleads autrefois acquit, without pleading over to the felony, after his special plea is found against him, he may still plead over to the felony. 2 Hawk. c 23, s. 128: R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634: R. v. Welsh (1828); MS. Carr. Supp. 56.

It has been held that after a plea of "not guilty," a plea of autrefois acquit is bad. R. v. Banks [1911] 2 K. B. 1095; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 120; 6 Cr. App. R. 276.

In the case of a plea of autrefois acquit, a jury are sworn instanter to try the issue: R. v. Scott, 1 Leach, 401; and therefore there is no replication actually pleaded on the part of the crown. But see R. v. Sheen, supra; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1994 (x). But a replication and similiter must be entered upon the record, when it is made up. The form may be as follows:—

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

H. A. (Clerk of the Court) joins issue on behalf of the King.

The proof of the issues lies on the defendant. To prove it, it used to be necessary to make up the record of the former acquittal, and to give in evidence the record itself, or an examined copy of it: R. v. Bowman, 6 C. & P. 101, 337; except where the second indictment was preferred at the same assizes, in which case the original indictment and minutes of the verdict were and are receivable in evidence in support of the plea, without a record being drawn up. R. v. Parry, 7 C. & P. 836. But by the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), s. 13, "whenever in any proceeding whatever" [whether civil or criminal, Richardson v. Willis, L. R. 8 Ex. 69; 42 L. J. (Ex.) 15], "it may be necessary to prove the trial and conviction or acquittal of any person charged with any indictable offence, it shall not be necessary to produce the record of the conviction or acquittal of such person, or a copy thereof; but it shall be sufficient that it be certified, or purport to be certified under the hand of the clerk of the court, or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where such conviction or acquittal took place, or by the deputy of such clerk or other officer, that the paper produced is a copy of the record of the indictment, trial, conviction, and judgment or acquittal, as the case may be, omitting the formal parts thereof." And by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 18, provision is made for proving previous convictions by certificate.

If the former trial was at quarter sessions, the King's Bench Division can, if necessary, grant a mandamus to the justices to make up the record. R. v. Justices of Middlesex, 5 B. & Ad. 1113; 3 L. J. (M. C.) 32.

The judgment against the defendant on this plea, in felonies, is that he answer over (respondeat ouster); or rather, as the defendant generally pleads over to the felony with the plea of autrefois acquit, the jury are charged again to inquire of the second issue, and the trial proceeds as if no special plea in bar had been pleaded. R. v. Vandercomb, 2 Leach, 708 : R. v. Coogan, 1 Leach, 448,: R. v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634. In misdemeanors the judgment is final. R. v. Goddard, 2 Ld. Raym. 920; 3 Salk. 171. When the plea is allowed, the judgment is "that the defendant shall go without day," and he is altogether discharged from the prosecution. 2 Hale, 391; and see 1 Deacon Cr. Law, 90. The verdict for the defendant, upon the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, cannot, it seems, be set aside, and a new trial had, although it be given without evidence and against the opinion of the judge. R. v. Lea, 2 Mood. 9.

As to the effect of dismissal of a charge tried summarily in a subsequent prosecution on indictment, see post, p. 161.

2. Autrefois convict.

By 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63 (Interpretation Act, 1889), s. 33, "where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts, or both under an Act and at common law, whether such Act was passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Acts and at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence." This enactment is substantially the same as the common law rule, that a man must not be put twice in peril for the same offence. 2 Hawk. c. 35.

The defence of autrefois convict applies whether the previous conviction was on indictment or summary, provided that it was before a court of competent jurisdiction after a hearing on the merits. Wemyss v. Hopkins, L. R. 10 Q. B. 378; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 101.

The only cases in which a previous conviction can be effectually pleaded in bar to a subsequent indictment are :—

(1) Where the conviction was for the exact offence charged in the subsequent indictment, and was sufficient in law : 1 Chit. Cr. L. 461; 4 Bl. Com. 336; 2 Hale, 215; 2 Hawk. c. 36, s. 10 : Vaux case, 4 Co. Rep. 44b, 45a. A plea of autrefois convict, which showed that the judgment on the former indictment had been reversed for error in the judgment, was held not a good bar to another indictment for the same offence. R. v. Drury, 3 C. & K. 193; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 189.

(2) Where the subsequent indictment is based on the same acts or omissions as those in respect whereof the previous conviction was made, and some statute directs that a person shall not be punished twice in respect of the same acts or omissions. Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 33 (supra); and statutes referred to, ante, p. 155. A conviction for obtaining credit or goods under false pretences has been held to be a bar to a subsequent indictment for larceny on the same facts. R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214, 218; 18 Cox, 447, Hawkins, J. : explained and distinguished in R. v. Barron [1914] 2 K. B. 570; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 786; 10 Cr. App. R. 81.

The same rules apply generally to this plea as to the plea of autrefois acquit.

Where on an indictment containing counts for inflicting grievous bodily harm, unlawful wounding, assault occasioning actual bodily harm, and common assault, the jury convicted of common assault, but disagreed on the other counts, it was held, on a retrial on the other counts, that the conviction for common assault would support a plea of autrefois convict. R. v. Grimwood, 60 J. P. 809, Pollock, B.; and see R. v. Elrington, 1 B. & S. 688; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 14.

A person who has been convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 42, of a common assault, but has been discharged under s. 16, sub-s. 2 (rep.) of 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, without any sentence or fine or imprisonment, on giving security to be of good behaviour, cannot, at common law and independently of the defence given by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 45 (infra), afterwards be convicted on indictment for the same assault, although the indictment charges him with unlawful wounding or other circumstances of aggravation. R. v. Miles, 24 Q. B. D. 423; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 56. This rule seems applicable to release on probation. See post, p. 259.

The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), which empowers a petty sessional court under certain circumstances to try summarily persons charged with certain indictable offences, enacts in s. 27, sub-s. 3, that "the conviction for any such offence shall be of the same effect as a conviction for the offence on indictment," and in sub-s. 4, that "where the court have assumed the power to deal with the case summarily, and dismiss the information, they shall, if required, deliver to the person charged a copy certified under their hands of the order of such dismissal, and such dismissal shall be of the same effect as an acquittal on a trial on indictment for the offence."

The Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 44, enacts, that "if the justices on the hearing of any such case of assault or battery upon the merits, where the complaint was preferred by or on behalf of the party aggrieved, under either of the last two preceding sections (ss. 42, 43), shall deem the offence not to be proved, or shall find the assault or battery to have been justified, or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and shall accordingly dismiss the complaint, they shall forthwith make out a certificate under their hands stating the fact of such dismissal, and shall deliver the certificate to the party against whom the complaint was preferred." "Forthwith" means so soon as it is applied for by the defendant, who has a right to it ex debito justitiæ; Hancock v. Somes, 1 E. & E. 795; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 196 : Costar v. Hetherington, 1 E. & E. 802; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 198; overruling R. v. Robinson, 12 A. & E. 672; 10 L. J. (M. C.) 9, where it was held that the certificate must be given before the justices separated. Such certificate of dismissal can only be granted when there has been a full hearing "upon the merits." If the certificate is granted on the withdrawal of the charge before hearing, it will be no bar to subsequent proceedings in respect of the same assault. Reed v. Nutt, 24 Q. B. D. 669. By s. 45, "if any person against whom any such complaint, as in either of the last three preceding sections mentioned, shall have been preferred by or on behalf of the party aggrieved, shall have obtained such certificate, or, having been convicted, shall have paid the whole amount adjudged to be paid, or shall have suffered the imprisonment, or imprisonment with hard labour awarded, in every such case he shall be released from all further or other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause." But by s. 46, the justices are prohibited from adjudicating on any assault or battery which they shall find to have been "accompanied by any attempt to commit felony," or which they shall think, "from any other circumstance, a fit subject for prosecution by indictment," or 'in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements or hereditaments or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or any execution under the process of any court of justice."

A summary conviction under the Children Act, 1908, s. 12, for neglecting children in a manner likely to cause them unnecessary suffering or injury to health is not a bar to a subsequent indictment for the manslaughter of one of the children who has died since the summary conviction. The true test in such a case is whether the accused was in peril on the first trial of being convicted of the same crime as that for which he is in peril of being convicted in the second proceedings. R. v. Tonks [1916] 1 K. B. 443; 85 L. J. (K. B.) 396; 114 L. T. 81; 80 J. P. 165; 32 T. L. R. 137; 11 Cr. App. R. 284.

Where to an action for an assault the defendant pleaded that he had been summoned by the plaintiff before a metropolitan police magistrate, who convicted him in the costs of the complaint and hearing, which the defendant had paid; and at the trial the magistrate's clerk produced his note-book, by which it appeared that the magistrate had merely ordered the defendant to enter into his recognizances, and pay the expense thereof, and the clerk also said that in such cases no conviction was ever drawn up: it was held that the plea was bad, and disclosed no defence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 45; that it was not proved, and that even if there were a conviction, the proper proof was not adduced. Hartley v. Hindmarsh, L. R. 1 C. P. 553; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 255. The judgment of the court in that case proceeded upon the grounds that there was no record of any conviction, and further that the magistrate did not adjudicate upon the case, but, as a conservator of the peace, ordered the defendant to enter into recognizances. Per Pollock, B., in R. v. Miles, 24 Q. B. D. 423; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 56, ante, p. 161.

A plea of a conviction or acquittal under 9 G. 4, c. 31, ss. 27, 28 (rep.), of which 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 44, 45, are in substance a re-enactment, is a bar to an indictment for a felonious stabbing, etc., in the same transaction: R. v. Walker, infra; for the justices are to determine whether the assault was accompanied by any felonious transaction, and their decision on that point is final. R. v. Stanton, 5 Cox, 324, Erle, J. And a plea of a dismissal of the complaint by the justices under 2 G. 4, c. 31, ss. 27, 28 (rep.), was held to be a bar to an indictment for unlawfully wounding, and for an assault occasioning actual bodily harm, arising out of the same circumstances; R. v. Elrington, 1 B. & S. 688; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 14; 9 Cox, 86, where the two cases last cited were approved; but a summary conviction for assault under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 42, is not a bar to a subsequent indictment for manslaughter upon the death of the person assaulted, consequent upon the same assault. R. v. Morris, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 90; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 84; 10 Cox, 480: R. v. Friel. 17 Cox, 325: R. v. Dyson [1908] 2 K. B. 454; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 813; Stephen Dig. Cr. Proc. 325. This rule is not affected by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49 (The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879), s. 27 (3): R. v. Friel, supra. The production of the certificate is of itself sufficient evidence of the dismissal by the justices, without proof of their signature or official character; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 1: and if the defendant appeared before the justices, the recital in the certificate of the fact of a complaint having been made, and of a summons having been issued, is sufficient evidence of those facts, without producing the complaint or summons. R. v. Westley, 11 Cox, 139. Where the first count of an indictment charged the defendant with assaulting the prosecutor and inflicting upon him grievous bodily harm, and the second charged him with an assault upon the prosecutor occasioning actual bodily harm, and the defendant pleaded one plea only (instead of a plea to each count), setting up a dismissal of the charge by the justice, and it appeared upon the trial that there had only been in fact one assault on the day named in the indictment, and that that assault and the one named in the plea took place on the same day, it was held that the plea was a good answer to the whole indictment. R. v. Westley, supra.

The form of the plea of autrefois convict in such cases may be as follows:—

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

A. B. says that the King ought not further to prosecute the indictment against him, because he has been lawfully convicted of the offence charged therein. [If the indictment is for treason or felony add "and as to the charge in the said indictment he says he is not guilty."]

The replication may be as follows:—

The King v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

H. A. (The Clerk of the Court) joins issue on behalf of the King.

The plea and any demurrer to it should be written or printed on paper or parchment. R. v. Walker, 8 C. & P. 446, Parke, B.: 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 8 (3) and r. 1 (ante, pp. 60, 28).

3. Autrefois attaint. (a).

At common law if a man were attainted of treason or felony, whilst the attainder remained in force he could not, with certain exceptions, be indicted

(a) In R. v. Jemmy Governor [1900] 21 N. S. W. Rep. (Law) 279, on an indictment for murder an attempt was made to plead autrefois attaint on a colonial outlawry, but failed on the ground that the common law of England as to outlawry did not apply to New South Wales, and that outlawry under the colonial statutes was not equivalent to a conviction.

for another felony, whether such other felony were committed before or after his attainder; because, being already attainted, and therefore dead in contemplation of law, and his property forfeited, a prosecution for any other offence was considered useless. 2 Hale, 251; 2 Hawk. c. 36, s. 10; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 724. But in 1827 it was enacted by 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 4, that an attainder should be no bar, unless it be for the same offence as that charged in the indictment; and this enactment practically abrogated the plea of autrefois attaint. 4 Bl. Com. 337 n. Attainder for treason and felony was abolished in 1870, except in cases of outlawry (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 1), and in effect the plea of autrefois attaint is obsolete.

The same rules apply to this plea as to the plea of autrefois acquit, with respect to the pleading and production of the record, the averments of identity, and the proceedings on the plea at the trial.

4. Pardon.

A pardon may be pleaded in bar to the indictment; or, after verdict, in arrest of judgment; or, after judgment, in bar of execution. 2 Hawk. c. 37. A pardon under statute need not be pleaded, Staundf. 103 a; 3 Co. Inst. 234; Plowd. 83, 84; 2 Hawk. c. 37, s. 59; unless there be exceptions out of it; Id.; Fost. 43; 2 Hale, 252; 3 Co. Inst. 334; nor can the defendant lose the benefit of it by his own laches or negligence.

The King's pardon should be pleaded at the first opportunity which the defendant may have of so doing; if, for instance, he has obtained a pardon before arraignment, and, instead of pleading it in bar, he pleads the general issue, he is deemed to have waived the benefit of it, and cannot afterwards avail himself of it in arrest of judgment. 2 Hawk. c. 37, s. 59.

Form of plea.]—In pleading a pardon under the great seal the letters patent were set out with profert, and the plea concluded thus: "By reason of which said letters patent, the said A. B. prays that by the court here he may be dismissed and discharged from the said premises in the said indictment specified."

Formerly only a pardon under the great seal could be pleaded. Lord Warwick's case, 13 St. Tr. 939, 1015: R. v. Gully, 1 Leach, 98: Bull v. Tilt, 1 B. & P. 199: R. v. Miller, 2 W. Bl. 799.

But 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 13, provides for the grant of free or conditional pardons for felony under the King's sign manual countersigned by a secretary of state and that the discharge of the offender from custody in the former case, or the performance of the condition in the latter, shall have the effect of a pardon under the great seal as to the felony for which the pardon is granted, but shall not prevent or mitigate the punishment in any subsequent conviction for any felony committed after the grant of any such pardon. See R. v. Harrod, 2 C. & K. 294; 2 Cox, 242.

This enactment seems to have given statutory effect to the practice of circuit pardons referred to in R. v. Beaton, 1 W. Bl. 479: R. v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 454, 456: Bullock v. Dodds, 2 B. & Ald. 258. In pleading under this enactment the stricter course would be to set out the pardon under the sign manual and to aver compliance with the conditions, if any; but in R. v. Harrod, supra, the court seems not to have required a plea, but to have taken a certificate of discharge by the governor of a prison as evidence of the grant of a free pardon.

Any variance between the statements in the indictment and in the pardon could be made good in the plea, by averments of identity.

A free pardon places the person in the same position as to status as he was in before his conviction. Hay v. Tower Division Justices, 24 Q. B. D. 561; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 79. The endurance of the punishment awarded by the court, or of that substituted by the crown, has (in the case of a non-capital felony) the effect of a pardon under the great seal. 9 G. 4, c. 32, s. 3.

Sect. 5.

GENERAL ISSUE.

The general issue is pleaded by the prisoner ore tenus at the bar, in these words "not guilty;" by which plea, without further form, every person not having privilege of peerage, upon being arraigned upon any indictment for treason, felony, or piracy, is "deemed to have put himself upon the country for trial." 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 1. And "if any person being arraigned upon, or charged with any indictment or information for treason, felony, piracy, or misdemeanor, shall stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly to the indictment or information," the court may "order the proper officer to enter a plea of 'not guilty' on behalf of such person; and the plea so entered shall have the same force and effect as if such person had actually pleaded the same." 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 2. If the defendant says that he declines to plead, a plea of not guilty is entered. R. v. Bernard, 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 887, 899.

When the record is made up, the general issue appears upon it thus:—

"And A. B. being brought to the bar of the court and having heard the indictment read says he is not guilty and puts himself upon the country and H. A. (the clerk of the court) joins issue on behalf of our lord the King."

In informations, and in indictments for not repairing roads and bridges, etc., where the defendant is allowed to appear by attorney, the general issue is regularly engrossed, and filed with the proper officer. It is in form thus:—"And the said A. B., by C. D. his solicitor, saith, that he is not guilty; and of this the said A. B. puts himself upon the country." Afterwards, in making up the record, the similiter (ante, p. 154) is added thus: "And H. S., who prosecutes for our said lord the King, joins issue," if it be pleaded to an indictment at the assizes, or sessions; but if to an indictment in the King's Bench Division, then thus: "And, Sir Leonard Kershaw, Knight, coroner and attorney of our said lord the King, in the King's Bench Division of his Majesty's High Court of Justice, who prosecutes for our said lord the King in this behalf doth the like;" or if to an information, then thus: "And the said attorney-general [or coroner and attorney] of our said lord the King who prosecutes as aforesaid for our said lord the King, doth the like."

Where the general issue is pleaded it is incumbent upon the prosecution to prove every fact and circumstance constituting the offence or offences charged in the indictment or information. By sub-s. 1 of s. 8 of the Indictments Act, 1915 (ante, p. 60), "nothing in this Act or the rules thereunder shall affect the law or practice relating to the jurisdiction of a court or the place where an accused person can be tried, nor prejudice or diminish in any respect the obligation to establish by evidence according to law any acts, omissions, or intentions which are legally necessary to constitute the offence with which the person accused is charged, nor otherwise affect the laws of evidence in criminal cases." Under this plea the defendant may give in evidence, not only everything which negatives the allegations in the indictment, but also all matters of excuse and justification, and all matters which bring him within exceptions and provisoes in his favour contained in the enactment creating the offence, if the burden of proof thereof lies upon him (ante, p. 46).

CHAPTER V.

TRIAL, JUDGMENT, AND PUNISHMENT.

ARRAIGNMENT.

THE arraignment of prisoners, against whom true bills of indictment have been found by the grand jury, consists of three parts, first, calling the prisoner to the bar by name; secondly, reading the indictment to him; thirdly, asking him whether he is guilty or not. It was formerly the practice to require the prisoner to hold up his hand, the more completely to identify him as the person named in the indictment, but this ceremony, which was never essential (R. v. Radcliffe, 1 W. Bl. 3), is now in most courts disused. As to the necessity of the presence of the accused, see post, p. 173. The prisoner is to be brought to the bar without irons, shackles, or other restraint, unless there is danger of escape; and "ought to be used with all the humanity and gentleness which is consistent with the nature of the thing, and under no other terror or uneasiness than what proceeds from a sense of his guilt and the misfortune of his present circumstances." 2 Hawk. c. 28, s. 1; Kel. (J.) 10. In R. v. Layer, 16 St. Tr. 93, 96, a distinction was taken between the time of arraignment and the time of trial, and the prisoner was obliged to stand at the bar in irons during the arraignment; but the ruling in that case is at variance with the authority of all the expositors of the common law. Britton, c. 5, f. 14, says, "If felons come in judgment to answer, etc., they shall be out of irons and all manner of bonds, so that their pain shall not take away any manner of reason, nor constrain them to answer but at their free will." The Mirror of Justices, Book V., ch. 1, 54 (Seld. Soc. Publ., vol. vii., p. 160), says, "It is an abuse that a prisoner should be loaded with irons or put in pain before he is attainted for felony." But it is possible that this passage relates to peine forte et dure. See also 3 Co. Inst. 34, where Coke cites Bracton, l. 3, f. 137; Staundf. 78; and a decision of the judges, 8 Edw. 2; also Hale's Sum. 212. However, where there is reason to believe that the prisoner will make an attempt to escape, or will be guilty of violence, the gaoler may, by order of the judge, bring up the prisoner for arraignment in irons, and he may be kept ironed during the trial, and even when giving evidence on his own behalf. R. v. Brazier, Hants Summer Assizes [1899] Wright, J.

Under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), rule 13 (1), it is the duty of the clerk of assize or of the peace, as the case may be, after a true bill has been found on any indictment, to supply to the accused person on request a copy of the indictment free of charge. The cost is to be treated as part of the costs of the prosecution for the purposes of section 1 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908.

If the prisoner is charged upon indictment and inquisition for the same offence, he may be arraigned at the same time upon both; 1 East, P. C. 371; and where several defendants are charged in the same indictment, they ought all to be arraigned at the same time although their trials may be several. Kel. (J.) 9.

As soon as the indictment has been read to the prisoner, or its substance stated to him (which is now the usual practice), the officer of the court demands of him—How say you, are you guilty or not guilty? The course of proceeding where the prisoner pleads to the jurisdiction, moves to quash the indictment, demurs, or raises pleas in abatement, or in bar has already been dealt with (ante, p. 150 et seq.). On the prisoner pleading not guilty under the old practice, he was asked how he would be tried, and made the answer "By God and my country." This form is now rarely, if ever, used. If the prisoner pleads guilty, and it appears to the satisfaction of the judge that he rightly comprehends the effect of his plea, his confession is recorded, and sentence is forthwith passed, or he is removed from the bar to be again brought up for judgment. 1 Chit. Cr. L. 415.

It is important that there should be no ambiguity in the plea, and that where the accused makes some other answer than "Not guilty" or "Guilty," as the case may be, care should be taken that he understands the charge and to ascertain what the plea amounts to. Where the plea is imperfect or unfinished, and the court of trial has wrongly held it to amount to a plea of guilty, on appeal the Court of Criminal Appeal may order that a plea of not guilty should be entered and that the appellant be tried on the indictment: R. v. Ingleson [1915] 1 K. B. 512; 84 L. J. (K. B.) 280; 24 Cox, 527; 76 J. P. 215; 11 Cr. App. R. 21; or that the appellant be sent back to plead again to the indictment: R. v. Baker, 7 Cr. App. R. 217; 28 T. L. R. 363; or may merely quash the conviction without sending the appellant back for trial: R. v. Alexander, 7 Cr. App. R. 110; R. v. Golathan, 24 Cox, 704; 79 J. P. 270; 31 T. L. R. 177; 11 Cr. App. R. 79.

By s. 39 (1) of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), where a prisoner is arraigned on an indictment for any offence, and can lawfully be convicted on such indictment of some other offence not charged in such indictment (see post, pp. 211 et seq.), he may plead not guilty of the offence charged in the indictment, but guilty of such other offence.

Arraignment of peers.]—A person entitled to the privilege of peerage, if indicted for misdemeanor, is tried in the same manner as a commoner. 3 Co. Inst. 30; 2 Hawk. c. 44, s. 13. But persons entitled to such privilege cannot be tried in pais for treason, felony, or misprision of either offence, and it would seem that there is no power to waive the privilege. Lord Grares' case, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 609 n.; 310 Hansard, 246. When on arraignment the privilege is claimed or its existence is established, the indictment is removed by certiorari to the House of Lords, and if parliament be sitting is tried before that House as the court of the King in parliament: R. v. Earl of Cardigan, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 601; and if parliament be not sitting is tried in the court of the Lord High Steward, which is constituted by special commission. R. v. Earl Russell [1901] A. C. 446; 76 L. J. (K. B.) 998; 20 Cox, 51; and see 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 666. At such trial the pleading and punishment are the same as in the case of any other accused person. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 22. The trial of peers for offences committed in Scotland is regulated by 6 G. 4, c. 66.

The privilege of peerage belongs to every peer except an Irish peer who is a member of the House of Commons, and to peeresses in their own right, to the wives of peers, and to the widows of peers who are not married to commoners; 20 H. 6, c. 9; 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 10; but does not belong to archbishops or other bishops, who are lords of parliament but not peers. May Parl. Pr. (11th ed.).

Prisoner standing mute.]—If the prisoner, when called upon, stands mute of malice, or will not answer directly, the court may order the proper officer to enter a plea of not guilty; 7 & 8 G. 4. c. 28, s. 2: see ante, p. 165. At common law the consequences of standing obstinately mute in cases of felony, were forfeiture of goods, and peine forte et dure; Hale's Sum. 227; and by 12 G. 3, c. 20 (rep.), judgment as on a plea of guilty. See R. v. Steel, 1 Leach, 451. Where the defendant stands mute the court cannot itself determine whether in fact he is mute of malice or by the visitation of God, R. v. Isreal, 2 Cox, 263: R. v. Schleter, 10 Cox, 409; but must direct a jury to be forthwith impanelled and sworn, to try whether the prisoner be mute of malice or ex visitatione Dei, and such jury may consist of any twelve men who may happen to be present. Counsel may call witnesses for the defendant on the trial of the issue and may address the jury. R. v. Roberts, Carr. C. L. 57. The form of the oath to the jury in such a case may be as follows:—"I swear by Almighty God that I will well and truly try whether A. B., the prisoner at the bar, who stands charged with felony, is mute of malice or by the visitation of God, and a true verdict give according to the evidence." See Cro. Circ. Comp. 542 (9th ed.).

A person is mute by the visitation of God who is deaf and dumb: R. v. Jones, 1 Leach, 102: R. v. Pritchard, 7 C. & P. 303: R. v. Governor of Stafford Prison, Ex parte Emery [1909] 2 K. B. 81; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 629; 100 L. T. 993; 73 J. P. 284; 25 T. L. R. 440; or so deaf that he cannot hear the indictment when read. R. v. Halton, Ry. & M. 78 : and see 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 87. A finding that the prisoner is mute by the visitation of God is not an absolute bar to trial on the indictment. R. v. Steel, 1 Leach, 451 : Ex parte Emery, supra: and the mute may be nevertheless arraigned and tried if he is sane, and can read or write, or intelligence can be conveyed to him by signs or symbols. But before proceeding with the trial it is necessary to ascertain whether he can plead to the indictment or understand the proceedings. R. v. Jones, supra: Ex parte Emery, supra.

Prisoner unfit to plead or take his trial.]—The Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 64), empowers a secretary of state to remove to a lunatic asylum all prisoners committed for trial who are certified in manner provided by the Act to be insane, and to order their detention as criminal lunatics until their remittal to prison or discharge. This power gets rid of the difficulty found in R. v. Dwerryhouse, 2 Cox, 446, where a prisoner was obviously unfit to be arraigned. If the secretary of state acts under the statute the hand of the court is stayed : Ex parte Collins [1899] 34 L. J. Newsp. 132. The Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (39 & 40 G. 3, c. 94), passed in consequence of Hadfield's case, 27 St. Tr. 1281, provides (s. 2) that " if any person indicted for any offence (R. v. Little, R. & R. 430), shall be insane, and shall upon arraignment be found so to be by a jury lawfully impanelled for that purpose " (that is, by a jury returned by the sheriff instanter in the nature of an inquest of office) " so that such person cannot be tried upon such indictment, it shall be lawful for the court before whom any such person shall be brought to be arraigned as aforesaid, to direct such finding to be recorded, and thereupon to order such person to be kept in strict custody until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known." Similar provisions are made by the same section as to persons brought up to be discharged for want of prosecution who appear to be insane. The enactment does not apply to grand juries. R. v. Hodges, 8 C. & P. 195. Persons detained after verdict under the section are dealt with as criminal lunatics. The form of oath to be administered to the jurors impanelled to try whether a prisoner be non compos or not, is as follows :—" I swear by Almighty God that I will diligently inquire and true presentment make, for and on behalf of our sovereign lord the King, whether A. B., the defendant who stands indicted for (a misdemeanor) be insane or not, and a true verdict give accordingly to the best of my understanding." The proper time to raise the question of the prisoner's fitness to be tried is before he pleads. R. v. Southey, 4 F. & F. 864. The issue to be tried is the state of the prisoner's mind at the date of arraignment, not at any prior time. R. v. Keary, 14 Cox, 143; 4 Bl. Com. 24. As to the onus of proof on the trial of the issue, see R. v. Davies, 6 Cox, 326; 3 C. & K. 328; 22 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 143 : R. v. Turton, 6 Cox, 385. In R. v. Goode, 7 A. & E. 536, where the prisoner was tried at bar for using seditious language against Queen Victoria in her presence, it was held that the jury might form their own opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind when arraigned, from his demeanor during the inquest, without any evidence being given on the subject : but under ordinary circumstances it is usual to require some evidence as to the prisoner's state of mind. In R. v. Pritchard, 7 C. & P. 303, where a prisoner arraigned on an indictment for felony, appeared to be deaf, dumb, and also of non-sane mind, Alderson, B., put three distinct issues to the jury, directing the jury to be sworn separately on each : 1. Whether the prisoner was mute of malice or by the visitation of God; 2. Whether he was able to plead; 3. Whether he was sane or not : and on the last issue they were directed to inquire whether the prisoner was of sufficient intellect to comprehend the course of the proceedings of the trial, so as to make a proper defence, to challenge a juror to whom he might wish to object, and to understand the details of the evidence (supra, p. 169); and he directed the jury that if there was no certain mode of communicating to the prisoner the details of the evidence so that he could clearly understand them and be able properly to make his defence to the charge against him, the jury ought to find that he was not of sane mind. This direction follows that given in R. v. Dyson, 7 C. & P. 305 n. See also R. v. Whitfield, 3 C. & K. 121. The directions in R. v. Pritchard were approved in R. v. Berry, 1 Q. B. D. 447; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 123; 13 Cox, 189; and again in Ex parte Emery; R. v. Governor of Stafford Prison [1909] 2 K. B. 81; 78 L. J. K. B. 629. In R. v. Berry (supra) a deaf mute being arraigned for felony, the jury who had been impanelled to try the case were sworn to try whether the prisoner stood mute of malice or by the visitation of God. The jury found that he was mute by the visitation of God. The judge then ordered that a plea of not guilty should be entered, and the trial proceeded. The better course in such cases would seem to be to proceed as in R. v. Pritchard, supra, and not to enter a verdict of not guilty at once. The jury found the prisoner guilty of the felony charged against him, but also found that he was incapable of understanding, and did not understand, the proceedings at the trial. Upon this finding it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted, but must be detained as a non-sane person during the Queen's pleasure. In R. v. Governor of Stafford Prison, Ex parte Emery [1909] 2 K. B. 81; 78 L. J. K. B. 629, a man who was totally deaf and unable to read or write was arraigned for a felony. On arraignment he stood mute. A jury duly impanelled and sworn found that he was mute by the visitation of God. They were then sworn to try whether he was capable of pleading to the indictment, and found that he was incapable of pleading to and taking his trial on the indictment and of understanding and following the proceedings by reason of his inability to communicate with and be communicated with by others. It was held that this finding amounted to a finding that the accused was insane within the meaning of s. 2 of the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (ante, p. 170). In R. v. Harris, 61 J. P. 792, the prisoner was unable to read or write, and owing to an unhealed wound in his throat could not speak. A jury impanelled to try whether he was sane and able to plead, found that he was both, but that at present he was unable to give instructions for his defence, and that his condition was due to his own act, attempted suicide. He was then called on to plead, pleaded not guilty, and his trial was adjourned. Cf. R. v. Whitfield, 3 C. & K. 121. As to feigned madness, see R. v. Davies, 6 Cox, 326, Williams, J. : R. v. Berry [1897] 104 L. T. 110, Wills, J. In R. v. Wheeler, Central Criminal Court, May 12, 1852, where the prisoner was indicted for the murder of his mother, and on his arraignment pleaded "not guilty," Platt, B., on the motion of the prisoner's counsel, directed the jury to be sworn to inquire whether the prisoner was in a fit state of mind to plead to the indictment, and it appearing from the evidence that the prisoner seemed to understand the nature of the crime for which he was indicted, but that he seemed unable to understand the distinction between a plea of "guilty" and of "not guilty" the jury, at the suggestion of the learned judge, returned a verdict that the prisoner was of unsound mind and incompetent to plead. Where the jury are sworn (in the nature of an inquest of office) to inquire whether or not a prisoner is sufficiently sane to plead to the indictment, the court directs the finding to be recorded; and the following is the form of the record of the finding :—

MIDDLESEX :—The King against J. G.—The defendant being brought here into court, in the custody of the keeper of his Majesty's prison of ——, by virtue of a writ of habeas corpus, it is ordered that the said writ and the return made thereto be filed; and the said defendant is now here in court arraigned upon the indictment found against him in this court for certain misdemeanors, in speaking and publishing certain scandalous and seditious words of and concerning our sovereign lord the King, and is asked by the court here whether he be guilty of the premises charged upon him by the said indictment or not. Whereupon the said defendant doth refuse to answer to the said indictment; and it appearing to this court that the said defendant may be insane, so that he cannot be tried upon the said indictment : therefore, on the prayer of Sir Gordon Hewart, knight, his Majesty's attorney-general, it is ordered that a jury in this behalf do immediately come here into court, to try and inquire for and on behalf of our sovereign lord the King, whether the said defendant be insane or not. And immediately thereupon, a jury being impanelled and returned for that purpose by the sheriff of the said county of Middlesex, come here into court, and being elected, tried, and sworn to speak the truth touching and concerning the premises aforesaid, say upon their oath that the said defendant is insane. And the said attorney-general, for and on behalf of our said sovereign lord the King, prays the said court here that the finding of the said jury may be recorded. It is thereupon ordered by the said court here, that the said finding of the said jury be recorded, and that the said defendant be kept in strict custody in the said gaol until his Majesty's pleasure in the premises shall be known. And the said defendant is now here in court re-committed to the custody of the keeper of the said gaol, to be by him kept in strict custody until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known. On the motion of the attorney-general: By the court.

As to the proceedings on the trial of a person alleged to have been insane when the offence charged was committed, see post, p. 217.

Arraignment for subsequent offence.]—S. 116 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), provides that the mode of arraigning a defendant on an indictment for any offence committed after a previous conviction is, in the first instance, to arraign him upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and, if he pleads not guilty or the court orders a plea of not guilty to be entered, to charge the jury in the first instance to inquire only concerning the subsequent offence. A similar course is to be pursued where the prisoner is indicted for an offence against the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), after a previous conviction (s. 37). The procedure prescribed by s. 116 of the Larceny Act, 1861, has been construed as applying not merely to proceedings on an indictment for an offence within that Act committed after a previous conviction, but to proceedings for any offence, e.g., an attempt to commit larceny. Faulkner v. R. [1905] 2 K. B. 76; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 562. And s. 9 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), provides that the rules contained in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116, in relation to the form of and the proceedings upon an indictment for any offence punishable under that Act committed after previous conviction shall, with the necessary variations, apply to any indictment for committing a "crime" as defined by s. 20 of 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 (viz., any felony, or the offence of uttering false or counterfeit coin, or of possessing counterfeit gold or silver coin, or the offence of obtaining goods or money by false pretences, or the offence of conspiracy to defraud, or any misdemeanor under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 58, repealed and re-enacted by 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 28), after previous conviction for a crime, whether the crime charged in such indictment or the crime to which such previous conviction relates be or be not punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. And a similar procedure is prescribed on a charge of being a habitual criminal, under the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 59, s. 10 (4)).

The arraignment is not complete till the prisoner has pleaded. R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 795, 799. If the defendant pleads "not guilty," his plea is recorded by the officer of the court; either by writing on the indictment with the words "po. se" (an abbreviation of the words ponit se super patriam) or, as at the Central Criminal Court, the word "puts," and by an entry in the minute book of the court. See R. v. Newman, 2 Den. 390; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 74, 76. A plea of not guilty may by leave of the judge be withdrawn during the trial, and a plea of guilty substituted. R. v. Brown, 17 L. J. (M. C.) 145. There is a case to the contrary as to a trial on a nisi prius record. R. v. Barrett, 2 Lew. 264; but it is inconsistent with old precedent and modern practice. R. v. Turner, 24 L. J. Newsp. 469 (see post, p. 380). A plea of "guilty" may be withdrawn before sentence: R. v. Plummer [1902] 2 K. B. 339; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 805; but not after sentence. R. v. Sell, 9 C. & P. 346: R. v. Clouter, 8 Cox, 237. It is no bar to the right of the court to reserve a special case, or of the prisoner to appeal. See post, pp. 300 et seq.

Presence of accused.]—No trial (a) for felony can be had except in the presence of the defendant, and he must, it is said, stand in the dock to be tried. R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483: R. v. Douglas, C. & Mar. 193: R. v. Zulueta, 1 C. & K. 215; 1 Cox, 20. But if the jury, for any reason, are discharged without giving a verdict, it is not necessary in order to constitute a valid discharge that the prisoner should be present. R. v. Richardson, 29 T. L. R. 228. If he creates a disturbance it is said that the trial may go on without his presence. Steph. Dig. Cr. Proc. art. 302: R. v. Berry [1897]

(a) The presence of the accused seems not to be necessary during the proceedings prior to arraignment, such as swearing the grand jury or finding the indictment. See R. v. Maturin [1903] 12 Quebec L. R. (K. B.) 494.

104 L. T. Journ. 110, Wills, J. The prisoner may be punished for contempt of court for the disturbance created. R. v. Giles [1895] Wilts Assizes, Wills, J. A charge of misdemeanor may be tried in the absence of the accused, if he has previously pleaded; 8 Rep. Crim. L. 143: R. v. Browne [1906] 70 J. P. 472; and it is not necessary for the defendant to be in the dock: R. v. Lovett, 9 C. & P. 462; 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1177. For sufficient reason a defendant may be removed out of sight though remaining within hearing distance. R. v. Smellie, 14 Cr. App. R. 128. Where a defendant, tried at bar for perjury, was taken ill in the course of the trial, he was allowed to absent himself from the court until his recovery, and the trial proceeded in his absence. R. v. Orton, alias, Castro, Queen's Bench, July, 1873, MS. The absence of one of several persons who are accused together does not affect the validity of the conviction of those who appear. Ex parte O'Brien Dalton, 28 L. R. Ir. 36.

Trial of fugitive offenders.]—The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 69), which regulates the arrest in one part of the British Empire of fugitives from the justice of another part of the empire and their reconveyance for trial contains no provision precluding an offender returned under that Act from being tried for offences other than those for which he was returned. It superseded the Colonial Arrest Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 34), under which the same rule applied: see R. v. Philip, 1 F. & F. 105; 27 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 199. The Act of 1881 has been extended to certain places subject to the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 37), by Orders in Council printed in the Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 5, tit. Foreign Jurisdiction, and in the annual volumes of the Statutory Rules and Orders.

Under the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, a fugitive criminal surrendered by a foreign state for an extradition crime in pursuance of a treaty can be tried only for offences "proved by the facts on which the surrender is granted" (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, s. 19); i.e., by the extradition documents submitted to the authorities of the foreign state for the purpose of securing the surrender. As to the mode of raising the question, see ante, p. 150. The burden of proof that he was surrendered under the treaty and that the offences charged were not included in the order for surrender seems to rest upon him and not on the crown. R. v. Butler, 18 New South Wales Rep. (Law) 146. Where he has been arrested or surrendered irrespective of treaty he can be tried for any offence. Ex parte Scott, 9 B. & C. 446: Lord Advocate v. Sinclair, 17 Rettie (Justiciary Sc.) 38.

Defence by counsel.]—In trials for treason and misprision of treason the prisoner is entitled to defence by counsel, by 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 1. And the court on his request will assign him not more than two counsel. R. v. Casement [1917] 1 K. B. 98, at p. 114: R. v. Lynch [1903] 1 K. B. 444; 72 L. J. K. B. 167: R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 85, 106; 9 C. & P. 129, 135, and n. Since 1836 (6 & 7 W. 4, c. 114, s. 1) all persons tried for felony have been entitled, "after the close of the prosecution, to make full answer and defence by counsel learned in the law, or by solicitor in courts where solicitors practise as counsel," e.g., at courts of quarter sessions where less than four counsel attend. Archbold Q. S. (6th ed.) 100, 101, citing Ex parte Evans, 9 Q. B. 279; 15 L. J. Q. B. 335. In trials for misdemeanors the accused has always been entitled to be defended by counsel. King's counsel cannot appear for the defence except by licence from the crown, now granted through the Home Office without fee. See R. v. Bartlett, 2 C. & K. 321 : R. v. Jones, 9 C. & P. 401.

Defence at request of judge.]—Quite apart from statute and the practice of the superior courts, where the prisoner is not defended by counsel, the court may properly request some member of the bar present to give his honorary services to the prisoner, if the prisoner is willing to accept them. R. v. Fogarty, 5 Cox, 161 (Ir.) : R. v. Yscuado, 6 Cox, 386. This course has hitherto been adopted only in the case of murder or other grave crime, or where the circumstances of the case are special. In R. v. Gillingham, 5 Cr. App. R. 187, the Court of Criminal Appeal considered that in cases of rape or offences of a similar nature the judge at the trial should endeavour to see that the defendant was defended by counsel.

Provision of legal aid for poor prisoners.]—The Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 38), enacts as follows :—

Sect. 1.—" (1) Where it appears, having regard to the nature of the defence set up by any poor prisoner, as disclosed in the evidence given or statement made by him before the committing justices, that it is desirable in the interests of justice that he should have legal aid in the preparation and conduct of his defence, and that his means are insufficient to enable him to obtain such aid—

" (a) the committing justices, upon the committal of the prisoner for trial; or

" (b) the judge of a court of assize or chairman of a court of quarter sessions, at any time after reading the depositions, may certify that the prisoner ought to have such legal aid, and thereupon the prisoner shall be entitled to have solicitor and counsel assigned to him, subject to the provisions of this Act."

The best guide at present available in the application of this sub-section is contained in the following Home Office circular to justices' clerks :—

" Home Office, Whitehall, Aug. 31, 1904.

" SIR,—I am directed by the Secretary of State to inform you that he has received a number of communications respecting the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903, from which it would appear that magistrates have in many instances found some difficulty in determining what action they should take to give effect to the intention of the Act. He thinks, therefore, that the remarks made by the Lord Chief Justice when charging the grand jury at the recent Warwick Summer Assizes may afford magistrates valuable assistance in the proper administration of the Act, and he will be glad if you will bring them to the notice of the magistrates of your bench. The following is the report which appeared in The Times of July 26, 1904, corrected by the Lord Chief Justice himself :—

" ' At Warwick, on Saturday, Lord Alverstone, in charging the grand jury, referred to the working of the Poor Prisoners Defence Act. He said that during the six months since the Act had come into force there had been some difference of practice among magistrates as to its scope and the principle upon which it should be applied, and the Home Office had received many communications on the subject. This made it desirable that he should explain the guiding principles of the Act. The Act was not intended to give a prisoner legal assistance in order to find out if he had got a defence. He was not to have solicitor or counsel assigned to him for such a purpose. The governing principle of the Act was that people who had a defence should have every inducement to tell the truth about it at the earliest opportunity. Assistance under the Act could only be given where both (1) the nature of the defence as disclosed was such that in the interests of justice the prisoner should have legal aid to make his defence clear; and (2) where also his means were insufficient for that end. Magistrates would have little difficulty in deciding the second point, upon which they could inform themselves by the ordinary means of information. As regards the first point, they should bear in mind that by a defence disclosed was meant not only a defence stated by the prisoner at the end of the hearing, but a defence disclosed on cross-examination, or by questions the prisoner might ask, or by remarks he interposed, or even in some cases such as might appear on the face of the evidence called for the prosecution. All they had to be sure of was that a defence requiring legal consideration was disclosed at the time by a prisoner devoid of pecuniary means. The Act was passed in the interest of innocent persons; and such would be advised in future not to "reserve their defence," but to disclose it at once, so that it could be investigated. The prisoner would thus prevent the suggestion that he had kept back his defence so as to give the prosecution no opportunity of investigating it.'

As to costs of defence under this Act, see post, p. 281.

Sect. 2. Rules.]—"Rules for carrying this Act into effect may be made in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as rules under the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879" (42 & 43 Vict. c. 22). (See infra.)

Sect. 3. Definitions.]—"In this Act—

"'Prisoner' includes a person committed for trial on bail.

"'Committing justices' includes a magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis and a stipendiary magistrate.

"'Chairman' includes recorder or deputy-recorder or deputy-chairman."

That Act does not extend to Scotland or Ireland (s. 4), and appears not to apply to trials in the King's Bench Division (see post, p. 178). But the term "court of assize" includes the Central Criminal Court (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 13 (4)).

The following rules were made by the Attorney-General, dated May 13, 1904, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor and the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of s. 2 of the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (Stat. Rules and Orders, 1904, No. 1056, Legal Series, No. 8)—

1. "Every clerk of assize and clerk of the peace shall keep a list of solicitors who are willing to undertake the defence of poor prisoners, and shall insert in such list the names of all solicitors who are willing so to act. The name of any solicitor shall be removed from the list, either on the application of the solicitor himself or by direction of any judge of assize or chairman of quarter sessions. A copy of such list shall be sent to every clerk to justices in the county of quarter sessions district."

2. "Every clerk of assize and clerk of the peace shall keep a list of the members of the bar attending the circuit or sessions who are willing to act as counsel for poor prisoners, and shall insert in such list the names of all such members of the bar who are willing so to act."

3. "Any certificate given by the justices in pursuance of s. 1 of the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903, shall be in Form A in the Schedule hereto. It shall as soon as it has been given be sent by the clerk to the justices to the clerk of assize or clerk of the peace, together with the name of the solicitor assigned.

"The certificate given by a judge of assize or chairman of quarter sessions shall be in Form B in the schedule hereto."

4. "Any justices, judge of assize, or chairman of quarter sessions, who give such a certificate shall at the same time assign to the prisoner from the list kept under Rule 1 a solicitor to whose services the prisoner shall be entitled.

"A copy of the depositions shall be furnished to the solicitor so assigned by the justices' clerk, clerk of assize, or clerk of the peace, as the case may be."

5. "Any member of the bar whose name appears upon the list kept under Rule 2 may be instructed on behalf of the prisoner by the solicitor so assigned."

Proceedings in formâ pauperis in the High Court, K. B. D.]—By the Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 257, "any person may be admitted to prosecute or defend any proceedings on the Crown side as a pauper on proof that he is not worth 25*l.*, his wearing apparel only excepted." By r. 258, "the provisions of Order XVI. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, rr. 23-31, so far as the same may be applicable, shall apply to any proceedings under the foregoing rule, provided, nevertheless, that no person shall be allowed to prosecute any proceedings on the Crown side as a pauper unless a counsel and solicitor have been assigned to him."

The effect of these rules is to supersede most, if not all, of the old practice as to pauper litigants on the Crown side of the King's Bench Division, as to which see Archb. Cr. Pl. (23rd ed.) 190; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 386.

The application, which is ex parte, is usually made to a judge in chambers, but may be made to a divisional court.

It must be supported by an affidavit as to means to the following effect:—

"In the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division.—The King on the prosecution of A. B. against C. D.—I, C. D. [or intending prosecutor] make oath and say, that I am not worth twenty-five pounds in the world, save and except my necessary wearing apparel. Sworn, etc. C. D."

If the application is to prosecute in formâ pauperis a case must have been submitted to counsel and his opinion obtained that there is probabilis causa litigandi, and there must be an affidavit by the party or his solicitor exhibiting the case and opinion, and stating that the case contains a full and true statement of the material facts. No particular forms are prescribed, but they can be adapted from those used in civil cases. See Chitty's Archbold's K. B. Forms (13th ed.) 592; Ann. Pr. 1910, pp. 201 et seq.

If the application is granted an order is drawn up at the Crown Office without any fee, which must be produced when the pauper requires anything to be done without payment of fees. See Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 142, 386.

SECT. 2.

SUMMONING, IMPANELLING, SWEARING, AND CHARGING THE PETTY JURY.

Calling.]—The prisoner having put himself upon the country, the next proceeding is to call the petty jurors, which an officer of the court does in the following or like terms :—

"You good men, who are returned and impanelled to try the issue joined between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoner at the bar, answer to your names and save your fines," [then calling the jurors by name]. It is not necessary in law that the names should be called over in the order in which they stand on the panel, although it is generally proper to do so : it was not, therefore, ground of error that the names were not so called over. Mansell v. R., 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 831; 8 E. & B. 54; Dears. & B. 375; 26 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 137.

Where, on a trial for felony, the jury panel contained the names of J. T. and W. T., and when the name of J. T. was called, a person supposed to be J. T. went into the box and was sworn without objection; and it was discovered, after conviction of the accused, that W. T., by mistake, had answered to the name of J. T. and had served on the jury, it was held by a majority of the judges that this was not a mis-trial, but only ground of challenge (see post, p. 189). R. v. Mellor, Dears. & B. 468; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 121 : see also R. v. Metcalf, 3 Cox, 220; Case of a Juryman, 12 East, 231 n. But where one T. had been summoned to serve on a jury and on his name being called one C., who was his bailiff but not qualified to act as a juror, answered and served on the jury, it was held, on appeal after conviction, that there had been a mis-trial. R. v. Wakefield [1918] 1 K. B. 216; 87 L. J. (K. B.) 319; 82 J. P. 136; 13 Cr. App. R. 56, and R. v. Mellor, supra, was considered.

It is a common law misdemeanor to personate a juryman and it is not necessary to prove that the defendant had any corrupt motive or anything to gain by his conduct, nor any particular intention to deceive, and it is not an answer that the defendant did not know he was doing wrong. R. v. Clark, 82 J. P. 295.

Qualification.]—By s. 1 of the Juries Act, 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50), "every man, except as hereinafter excepted [see infra], between the ages of twenty-one years and sixty years, residing in any county in England, who shall have in his own name or in trust for him, within the same county, 10*l.* by the year above reprizes, in lands or tenements, whether freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, or of ancient demesne, or in rents issuing out of any such lands, or tenements, or in such lands, tenements, and rents taken together in fee simple, fee tail, or for the life of himself or some other person; or who shall have within the same county 20*l.* by the year above reprizes, in lands or tenements held by lease or leases for the absolute term of twenty-one years, or some longer term, or for any term of years determinable on any life or lives; or who, being a householder, shall be rated or assessed to the poor rate or to the inhabited house duty in the county of Middlesex, on a value of not less than 30*l.*, or in any other county on a value of not less than 20*l.*; or who shall occupy a house containing not less than fifteen windows, shall be qualified and shall be liable to serve on juries for the trial of all issues joined in any of the king's courts of record at Westminster, and in the superior courts, both civil and criminal, of the three counties palatine, and in all courts of assize, nisi prius, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, such issues being respectively triable in the county in which every man so qualified respectively shall reside, and shall also be qualified and liable to serve on grand juries in courts of sessions of the peace, and on petty juries, for the trial of all issues joined in such courts of sessions of the peace, and triable in the county, riding, or division, in which every man so qualified respectively shall reside," including the new county of London, 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89. The qualifications, it will be seen, do not apply to grand jurors except for general or quarter sessions (as to the qualifications of grand jurors, see ante, p. 72), nor to common jurors in the city of London; see 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 50, and 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 88 (2). The qualifications for jurors summoned for a coroner's inquest are not regulated by the Act of 1825 (see s. 52), but by s. 8 of the Coroners Act, 1887 : see In re Dutton [1892] 1 Q. B. 486; 61 L. J. Q. B. 190 : R. v. Waldo, 67 J. P. 103, and ante, p. 141. The Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 7), enacts, that " the qualification of persons as jurors in Wales shall be the same as the qualification of persons as jurors in England," and repeals the prior provision to the contrary.

Women jurors.]—By s. 1 of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 71) . . . " a person shall not be exempted by sex or marriage from the liability to serve as a juror : provided that . . . (b) any judge, chairman of quarter sessions, recorder or other person before whom a case is or may be heard may, in his discretion, on an application made by or on behalf of the parties (including in criminal cases the prosecution and the accused) or any of them, or at his own instance, make an order that the jury shall be composed of men only or of women only as the case may require, or may, on an application made by a woman to be exempted from service on a jury in respect of any case by reason of the nature of the evidence to be given or of the issues to be tried, grant such exemption.

" Rules of court may be made—(a) prescribing the manner in which jurors are to be summoned and to be selected from the panel; and (b) exempting from attendance as jurors any women who are for medical reasons unfit to attend; and (c) as to the procedure to be adopted on any application under this section relating to service on juries.

" Rules so made may require or authorise an application under this section, or any order thereon, to be made in interlocutory proceedings, and shall have full effect notwithstanding any existing rule of law or practice to the contrary.

" As respects any criminal court in England the expression ' rules of court ' means rules made by the Rule Committee established under the Indictments Act, 1915."

On the 15th October, 1920, the Rule Committee established under the Indictments Act, 1915, made the following rules :

1. All jury precepts, warrants, writs, lists and returns required to be issued or made under the Juries Acts, or any of them, shall include all women qualified and liable to serve as jurors, and the jurors' books shall be made up accordingly.

2. All persons qualified and liable to serve as jurors shall be summoned to serve on juries without distinction of sex, but otherwise as heretofore; provided that a husband and wife shall not both be summoned to serve on the same occasion.

3. The number of women appearing on any panel of jurors shall be in the same proportions, as near as may be, to the number of men appearing thereon as the total number of women is to the total number of men in the jurors' book or other list of jurors from which the panel is drawn.

Provided that it shall be the duty of the under-sheriff or other person upon whom is cast the duty of summoning jurors to secure that, wherever possible, there shall not be less than fourteen women on the jury panel.

Provided also that this rule shall not apply to grand juries.

4. On every trial by jury, the jury shall be a jury selected from the panel by ballot in manner prescribed by s. 26 of the Juries Act, 1825: provided that this rule shall be without prejudice to the power of the court under s. 17 of the Juries Act, 1870, to order that a special jury be struck according to the practice then prevailing; provided also that this rule shall not apply to grand juries.

5. Upon every jury summons served upon a woman there shall appear a notice that she may apply to the summoning officer for exemption from attendance as a juror on account of pregnancy or other feminine condition or ailment provided that such application is received by the summoning officer within three days of the receipt of the jury summons by the applicant.

6. The under-sheriff or other person upon whom is cast the duty of forming the jury panels may in his discretion exempt from attendance any woman who has been summoned to serve as juror, if he is satisfied by medical certificate or otherwise that on account of pregnancy or some other feminine condition or ailment she is, or will be, unfit to serve.

7. In any criminal case an application under s. 1 (b) of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919, that the jury shall be composed of men only or of women only shall be made in the Court in which such case is depending for trial, and except by leave of such court at the first sitting thereof.

Provided always that the said court may in its discretion hear the application at such time as may appear convenient.

8. Written notice of an intention to make an application under rule 7 shall be given not later than at the first sitting of the court by or on behalf of the prosecutor to the clerk of assize, clerk of the peace, or other proper officer of the court as the case may be, and similarly so far as possible, by or on behalf of an accused person to such proper officer of the court, and to the prosecutor and upon receipt of such last-mentioned notice it shall be the duty of the said officer of the court to communicate the effect thereof to the prosecutor when practicable.

9. For the purposes of any criminal case depending for trial in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice the words "the day fixed for the trial" shall be substituted for the words "the first sitting of the court" in rules 7 and 8.

10. These rules may be cited as the Women Jurors (Criminal Cases) Rules, 1920.

Burgesses.]—Under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 186, sub-s. 1), "every burgess of a borough having a separate court of quarter sessions or a borough civil court shall, unless by law exempt, or disqualified, be qualified and liable to serve on grand juries in the borough, and on juries for the trial of issues joined in either of those courts." By 23 H. 8, c. 13, burgesses worth 40*l.* in personalty are qualified as jurors to try felonies.

Aliens.]—By s. 8 of the Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), "aliens having been domiciled in England or Wales for ten years or upwards, if in other respects duly qualified, shall be qualified and shall be liable to serve on juries or inquests in England and Wales as if they had been natural-born subjects of the King; but, save as aforesaid, no man not being a natural-born subject of the King shall be qualified to serve on juries or inquests in any court or on any occasion whatsoever."

Disqualifications.]—By s. 10 of the same Act "no man who has been or shall be attainted (see ante, p. 163) of any treason or felony, or convicted of any crime that is infamous, unless he shall have obtained a free pardon, nor any man who is under outlawry, is or shall be qualified to serve on juries or inquests in any court or on any occasion whatsoever." Persons over sixty are exempt but not disqualified. Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306.

Exemptions.]—The privilege of exemption from serving on juries depends mainly upon s. 9 of the Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), which enacts that "The persons described in the schedule hereto shall be severally exempt (as therein specified) from being returned to serve, and from serving upon any juries or inquests whatsoever, and their names shall not be inserted in the lists of the persons qualified and liable to serve on the same, but, save as aforesaid, no man otherwise qualified to serve on such juries or inquests, shall be exempt from serving thereon, any enactment, prescription, charter, grant, or writ to the contrary notwithstanding." The exemptions extend to coroners' juries: In re Dutton [1892] 1 Q. B. 486; 61 L. J. Q. B. 190. A particular exemption given by the section to jurors of the city of Westminster was abolished by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89 (2), and such jurors are now liable to serve on any jury in the new counties of London and Middlesex, except at quarter sessions for Middlesex. Below is given the schedule (with the addition in italics of other exemptions added by the other statutes specified):—"PERSONS EXEMPT FROM SERVING ON JURIES. Peers; members of parliament; judges, clergymen; Roman Catholic priests; ministers of any congregation of Protestant Dissenters, and of Jews, whose place of meeting is duly registered, provided they follow no secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster; . . . barristers-at-law, certificated conveyancers and special pleaders, if actually practising; members of the society of doctors at law, and advocates of the civil law, if actually practising; . . solicitors, . . . if actually practising and having taken out their annual certificates and their managing clerks and notaries public in actual practice; officers of the courts of law and equity, and of the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical courts, including therein the courts of Probate and Divorce, and the clerks of the peace or their deputies, if actually exercising the duties of their respective offices; coroners; gaolers and keepers of houses of correction, and all subordinate officers of the same; keepers in public lunatic asylums; members and licentiates of the Royal College of Physicians in London, if actually practising as physicians; members of the Royal Colleges of Surgeons in London, Edinburgh and Dublin, if actually practising as surgeons; apothecaries certificated by the Court of Examiners of the Apothecaries Company, and all registered medical practitioners (a) and registered pharmaceutical chemists if actually practising as apothecaries, medical practitioners, or pharmaceutical chemists respectively (see also 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 35); and registered dentists if they so desire (41 & 42 Vict. c. 33, s. 30); officers of the navy, army, militia, and yeomanry, while on full pay; all soldiers in his majesty's regular forces (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58, s. 147); and officers and men in the territorial forces of the Crown (7 Edw. 7, c. 9, s. 23 (4)); the members of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board: and of the London Port authority (8 Edw. 7, c. 68, s. 39); the master, wardens, and brethren of the Corporation of Trinity House of Deptford Strond; pilots licensed by the Trinity House of Deptford Strond, Kingston-upon-Hull, or Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and all masters of vessels in the buoy and light service employed by either of those corporations, and all pilots licensed under any Act of Parliament or charter for the regulation of pilots (see 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60. part x.); the household servants of his majesty, his heirs and successors; the Postmaster-General and any officers of the Post Office (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 43), commissioners of customs, and officers, clerks, or other persons acting in the management, service [39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 9], or collection of the customs, commissioners and collectors of inland revenue, and officers or persons appointed by the commissioners of inland revenue or employed by them or under their authority or direction in any way relating to the duties of inland revenue (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21, s. 8: general or additional commissioners of income tax, as to the counties in which they dwell so long as they hold a certificate under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19, s. 40); sheriffs' officers; officers of the rural and metropolitan police (see also 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 10), magistrates of the metropolitan police courts, their clerks, ushers, doorkeepers, and messengers; members of the London County Council as to juries within the administrative county of London [53 & 54 Vict. c. ccxlii. s. 26], members of the council of a county of a city or town corporate so far as relates to service on the trial of indictments removed into the adjoining county at large (38 G. 3, c. 52.

s. 11); members of the council of the muncipal corporation of any borough, and every justice of the peace assigned to keep the peace therein, and the town clerk and treasurer for the time being of every such borough, so far as relates to any jury summoned to serve in the county where such borough is situate; burgesses of every borough in and for which a separate court of quarter sessions shall be holden so far as relates to any jury summoned for the trial of issues joined in any court of general or quarter sessions of the peace in the county wherein such borough is situate; justices of the peace so far as relates to any jury summoned to serve at any sessions of the peace for the jurisdiction of which he is a justice; officers of the Houses of Lords and Commons," and registrars of births, deaths, and marriages; 7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 18. "No person whose name shall be in the jury book as a juror shall be entitled to be excused from attendance on the ground of any disqualification or exemption other than illness not claimed by him at or before the revision of the list by the justices of the peace, and a notice to that effect shall be printed at the bottom of every jury list." 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 12. That section does not apply to customs officials exempted by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 9, supra.

Jury lists.]—The mode of preparing jury lists, returning the names of persons qualified as jurors, making up the jury book, and summoning the juries in counties, is prescribed by the Juries Act, 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50), ss. 8-10, 12, 14, 20, 22, 25, as amended by the County Common Juries Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7, and 1 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 1; the Juries Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 107), ss. 4-6, 8-14, and the Juries Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77), ss. 11, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, as modified by the Local Government Act, 1888, and the London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14).

The clerk of the county council in every administrative county in England and Wales is required on or before the 20th July in every year to issue his precept, according to the form given in the schedule to 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, to the [churchwardens and] overseers of the poor of the several parishes and townships within the administrative county for which he acts, requiring them to make out, before the 1st September then next ensuing, a true list of all men residing within their respective parishes and townships qualified and liable to serve on juries according to 6 G. 4, c. 50, and also to perform and comply with all other the requisitions in the said precepts contained (25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, s. 4, as modified by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 83 (6)). The [churchwardens and] overseers then make out their lists, and fix a copy on the principal door of every public place of religious worship within their parish or township on the three first Sundays in September; 6 G. 4, c. 50, ss. 8, 9; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, s. 6; and at a special petty sessions, held in the last week in September (or at such adjournment thereof as is mentioned in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, s. 8), these lists are produced, and the justices then strike out the names of any persons not qualified, or not able to serve by reason of any infirmity, and insert the names of any qualified persons omitted; 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 10. The justices cannot state a special case as to priority of law arising on the review of the lists: Hagmaier v. Willesden Overseers [1904] 1 K. B. 316; 73 L. J. K. B. 638. The lists duly corrected and allowed by the justices present at such petty sessions are transmitted by their clerk to the clerk of the county council. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, s. 9; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 83 (6). The lists are then copied into The Jurors' Book by the clerk of the county council, which book is delivered by him to the sheriff, to be used from the 1st of January, for one year. 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 12; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, s. 10; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 83 (6).

In the county of London the duty of making out the lists devolves on the town clerk of each metropolitan borough in substitution for the overseers, etc., of the parishes comprised therein. 62 & 63 Vict. c. 14, ss. 11 (1), 25. In rural parishes the churchwardens are no longer concerned with jury lists. 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 5 (2).

Summoning jurors.]—6 G. 4, c. 50, provides (s. 20) that "the court of King's Bench, and all courts of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, [and] the courts of sessions of the peace in England . . . and Wales, shall respectively have and exercise the same power and authority as they have heretofore had and exercised, in issuing any writ or precept, or in making any award or order, orally or otherwise, for the return of a jury for the trial of any issue before any of such courts respectively, or for the amending or enlarging the panel of jurors returned for the trial of any such issue; and the return to every such writ, precept, award or order, shall be made in the manner heretofore used and accustomed in such courts respectively, save and except that the jurors shall be returned from the body of the county, and not from any hundred, or any particular venue within the county, and shall be qualified according to this Act." (a).

Writs of venire facias juratores and distringas juratores and habeas corpora juratorum are abolished (see Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 112), and the juries summoned under the present procedure are as effectual for all purposes as those summoned under the old writs (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 115).

High Court.]—The summoning of jurors for trial at the Royal Courts of Justice is regulated by a rule of January 15, 1903, made under s. 89 (3) of the Local Government Act, 1888 :—

" The sheriffs of the county of London and of the county of Middlesex respectively shall execute and obey all precepts and process which the judges or proper officers of the High Court of Justice shall award, issue, and direct unto them respectively, and shall whenever required and commanded summon and return from the said county of London and the said county of Middlesex a competent number of persons qualified according to law to inquire of, present, and try all offences, issues, and other matters cognizable by the justices of the High Court of Justice within the boundaries of the county of the county of London and the county of Middlesex, and the persons returned from the said county of London and the said county of Middlesex whether taken wholly from the said county of London or from the said county of Middlesex or taken indiscriminately from the said county of London and the said county of Middlesex shall have authority to inquire of, present, hear, try and determine all such offences and other matters and all issues and all matters of fact arising out of such trials or relating thereto as if the said county of London and the said county of Middlesex were one county;" and see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 147; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 112.

Assizes.]—Before the justices of assize go their circuits, (b) they issue their precept, signed and sealed, to the sheriff, to cause all persons bound to attend at the assizes to appear before them on an appointed day, and requiring him (among other things) to return a competent number of good and lawful men of the body of the county, qualified as jurors according to law: and the judges are empowered by the Jurors Act, 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50), s. 22, as amended by the County Common Juries Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 and 1 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 1, if they think fit, to direct the sheriff to "summon and empanel such number of jurors, . . . as such judges shall think fit to direct, to serve indiscriminately on the criminal and civil side," dividing them into two sets, the first to serve at the beginning of the assizes, for such time as the judge may direct, and the second to serve for the residue of such assizes. (For forms of judges' precepts to the sheriff, see 4 Chit. Cr. L. 171, 174). "The precept issued by the justices of assize to the sheriff to summon jurors for the assizes shall direct that the jurors be summoned for the trial of all issues, whether civil or criminal, which may come on for trial at the assizes." 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 105. It is the duty of the sheriff, upon the receipt of the precept for the return of jurors, to return the names of men contained in the jurors' book for the current year and no others. 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 14. "No juror shall be liable to any penalty for non-attendance on any jury, unless the summons requiring him to attend be duly served six days at least before the day on which he is required to attend; but no longer period than such six days shall in any case be required between the service and such last mentioned day." 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 20. Jurors may be summoned by post, provided that when any summons shall be served by post, two additional days shall be allowed for the transmission of such summons by post, over and above the number of days required by law for the service of a summons, before the day on which the juror is required to attend. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, s. 11. As to dispensing with attendance, see 8 Edw. 7. c. 41, s. 1.

The sheriff must for 1*s.* deliver a copy of the jury panel to any party requiring the same. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 106.

Quarter sessions.]—For county quarter sessions jurors are summoned by the sheriff in pursuance of the precept issued by the clerk of the peace. The mode of summons is the same as in the case of assize jurors. Jurors may be summoned in the same way for general sessions of the peace or for adjourned quarter sessions (1 & 2 Vict. c. 4). For borough quarter sessions jurors are summoned by the borough clerk of the peace in the manner directed by s. 186 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50). As to dispensing with the attendance of jurors, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 41, s. 1.

Special jury.]—The qualification of special jurors is regulated by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 6. A special jury cannot be given in treason or felony, 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 30 : R. v. Mayne, 32 W. R. 95 : Gray v. R., 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 123. By s. 30 of the Juries Act, 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50), the High Court (King's Bench Division), may, upon the motion of any prosecutor, relator, plaintiff, or demandant, or of any defendant in any case whatsoever, whether civil or criminal, or on any penal statute, excepting only indictments for treason or felony, depending in the said court, order and appoint a special jury to be struck before the proper officer of each respective court, for the trial of any issue joined in any of the said cases, and triable by a jury, in such manner as the said courts respectively have usually ordered the same, and every jury so struck shall be the jury returned for the trial of such issue. As to the old practice, see 1 Chit. Cr. L. 522. As to the cost of such jury, see 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 34 (post, p. 188) : R. v. Moate, 3 B. & Ad. 237; 1 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 78. By the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 108, as modified by 61 & 62 Vict. c. 6, s. 1 (1), the precept issued by the judges of assize for the sheriff to summon jurors for the assizes directs the sheriff to summon a sufficient number of special jurymen, to be mentioned therein, to try the special jury causes at the assizes; and the persons summoned in pursuance of such precept shall be the jury for trying the special jury causes at the assizes, subject to such right of challenge as the parties are now by law entitled to; and a printed panel of the special jurors so summoned shall be made, kept, delivered and annexed to the nisi prius record, in like time and manner, and upon the same terms as hereinbefore provided with reference to the panel of common jurors; and upon the trial the special jury shall be balloted for, and called in the order in which they shall be drawn from the box, in the same manner as common jurors : Provided that the court or a judge, in such case as they or he may think fit, may order that a special jury be struck according to the present practice, and such order shall be sufficient warrant for striking such special jury, and making a panel thereof for the trial of the particular cause. And see 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 112, 113, as to the course to be pursued in cases where a special jury is desired.

As to special juries in London and Middlesex, see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, ss. 15-18; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89. The nomination and reduction of the jurors in London and Middlesex is regulated by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 110, and 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 89. The rule committee of the Supreme Court has, under the Special Juries Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 6, s. 1), power to make rules as to special juries, and thereby to repeal or alter rules made under any previous Act as to special juries. This enactment is aimed at what remains of the Regulae Generales of Hilary Term, 1853 (see Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 12, tit. Supreme Court E., p. 417).

By the Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 147, in the King's Bench Division, "Either the prosecutor or the defendant may, except in case of felony, obtain a special jury upon giving the like notice as is required in civil cases, and the court or a judge may, at the instance of either party, order that a special jury be struck as provided for by the Juries Act, 1870 (see s. 17), or any subsequent Juries Act. And when the jury has been reduced either party may draw up an order at the Crown Office directing the sheriff to summon that particular jury at such time and place as may be required." As to the mode of striking and reducing such a jury, see Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 113. The jury thus reduced may be challenged for cause. Barrett v. Long, 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1076; 3 H. L. C. 395. As to the Irish Practice, see R. v. Parnell, 14 Cox, 505; and Huband, Grand Jury, etc., in Ireland. "The person or party who shall apply for a special jury shall pay the fees for striking such jury, and all the expenses occasioned by the trial of the cause by the same, and shall not have any further or other allowance for the same upon taxation of costs, than such person or party would be entitled to in case the cause had been tried by a common jury, unless the judge before whom the case is tried shall immediately after the verdict certify under his hand, upon the back of the record, that the same was a cause proper to be tried by a special jury." 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 34. This enactment applies to criminal cases: R. v. Pembridge, 3 Q. B. 901; 12 L. J. (Q. B.) 47; and R. v. Rowlands, 2 Den. 364, 371 (n.).

If sufficient special jurors are not in attendance, a tales for deficiency or default of jurors may be awarded, by warrant of the attorney-general for a tales de circumstantibus. See Att.-Gen. v. Parsons, 2 M. & W. 23: R. v. Dolby, 2 B. & C. 104; 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 939; 1 C. & K. 238; 1 L. J. K. B. 241: R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785, post, p. 197). For the form of this warrant and the mode of obtaining it, see Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 115, 545. If an order is made for a special jury, and the parties proceed to trial before a common jury, it would seem that the verdict cannot be afterwards impeached. R. v. Perry, 5 T. R. 453.

Jury de medietate linguæ.]—S. 5 of the Naturalization Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 14), took away the right which aliens previously had to be tried by a jury de medietate linguæ, when indicted of any felony or misdemeanor, but not when indicted of high treason. See Arch. Cr. Pl. 143 (16th ed.): R. v. Manning, 1 Den. 467; 19 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 1: Levinger v. R., L. R. 3 P. C. 282; 39 L. J. P. C. 49. Under that Act (s. 5) an alien is now "triable in the same manner as if he were a natural-born subject."

Panel.]—On a trial for high treason the accused has a right to a copy of the jury panel. 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 7; 7 Anne, c. 21, s. 14. But he has no such right in cases of felony or misdemeanor. R. v. Dowling, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 381; 3 Cox, 509: R. v. Nicholson, 8 Dowl. 422: R. v. Mitchel, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 599; 3 Cox, 1.

Challenge of grand jurors.]—Vide ante, p. 72.

Challenge of petty jurors.]—When a sufficient number of persons charged with felony have pleaded, and put themselves upon the country, the clerk of the court addresses the prisoners thus: "Prisoners, these good men that you shall now hear called are the jurors who are to pass between our sovereign lord the King and you upon your respective trials [or who are to try you]; [or in a capital case, upon your life and death;] if therefore you or any of you will challenge [or object to] them or any of them, you must challenge them as they come to the book to be sworn, and before they are sworn, and you shall be heard." The officer then proceeds to call twelve jurors from the panel, calling each juror by name and address. When a full jury has appeared (R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785, 916; 4 B. & Ald. 471), and before any juror is sworn (R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 85, 122; 9 C. & P. 129, 137: R. v. Key, 2 Den. 347; 3 C. & K. 371; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 35: R. v. Giorgetti, 4 F. & F. 546), the proper time comes for the exercise of the right of challenge or exception to the jurors returned to pass upon the trial (a). The party intending to challenge the array may pray a tales to complete the number, and then object to the panel. Bull (N. P.) 307: R. v. Dolby, 1 C. & K. 238; 1 L. J. K. B. 241. If the defendant was not allowed his full right of challenge the proceedings might be quashed on writ of error, and a venire de novo awarded. Gray v. R., 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 117; 11 Cl. & F. 427. In England appeal is substituted for writ of error. See post, pp. 300 et seq.

Challenges are of two kinds: 1. To the array, when exception is taken to the whole number impanelled, and 2. To the polls, when individual jurymen are excepted against. They are also divided into challenges peremptory, made to the polls without reason assigned, and challenges for cause, which may be to the array or the polls for some definite reason assigned and proved. Both are comparatively rare in England, and the leading modern cases on the subject have occurred in Ireland. See Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, 611.

Peremptory challenge.]—Jurors impanelled to try collateral issues may not be challenged peremptorily. R. v. Radcliffe, 1 W. Bl. 3. At common law, the crown might, it seems, have challenged peremptorily any number of jurors, without alleging any other reason than "quod non boni sunt pro rege." 2 Hawk. c. 43, ss. 2, 3; 2 Rolle Abr. 645; Co. Litt. 156 b; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 10. But this power was taken away by 33 Edw. 1, c. 4 (ordinacio de inquisitionibus), Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 11 (a). Under the present law in all inquests to be taken before the High Court (King's Bench Division), and all courts of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, and courts of sessions of the peace in England and Wales (see 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 20), "wherein the King is a party, howsoever it be, notwithstanding it be alleged by them that sue for the King, that the jurors of those inquests, or some of them, be not indifferent for the King, yet such inquests shall not remain untaken for that cause; but if they that sue for the King will challenge any of those jurors, they shall assign of their challenge a cause certain, and the truth of the same challenge shall be inquired of according to the custom of the court; and it shall be proceeded to the taking of the same inquisitions as it shall be found, if the challenges be true or not, after the discretion of the court." 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 29. The crown, however, is entitled to ask that a juror should "stand by," i.e., to postpone consideration of the cause of challenge until the panel has been "gone through" and it appears that there will not be jurors enough to try the defendant, if the peremptory challenges are allowed to prevail. R. v. Parry, 7 C. & P. 836: R. v. Geach, 9 C. & P. 499; and this was done in R. v. Casement [1917] 1 K. B. 98; and see 2 Hale, 271; 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 3; Staundf. 162. By "going through" or "perusing" the panel is meant ascertaining according to the usual practice of the court, and what may reasonably be expected, that there are no more jurors in the panel whose attendance can be procured, and that unless the crown be put to show its cause of challenge, "the inquest would remain untaken." Mansell v. R., 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 831; 8 E. & B. 54; Dears. & B. 375; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 4. In that case the panel contained fifty-four names: eighteen, when called, were peremptorily challenged by the prisoner; fifteen were, on the prayer of the counsel for the crown, the prisoner's counsel objecting, and praying that cause of challenge should be shown, ordered to "stand by"; and nine were elected and tried to be sworn. This left twelve other persons only on the panel, and those twelve were at that time absent, deliberating upon their verdict in another case. The name of W. J. (the first person who upon the prayer of the counsel for the crown had been ordered to stand by) was then again called, and the counsel for the crown again prayed that he might be ordered to stand by, upon which the counsel for the prisoner prayed that cause of challenge should be shown forthwith. At that moment, and before any judgment was given, the twelve persons who sat as a jury in the other case came into court and gave their verdict; and the counsel for the crown then prayed that W. J. should be ordered to stand by until those twelve persons had been called; but the counsel for the prisoner demanded that W. J. should be sworn, unless cause of challenge to him were shown. The court ordered that W. J. should stand by; and three persons, the number required to complete the jury, were taken from the said twelve jurors, and elected and tried to be sworn (sic), although the prisoner's counsel objected that such persons ought to be called in their proper order with other persons in the panel, and that J. J., the person whose name stood in the panel immediately after that of W. J., ought to be next called. Upon a writ of error, the record stating all these facts, it was held that, under the circumstances, the panel was not gone through, so as to put the crown to assign cause of challenge, until the twelve persons who came into court before the complete formation of the jury had been called; that W. J.

(a) Probably a challenge to the array should be made before any juror is sworn. In the case of a challenge as to the polls it is submitted that it is time enough to challenge before the swearing of the juror objected to begins. R. v. Brandreth, 32 St. Tr. 755, 777, Abbott, C.J. It has been held in two Colonial cases that a challenge to an individual juror for cause is not too late if made before the juror has done any act showing assent to take the oath, even if he is touching the book. R. v. Freeman, 6 Queensland L. J. 281, Griffith, C.J.: R. v. Longland, 6 Id. 56. In R. v. Longland the juror with the book in his hand said that he was opposed to capital punishment, and a challenge for cause was allowed to be made.

was properly ordered to stand by the second time; and that the three persons required to complete the jury were properly called and taken from the said twelve, without again calling the whole panel through in its order. Id.

The defendant is bound to show all his causes of objection before the prosecutor can be called upon to show the grounds of his challenges. 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 3; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 10; 14 Bl. Com. 353 (a).

Peremptory challenges are allowed to the defence in all cases of treason and felony, but not in cases of misdemeanor. Co. Litt. 56; 4 Bl. Com. 352; 3 Co. Inst. 27; Com. Dig. Challenge (C.) : Gray v. R., 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 117, 134; 11 Cl. & F. 427; and see Levinger v. R., L. R. 3 P. C. 282; 39 L. J. P. C. 49. The number of peremptory challenges allowed in cases of high treason is thirty-five (7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 2), except where the treason charged is the compassing of the King's death, and an overt act alleged in the indictment is the assassination of the King, or any direct attempt against his life, or against his person, whereby his life may be endangered, or his person may suffer bodily harm (39 & 40 G. 3, c. 93); or attempts against the person of the King; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, ss. 1, 2. In the last-mentioned cases of high treason, and in murder and all other felonies, the number is twenty. 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 29; and see 2 Hawk. c. 43, ss. 7, 8; 2 Hale, 268; Bac. Abr. Challenge, 70, 74, 75, 217; Fost. 106; Co. Litt. 156; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 9, 10. "If any person indicted for any treason, felony, or piracy, shall challenge peremptorily a greater number of the men returned to be of the jury than such person is entitled by law so to challenge in any of the said cases, every peremptory challenge beyond the number allowed by law in any of the said cases shall be entirely void, and the trial of such person shall proceed as if no such challenge had been made." 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 3. And when he has exhausted his challenges he cannot withdraw one objection in order to challenge a fresh juror. R. v. Parry, 7 C. & P. 836. In Ireland only twenty peremptory challenges are allowed even in high treason. 9 G. 4, c. 54, s. 9 : Smith O'Brien v. R., 2 H. L. C. 465; 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 43, 359. In misprision of treason, it seems to be doubtful whether peremptory challenge is allowed. See 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 5; 3 Co. Inst. 27 a. In cases of misdemeanor, though no right of peremptory challenge exists in England, it is usual for the officer, on application to him, to abstain from calling any reasonable number of names objected to either by the prosecutor or by the defendant, taking care that enough are left to form a jury; and this practice has often been sanctioned by the Court. See Dick, Q. S. 485, 486 (6th ed.) : R. v. McGowan, 11 Ir. C. L. Rep. 207, cit.; 3 Ir. Jur. (N. S.) 403 : R. v. Blakeman, 3 C. & K. 97. As to Ireland, see 39 & 40 Vict. c. 78, s. 10; Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, 649, 652.

Where several defendants are tried by the same inquest for treason or felony, each has a right to the full number of his challenges; and if they refuse to join in their challenges, the crown has the right of trying each, or any number of them less than the whole, separately from the others, so as to prevent the delay which might arise from the whole panel being exhausted by the challenges.

Fost. 106; Co. Litt. 156; 2 Hale, 268 : R. v. Charnock, 3 Salk. 81. But in R. v. Fisher, 3 Cox, 68, Platt, B., refused an application that principal and accessory should be allowed to sever their challenges.

Challenge for cause.]—Challenges for cause may be made either by the prosecutor or by the defendant (2 Hale, 271; 2 Co. Inst. 431), whether the indictment is for treason, felony, or misdemeanor. See R. v. Lovett, 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1177, 1179. They are either to the array or to the polls, i.e., to individual jurymen.

1. To the array. The challenge to the array is either a principal challenge, or for favour. The right applies whether the array is the panel originally summoned or the array of a tales; R. v. Dolby, 1 C. & K. 238. "The only ground upon which the challenge to the array is allowed by the English law is the unindifferency or default of the sheriff." O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 799. The causes of a principal challenge to the array are—where the sheriff is the actual prosecutor or party aggrieved : R. v. Sheppard, 1 Leach, 101 : R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785; 4 B. & Ald. 471; or where, at the time of the return, he was of actual affinity to either party, or if he returns any jurors at the request of the prosecutor or defendant, or any person whom he believes to be more favourable to the one side than to the other; and see R. v. Adams [1832] Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, p. 614; or if the defendant have an action depending against the sheriff; Co. Litt. 156 a; or if the sheriff, or the bailiff who made the return, is under the distress of the prosecutor or the defendant; or if he has any pecuniary interest in the event; or if he is counsel, attorney, servant, or arbitrator, in the same cause; Id.; Bac. Abr., Juries (E.); Huband, p. 618; or a subscriber to a society which is the prosecutor. R. v. Dolby, 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 939; 2 B. & C. 104; 1 C. & K. 238. It is no ground of challenge for unindifferency on the part of the sheriff, that the officer had omitted to summon one of the twenty-four special jurymen returned on the panel. R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785, 916; 4 B. & Ald. 471. It is a legal ground of challenge to the array that the sheriff has selected the jurors on the ground of religion; R. v. O'Doherty, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 831; but not that he has returned a large proportion of the panel of a different religion from the defendant. Smith O'Brien v. R. [1849] 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 31. The religion of the jurors must be strictly proved, and the mere fact of a disproportion is not sufficient to prove unindifferency. R. v. Mitchel, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 599 : R. v. O'Doherty, supra: R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 795, 871 : Smith O'Brien v. R., 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 20, 24, 31. There can be no challenge to the array on the ground of unindifferency in the master of the crown office, he being the officer of the court expressly appointed to nominate the jury; in such case the only remedy is to apply to the court to appoint some other officer to nominate the jury. R. v. Edmonds, supra. It is no ground of challenge to the array that the justices have omitted the duties prescribed by the Jury Acts in making out the list of names for the special or common jury book, and that the sheriff has summoned the jury from a jury book so improperly made. O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 69, 78 : R. v. Burke, 10 Cox, 519. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 91 (Irish Jury Act), s. 9 (rep.), which in this respect corresponded with s. 12 of the English Juries Act, 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50), directed a jurors' book to be made up in each year for use in the year following, and declared that such book should be in use from the 1st of January for and during one year. In November, 1865, at a sitting of a special commission, a panel was returned from the then existing jury book; the jurors were not then called, but the sitting was duly adjourned to 19th January, 1866, at which time the trial took place, when the jurors named in the return of 1865 were called. It was held that this was not a ground of challenge to the array: Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306; and also that the fact of one of the jurors who had been duly returned in November, 1865, not being on the list for 1866, was no ground of challenge to him. Id.

The default of the sheriff may also be a ground of principal challenge to the array; as where, the array being returned by the bailiff of a liberty, the sheriff returns it as from himself. If, however, the sheriff returns a panel from the liberty, it will be good, though he may be liable to the lord of the franchise in an action. Co. Litt. 156 a.; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 1. Since 1825 (6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 13), the jury has been taken from the body of the county: and this has put an end to the ancient right of challenging the array "for want of hundredors," i.e., if four persons were not returned from the hundred in which the offence was alleged to have been committed; 2 Hale, 272; Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, 632.

There may also be a challenge to the array for favour, in cases where the ground of partiality is less apparent and direct: as where one of the parties is tenant to the sheriff; or the sheriff and one of the parties are united in the same office; or where a relationship exists between the children of one of the parties and of the sheriff or officer; or where the sheriff has an action of debt depending against one of the parties. Co. Litt. 156 a; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 1; 3 Dyer, 367 a, pl. 40.

A principal challenge to the array being founded upon some manifest partiality or error, if the cause is truly alleged, the court, it is said, will at once quash the array, and direct a new panel to be summoned. Where cause exists for a challenge to the array, on the ground of relationship or otherwise, the party liable to the objection may himself suggest it to the court, in order to prevent the delay which the challenge would occasion, and pray that the coroners or elisors, as the case may be, may be ordered to summon the jury. See 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 913. If the other party admits the fact, and agrees to the prayer, the order will at once be made; if he refuses, denying the existence of the cause of challenge, he cannot afterwards avail himself of it. Co. Litt. 157 b; 3 Dyer, 367 a, pl. 40; Baynham's case, 5 Co. Rep. 36 b.

A challenge to the array ought to be in writing, so that it may be put upon the record, and the other party may demur or counter-plead to it. See R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785; 4 B. & Ald. 471: Mayor, etc., of Carmarthen v. Evans, 10 M. & W. 274. The form of it is as follows:—

"And now at this day come as well the said J. N., who for our said lord the King prosecutes in this behalf, as the said J. S., in his own proper person, and the jury thereupon empanelled likewise come; and thereupon the said J. S. challenges the array of the said panel, because he says that the said panel was arrayed and returned by A. B., esquire, now and at the time of the making of the array aforesaid sheriff of the said county of ——, which said sheriff is a kinsman of the said J. N., to wit [setting out the mode of relationship]; and this he is ready to verify, whereupon he prays judgment, and that the said panel may be quashed." And see Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, 623, 689.

The ground of objection must be specifically stated in the challenge: for a challenge merely stating that the sheriff "has not chosen the panel indifferently and impartially, as he ought to have done, and that the panel is not an indifferent panel," is demurrable as being too general: R. v. Hughes, 1 C. & K. 235. The opposite party may either plead to the challenge, traversing the cause of challenge alleged, or demur to it for insufficiency. In the latter case, the party challenging joins in demurrer, and the matter is determined by the court. The demurrer and joinder may be in the following form:—

"And the said J. N. says, that the said challenge of the said J. S. to the array of the panel aforesaid is not sufficient in law to quash the array of the panel aforesaid, and that there is no necessity for him the said J. N., nor is he obliged by the law of the land to answer to the said challenge in manner and form as it is above alleged; wherefore he prays judgment, and that the array of the said panel may be affirmed," etc.

"And the said J. S. says, that he hath above alleged sufficient matter in law, in the said challenge by him above made to the array of the panel aforesaid, to quash the array of the said panel, which he the said J. S. is ready to verify; which said matter the said J. N. does not deny, nor in any manner answer thereto: wherefore the said J. S., as before, prays judgment, and that the array of the said panel may be quashed," etc.

If the challenge is overruled, the judgment should be entered on the original record. R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785; 4 B. & Ald. 471. The challenge might be removed as part of the record, where it was a principal cause of challenge. 3 Woodeson, s. 347: see O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1.

If the party pleads to the challenge (in the case, at least, of a challenge for favour, and also, it would seem, in the case of a principal challenge, unless the fact is admitted or apparent) two triers are appointed by the court, who are sworn, and charged to try whether the array is an impartial or a favourable one. See Smith O'Brien v. R., 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 2 H. L. C. 469. These triers are generally two of the jurymen returned. The court may, however, in its discretion, refer the trial to two coroners, or to two solicitors, or to any other two indifferent persons. 2 Hale, 275; 4 Bl. Com. 353; 2 Rolle Rep. 363. If the triers find against the challenge, the trial proceeds as if no such challenge had been made. The improper disallowance of a challenge was ground, not for a new trial, but for a venire de novo. R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785; 4 B. & Ald. 471. If the triers find in favour of the challenge, a new venire is awarded to the coroners, or, if they are interested, to elisors. See 1 Co. Inst. 158; Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland 480, 1084. In R. v. Dolby, 2 B. & C. 104; 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 939, the defendant, who was indicted for a seditious libel, challenged the array on the ground that the prosecution was instituted by an association called the Constitutional Association, and that one of the sheriffs who returned the jury was one of the association. The counsel for the prosecution thereupon took issue; the chief justice then appointed two triers to try the issue, who were accordingly sworn; the counsel for the defendant first addressed these triers, and called a witness, who proved that the sheriff named was one of the subscribers to the association. The counsel for the prosecution then addressed the triers, and called a witness to prove that the sheriff had ceased to be a subscriber to or member of the association before the return of the jury process, but failed in proving it for want of the letter by which the sheriff had withdrawn himself from it. The triers were then addressed by the counsel for the defendant in reply. The chief justice summed up. The triers found in favour of the challenge, and the case was adjourned.

2. To the polls.]—Even where a challenge to the array is determined against the party making it, he may afterwards still have his challenges to the polls, i.e., he may object separately to each juryman as he is about to be sworn. The challenge must be made when the juror comes to the book to be sworn, and before the officer begins to administer the oath; and it comes too late afterwards, although made before the juror has taken the oath: R. v. Brandeth, 32 St. Tr. 755, 777: R. v. Giorgetti, 4 F. & F. 546; and see ante, p. 189. These challenges are generally made by parol, although, in strictness, if any question is raised upon the validity of such a challenge, it must be entered in due form on the record. The defendant, in treason or felony, may for cause shown object to all or any of the jurors called, after exhausting his peremptory challenges of thirty-five or twenty. Challenges to the polls for cause are, like those to the array, either principal or to the favour. The principal causes of challenge are:—1. Propter honoris respectum; where a peer or lord of parliament is sworn on a jury for the trial of a commoner. Co. Litt. 156 b; 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 11; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 6; 3 Bl. Com. 361. 2. Propter defectum, i.e., on account of some personal objection, as alienage (R. v. Sutton, 8 B. & C. 417; 6 L. J. (O. S.) M. C. 162), infancy (R. v. Tremearne, 5 B. & C. 254; 4 L. J. K. B. 157), or want of the requisite qualification (as to which see ante, p. 179). Where a disqualified juror is on the panel, and no challenge is made, the presence of the juror does not invalidate the trial. R. v. Sutton, supra. A juror may challenge himself, by stating that he is not qualified, and he may be examined upon oath. R. v. Cook, 13 St. Tr. 311, 316, 317. 3. Propter affectum, i.e., on the ground of some presumed or actual partiality in the juror: as if he be of affinity to either party, or in his employment, or is interested in the event, etc.; in short, any such presumed partiality as would be a good ground for a principal challenge to the array in the case of the sheriff will be also a cause of principal challenge to an individual juror. See R. v. Martin, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 925: R. v. Swain, 2 M. & Rob. 112; 2 Lew. 116. So where an actual partiality is shown to exist, or if the juror has expressed a desire as to the result of the trial, or an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants, or personal ill will. In R. v. O'Coigly, 26 St. Tr. 1191, 1231 (a trial for treason), a juryman was set aside on the trial because, on looking on the prisoners, he had uttered the words "damned rascals." A person who has acted as a grand juror on the finding of a bill of indictment may also be challenged for cause if returned to serve on the petty jury, either on the trial of that indictment or any other indictment for the same offence. 25 Edw. 3, stat. 5, c. 3; Y. B. 14 & 15 Edw. 3 (ed. Pike), p. xxvi. : R. v. Perceval, 1 Sid. 243 : R. v. Cook, 13 St. Tr. 311, 334 : R. v. Sullivan, 8 A. & E. 831; 8 L. J. (M. C.) 3. But a person who has sat upon a former petty jury, which convicted other defendants on the same indictment, is not therefore subject to challenge. See Co. Lit. 157 a; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 5; 3 Bl. Com. 363. And in R. v. Sawdon, 2 Lew. 117, it was held not to be a good ground of challenge that the juror who had sat on previous trials during the same assize had in no case returned a verdict for the crown. 4. Propter delictum, i.e., on the ground of infamy, which meant at common law conviction or attainder of treason, felony, perjury, conspiracy, or any other infamous offence, which had to be proved by the record of the conviction. Even a pardon would not remove this objection. 2 Hale, 278; Bac. Abr. Juries (E.) 2 : Brown v. Crashaw, 2 Bulstr. 154. Under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 10 (ante, p. 182), the disqualification attaches to jurors who are under outlawry, or attainted of treason or felony, or convicted of any infamous crime, unless a free pardon has been obtained.

Challenges to the polls for favour are where, although the juror is not so manifestly partial as to render him liable to a principal challenge, there are, nevertheless, reasonable grounds for suspicion that he will act under some prejudice or undue influence; as where he has been entertained in the house of the party, or has been arbitrator in the same matter; or where the juror and the party are fellow-servants, or any other cause exists, such as would constitute in the case of the sheriff a ground of challenge to favour to the whole panel. Co. Litt. 157 b; Bac. Abr., Juries (E.) 5.

Trial of challenges.(a)]—In the case of a principal challenge to the polls, if the partiality is made apparent to the satisfaction of the court, the challenge is at once allowed, and the juror set aside. But in the case of a challenge to the favour, it is left to the discretion of two triers who are sworn and charged to try whether the juror challenged stands indifferent between the parties. See Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, 688. The form of oath to a trier, to try whether a juror stands indifferent or not, is as follows :—

"I swear by Almighty God that I will well and truly try whether A. B., one of the jurors, stands indifferent between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoner at the bar, and a true verdict give according to the evidence." (See R. v. O'Coigley, 26 St. Tr. 1191).

No challenge of triers is admissible. The form of oath to be administered to a witness sworn to give evidence before the trial is as follows :—

"I swear by Almighty God that the evidence which I shall give to the court and triers upon this inquest shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." (See R. v. Dolby, 1 C. & K. 238 : R. v. Hughes, 2 Cr. & D. (C. C. Ir.) 396).

If the challenge is to the first juror called, the court may select any two indifferent persons as triers; if they find against the challenge, the juror will be sworn, and be jointed with the triers in determining the next challenge; but as soon as two jurors have been found indifferent, and have been sworn, every subsequent challenge will be referred to their decision. R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 792 n., 922 : and see 2 Hale, 275; Co. Litt. 158 a; Bac. Abr., Juries (E.) 12.

The burden of proof of a challenge for cause is on the person who makes it (R. v. Savage, 1 Mood. 51); and he is not entitled to question a juror before challenging him. R. v. Dowling, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 381 : R. v. Stewart, 1 Cox, 174. When the challenge has been made, the trial proceeds by witnesses called to support or defeat the challenge; the juror objected to may also be examined on the voire dire, as to his qualification, or the leaning of his affection. R. v. Dowling, supra. But he cannot be interrogated as to matters which tend to his own discredit, as whether he has been convicted of felony, etc., nor, as it seems, whether he has expressed a hostile opinion as to the guilt of the defendant. R. v. Cook, 13 St. Tr. 311, 334 : R. v. Edmonds. 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785; 4 B. & Ald. 471 : R. v. Martin, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 925; and see 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 28. In R. v. Cuffey, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 467. a trial at the Central Criminal Court, in 1848, for treason-felony, the latter question was asked of some of the jurors who had been challenged for favour, the attorney-general not objecting on the part of the crown.

"I swear by Almighty God that I will true answer make to all such questions as the court shall demand of me."

If the panel is so far exhausted by challenges that a full jury is not left, a fresh panel will be returned; and thereupon the defendant may challenge peremptorily any of those who were sworn before, if they are again returned; but he cannot challenge them for cause, except for some matter which has arisen since the original hearing. 2 Hale, 274.

Whether or not a criminal court has the power to award a tales, in case of deficiency or default of jurors, without a warrant from the attorney-general, is not a settled point. Hawkins (Book 2, c. 43, s. 18) says : "But it seems that such a tales cannot be prayed for by the King upon an indictment or criminal information, without a warrant from the attorney-general, or an express assignment from the court before which the inquest is taken"; see 1 Lev. 223; but Blackstone says (4 Comm. 355), "If by reason of challenges, or default of jurors a sufficient number cannot be had of the original panel, a tales may be awarded as in civil causes, till the number of twelve is sworn." In R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785, which was tried at Warwick, tales men were allowed (without any warrant from the attorney-general) to supply deficiencies in the panel of a special jury struck in the crown office. Blackstone's opinion is supported as to high treason by R. v. Stapleton [1680] Sir T. Raym. 367; 4 Co. Inst. 161 : R. v. Dolby, 2 B. & C. 104; 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 939.

The judge, however, may, where the panel is exhausted and no tales has been prayed, order the sheriff to return a panel instanter without further precept; and the justices of the peace in sessions may issue a special precept commanding the sheriff to return a sufficient number of jurors immediately, and thereupon may proceed with the trial at the then sessions. 2 Hale, 28, 261, 265; see 6 G. 4, c. 50, s. 20 : R. v. Cropper, 2 Mood. 18.

The usual, and in general the proper course, where the panel is exhausted by challenges of the prisoner and the crown, or of either, before a full jury remains is to call over the whole panel again in the same order as before, but omitting those peremptorily challenged by the prisoner; and then, as each juror again appears, whichever party challenges must show cause. If no sufficient cause of challenge is shown, the jurors are then sworn. R. v. Geach, 9 C. & P. 499. See ante, p. 189. And no cause of challenge to the jury, whether to the array or to the polls, can be taken, either in arrest of judgment, or otherwise, after the jury are sworn. R. v. Sheppard, 1 Leach, 101 : R. v. Sutton, 8 B. & C. 417; 6 L. J. (M. C.) 102. No challenge can be made, nor need the jury be re-sworn, when the defendant is given in charge to them on an allegation of a previous conviction, under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 11, or 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 111, or on a charge of being a habitual drunkard under 61 & 62 Vict. c. 60, s. 1, sub-s. 2 : R. v. Key, 2 Den. 347; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 35, or a habitual criminal within 8 Edw. 7, c. 59. By the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 116, which now regulates most of such cases, see ante, p. 172, and the Inebriates Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 60), and the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 59, s. 10 (4)), where the prisoner is given in charge to the jury on an allegation of a previous conviction, or of being a habitual drunkard or habitual criminal, it is not necessary to swear the jury again (and therefore no challenge can be taken). See R. v. Turner [1910] 1 K. B. 346, 357; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 176. The same rule appears to apply to the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), s. 37, which contains a like provision.

The court, even without challenge taken, may and ought to excuse a juror on the panel when called, if he is obviously unfit to perform his duty, from physical or mental infirmity, or semble, from expressed unindifferency. Mansell v. R., 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 831; 8 E. & B. 54; Dears. & B. 375; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 4.

Oath of jurors.]—In cases of felony every juror, as he or she comes to the book to be sworn, unless challenged, shall take the oath (or make solemn affirmation) in the following form :—"I swear by Almighty God [or I do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm] that I will well and truly try and true deliverance make between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoners at the bar whom I shall have in charge, and a true verdict give according to the evidence."

In cases of misdemeanour only, the oath (or affirmation) is as follows :—"I swear by Almighty God [or I do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm] that I will well and truly try the several issues joined between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoners at the bar, and a true verdict give according to the evidence."

Giving the prisoner in charge to the jury.]—When a full jury have been sworn [or have made solemn affirmation in cases where they are entitled to do so, under 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46, s. 2, or any other Act, see post, Evidence, p. 479]; in cases of treason and felony, the crier (at the assizes) makes proclamation in the following form :—"If any one can inform my lords the King's justices, or the King's attorney-general, or the King's serjeant, or this inquest to be taken between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoners at the bar, of any treason, murder, felony, or misdemeanor, committed or done by them, or any of them, let him come forth, and he shall be heard; for the prisoners stand at the bar upon their deliverance." Cro. Cir. Com. 6 (10th ed.). The clerk of the court then calls the prisoner to the bar and says :—"Members of the jury, the prisoner stands indicted for that he, on the" [stating the substance of the offences charged in the indictment]. "To this indictment he has pleaded not guilty and it is your charge to say, having heard the evidence, whether he be guilty or not." As to the mode of giving the prisoner in charge to the jury where he is indicted for any offence committed after a previous conviction, see ante, p. 172; or as a habitual criminal, post, tit. Habitual Criminal; or for an offence again the Coinage Offences Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99), committed after a previous conviction for an offence against any Act relating to the coin, see s. 37 of that Act : and where he is indicted for a crime as defined by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, after previous conviction for a crime, see s. 9 of that Act (ante, p. 172).

PROCEEDINGS AT TRIAL.

Publicity of trial.]—At common law a trial on indictment or criminal information must be held in a public court with open doors. In dealing with certain classes of criminal trials the presiding judges not infrequently order women and young persons to leave the court, and there is undoubted power to exclude or eject persons who disturb the proceedings. All proceedings under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908, must be held in camerâ (8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 5); and by s. 114 of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), in addition to, and without prejudice to, any powers which a court may possess to hear proceedings in camera, the court may, where a person who in the opinion of the court is under sixteen is called as a witness in any proceedings in relation to an offence against, or any conduct contrary to decency or morality, direct the exclusion from the court of all persons other than members or officers of the court or parties to the case, their counsel or solicitors, or persons otherwise directly concerned in the case and other than bonâ fide representatives of a newspaper or press agency; and by s. 115 children under fourteen other than infants in arms are prohibited from being present in court during the trial of other persons except for so long as their presence is required as witnesses or otherwise for the purposes of justice.

Official shorthand note.]—By s. 16 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), shorthand notes are to be taken of the proceedings at the trial of any person on indictment, coroner's inquisition, or criminal information, who if convicted is entitled or may be authorised to appeal under that Act. This provision is directory, and absence of a shorthand writer does not invalidate the proceedings. R. v. Rutter, 73 J. P. 12; 25 T. L. R. 73: R. v. Elliott, 25 T. L. R. 572; 2 Crim. App. R. 171. The provision does not extend to the trial of peers for treason or felony (s. 20 (2)), nor to the trial of indictments at common law in relation to the non-repair or obstruction of a highway, public bridge, or navigable river (s. 20 (3)).

Trial of foreigner.]—Where a foreigner, who is ignorant of the English language, is being tried and is not defended by counsel, the evidence given at the trial must be translated to him, and compliance with this rule cannot be waived by the prisoner. If he is defended by counsel, the evidence must be translated to him unless he or his counsel express a wish to dispense with the translation and the judge thinks fit to permit the omission, but the judge should not permit it unless he is of opinion that the accused substantially understands the nature of the evidence which is going to be given against him. R. v. Lee Kun [1916] 1 K. B. 337; 85 L. J. (K. B.) 515; 114 L. T. 421; 25 Cox, C. C. 304; 80 J. P. 166; 32 T. L. R. 225; 11 Cr. App. R. 293.

Separate trials.]—When persons jointly indicted plead not guilty the court has power to order them to be separately tried where the interests of justice seem to require that course to be taken. See Kel. (J.) 8, 9 (treason); R. v. Ahearne, 2 Ir. C. L. Rep. 381; 6 Cox, 7 (conspiracy): R v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox, 217. Separate trials are sometimes ordered where evidence admissible against one of the accused would not be admissible against the others, or where the separate trial would enable the accused to call for the defence persons jointly indicted with him, or where it is desired to call an accomplice on behalf of the crown, or where persons jointly indicted for felony refuse to join in their challenges (a) (ante, p. 191). Prisoners jointly charged with a crime, and also charged severally with being habitual criminals, should be tried separately on the habitual criminal charge. R. v. Taylor, 5 Cr. App. R. 168, explaining R. v. Blake, 4 Cr. App. R. 275.

Case for the prosecution.]—In a criminal prosecution on indictment the prosecutor has no right to address the jury or state the case for the prosecution. R. v. Brice, 2 B. & Ald. 606; 1 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 352; R. v. Gurney, 11 Cox, 414. He must be represented by counsel, or by a solicitor in those courts of quarter sessions at which solicitors have a right of audience. It is usual for counsel to make an opening statement: see Re Morgan, 6 Cox, 116, Talfourd, J. When the prisoner is given in charge to the jury, the counsel for the prosecution, or, if there is more than one, the senior counsel, opens the case to the jury, stating the leading facts upon which the prosecution rely. In doing so he ought to state all that it is proposed to prove, as well declarations of the prisoners as facts, so that the jury may see if there is any discrepancy between the opening statements of counsel, and the evidence afterwards

adduced in support of them; per Parke, B., R. v. Edward, 1 M. & Rob. 257: R v. Hartel, 7 C. & P. 773: R. v. Davis, Id. 785; unless such declarations should amount to a confession, when it would be improper for counsel to open them to the jury. R. v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548, Bosanquet, J., and Patteson, J.: R. v. Davis, 7 C. & P. 785, Parke, B.: R. v. Orrell, Id. 774, Bolland, B.: R. v. Creau, 8 Cox, 509 (Ir.). The reason for this rule is, that the circumstances under which the confession was made may render it inadmissible in evidence. The general effect only of any confession said to have been made by a prisoner ought, therefore, to be mentioned in the opening address of the prosecuting counsel. When any additional evidence, not mentioned in the opening speech of counsel, is discovered in the course of a trial, counsel is not allowed to state it in a second address to the jury: R. v. Courvoisier, 9 C. & P. 362. In opening a case for murder, the counsel for the prosecution may put hypothetically the case of an attack upon the character of any particular witness for the crown, and say that should any such attack be made he shall be prepared to meet it. Per Tindal, C.J., and Parke, B., R. v. Courvoisier, 9 C. & P. 362. It was also ruled by the same learned judges that counsel may read to the jury the observations of a judge in a former case, as to the nature and effect of circumstantial evidence, provided that he adopts them as his own opinions, and makes them part of his address to the jury. And in R. v. Dowling, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 381, 390; 3 Cox, 509, the attorney-general having, in his opening address to the jury, made reference to disturbances in Ireland, Erle, J., held, on objection made, that such reference was not irregular, it being laid down in books of evidence that allusion might be made in courts of justice to notorious matters, even of contemporaneous history. And see R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 795, 917.

After counsel's opening statement, witnesses are called for the prosecution, who make oath (or affirmation) as follows:—"I swear by Almighty God [or I do solemnly, sincerely and truly declare and affirm] that the evidence I shall give to the court and jury sworn between our sovereign lord the King and the prisoners at the bar shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

As to the order of proof, the mode of examining witnesses, and the evidence necessary to support the case for the prosecution, see post, Evidence, p. 349.

Summing up the evidence on behalf of the prosecution.]—Since 1865 the counsel for the prosecution has been entitled, in certain cases, at the close of the examination of his witnesses, to sum up his evidence. This right was first given, and the circumstances under which it may be exercised are defined, by s. 2 of Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), the first clause of which enacts that:—"If any prisoner or prisoners, defendant or defendants, shall be defended by counsel, but not otherwise, it shall be the duty of the presiding judge, at the close of the case for the prosecution, to ask the counsel for each prisoner or defendant so defended by counsel, whether he or they intend to adduce evidence, and in the event of none of them thereupon announcing his intention to adduce evidence, the counsel for the prosecution shall be allowed to address the jury a second time in support of his case, for the purpose of summing up the evidence against such prisoner or prisoners, or defendant or defendants." The right of the prosecution to sum up the evidence is not taken away, nor is any right to reply given by the calling of the prisoner as sole witness on his own behalf under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 3). The effect of that Act is to postpone the summing up by the prosecution until after the prisoner's evidence has been given : R. v. Sherriff, 20 Cox, 334. In that summing up counsel for the prosecution may comment on the prisoner's evidence : R. v. Gardner [1899] 1 Q. B. 150; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 42 (C. C. R.).

In exercising this right of summing up evidence, it is not lawful for counsel for the prosecution to comment on the failure of the prisoner, or of the husband or wife of the prisoner, to give evidence; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (b) (post, p. 206), and see R. v. Dickman, 74 J. P. 449; 26 T. L. R. 640; 5 Cr. App. R. 135; nor is it proper to comment on the absence of other witnesses for the defence, unless it might be fairly expected that witnesses would be called; or to urge, on a trial for rape, as an argument for conviction, that otherwise the character of the prosecutrix would be blasted. R. v. Rudland, 4 F. & F. 495 : R. v. Puddick, Id. 497. Prosecuting counsel should regard themselves rather as ministers of justice assisting in its administration than as advocates. Ib., per Compton, J., at p. 499, approved in R. v. Banks [1916] 2 K. B. 621; 12 Cr. App. R. 74. Nor is it the duty of counsel for the prosecution to sum up in every case in which the prisoner's counsel does not call witnesses, or only calls the defendant. His right ought only to be exercised in exceptional cases, such as where erroneous statements have been made and ought to be corrected, or when the evidence differs from the instructions. R. v. Holchester, 10 Cox, 226, Blackburn, J. : R. v. Berens, 4 F. & F. 842, 843, and n. See also R. v. Webb, Id. 862.

The Defence.]—As to the right to be defended by counsel and to the provision of legal aid for poor prisoners, see ante, pp. 174 et seq. When a prisoner is not defended by counsel the judge should inform him of his right to cross-examine witnesses, to address the jury, and to give evidence on his own behalf or to make an unsworn statement, but omission to give this information does not invalidate the conviction. See R. v. Saunders, 63 J. P. 24; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 296 : R. v. Warren, 73 J. P. 359; 25 T. L. R. 633. The following form is suggested for giving the prisoner this information :—" You have heard the evidence against you. Now is the time for you to make your defence. You may go into the witness box, and give evidence on oath, and be cross-examined like any other witness, or you may make a statement to the jury from where you stand." Where a prisoner is undefended, he cross-examines the witnesses for the prosecution if he thinks fit, or the judge does so on his behalf. On a trial for misdemeanor in the Court of King's Bench in 1824, where the defendant reserved to himself the right to address the jury, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses, he was allowed to do so, and his counsel was allowed to argue any points of law that arose in the course of the trial, and to suggest questions to him for the cross-examination of the witnesses; R. v. Parkins, Ry. & M. 166; 1 C. & P. 548. But the defendant cannot have counsel to examine and cross-examine the witnesses, and reserve to himself the right of addressing the jury. R. v. White, 3 Camp. 98; and see R. v. Redhead Yorke, 25 St. Tr. 1003, 1021. Where the accused is defended by counsel, who intends to call witnesses in support of the defence, counsel has the right to open his case to the jury before calling his evidence. R. v. Hill, 7 Cr. App. R. 1. As to the order in which witnesses must be called, see post, p. 46. As to counsel's discretion in conducting the defence, see R. v. Denoel, 114 L. T. 1215; 32 T. L. R. 473; 12 Cr. App. R. 49.

Where two prisoners are jointly indicted, and are defended by different counsel, there has been some difference of opinion as to the order in which counsel should cross-examine and address the jury. In R. v. Esdaile, 1 F. & F. 213, 237, Lord Campbell directed counsel to cross-examine and address the jury in the order of seniority at the bar. But the general, and it is submitted the established rule, is that in the absence of agreement between counsel the court will call on them to cross-examine and address the jury in the order in which the names stand on the indictment; R. v. Barber, 1 C. & K. 434: R. v. Meadows [1856] 2 Jur. (N. S.) 716, and n., Erle, J.: and see Fletcher (P. O.) v. Crosbie, 2 M. & Rob. 417, Rolfe, B.: R. v. Richards, 1 Cox, 62.

Statement to jury by defendant when defended by counsel.]—The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), which enables every person charged with an offence to be a witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings, provides (s. 1 (h)) that "Nothing in this Act shall affect . . . any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn." This provision entitles the prisoner if he chooses to make an unsworn statement instead of giving evidence on his own behalf. R. v. Pope, 18 T. L. R. 717. It was at one time held that the effect of s. 1 of the Trials for Felony Act, 1836 (6 & 7 W. 4, c. 114), which first enabled counsel appearing on behalf of persons charged with felony to address the jury on their behalf, was to take away from the prisoner, except under some very special circumstances, any right to make any statement on his own account: R. v. Rider, 8 C. & P. 539: R. v. Malings, Id. 242: R. v. Manzano, 2 F. & F. 64: R. v. Stephens, 11 Cox, 669. But for many years prior to the coming into operation of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, it was the practice of the judges to allow a prisoner defended by counsel to address the jury as well as his counsel. There was, however, considerable divergence of opinion as to whether the prisoner should address the jury before or after his counsel. Where the prisoners, who were indicted for robbery with violence, were defended by counsel, but called no witnesses, Hawkins, J., after consultation with Lush, J., allowed the prisoners to give their own account of the matter to the jury, after their counsel had addressed the jury: R. v. Hull and Smith, Yorkshire Winter Assizes at Leeds, 3rd Feb., 1880. Where a prisoner, who was indicted for murder, was defended by counsel, but called no witnesses, Bowen, J., allowed the prisoner to read a statement of his account of the matter to the jury, before his counsel addressed them: R. v. Blades, Yorkshire Summer Assizes at Leeds, 2nd Aug., 1880. Under similar circumstances, Stephen, J., allowed a prisoner to make a statement to the jury before his counsel addressed them, at the same time warning the prisoner that his making such statement would give the counsel for the prosecution a right to reply : R. v. Doherty, 16 Cox, 306. This ruling was followed by Phillimore, J., in R. v. Pope, 18 T. L. R. 717, so far as relates to the making of the statement by the prisoner before his counsel's address. In R. v. Millhouse, 15 Cox, 622, Lord Coleridge, C.J., stated that by the resolution of the majority of the judges, in which he did not agree, but by which he was bound, it was undoubtedly competent for a prisoner defended by counsel to make a statement of facts to the jury, and that the proper time for his doing so was after his counsel had addressed the jury. His Lordship, however, held that the resolution did not extend to cases where it was proposed to call witnesses for the prisoner. See the cases collected in Warburton's Leading Cases in the Criminal Law (5th ed.), 521 et seq., and 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1998 et seq. In R. v. Shimmin, 15 Cox, 122, Cave, J., stated that the rule which the judges intended to follow was that a prisoner defended by counsel should make his statement at the conclusion of his counsel's speech, with this proviso, that what he stated from the dock should be subject to the right of reply on the part of the prosecution as being in the nature of new matter laid before the jury. And see R. v. Everett, 97 C. C. C. Sess. Pap. 335, Hawkins, J. : R. v. Doherty, supra. In R. v. Sherriff, 20 Cox, 334, Darling, J., held that a prisoner's unsworn statement must be made before the counsel for the prosecution sums up the case and before his own counsel addresses the court.

Address of prisoner's counsel.]—"In the opinion of the judges it is contrary to the administration and practice of the criminal law as hitherto allowed, that counsel for prisoners should state to the jury as alleged existing facts matters which they have been told in their instructions, on the authority of the prisoner, but which they do not propose to prove in evidence." Resolution of the Judges, 26th Nov., 1881 : R. v. Shimmin, 15 Cox, 122. This resolution settled the practice as to a matter upon which there had previously been a conflict of authority. See R. v. Butcher, 2 M. & Rob. 228; R. v. Beard, 8 C. & P. 142 : R. v. Weston, 14 Cox, 346.

Where two prisoners are indicted together, and one of them only is defended by counsel, it seems to be in the discretion of the judge whether he will allow the prisoner who is undefended to make his statement to the jury before or after the address of counsel. Where A., B., and C. were jointly indicted, and separately defended, and at the close of the case for the prosecution C. was acquitted, and was then called as a witness for A., and his evidence tended to criminate B., it was held that B.'s counsel had a right to cross-examine C., and to reply. R. v. Burdett. Dears. 431; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 6 Cox, 458 : R. v. Woods, 6 Cox, 224 : R. v. Copley, 4 F. & F. 1097. The same rule applies where one defendant is called as a witness and inculpates a co-defendant. R. v. Hadwen and Ingham [1902] 1 K. B. 882; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 581; 18 Cox, 206.

The counsel for the prisoner, or the prisoner himself, is entitled, at the close of the examination of his witnesses, to sum up his evidence. This right was first given by Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 2, in the following terms :—"Upon every trial for felony, or misdemeanor, whether the prisoners or defendants, or any of them, shall be defended by counsel or not, each and every such prisoner or defendant, or his or their counsel respectively, shall be allowed, if he or they shall think fit, to open his or their case or cases respectively; and after the conclusion of such opening or of all such openings, if more than one, such prisoner or prisoners, or defendant or defendants, or their counsel, shall be entitled to examine such witnesses as he or they may think fit, and when all the evidence is concluded to sum up the evidence respectively; and the right of reply, and practice and course of proceedings, save as hereby altered, shall be as at present." In summing up the evidence for the defence, the prisoner's counsel is not to be restricted merely to remarks on the evidence of his witnesses, but if anything occurs to him as desirable to say on the whole case, he is at liberty to say it. R. v. Wainwright, 13 Cox, 171, Cockburn, C.J.

The reply.]—If any witness other than the defendant is called for the defence or any document is put in evidence for the defence, the counsel for the prosecution has the right to reply. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 2, supra; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36 (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898), s. 3: see R. v. Gardner [1899] 1 Q. B. 150: 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 42. Where two or more are jointly indicted and one called as a witness in his own behalf gives evidence hostile to another defendant, and is cross-examined on behalf of that defendant, the prosecution does not thereby obtain a right of reply against the latter defendant. R. v. Haddwen [1902] 1 K. B. 882; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 581. Even if the evidence for the defendant is only as to his character, it gives, in strictness, a right of reply, although the right is never now exercised in such case. R. v. Stannard, 7 C. & P. 673; 6 L. J. (M. C.) 37: R. v. Corfell, 1 Cox, 123, Alderson, B. But see R. v. Dowse, 4 F. & F. 492. And even if the defendant's counsel, in addressing the jury, introduces new matter (whether it be the prisoner's own account of the transaction or not), without intending to support it by evidence, it has been said that the prosecutor will be entitled to a reply. R. v. Butcher, 2 M. & Rob. 228. The better opinion, however, is that a reply in such case is not as of right, but may be allowed by the judge in his discretion. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 887, D., and authorities there cited. The decision to the contrary in R. v. Shimmin, 15 Cox, 122 (ante, p. 204), will probably not now be followed since the passing of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, as the course adopted in R. v. Sherriff, 20 Cox, 334 (ante, pp. 195, 197), gives the prosecutor adequate opportunity for dealing with any new matter introduced by a prisoner in an unsworn statement. If two prisoners are indicted jointly for the same offence, and one calls witnesses, it seems that the counsel for the prosecution is entitled to a general reply; but if the offences are separate, and they might have been separately indicted, he can reply only on the case of the party who has called witnesses: R. v. Hayes, 2 M. & Rob. 155: R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118. Where four prisoners were jointly indicted for an assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and one of them was not defended by counsel and the other three were defended by counsel, and the prisoner who was not defended by counsel called witnesses to prove an alibi, but no witnesses were called on behalf of the other three prisoners, it was held that counsel for the prosecution had no general right of reply, but that the proper course was that he should sum up his evidence generally and reply upon the evidence called by the prisoner who was not defended by counsel, before the counsel for the other prisoners addressed the jury: R. v. Kain, 15 Cox, 388, Stephen, J. So where several prisoners were jointly indicted, and defended by several counsel, and witnesses were called for some of the prisoners but not for the others, it was held that the counsel for the prosecution should first reply to the counsel of those prisoners who called no witnesses, but that the counsel for the prisoners who called no witnesses had the right to address the jury last. R. v. Burns, 16 Cox, 195, Day and Wills, JJ.; and see Warburton, Leading Cases on Cr. Law (5th ed.), 518 et seq. Where on an indictment against several defendants, one of them calls evidence which is applicable to the cases of all, the prosecution has a general right of reply, although the other defendants call no witnesses: R. v. Hayes, 2 M. & Rob. 155: R. v. Davis, 17 T. L. R. 164, Lawrance, J.; but where such evidence is applicable only to the case of the defendant calling it, and does not apply to the cases of the other defendants, the right of the prosecution to reply is confined to the case of the defendant calling the evidence. R. v. Trevelli, 15 Cox, 289, Hawkins, J. Where the prosecution has the right of reply, no comment may be made by the prosecution on the failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (b); and see ante, p. 202. By leave of the court fresh evidence may be called by the defence during the final speech for the prosecution where there are special circumstances. R. v. Morrison, 75 J. P. 272; 22 Cox, 214.

Rebutting evidence.]—Whenever evidence has been given by the defence introducing new matter which the crown could not foresee, counsel for the prosecution may be allowed to give evidence in reply to contradict it. The matter is one within the discretion of the judge at the trial. R. v. Crippen [1911] 1 K. B. 149, at p. 156; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 290; 22 Cox, 289; 103 L. T. 705; 75 J. P. 141; 27 T. L. R. 69; 5 Cr. App. R. 255, commenting on R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 85, 386; 9 C. & P. 159; and see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2327; R. v. Whelan, 8 L. R. (Ir.) 314; 14 Cox, 595 (Ir.): R. v. Coyle, 7 Cox, 74, Erle, J.; R. v. McGavaran, 6 Cox, 64. In R. v. Haynes, 1 F. & F. 666, the court refused to allow a new witness to be called for the crown after the close of the case. This discretion is not confined to cases where evidence has been given by the defence on matters which the crown could not foresee. R. v. Crippen, supra. Where evidence in rebuttal is given, counsel for the defence is entitled to comment on the evidence so called. R. v. Frost, supra. Evidence may also be called to meet evidence of good character given for the defence. R. v. Rowton, L. & C. 520; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 57; 10 Cox, 25: R. v. Hughes, 1 Cox, 44, Rolfe, B.; contra, R. v. Burt, 5 Cox, 284, Martin, B. Where the defendant is called this class of evidence may be rendered unnecessary by the result of his cross-examination under 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (f), post, p. 458. Where, after the examination of witnesses as to facts on behalf of a prisoner, the judge (there being no counsel for the prosecution) called back and examined a witness for the prosecution, the prisoner's counsel was invited to cross-examine him again. R. v. Watson, 6 C. & P. 653. In a proper case evidence may be called to rebut an alibi. See R. v. Froggatt, 4 Cr. App. R. 115.

Right of reply by law officers of the crown.]—"In those crown cases in which the attorney or solicitor-general is personally engaged, a reply, where no witnesses are called for the defence, is to be allowed as of right to the counsel for the crown, and in no others." Resolution of the Judges of Dec., 1884; 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 3, n. (c). (a). This disposes of doubts formerly existing as to the right of reply in such cases by counsel other than the law officers appearing for a government office. See 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1019.

View of locus in quo by the jury.]—It is competent for the judge, even without the consent of the prosecutor, to permit the jury to view the locus in quo at any time during the trial, if it is within the county of trial (R. v. Whalley, 2 C. & K. 376; 2 Cox, 231), and even after his summing up, but he should take precautions not to allow improper communications being made to them at the view. R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 113. A view may be permitted on an indictment for perjury. Anon., 2 Chit. Rep. (K. B.) 422. Where it is alleged that the jury upon the view have received evidence in the absence of the judge and of the prisoner, it is for the court before which the trial takes place to investigate the facts, and ascertain whether the alleged irregularity has occurred. R. v. Martin, supra. Quære, whether if such irregularity is found to have occurred, the Court of Criminal Appeal, as successor to the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, has jurisdiction to order a venire de novo, as for a mis-trial. Id.

Adjournment of trial.]—If the trial is not concluded on the same day on which it began, the judge has authority to adjourn it from day to day without the defendant's consent. R. v. Castro, L. R. 9 Q. B. 350, 356; 43 L. J. (Q. B.) 105, 108: R. v. Stone, 25 St. Tr. 1155; 6 T. R. 530: R. v. Hardy, 24 St. Tr. 199, 418. The adjournments should be stated in the record if it is made up. O'Brien v. R., 26 L. R. Ir. 451. But for the purposes of a record at assizes they are treated as one day. Whitaker v. Wisbey, 6 Cox, 109, 114; 21 L. J. (N. S.) C. P. 116, Maule, J.

On the adjournment of a trial for treason, treason felony, or murder, the jury must be kept together during the night, under the charge of officers of the court (60 & 61 Vict. c. 18, s. 1), and they may have a fire and reasonable refreshment at their own expense (33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 23). If during the trial a juryman suddenly becomes so ill as to necessitate his leaving the jury box temporarily the trial may be adjourned for a while, a bailiff being sworn to take charge of the absent juryman if there is time to administer the oath, and the utmost care being taken that not the slightest opportunity is afforded of tampering with the juryman. During his absence he may receive such medical assistance as is necessary. The rule prohibiting the separation of jurymen does not mean that under no circumstances must there be any actual physical separation. R. v. Crippen [1911] 1 K. B. 149; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 290; 22 Cox, 289; 5 Cr. App. R. 255. See also R. v. O'Neill, 3 Cr. & Dix (Ir.) 146.

In the case of misdemeanors the judge may by the common law allow the jury to separate during any adjournment of the court, and to return to their homes for the night, being charged not to converse with any person on the subject of the trial. In the case of all felonies (except treason felony and murder) by the Juries Detention Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 18, s. 1), the court may, if it sees fit, at any time before the jury consider their verdict, permit the jurors to separate in the same way as the jury upon the trial of any person for misdemeanor are at common law permitted to separate. If the jurors separate without leave, the jury must be discharged and a new trial had. R. v. Ward, 10 Cox, 573; 16 W. R. 281; R. v. Kinnear, 2 B. & Ald. 462.

Where the witnesses for the prosecution have all been examined, the court may order the case to be adjourned, and direct another trial to be proceeded with, in order to give time for the production of a thing essential to the proof, but deposited at a distance. R. v. Wenborn, 6 Jur. 267. And on a trial for murder, where, after the opening address of counsel, it was discovered that, in consequence of the detention of a railway train, the witnesses for the prosecution had not arrived in the city, the trial was adjourned, the jury were locked up, a fresh jury was called into the jury box, and another case was proceeded with. R. v. Foster, 3 C. & K. 201, Maule, J.; but see R. v. Parr, 2 F. & F. 861, Wightman, J. It has been held that adjournments except to the next day are not permitted after the jury is sworn or evidence called. R. v. Tempest, 1 F. & F. 381, Watson, B.: R. v. Robson, 4 F. & F. 360, Willes, J. But in R. v. Fernandez, 2 F. & F. 862 n., Cockburn, C.J., said that the trial could be temporarily suspended for part of a day, the jury remaining in the box. And it has been held that the judge may, in a proper case, adjourn the trial after the close of the case for the defence. R. v. Jackson, 83 J. P. 196; 14 Cr. App. R. 41. Where a juror was sworn in a wrong name, and the objection was taken before verdict, Maule, J., intimated that the proper course was to discharge the jury, and try the prisoners again; although, there being in that case a second indictment against the prisoners, such a course was there not necessary. R. v. Metcalf, 3 Cox, 220. The same course was adopted when it was discovered during the trial that a juror not on the panel had been sworn. R. v. Phillips, 11 Cox, 142. But it has been held that a trial must proceed, although in the course of the proceedings it is discovered that one of the jurors is related to the prisoner on trial, as that fact was a ground of challenge. R. v. Wardle, C. & Mar. 647. But under 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21, a judgment after verdict cannot be stayed or reversed because a person has served on the jury who has not been returned as a juror, nor for a misnomer or misdescription of any juror. R. v. Tremearne, 5 B. & C. 254; 4 L. J. (K. B.) 157, appears to be overruled by this enactment. The usual course is to swear a fresh juror in place of the one incapacitated, but to offer the prisoner in a case of felony his full right of challenge to the whole panel. R. v. Edwards, R. & R. 224; 3 Camp. 207. The trial must begin de novo, and the witnesses must be resworn and examined afresh; and it is not sufficient to reswear the witnesses and read over to them the judge's note of their evidence. R. v. Bertrand, L. R. 1 P. C. 520, 534; 36 L. J. P. C. 51, which disapproves the contrary practice followed in R. v. Beere, 2 M. & Rob. 242, and R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 495. But in R. v. Monson, 67 J. P. 267; 47 Sol. J. 529, 574; 38 L. J. Newsp. 261: and R. v. Lawrence, 25 T. L. R. 374, those cases were followed, R. v. Bertrand not being cited.

Where a prisoner indicted for felony and given in charge of the jury was by sudden illness rendered incapable of remaining at the bar, the jury were discharged and the prisoner on recovering was tried before another jury: R. v. Stevenson, 2 Leach, 546.

In a case of misdemeanor, where the defendant became ill and was carried out of court, the judge discharged the jury, being of opinion that the case should not proceed in the absence of the defendant, even with the consent of his counsel. R. v. Streek, 2 C. & P. 413: contrà, R. v. Castro, ante, p. 207. That case was, however, tried in the Court of Queen's Bench. If a prisoner so taken ill recovers during the assizes, he may be put on his trial again, the trial being, of course, begun de novo. R. v. Streek, supra.

Summing up.]—The court, in summing up the case after the conclusion of the evidence and arguments, usually directs the jury as to the law applicable, and may go through and comment on the evidence given, and may even comment on the absence of evidence which might have been given, including the failure of the defendant to exercise his right to give evidence under 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, if in the discretion of the court such comment appears to be fair and just. See R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 83; Kops v. R. [1894] A. C. 650; 64 L. J. P. C. 34. The existence of this power to direct the jury is recognised in Fox's Libel Act, 32 G. 3, c. 60, s. 2. But a summing up is not so essential a part of a trial where the facts are clear and the law simple that the Court of Criminal Appeal will necessarily quash a conviction where there has been no summing up. R. v. Newman, 9 Cr. App. R. 134; though it may do so where the trial was such that the jury ought to have had the assistance of the presiding judge in directing them and he has failed to do so. R. v. Finch, 85 L. J. (K. B.) 1575; 25 Cox C. C. 537; 12 Cr. App. R. 77. The facts must be left to the jury to decide, and the judge must not usurp their function. R. v. West, 4 Cr. App. R. 179: R. v. Beeby, 6 Cr. App. R. 138: R. v. Frampton, 12 Cr. App. R. 202. But he is entitled to express his opinion strongly in a proper case provided he leaves the issues to the jury. R. v. O'Donnell, 12 Cr. App. R. 219. As to appeal generally, see further, post, p. 300.

VERDICT.

Verdict.]—After the conclusion of the trial the jury are not allowed to separate until they have considered and returned their verdict, or have been discharged for failure to agree. See post, p. 221. On a trial for treason or felony the jurors must deliver their verdict in open court, in the presence of the defendant. In R. v. Haynes [1900] 64 J. P. 441, Ridley, J., allowed a verdict of not guilty to be found on a coroner's inquisition for manslaughter on proof that the accused was certified insane and detained in an asylum; but the case was exceptional, and affords no precedent. In cases of misdemeanor, the presence of the defendant is not essential during the trial or at the return of the verdict. Co. Litt. 227 b; 3 Co. Inst. 110; Bac. Abr., Verdict (B.). It is doubtful whether a verdict can be received and recorded on Sunday. Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 317, 322; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 121. The verdict is delivered by the foreman; and the assent of all the jurors to a verdict pronounced by the foreman in the presence and hearing of the rest, without their express dissent, is to be conclusively presumed. R. v. Wooller, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 111. The verdict in a criminal case is either (1) general, on the whole charge (which the jury are at liberty to find in all cases, both upon the law and facts of the case; Co. Litt. 228; 4 Bl. Com. 361): or (2) partial, as to a part of the charge; as where the jury find the defendant guilty on one or more counts of the indictment, and acquit him of the residue; or find him guilty on one part of a divisible count, and acquit him as to the residue; or find him guilty of an offence other than the full offence charged; vide infra: or (3) special, where the facts of the case alone are found by the jury, the legal inference to be derived from them being referred to the court. As to special verdicts, see post, p. 216. Where several defendants are included in the same indictment, the jury may find one guilty and acquit the others, and vice versâ. But if several are indicted for a riot, and the jury acquit all but two, they must acquit those two also, unless it is charged in the indictment, and proved, that they committed the riot together with some other person not tried upon that indictment. 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 8. And if, upon an indictment for a conspiracy, the jury acquit all the defendants but one, they must acquit that one also, unless it is charged in the indictment, and proved, that he conspired with some other person not tried upon that indictment. 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 8; 3 Chit. Cr. L. 1141: R. v. Thompson, 16 Q. B. 832; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 183: R. v. Manning, 12 Q. B. D. 241; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 85: R. v. Plummer [1902] 2 K. B. 339; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 805; 20 Cox, 269. And where a count in an indictment charged eight defendants with one conspiracy to effect certain objects a finding that three of the defendants were guilty generally, and that five of them were guilty of conspiracy to effect some, and not guilty as to the residue of these objects, was held bad and repugnant. O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 11 Cl. & F. 155; 8 Eng. Rep. 1061. The principle underlying that decision is that where there are two or more persons charged with conspiracy in the same count, the count is a single and complete count, and cannot be separated into parts. R. v. Manning (supra), per Coleridge, C.J.: R. v. Plummer (supra).

Verdict for lesser offence than charged in the indictment. 1. Common Law.]—At common law a defendant may not be convicted of an offence of an entirely different character from that charged in the indictment. For instance, he may not be convicted of misdemeanor on an indictment for felony, or of felony on an indictment for misdemeanor. For felony and misdemeanor are different things, and on an indictment for one there can be no conviction of the other, except under the express provisions of some statute. R. v. Thomas, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 141; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 42. Therefore where the prisoner was indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 12, for the felony of uttering counterfeit coin after a previous conviction for uttering, and the jury found him guilty of the subsequent uttering, but negatived the previous conviction, it was held that he could not be convicted of the misdemeanor of uttering. Id. So a prisoner indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 42 (now repealed and replaced by section 23 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5. s. 50)), of the felony of an assault with intent to rob, cannot be convicted of a common assault. R. v. Woodhall, 12 Cox, 240. Stokes (1926) 28 Cox 140

This rule is subject to the statutory exceptions stated below at pp. 213—215. But at common law a defendant may be convicted of a less aggravated felony or misdemeanor on an indictment charging a felony or misdemeanor of greater aggravation, provided that the indictment contains words apt to include both offences. See R. v. O'Brien, 75 J. P. 192; 22 Cox, 374; 27 T. L. R. 204; 6 Cr. App. R. 108. In other words, it is not necessary to prove the offence charged in the indictment to the whole extent laid, provided that the facts proved constitute an offence punishable by law, of which the defendant may by law be convicted on the indictment. R. v. Hollingberry, 4 B. & C. 329; 3 L. J. (K. B.) 226: R. v. Hunt, 2 Camp. 583; 31 St. Tr. 367, 408. Thus, where a statute annexes a higher degree of punishment to a common law felony or misdemeanor, if committed under certain circumstances, and, upon an indictment under the statute, the prosecutor proves the felony or misdemeanor to have been committed, but fails in proving it to have been committed under the circumstances specified in the statute, the defendant may be convicted of the common law felony or misdemeanor. 2 Hale, 191, 192.

By s. 39 (1) of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), where a prisoner is arraigned on an indictment for any offence, and can lawfully be convicted on such indictment of some other offence not charged in such indictment, he may plead not guilty of the offence charged in the indictment, but guilty of such other offence.

Upon an indictment for murder, if the prosecutor fails in proving the malice prepense, the defendant may be convicted of manslaughter: R. v. Mackalley, 9 Co. Rep. 67 b. On a charge of burglary and stealing goods, if no burglary is proved; or of robbery, if the property is not taken from the person by violence or putting in fear, the prisoner may be convicted of the simple larceny. 2 Hale, 302. Indeed, upon an indictment for burglary and stealing, the prisoner may be convicted either of burglary, of entering a dwelling-house in the night with intent to commit felony therein, of housebreaking, of stealing in a dwelling-house to the amount of 5*l.* (if the property stolen be laid to be of that value in the indictment), or of simple larceny, according to the facts proved: R. v. Compton, 3 C. & P. 418: R. v. Bullock, 1 Mood. 324 n.: R. v. Brookes, C. & Mar. 543. So, upon an indictment for housebreaking and stealing, the prisoner may be convicted, as the proof may be, either of housebreaking, of stealing in a dwelling-house to the amount of 5*l.* (if the property be laid as of that amount), or of simple larceny. 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1118. And upon an indictment for robbery the prisoner may be convicted either of the robbery, of stealing from the person, of simple larceny, or (under 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44 (1) of an assault with intent to rob, according to the facts proved. Upon an indictment for assaulting and unlawfully wounding and ill-treating the prosecutor, and thereby occasioning him actual bodily harm (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 47), the defendant may be convicted of a common assault. R. v. Oliver, Bell, 287; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 12: R. v. Yeadon, L. & C. 81; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 70. So, also, the defendant might have been convicted of a common assault upon an indictment containing one count only, charging that the defendant in and upon a girl between the ages of ten and twelve, "unlawfully did make an assault, and her did then unlawfully and carnally know and abuse against the form," etc., being the ordinary form of an indictment for a misdemeanor under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 51 (rep.): R. v. Guthrie, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 241; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 95. The defendant may also be convicted of a common assault upon an indictment charging him in the first count with unlawfully and maliciously wounding, and in the second count with unlawfully and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm, although the word "assault" is not used in the indictment. R. v. Taylor, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 194; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 106. On a count for indecent assault, and semble even on a count under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5 (1), the defendant may be convicted of common assault. R. v. Bostock, 17 Cox, 700, Charles, J. On an indictment for riot and assault the accused may be convicted of a common assault. R. v. O'Brien, 75 J. P. 192; 22 Cox, 374; 27 T. L. R. 204; 6 Cr. App. R. 108. Where an indictment contained a count for an assault upon a gamekeeper, framed on 9 G. 4, c. 69, s. 2, and a count for a common assault, and the prosecution at the trial elected to abandon the latter count, it was held that the defendant could not, after such abandonment, be convicted of a common assault upon the first count. R. v. Day, 11 Cox, 505 (C. C. R.).

On an indictment for publishing a defamatory libel, "knowing the same to be false," a misdemeanor the punishment of which is provided for by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 4, the defendant may be convicted of merely publishing a defamatory libel, a misdemeanor the punishment of which is provided for by s. 5. Boaler v. R., 21 Q. B. D. 284; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 85. Where the defendant was indicted for stealing a colt, it was held that he could not be convicted under 1 Edw. 6, c. 12, s. 10 (rep.), which did not mention colts, but might be convicted of the simple larceny. R. v. Beaney, R. & R. 416. Upon an indictment for perjury, it is sufficient if any one of the assignments of perjury be proved. See R. v. Rhodes, 2 Ld. Raym. 886.

Upon an indictment for high treason, proof of any one overt act is sufficient, provided the overt act so proved be a sufficient overt act of the treason laid in the indictment. 1 Hale, 122; Fost. 194; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 188. Upon an indictment for conspiring to prevent the workmen of J. G. from continuing to work, it was held sufficient to prove a conspiracy to prevent any of the workmen from working. R. v. Bykerdike, 1 M. & Rob. 179.

Upon an indictment charging two persons jointly with an offence, as stealing in a dwelling-house, either may be found guilty; but they cannot be found guilty of separate parts of the charge, or upon proof of two distinct felonies. In the former case, a pardon must be obtained, or a nolle prosequi entered, as to the one who stands second upon the indictment, before judgment can be given against the other: R. v. Hempstead, R. & R. 344. In the latter case, judgment may be given against the party who is proved to have committed the first felony in order of time, but the other must be acquitted. R. v. Dovey, 2 Den. 86; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 105. But where several are indicted for burglary and larceny, one may be found guilty of the burglary and larceny, and the others of the larceny only. R. v. Butterworth, R. & R. 520; and see ante, p. 59.

2. Under statute. (a) Conviction of a felony not charged.]—By s. 39 (1) of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), where a prisoner is arraigned on an indictment for an offence, and can lawfully be convicted on such indictment of some other offence not charged in such indictment, he may plead not guilty of the offence charged in the indictment, but guilty of such other offence. On an indictment for robbery the accused may be convicted of an assault with intent to rob; on an indictment for embezzlement he may be convicted of stealing; on an indictment for stealing he may be convicted of embezzlement or of fraudulent application or disposition; Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 44 (1) (2).

(b) Proof of felony on indictment for misdemeanor, or vice versâ.]—By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12, "if, upon the trial of any person for any misdemeanor, it shall appear that the facts given in evidence amount in law to a felony, such person shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of such misdemeanor; and no person tried for such misdemeanor shall be liable to be afterwards prosecuted for felony on the same facts, unless the court before which such trial may be had shall think fit, in its discretion, to discharge the jury from giving any verdict upon such trial, and to direct such person to be indicted for felony, in which case such person may be dealt with in all respects as if he had not been put upon his trial for such misdemeanor." See R. v. Garland [1910] 1 K. B. 154; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 239; 74 J. P. 135. By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 44 (4), on the trial of an indictment for false pretences the defendant is not entitled to be acquitted because it is proved that he stole the property. Conversely, by the same Act (s. 44 (3)), if on the trial of any indictment for stealing it is proved that the defendant took any chattel, money, or valuable security in question in any such manner as would amount in law to obtaining it by false pretences with intent to defraud, the jury may acquit him of stealing and find him guilty of obtaining the chattel, money, or valuable security by false pretences, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished accordingly.

Upon an indictment for child murder the jury may find the defendant guilty of endeavouring to conceal the birth of the child. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 60.

Upon an indictment for manslaughter of a person under sixteen by a person over sixteen who had custody, charge, or care of the deceased, the jury may acquit of manslaughter and convict of cruelty. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 12 (4), re-enacting 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (rep.). See R. v. Dyson [1908] 2 K. B. 454; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 813; 99 L. T. 201; 72 J. P. 303; 24 T. L. R. 653; 1 Cr. App. R. 13.

Upon an indictment charging the defendant with any felony (except murder or manslaughter) where the indictment alleges that the defendant cut, stabbed, or wounded any person, the jury may acquit of the felony charged, and find the defendant guilty of unlawfully wounding (14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 5), and thereupon the defendant is liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for the misdemeanor of unlawful wounding. This enactment does not apply to an indictment charging felonious shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm. R. v. Miller, 14 Cox, 356, Bowen, J.; see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 11, 18, 20.

Upon an indictment for the felony of administering poison, etc., so as to endanger life or to inflict grievous bodily harm, the jury may find the defendant guilty of the misdemeanor of administering poison, etc., with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 23, 24, 25.

On an indictment for felonious damage by rioters within s. 11 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), the accused may be convicted of a misdemeanor within s. 12 of that Act.

By 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 9, "If upon the trial of any indictment for rape, or any offence made felony by s. 4 of this Act, the jury shall be satisfied that the defendant is guilty of an offence under ss. 3, 4, or 5 of this Act, or of an indecent assault, but are not satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the felony charged in such indictment, or of an attempt to commit the same, then and in every such case the jury may acquit the defendant of such felony, and find him guilty of such offence as aforesaid, or of an indecent assault, and thereupon such defendant shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for such an offence as aforesaid, or for the misdemeanor of indecent assault." This enactment overrides the decision in R. v. Catherall, 13 Cox, 109.

By the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 45), s. 4 (3), on an indictment for rape the jury may convict of incest or attempted incest, and on an indictment for incest or attempted incest the jury may convict of the felony created by 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, or the misdemeanors created by 48 &

49 Vict. c. 69, s. 5. By virtue of these provisions the accused may be convicted of indecent assault. R. v. Simmonite [1916] 2 K. B. 821; 25 Cox C. C. 544; 12 Cr. App. R. 142. Any person charged with a corrupt practice at an election for parliament, or a municipal office, or for a county, district, or parish council, may, if the circumstances warrant such finding, be found guilty of an illegal practice (which offence is ordinarily punishable on summary conviction, but for that purpose shall be an indictable offence). 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 52; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, s. 30; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 75; 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 48.

(c) Conviction of attempt on indictment for complete offence.]—Section 9 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, after reciting that offenders often escape conviction by reason that such persons ought to have been charged with attempting to commit offences, and not with the actual commission thereof, for remedy thereof enacts, that "if, on the trial of any person charged with any felony or misdemeanor, it shall appear to the jury upon the evidence that the defendant did not complete the offence charged, but that he was guilty only of an attempt to commit the same, such person shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted, but the jury shall be at liberty to return as their verdict that the defendant is not guilty of the felony or misdemeanor charged, but is guilty of an attempt to commit the same, and thereupon such person shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment for attempting to commit the particular felony or misdemeanor charged in the said indictment; and no person so tried as herein lastly mentioned shall be liable to be afterwards prosecuted for an attempt to commit the felony or misdemeanor for which he was so tried." Under this enactment it has been held that defendant can only be convicted of the attempt to commit the very offence with which he is charged: R. v. McPherson, Dears. & B. 197; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 134. The authority of this case is shaken by R. v. Ring, 61 L. J. (M. C.) 116: and R. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. D. 357; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 47

In R. v. Connell, 6 Cox, 178, to an indictment for administering poison with intent to murder, a plea of autrefois acquit was pleaded, setting up a prior acquittal of murder; and it was argued that on the former trial the accused might under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, have been convicted of the attempt. The court held the plea bad, on the ground that that section only authorized a conviction of the attempt where it was a misdemeanor; but in R. v. White [1910] 2 K. B. 124; 22 Cox. 325; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 854; 4 Cr. App. R. 257, on an indictment for murder, the prisoner was convicted and sentenced for an attempt to murder as a statutory felony (a).

On an indictment which charged H. with rape, and W. with aiding and abetting in the rape, the jury found H. guilty of attempting to commit a rape, and W. of aiding H. in the attempt. It was contended that this finding amounted to an acquittal of W., as the case was not within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9. The objection was, however, overruled, and the conviction of W. for misdemeanor was affirmed: R. v. Hapgood, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 221: S. C. sub nom. R. v. Wyatt, 39 L. J. (M. C.) 83.

(a) And see thereon R. v. Cook [1899] 20 New South Wales Rep. (Law) 264; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1967.

Special verdict.]—The jury have a right, in all criminal cases, to find a special verdict; 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 3; and see 32 G. 3, c. 60, ss. 1, 3; but the judge has no power to compel them to find a special verdict: R. v. Allday, 8 C. & P. 136. (See forms of special verdict in R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32. R. v. Staines Local Board, 52 J. P. 215.) Such verdict must state positively the facts themselves, and not merely the evidence adduced to prove them, and all the facts necessary to enable the court to give judgment must be found; for the court cannot supply by intendment or implication any defect in the statement. 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 9; 2 East, P. C. 708, 784: see R. v. Plummer, Kel. (J.) 109: R. v. Francis, 2 Str. 1015: R. v. Royce, 4 Burr. 2073; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 643. But if the jury find all the substantial requisites of the charge, they are not bound to follow in terms the technical language of the indictment. Thus where the defendant was charged with forgery of a bank note, and the special verdict stated that he erased and altered the note by changing the word "two" into "five," this was held sufficient: R. v. Dawson, 1 Str. 19. So, where an indictment for murder enumerated three wounds, and the special verdict mentioned one only, this was held not to be a fatal variance: R. v. Morgan, 1 Bulstr. 84, 87. So, where the evidence need not correspond precisely with the statement in the indictment (see post, p. 349), the special verdict will be good, although in the same respects it vary from the statement in the indictment; as where the fact is found to have occurred, in a case of a transitory nature, at a different place within the jurisdiction of the court, or (where time is immaterial) on a day different from that stated in the indictment. Dowdale's case, 6 Co. Rep. 47; 2 Rolle Abr. 689. If the verdict does not state the time when the facts occurred, it seems that the court will intend them to have happened in the order in which the jury have stated them: R. v. Keite, 1 Ld. Raym. 138, 142. The jury need not, and indeed ought not, after stating the facts, to draw any legal conclusion, for that is the matter referred to the court: and if they do so, and the inference drawn by them is erroneous, the court will reject it as superfluous, and pronounce the judgment warranted by the facts stated. See 1 Chit. Cr. L. 645, and cases there cited. A special verdict is not amendable as to matters of fact (supra); but a mere error of form may be amended, even, as it seems, in capital cases, in order to fulfil the evident intention of the jury, where there is any note or minute to amend by; 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 9: R. v. Hayes, 2 Str. 844: R. v. Hazel, 1 Leach, 368, 382; 1 East, P. C. 236: R. v. Woodfall, 5 Burr, 2661. If three offences are charged in the indictment, and the special verdict states evidence which applies to two of them only, the court may adjudge the defendant guilty of those two, and enter an acquittal as to the residue. R. v. Hayes, supra. The court cannot, however, on a special verdict on an indictment for felony, adjudge the defendant guilty of a misdemeanor: R. v. Westbeer, 2 Str. 1133; 1 Leach, 12. But where it appears clearly from the facts stated in the special verdict, that the defendant has been guilty of a crime, though not of the degree charged against him in the indictment, the court will not discharge him, but will direct a fresh indictment to be preferred. R. v. Francis, 2 Str. 1015. Where the verdict is so imperfect that no judgment can be given upon it, venire de novo may, in misdemeanors, be awarded. See post, p. 346. In cases of felony the court may enter a judgment of acquittal where the facts found by the special verdict do not warrant a judgment against the defendant; see R. v. Huggins, 2 Ld. Raym. 1574, 1585; 17 St. Tr. 309; but this will be no bar to another prosecution for the same felony. R. v. Burridge, 3 P. Wms. 439, 480; 24 Eng. Rep. 1133, 1148: Com. Dig., Indictment (N.).

A verdict is not vitiated by surplusage. 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 10.

Until 1908, where a special verdict had been found at the assizes, the record might be brought into the High Court of Justice by an order of that court only, without a writ of certiorari, the courts of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery (including the Central Criminal Court) being by the 16th section of the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), made part of the High Court. R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 280, 560; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32, 34: R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432, 439; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 839. Where on a special verdict the High Court was of opinion that the defendant ought to be convicted, that court ought to pronounce judgment and pass sentence. R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 278; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32-34.

Special verdicts are now dealt with by the Court of Criminal Appeal under 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 5 (3), post, p. 305.

Special verdict of insanity.]—By s. 1 of the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1800 (39 & 40 G. 3, c. 94), the petty jury was empowered to find a verdict of insanity upon the evidence; and under s. 2 of the same Act they can, if it appears to them that a person on trial is insane, return a verdict to that effect. As to what constitutes insanity, see ante, pp. 13 et seq. Where, on the trial of a deaf mute for felony, the jury returned the following verdict: "We find the prisoner guilty on the evidence; and we also find that he is not capable of understanding, and, as a fact, has not understood the nature of the proceedings;" it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted, but must be detained as a non-sane person during the Queen's pleasure. R. v. Berry, 1 Q. B. D. 447; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 123; 13 Cox, 189; and see ante, pp. 169, 170. Section 1 was expressly, and s. 2 on this point is virtually, repealed by the Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 38, s. 4). Section 2 of the latter Act provides that, "Where in any indictment or information any act or omission is charged against any person as an offence, and it is given in evidence on the trial of such person for that offence that he was insane, so as not to be responsible, according to law, for his actions at the time when the act was done or omission made, then, if it appears to the jury before whom such person is tried, that he did the act or made the omission charged, but was insane as aforesaid at the time when he did or made the same, the jury shall return a special verdict to the effect that the accused was guilty of the act or omission charged against him, but was insane as aforesaid at the time when he did the act or made the omission" (sub-s. 1).

"Where such special verdict is found, the court shall order the accused to be kept in custody as a criminal lunatic, in such place and in such manner as the court shall direct, till his Majesty's pleasure shall be known; and it shall be lawful for his Majesty thereupon, and from time to time, to give such order for the safe custody of the said person during pleasure, in such place and in such manner as to his Majesty may seem fit" (sub-s. 2).

"All provisions in any existing Act, or in any rules or orders made in pursuance of any existing Act, having reference to a person or persons acquitted on the ground of insanity, shall apply to a person or persons in respect of whom a special verdict is found under this Act" (sub-s. 4).

The Acts referred to in sub-s. 4 are the Criminal Lunatics Acts (see Wood-Renton, Lunacy, 792-880, 856). A form of detention order was prescribed in 1884. The prisons now in use for the detention of criminal lunatics are Broadmoor and Parkhurst. The rules regulating Broadmoor Prison are printed in Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 8, tit. Lunatic (E.). The Act of 1883 is modified as to the control of persons detained under it by the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 6).

There is no appeal from such a special verdict. Felstead v. R. [1914] A. C. 534; 10 Cr. App. R. 129; 30 T. L. R. 469. On an appeal against a conviction the Court of Criminal Appeal have power to make an order under the Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883, in the same manner as if a special verdict had been found by the jury. Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 5 (4), and R. v. Jefferson, 72 J. P. 467; 1 Cr. App. R. 95 : R. v. Jones, 4 Cr. App. R. 207; and see post, p. 305.

Retirement of jury.]—If the jury are unable to agree upon their verdict without retiring from their box, they withdraw to a convenient place appointed for that purpose, an officer being sworn to keep them, and to suffer none to speak to them without leave of the court, nor to speak to them himself, except only to ask them whether they are agreed. 2 Hale, 297. There was an old rule against allowing them food, drink, or fire. 1 Co. Inst. 227; 4 B. & Ald. 681; Doct. and Student, 158, 272 : Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 308, 317; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 121. But it was abolished in 1870, and they may now have fire and reasonable refreshment at their own expense. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 23. The jury when once enclosed for deliberation must not separate or leave the place appointed for their deliberations without the special permission of the court. Co. Litt. 227 b; 4 Bl. Comm. 360 : R. v. O'Connell, 1 Cox, 410. The law in this respect has not been altered by 60 & 61 Vict. c. 18 (ante, p. 208). If a juror falls ill while the jury are enclosed, a medical man may, by leave of the court, see and prescribe for him. R. v. Newton, 13 Q. B. 716, 735; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 201. During the retirement of the jury no officer of the court may enter into any discussion with the jury as to the case or answer any question put to him by them. If any further assistance is required by them it must be given in open court by the Judge in the presence of the accused. R. v. Willmont, 78 J. P. 352; 30 T. L. R. 499; 10 Cr. App. R. 173. Where a juror, after the summing-up, and after the jury had deliberated in the box for some minutes and then had signified their wish to retire to consider their verdict, separated himself from his colleagues by mistake and left the building, and was absent for a quarter of an hour, when he rejoined them, it was held, on appeal, to constitute an irregularity which rendered all the proceedings abortive, and that the only course open to the court was to discharge the jury and commence the proceedings afresh, and that it was not relevant to consider whether the irregularity had in fact prejudiced the accused. R. v. Ketteridge [1915] 1 K. B. 467; 84 L. J. (K. B.) 352; 24 Cox, 675; 79 J. P. 216; 31 T. L. R. 115; 11 Cr. App. R. 54. But where before the summing-up members of the jury had conversed with witnesses for the prosecution, and it was ascertained that the accused could not be prejudiced by the conversations, it was held on appeal that as in fact the accused had not been prejudiced, though there had been improper conduct on the part of the jurymen, the conviction could stand, and R. v. Ketteridge, supra, was distinguished. R. v. Twiss [1918] 2 K. B. 853.

The Court of Criminal Appeal will not readily allow evidence on appeal to show misconduct on the part of a juryman. See R. v. Syme, 24 Cox, 502; 79 J. P. 40; 10 Cr. App. R. 284 : R. v. Melik, 12 Cr. App. R. 100. Evidence was allowed in R. v. Hancox, 29 T. L. R. 331; 8 Cr. App. R. 193, where it was alleged that the jury were so constituted that a fair trial was not likely to result, but it was expressly stated that this admission was not to be considered as a precedent.

Disagreement of jury.]—If the jury agree to a verdict on some counts of an indictment, but disagree on others, it would seem that the defendant can be retried on the counts on which the disagreement has taken place, even after judgment on the counts on which he has been convicted or acquitted, as each count is a separate indictment. Latham v. R., 5 B. & S. 636; 33 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 197 : cf. Selvester v. U. S., 170 U. S., 262. But where the counts are not for distinct offences, but merely vary the legal description of a single transaction, the defendant would apparently be entitled to plead autrefois convict or acquit on the second trial. R. v. Grimwood, 60 J. P. 809, Pollock, B.

Ambiguous verdicts.]—Where on an indictment for obtaining food and money by false pretences the jury found the following verdict of "guilty of obtaining food and money under false pretences : but whether there was any intent to defraud the jury consider there is not sufficient evidence, and therefore strongly recommend the prisoner to mercy," it was held that this amounted to a verdict of not guilty, as it negatived one of the most material allegations in the indictment, namely, the intent to defraud. R. v. Gray, 17 Cox, 299 (C. C. R.). (a). Where the words of a verdict are not clear or are confused, but the intention of the jury is plain, the Court of Criminal Appeal will give effect to that intention under s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (6 Edw. 7, c. 23). See post, p. 304.

Receiving the verdict.]—A judge is not bound (unless the jury insist on having it recorded) to receive the first verdict which the jury give, but may direct them to reconsider it : and the verdict which the jury ultimately return is the verdict to be recorded. R. v. Meany, L. & C. 213; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 24 : per Pollock, C.B., in R. v. Yeadon, L. & C. 81; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 70; and see Cromp. 114; 2 Harg. St. Tr. 60 : R. v. Philpot, 7 Cr. App. R. 140. This is so even though the first verdict may amount to one of not guilty. R. v. Crisp, 76 J. P. 304; 28 T. L. R. 296; 7 Cr. App. R. 173. The jury may, before the verdict is recorded (or even promptly after the verdict is recorded, R. v. Parkin, 1 Mood. 45), rectify their verdict, and it will stand as ultimately amended. 1 Chit. Cr. L. 647. This may be done even after the defendant has been discharged out of the dock (in pursuance of a supposed verdict of acquittal), if it is done before the jury have left the box. R. v. Vodden, Dears. 229; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 7. On the trial at nisi prius of a criminal case the postea could be amended, on sufficient cause shown, where there was a judge's note or other sufficient document to show that it was incorrect. R. v. Virrier, 12 A. & E. 317; 9 L. J. (M. C.) 120 : and see R. v. King, 7 Q. B. 782. Where an indictment contains two counts for misdemeanor, to which the defendant pleads not guilty, and the finding of the jury is guilty on the second count (without noticing the first), whereupon judgment is passed, such judgment is not affected by reason of no finding being entered on the first count, for each count is a separate indictment on which a separate judgment can be entered. Latham v. R., 5 B. & S. 635; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 197 : cf. Selvester v. U. S. [1898] 170 U. S. 262.

Upon the delivery of the verdict, if the defendant is thereby acquitted on the merits, he is for ever free and discharged from that accusation, and is entitled to be immediately set at liberty, unless there is some other legal ground for his detention. (The old form of recording acquittal was quorum eat quietus sine die). As to pleading an acquittal in bar of another indictment, see ante, p. 155, Autrefois acquit. As to immediate discharge, vide post, p. 227.

Entry of verdict.]—The form of entry of the verdict on the record is as follows :—After the similiter (ante, p. 153), comes the award of venire, thus : —" Therefore let a jury thereupon here immediately come before the said justices of our lord the King last above mentioned, and others their fellows aforesaid, of free and lawful men of the said county of ——, by whom the truth of the matter may be better known, and who are not of kin to the said A. B., to recognise upon their oath whether the said A. B. be guilty of the felony in the indictment above specified, or not guilty; because as well the said H. A., who prosecutes for our said lord the King in this behalf, as the said A. B., have put themselves upon the said jury. And the jurors of the said jury, by the sheriff for this purpose impanelled and returned to wit [naming them], being called, come: who, to speak the truth of and concerning the premises being chosen, tried, and sworn, upon their oath say, that the said A. B. is guilty [or not guilty] of the felony aforesaid, on him above charged, in manner and form aforesaid, as by the said indictment is above supposed against him."

An indictment for perjury contained two counts, charging perjury to have been committed by the defendant on two separate occasions. The verdict was in the following form, " that the said T. C. is guilty of the premises on him above charged in and by both counts of the indictment aforesaid above specified, in the manner and form aforesaid, as by the indictment aforesaid is above supposed against him." It was held that this was in fact a finding of guilty upon each count of the indictment. Castro v. R., 6 A. C. 229; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) 497 : cf. O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1.

Discharge of jury.(a)]—It is established law that a jury sworn and charged with a prisoner, even in a capital case, may be discharged by the judge at the trial, without giving a verdict, if a "necessity," that is, a high degree of need, for such discharge is made evident to his mind. Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 390; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 121, 161 (dissenting from Conway v. R., 7 Ir. L. R. 149; 1 Cox, 210): R. v. Shields, 28 St. Tr. 619, 647: R. v. Cobbett. 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 789, 903; 3 Burn's J. 98 (30th ed.); 4 Bl. Com. 360.

Where the jury, on a trial for murder at the assizes, were locked up from the middle of the day until the following morning, and then, on their being sent for into court, stated that it was impossible they should ever agree, and that was the first day of business at the next assize town, whereupon the judge discharged them, it was held that he was warranted by law in doing so. R. v. Newton, 13 Q. B. 716; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 201.

It is for the judge alone to decide whether a necessity exists for discharging the jury, and his decision is not subject to review or appeal: Winsor v. R., supra: R. v. Lewis, 78 L. J. (K. B.) 722; 100 L. T. 976; 73 J. P. 346; 2 Cr. App. R. 180: R. v. Davison, 8 Cox, 360; 2 F. & F. 250; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2006. The same view has been adopted in the United States: U. S. v. Perez [1824] 9 Wheaton 579, Story, J.: Dreyer v. Illinois [1903] 187 U. S. 71, 86: and in New South Wales, R. v. Grand [1903] 3 N. S. W. State Rep. 216.

If one of the jury dies before the delivery of the verdict, the remaining eleven will be discharged, and a new jury may be at once sworn or a new juror added to the eleven, and the defendant tried by them, or (if necessary) remanded to the next assizes. R. v. Gould, 3 Burn's Justice, 98 (30th ed.). So, also, if one of the jurors is taken so ill that he is not able to proceed with the trial. R. v. Scalbert, 2 Leach, 620: R. v. Beere, 2 M. & Rob. 472: R. v. Ashe, 1 Cox, 150. In case another juror is added to the eleven, they must be sworn anew, and the prisoner must again have his challenges. R. v. Edwards, R. & R. 224; 4 Taunt. 309; 2 Leach, 621 n.; 3 Camp. 207 n. The evidence must be taken de novo: and it is not proper to read over to the witnesses the note taken of their evidence at the first trial. R. v. Bertrand,

(a) It has been said that, in the case of a trial at the assizes, the jury, if they do not agree before the judges depart the county, may be carried with them in a cart to the borders of the county, or, according to some authorities, from place to place through the circuit, until they are unanimous: 19 Ass. Pl. 6: 41 Ass. Pl. 11: 2 Hale, 297; Bac. Abr., Juries (G.); R. v. Ledgingham (1670); 1 Vent. 97. This dictum, however, rests on no foundation of judicial decision or actual practice, and if it was ever law, which seems doubtful, is not so at the present day. Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 326; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 121. It has also been said to be a general rule of law, "that a jury sworn and charged in case of life or member, cannot be discharged by the court or any other, but they ought to give a verdict." Co. Litt. 227 b. See also 3 Co. Inst. 110; Bro. Abr. Enquest, 30; Bac. Abr., Juries (G.); 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 1; Fost. 29—39. This doctrine, however, which, if taken literally, seems to command the confinement of the jury till death if they do not agree, is too broadly stated by Lord Coke, and was denied to be law in Ferrar's case, Sir T. Raym. 84 (an indictment for forgery), where it is laid down as having been "resolved by all the justices, that although the jury be charged and sworn in the case of a plea of the crown, yet a juror may be drawn or the jury dismissed, contrary to common tradition which hath been held by many learned in the law."

L. R. 1 P. C. 520; 36 L. J. (P. C.) 51 (see ante, p. 209). Where misconduct on the part of one or more jurors is discovered before verdict the court may discharge the jury (a). Where, in the course of a trial, one of the jurors, without leave, left the jury box and also the court, whereupon the jury was discharged, and a fresh one impanelled for the trial of the prisoner, it was held, that this was the only course that could have been adopted. R. v. Ward, 10 Cox, 573; 11 W. R. 281 (C. C. R.); and see R. v. Ketteridge [1915] 1 K. B. 467, cited ante, p. 218. And so where in the course of a trial it was discovered that a person was on the jury who was not on the jury panel, and who had by mistake been summoned as a juryman, the jury were discharged, and a fresh jury constituted by taking another juryman in the place of the one who had served in mistake. R. v. Phillips, 11 Cox, 142; and see R. v. Wakefield [1918] 1 K. B. 216, cited ante, p. 179. This defect would have been cured by verdict under 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21 (ante, p. 44.) Where it is accidentally elicited during the course of the case for the Crown that the defendant has been previously convicted, the jury is frequently discharged in the interests of the defendant.

In Hill v. Yates, 1 East, 229, it was held that the granting of a new trial because a juror not summoned had served was discretionary, and that if no injustice had resulted, a new trial should be refused. Ellenborough, C.J., said: "If we were to listen to such an objection we might set aside the verdicts given at every assize, where the same thing might happen from accident and inadvertence, and possibly sometimes from design, especially in criminal cases." He cited the Case of a Juryman (1783, 12 East, 231 n.), where the judges in a crown case held that service of a man not summoned was no ground of objection to verdict even on a writ of error, much less on a summary application. See Criminal Appeal, post, pp. 300 et seq.

It has been also held, that in order to enable a prisoner to take a point in his defence which he could not otherwise have taken, the court might, by his consent, discharge the jury, and that the doing so would not bar any further proceedings. Kinloch's case, Fost, 16, 31; 18 St. Tr. 395: R. v. Stokes, 6 C. & P. 151: and see R. v. Deane, 5 Cox, 501, Erle, J. The jury have also been discharged, or a juror withdrawn, in a criminal case, on account of the sudden illness of a witness; 2 Harg. St. Tr. 832: R. v. Streek, 2 C. & P. 413: R. v. Stevenson, 2 Leach, 546; and so, also, where material witnesses had been kept away by collusion; 1 Vent. 69; or even were absent by accident: R. v. Stokes, 6 C. & P. 151. But see R. v. Wedderburn, Fost. 9, 22, 30; 18 St. Tr. 425: and see 2 Hale, 295. In R. v. Charlesworth, 1 B. & S. 460; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 25, all the judges who decided that case expressed a strong opinion against the propriety of discharging the jury, merely because the case for the prosecution fails for want of evidence, and in the hope that further evidence may be got on a second trial. In R. v. Lewis, 78 L. J. (K. B.) 722; 100 L. T. 916; 73 J. P. 346; 2 Cr. App. R. 180, the jury was discharged because it appeared that some of the witnesses of the crown were not ready; but the

(a) As to the remedy against a juror for misconduct, see R. v. Brown [1907] 7 N. S. W. State Rep. 290, 300, 301.

Court of Criminal Appeal, while unable to overrule this exercise of discretion, intimated that a jury should not be discharged in order to allow the prosecution to present a stronger case on another trial. In R. v. Wade [1825] 1 Mood. 86, it was held not proper to discharge a jury sworn to try an indictment for rape in order to give time for the instruction of a witness to fit her to be sworn. See also R. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246; 2 Cox, 136. But where the jury has not yet been sworn postponement of a trial for this purpose has been allowed. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2267.

The power of discharge, while discretionary, ought not to be exercised without very strong reasons: yet it may be exercised without any absolute "necessity." Where a material and necessary witness for the prosecution refused to answer a question put to him, and, although informed by the judge that he was bound to do so, persisted in such refusal, and was thereupon adjudged to be guilty of a contempt of court, and fined and imprisoned, the judge, on the application of the counsel for the prosecution, and against the will of the defendant, discharged the jury. R. v. Charlesworth, 2 F. & F. 326; 31 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 25, Hill, J. The course pursued in this case was afterwards questioned in the Court of Queen's Bench, and although it did not become necessary to give judgment upon its propriety, Blackburn, J., expressed an opinion that it was right, which opinion seems to have been shared by Cockburn, C.J., who denied that the rule laid down in 4 Bl. Com. 360, that "the jury cannot be discharged, unless in cases of evident necessity, till they have given in their verdict," is a true or correct exposition of the law as practised in our day. Wightman, J., and Crompton, J., on the other hand, thought the discharge of the jury, under the circumstances mentioned above, was improper. R. v. Charlesworth, 1 B. & S. 460; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 25. In R. v. Lewis, supra, the Court of Criminal Appeal seem to have accepted the view of Wightman, J.

Where a court of quarter sessions was sitting in two courts, and during the retirement of the jury to consider their verdict the chairman of the second court adjourned for a while, and the chairman of the first court on being informed that the jury could not agree sent for them and discharged them, it was held that the discharge was by the court of quarter sessions and was valid, and furthermore that it was not essential that the defendant should be present at the discharge. R. v. Richardson, 108 L. T. 384; 77 J. P. 248; 23 Cox, 332; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 333; 8 Cr. App. R. 159.

Effect of discharge.]—The discharge of the jury is not equivalent to a verdict of acquittal: and the prisoner can be remanded for a fresh trial. Id.: R. v. Davison, 8 Cox, 360; 2 F. & F. 250.

A defence founded on the improper discharge of the jury cannot be taken by plea, for the only pleas known to the law founded upon a former trial are pleas of a former conviction, or a former acquittal, for the same offence (ante, pp. 155, 160); but if the former trial had been abortive without a verdict, there has been neither a conviction nor an acquittal. Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 390, 395; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 161 (Ex. Ch.). And the discretion exercised by the judge in this respect, at all events where he discharges the jury on the ground of necessity, of the existence of which necessity it is for him alone to determine, cannot be reviewed in any way. Winsor v. R., supra: R. v. Lewis, 78 L. J. (K. B.) 722; 100 L. T. 976; 73 J. P. 346; 25 T. L. R. 582; 2 Cr. App. R. 180.

As to discharge of the jury where the prisoner appears to be insane, see ante, p. 170.

After an acquittal on one indictment the prosecution have no right to claim that a second indictment should be tried before another jury. R. v. Sims, 69 J. P. 8.

SECT. 5.

PROCEEDINGS BETWEEN VERDICT AND JUDGMENT.

The allocutus.]—If the defendant is found guilty, it is thereupon demanded of him by the court, in cases of treason and felony, what he has to say why the court should not proceed to judgment against him; and this (which is called the allocutus) ought to appear on the record when made up. R. v. Geary, 2 Salk. 630; 3 Mod. 265. It is not necessary to demand of the defendant why the court should not proceed to judgment, and execution against him. O'Brien v. R., 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 2 H. L. C. 465; 9 Eng. Rep. 1169; 3 Cox, 360: cf. O'Neill v. R., 6 Cox, 495 (Ir.). In misdemeanors it is not usual thus to call upon the defendant before judgment. "On all trials for felonies or misdemeanors in the King's Bench Division, except upon informations filed by leave of the court, and ex-officio information where the attorney-general shall pray that the judgment may be postponed, judgment may be pronounced during the sittings or assizes at which the trial has taken place by the judge before whom the verdict has been taken, as well upon the defendant who shall have suffered judgment by default or confession as upon those who shall have been tried and convicted, and whether such persons be present or not in court." Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 162, which reproduces 11 G. 4 and 1 W. 4, c. 70. s. 9 (rep. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 57). "The judge before whom the trial shall be had may either issue an immediate order or warrant, for committing the defendant in execution, or respite the execution of the judgment on such terms as he shall think fit, and for such time as may be necessary, for the purpose of enabling the defendant to move for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, and if imprisonment be part of the sentence, may order the period of imprisonment to commence on the day on which the party shall be actually taken to and confined in prison," r. 163.

New trials have been abolished except in the case of convictions on highway indictments.

The allocutus is entered on the record after the verdict in the following form: "And thereupon it is forthwith demanded of the said A. B., if he hath or knoweth anything to say why the said justices here ought not upon the premises and verdict aforesaid to proceed to judgment against him; who nothing further saith, unless as he had before said. Whereupon," etc. [continuing with the judgment], as post, p. 231.

Suspending entry of judgment.]—See R. v. N. E. Rail. Co., 70 L. J. (K. B.) 548; 19 Cox, 682; 49 W. R. 524.

Arrest of judgment.]—The defendant may, at any time between the conviction and the sentence, but not afterwards, move the court in arrest of judgment. 1 Chit. Cr. L. 661. This motion can be grounded only on some objection arising on the face of the record itself; and no defect in the evidence, or irregularity at the trial, can be urged at this stage of the proceedings. But any want of sufficient certainty in the indictment, as in the statement of time or place (where material), of the person against whom the offence was committed, or of the facts and circumstances constituting the offence, or otherwise, which has not been amended during the trial, and is not aided by the verdict, will be a ground for arresting the judgment. We have already seen (ante, p. 44) what defects of form are cured by verdict, or have become altogether immaterial, under 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21, and 5 & 6 G. 5, c. 90, s. 3. Even if the defendant himself omits to make any motion in arrest of judgment, the court, if on a review of the case it be satisfied that the defendant has not been found guilty of any offence in law, will of itself arrest the judgment. R. v. Waddington, 1 East, 143, 146. If the judgment is arrested, all the proceedings are set aside, and judgment of acquittal is given; but this will be no bar to a fresh indictment. Com. Dig. Indictment (N.); 4 Bl. Com. 375; Vaux's case, 4 Co. Rep. 45 a.

Where a statute upon which an indictment is founded was repealed after the finding of the indictment, but before plea pleaded, the court arrested the judgment. R. v. Denton, Dears. 3; 18 Q. B. 761; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 207: see also R. v. Mawgan in Meneage, 8 A. & E. 496; 7 L. J. (M. C.) 98: R. v. McKenzie, R. & R. 429. But see effect of Interpretation Act, 1889, ante, p. 8.

On a motion in arrest of judgment in misdemeanor, it would seem that the defendant must be present in court. R. v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 928.

Where on a conviction on indictment or criminal information in England the court of trial refuses to arrest judgment, an appeal lies subject to the terms of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, post, p. 300, or the court may reserve a case for the Court of Criminal Appeal under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, post, p. 340. As to the former practice in the King's Bench Division, see Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 142. This does not apply to convictions of peers for treason or felony or to convictions on indictments relating to obstruction or non-repair of a highway, public bridge, or navigable river. 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 20, post, p. 302.

Proceedings after verdict and before judgment.]—In the case of treason or felony the defendant must be present when judgment is given. 1 Ld. Raym. 48, 267. In the case of a misdemeanor this is not necessary, but his presence is usually required (R. v. Harwood, 2 Str. 1088), unless the judgment is to be only for payment of a fine (R. v. Williams, 18 W. R. 806); or the court is satisfied by evidence that the defendant is too ill or infirm to be brought up;

R. v. Constable, 7 D. & R. 663 : R. v. Kinglake, 18 W. R. 806, cit.; or is in prison and unable to find bail. R. v. Boltz, 5 B. & C. 334; 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 262. Wherever it is necessary that a defendant found guilty by verdict of a jury should be present in court when judgment is pronounced against him (see R. v. Chichester, 17 Q. B. 504 n.; 2 Den. 458), if he is at large and will not voluntarily attend in court, process may be issued for the purpose of bringing him up to receive judgment, in the same way as process is issued for the purpose of bringing an offender into court to answer to an indictment found or information filed against him, and he is liable upon such process to be prosecuted to outlawry. (See ante, p. 85.) If a defendant is under recognizance to appear and receive sentence in a King's Bench Division, notice of the intention in bring him up for judgment on a day specified is served on such defendant and his bail; and in default of appearance after such notice served and appearance required according to the course and practice of the court, the recognizances, in the discretion of the court, will be estreated, and a warrant issued for his apprehension, or a capias for proceeding to outlawry. R. v. Chichester, supra.

As an aid to determining the appropriate punishment the court will, after verdict, hear evidence for the crown or the defendant, either viva voce or by affidavit. R. v. Bunts, 2 T. R. 683 : R. v. Dignam, 7 A. & E. 593 : R. v. Cox, 4 C. & P. 540. The court may consider the acts of the defendant subsequent to the trial and up to the day of sentence. R. v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428. Under 11 G. 4 and 1 W. 4, c. 70, s. 9 (rep.), it was held that the defendants could not move in mitigation of punishment on affidavits showing nothing which might not have been adduced at the trial. R. v. Lloyd, 2 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 214; 4 B. & Ad. 135; and see R. v. Cox, 4 C. & P. 540. The section is now represented by Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 162. It is the practice at the Central Criminal Court, after verdict, to hear evidence of character generally, and of previous convictions not included in the indictment. In R. v. Campbell 75 J. P. 216; 27 T. L. R. 256; 6 Cr. App. R. 131, the Court of Criminal Appeal considered that in all trials after conviction there should be given accurate information as to the general character and other material circumstances of the prisoner even though such information was not available in the form of evidence proper, and that such information when given could rightly be taken into consideration by the judge in determining the quantum of punishment unless it was challenged and contradicted by or on behalf of the prisoner, in which case the judge should either direct proper proof to be given or should ignore the information. It is important that there should be precision and accuracy in any such information. See R. v. Stratton, 10 Cr. App. R. 35 : R. v. Elley, 85 J. P. 144; 15 Cr. App. R. 143. Where a prisoner pleads guilty the judge may before passing sentence, in order to form an opinion as to the degree of culpability, hear evidence as to the motive which induced the prisoner to commit the offence; but where the offence is, by statute, punishable by a more severe sentence if accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, such circumstances may be taken into account in passing sentence only if they have been charged in the indictment and been proved to the satisfaction of the jury or admitted by the plea of guilty. R. v. Bright [1916] 2 K. B. 441;

85 L. J. (K. B.) 1638; 80 J. P. 407; 25 Cox C. C. 540; 12 Cr. App. R. 69. Where previous convictions are taken into consideration evidence should be given as to them in the absence of admission by the prisoner. R. v. Metcalfe, 29 T. L. R. 512; 9 Cr. App. R. 7.

Where offences other than the one for which the prisoner has been convicted have been committed by him and are still untried and are admitted by him, and he desires that they should be taken into account in determining the sentence, the judge may properly take them into account if the offences are similar to the one for which the prisoner has been convicted, whether there has already been a committal for trial in another jurisdiction or not. But if in fact there has been a committal in another jurisdiction the judge should first be satisfied that the prosecution consents, and such consent should not be withheld except on good grounds. If the offences desired to be taken into consideration are dissimilar to the one of which the prisoner has been convicted, the judge should not take them into consideration, even with the consent of the prosecution, without first considering whether under all the circumstances it is proper so to do. R. v. McLean [1911] 1 K. B. 333; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 309; 22 Cox, 362; 6 Cr. App. R. 26: R. v. Syers, 73 J. P. 13; 1 Cr. App. R. 172: R. v. Davies, 7 Cr. App. R. 254: R. v. Smith, 85 J. P. 224; 15 Cr. App. R. 172.

Right to copy of record on acquittal.]—In cases of misdemeanor a party acquitted is entitled to a copy of the record. Morrison v. Kelly, 1 W. Bl. 385, and note. See the authorities on this subject collected, Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1488; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2146: and see Attorney-General v. Scully, 4 Ontario L. R. 394, 410, where it is stated that inquiry of the attorney-general in England had elicited the reply that the fiat of the attorney-general was never asked for to enable a person acquitted to get a copy of the record of his indictment.

Discharge of prisoners.]—Every prisoner charged with or indicted for any felony, or with or for any misdemeanor, or as an accessory thereto, before any court of criminal jurisdiction in England and Wales, against whom no bill of indictment shall be found by the grand jury, or who on his or her trial shall be acquitted, or who shall be discharged by proclamation for want of prosecution, shall be immediately set at large without payment of any fee or sum of money, for or in respect of such discharge, to the sheriff, gaoler or keeper of the gaol or prison, from whence he shall be so discharged and set at liberty, or to the clerks of the court, or for their appearance to the indictment or information, or for allowing them to plead thereto, or for recording the appearance or plea, or for discharging any recognizance taken by him or by any sureties for him. 55 G. 3, c. 50, ss. 4, 5, as amended by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 114. Detention of an acquitted prisoner is illegal. Mee v. Cruikshank [1902] 20 Cox, 210. Persons who disobey these directions are guilty of misdemeanor. 55 G. 3, c. 50, ss. 9, 13. As to discharge on recognizance, see Bail (ante, p. 87) and post, p. 259. As to discharge after endurance of punishment, see 61 & 62 Vict. c. 41, s. 12, post, p. 232.

Respite.]—The term "respite" is usually applied to postponement of the judgment or sentence of the court until a future date. See Keen v. R., 10 Q. B. 928; 16 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 180. This may be done when an appeal is pending to the Court of Criminal Appeal, or where the court, having regard to the nature of the offence, or the antecedents or mental or physical condition of the convict desires to defer sentence. It is usual to put the offender under recognizances to come up for judgment when called upon, coupled in some cases with an undertaking not to offend again. The offender, if he offends again, may be called up and sentenced on the first conviction, instead of being tried for the subsequent charge. See R. v. Ryan, 7 Cox, 109 (Ir.). Where a certificate is given by a King's Bench judge at assizes that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal, the judge acting as a judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal may, if he thinks fit, admit the appellant to bail till the hearing of the appeal; but there is no power in a court of quarter sessions to admit to bail except where the provisions of the Crown Cases Act, 1848, apply. See post, p. 340. On a conviction by verdict for a capital offence where judgment has been respited, it may be given by subsequent justices of gaol delivery for the same jurisdiction. 1 Edw. 6, c. 7, s. 5.

Reprieve.]—A reprieve is the withdrawal of the sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution of it is suspended; and it may be granted either by the King or by the court empowered to award the execution. 4 Bl. Com. 395; 1 Hale, 368; 2 Hale, 412; 2 Hawk. c. 51, s. 8; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 758. A reprieve is grantable by the crown (ex mandato regis) at its mere discretion; and it is grantable by the court (ex arbitrio judicis) at its discretion, whenever substantial justice requires it, or (ex necessitate legis) e.g. where the prisoner is a pregnant woman under capital sentence. As to reprieve in capital cases, see 4 G. 4, c. 48 (post, p. 235); 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 2 (post, p. 236). The judges of assize have power of reprieve after their commission is determined; 8 Rep. Crim. L. 176; though the learned commissioners observe that the continuance of this power is said to be rather of common usage than strict right. See 2 Hale, 412; 4 Bl. Com. 394; 2 Hawk. c. 51, s. 8. In two cases the court is bound (ex necessitate legis) to grant a reprieve. First, where the prisoner under sentence, being a female, is pregnant. 3 Co. Inst. 17; and see authorities last above cited. Secondly, where the prisoner becomes insane after judgment pronounced against him. 3 Co. Inst. 4; 4 Bl. Com. 395; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 761.

Jury of matrons.]—In England where a woman is convicted and sentenced to death the clerk of the court after sentence (R. v. Baynton, 14 St. Tr. 631, 632) is to ask whether the woman has anything to say in stay of execution of the sentence. If she then alleges, or the court then or later has reason to suppose (R. v. Hunt, 2 Cox, 261) that she is pregnant, a jury of twelve matrons should be impanelled and sworn to try whether or not she is quick with child. See 1 Chit. Cr. L. 759. The jury may be impanelled forthwith de mulieribus circumstantibus, the judge first ordering that all the doors be shut, and that no one be allowed to leave the court. R. v. Wycherley, 8 C. & P. 262. If the matrons desire the assistance of a medical man, a medical man is requested by the court to retire and examine the prisoner. When his examination is concluded the jury of matrons is recalled into court and his evidence is given in their presence and that of the prisoner. Id. If the jury find that the prisoner is quick with child, the court stays execution of the capital sentence on the offender until she shall be delivered of a child, or it is no longer possible in the course of nature that she should be so delivered. And see Encycl. Laws of England (2nd ed.), vol. ix., p. 93; Taylor, Medical Jurisprudence (7th ed.), vol. ii., p. 32. The forms of oaths to such jury of matrons are as follows:—

"I, as forematron (or as a matron) of this jury, swear by Almighty God that I will search and try the prisoner at the bar, whether she be with child of a quick child, and thereof a true verdict give, according to my skill and understanding."

Unless pregnancy is pleaded by the prisoner herself, the right to a jury of matrons appears not to be absolute. R. v. Hunt, 2 Cox, 261, Erle, J.

In Ireland the jury of matrons is not now impanelled; and the court directs one or more medical men to be sworn to inquire whether the woman is with child with a quick child, and if after due inquiry they report that she is so, execution of the sentence must be stayed until the woman is delivered of a child or until it is no longer possible in the course of nature that she shall be so delivered. The expenses of the inquiry may be included in the costs of the prosecution. 39 & 40 Vict. c. 78, s. 13.

SECT. 6.

JUDGMENT AND PUNISHMENTS.

Preliminary.]—The punishments assigned by the law of England for particular indictable offences are stated in the parts of this work dealing with the offences. There are, however, certain general statutory provisions relating to sentences and punishments, which are collected here for facility of reference. Particular regard must be had to the general limitations on the punishment of children or young persons (post, p. 247), and to the provisions for probation of offenders (post, p. 259), and for sentences of reformative detention on juvenile adults (post, p. 254).

By whom pronounced.]—The judgment or sentence of the court is given orally by the presiding judge. By 14 H. 6, c. 1, justices sitting under a commission of nisi prius are empowered to give judgment, and award execution on acquittal or conviction in treason and felony. A similar provision was contained in 11 G. 4 and 1 W. 4, c. 70, s. 9 (rep.), as to giving judgment on trials for felony or misdemeanor, on a record of the court of King's Bench. Where, in a capital case at the assizes, judgment of death is respited, it may be given by the judges sitting on a subsequent commission of gaol delivery for the same jurisdiction. 1 Edw. 6, c. 7, s. 5. By virtue of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 29, courts of assize and the Central Criminal Court are parts of the High Court of Justice. R. v. Dudley, 16 Q. B. D. 273, 560; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32, 34; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 97: R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 839.

Where after conviction but before passing sentence the Recorder of a borough dies his successor in office may pass sentence. R. v. Pepper and Platt [1921] 3 K. B. 167; 16 Cr. App. R. 12.

Form of judgment.]—The judgment when pronounced is minuted on the indictment or in the books of the court, and a note thereof is made in the calendar of cases for trial, and signed by the judge at the conclusion of the sittings of the court. A formal conviction is not usually drawn up except where the record is made up for some special purpose, e.g., for a writ of error (now abolished in England). 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 309. It has been said that at common law in strictness a conviction consists of verdict, judgment and sentence. Burgess v. Boetefeur, 7 M. & G. 481; 13 L. J. (M. C.) 122; 8 Scott (N. R.) 194; and cf. 1 Hale, 685: R. v. Kenworthy, 1 B. & C. 711. But Co. Litt. 390 distinguishes "conviction" from "attainder" in that a man is "convicted" by verdict or confession, but not "attainted" until he has judgment, and in Jephson v. Barker, 3 Times L. R. 40, Stephen, J., held that an order made after a verdict of guilty, that the prisoner should enter into recognizances to come up for judgment when called for, was a conviction within 25 G. 2, c. 36, s. 5. For the purposes of the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861, and the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, "conviction" means verdict or confession of guilt. R. v. Blaby [1894] 2 Q. B. 170: R. v. Verney, 73 J. P. 288; but it does not include the finding of a jury that at the time the appellant committed the act or made the omission charged in the indictment he was insane. Felstead v. R. [1914] A. C. 534; 30 T. L. R. 469, overruling R. v.

Ireland [1910] 1 K. B. 654; 79 L. J. K. B. 338; see also R. v. Machardy [1911] 2 K. B. 1144; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 1215.

The form of judgment, on conviction, is as follows:—"Wherefore all and singular the premises being seen and fully understood by the said court here, it is considered and adjudged by the said court here, that the said A. B., for the said offence be imprisoned," etc., etc., [as the case may be]. The form in case of an acquittal (or an allowance of a plea of pardon) is—"Whereupon all and singular the premises being seen and fully understood by the said court here, it is considered and adjudged by the said court here, that the said A. B. be discharged of the premises, and do depart hence without delay in this behalf." See Co. Ent. 356-390; Rast. Ent. 47, 51, etc.; 2 Hale, 392; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 719.

It is now the usual practice to enter up judgment and sentence separately on each count on which the defendant has been convicted, and not generally on the whole indictment, so that if on appeal the conviction on one or more counts is quashed, the judgment on good convictions on other counts may stand. Castro v. R., 6 App. Cas. 229; 59 L. J. (Q. B.) 497; Holloway v. R., 17 Q. B. 317; 2 Den. 287: and see O'Connell v. R., 11 Cl. & F. at p. 377.

Where the judgment was that the defendant, "for the felony, aforesaid," should be transported for ten years, and it appeared that the indictment contained two counts, the offence charged in the first count warranting a sentence of transportation for ten years, but the other not, the judgment was held bad, "felony" not being nomen collectivum. Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B. 799, 814; 2 Cox, 463; 17 L. J. (M. C.) 89.

But "misdemeanor" is nomen collectivum: and if an indictment for misdemeanor contains several counts, all of which are good in law, and all found by the jury to be proved, a judgment of imprisonment "for the misdemeanor aforesaid" is good. R. v. Powell, 2 B. & Ad. 75. See Ryalls v. R., 11 Q. B. 781, 795; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 69. But if any one count be bad, a general judgment against the defendant "for his offences aforesaid" is also bad. O'Connell v. R., 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 11 Cl. & F. 155; 1 Cox, 413; 8 Eng. Rep. 1061; Gregory v. R., 15 Q. B. 974; 19 L. J. (Q. B.) 366. Errors of law and fact in the judgment as drawn up can be corrected by the Court of Criminal Appeal (see post, pp. 300 et seq., and Boaler v. R., 57 L. J. (M. C.) 85). Errors in a commitment to prison founded on the judgment may be corrected by the court of trial.

Alteration of sentence.]—A judge has the power of altering a sentence, either by reducing or increasing it, before he leaves the county on the termination of the business of the assize.

The court may, at any time during the same assizes or sessions or any adjournment thereof, vacate the judgment passed upon the defendant, before it has become matter of record, and pass another, less or even more severe (Com. Dig. Indictment (N.); Bac. Abr. Court of Sessions; 2 Salk. 606; R. v. Price, 6 East, 323, 328; R. v. Leicestershire JJ., 1 M. & Sel. 442. When once the judgment is solemnly entered on the record, no court can make any alteration in it; but if any material defect appears on the face of it, it can be reversed or amended on appeal (see post, p. 304), or amended on a case reserved. R. v. Horn, 15 Cox, 205; R. v. Turner [1904] 1 K. B. 181; 20 Cox, 540.

Commencement and termination of sentence.]—The sittings of a court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery or quarter sessions are for most purposes contemplated in law as one day (see Whitaker v. Wisbey, 21 L. J. (N. S.) C. P. 116; 6 Cox, 109) : and the sentence runs from the first day of the sittings of the court of trial, unless otherwise ordered : R. v. Wilkes, 4 Bro. P. C. 367; 4 Burr. 2527 : King v. R., 7 Q. B. 782; 14 L. J. (M. C.) 172, Ex. Ch. In the case of quarter sessions or adjourned sessions of the peace the sentence runs from the day when it is pronounced, unless the court otherwise orders. 21 & 22 Vict. c. 73, s. 12. Where a conviction is appealed against the operation of the sentence given by the court of trial is suspended until the appeal is heard. Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), s. 14, sub-s. 3. And where an application for leave to appeal is finally refused or an appeal is dismissed, the Court of Criminal Appeal usually refuses to allow the time to count as part of the sentence, except where leave to appeal has been given. In successful appeals against sentence the court almost invariably allows the time to count as part of the sentence substituted by it.

The Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), s. 12, provides that " (1) In any sentence of imprisonment passed after the commencement of this Act [12th August, 1898], the word month shall, unless the contrary is expressed, be construed as meaning calendar month " (cf. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, as to Acts passed since 1850). " (2) A prisoner whose term of imprisonment or penal servitude expires on any Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday, shall be discharged on the day next preceding." The sentence is computed by including the day on which the sentence of imprisonment begins, and excluding the numerically corresponding days in the month in which the sentence expires. If there is no such day the imprisonment, subject to the above enactment, ends on the last day of the month. Migotti v. Colvill, 4 C. P. D. 233; 48 L. J. (C. P.) 695; 14 Cox, 305. If a prisoner is detained beyond the term of imprisonment adjudged, the gaoler is liable to an action for false imprisonment. Id.; and see Mee v. Cruikshank, ante, p. 227.

Sentence for felony where convict is under previous sentence for another crime.]—" Wherever sentence shall be passed for felony on a person already imprisoned under sentence for another crime, it shall be lawful for the court to award imprisonment for the subsequent offence, to commence at the expiration of the imprisonment to which such person shall have been previously sentenced; and where such person shall be already under sentence, either of imprisonment or of penal servitude, the court, if empowered to pass sentence of penal servitude, may award such sentence for the subsequent offence, to commence at the expiration of the imprisonment or penal servitude to which such person shall have been previously sentenced, although the aggregate term of imprisonment or penal servitude respectively may exceed the term for which either of those punishments could be otherwise awarded." The Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28), s. 10, as modified by the Penal Servitude Acts, post, pp. 236 et seq. It is doubtful whether the "subsequent offence" includes an offence committed before the offence for which the prisoner is undergoing sentence, but for which he is tried subsequently to that offence. See R. v. Hemming, 7 Cr. App. R. 236.

Concurrent or consecutive sentences.]—Where the defendant is convicted of several offences on different counts of the same indictment or on different indictments at the same assizes or sessions, the court as a general rule has power to direct that the sentences shall run consecutively or concurrently.

So where a defendant is charged with several offences at the same time, of the same kind, he may be sentenced to several terms of imprisonment or penal servitude, one after the conclusion of the other. R. v. Rhenwick Williams, 1 Leach, 529, 536: R. v. Cutbush, L. R. 2 Q. B. 379; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 70; 10 Cox, 489. The Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28), s. 10 (supra), relates only to cases where sentence is passed for felony, but the rule thus laid down by statute with regard to felony, also holds good at common law where sentence is passed for misdemeanor. R. v. Castro, 5 Q. B. D. 490: Castro v. R., 6 A. C. 229; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) 497; 14 Cox, 452. Therefore, upon an indictment for misdemeanor, containing two counts for distinct offences, the defendant, if found guilty on each count, may be sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude for two consecutive terms of punishment, one in respect of each count, although the aggregate of the punishments may exceed the punishment allowed by law for one offence. Id. The judges, in answer to a general question by the House of Lords whether a sentence of imprisonment to commence from and after the termination of an imprisonment to which the defendant had been before sentenced for another offence, was good in law, replied that it was good. R. v. Wilkes, 19 St. Tr. 1075, 1132. So also, where an indictment contained two counts for the misdemeanor of passing false coin, and the defendant was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, the judges held that this sentence was wrong (under the statutes then in force as to the coin), but they stated that a sentence of one year's imprisonment might have been passed for each offence, and that the commencement of the second might be postponed until the termination of the first. R. v. Robinson, 1 Mood. 413. Where an indictment for misdemeanor contained four counts, the third of which was held (on error) to be bad in substance, and the defendant, being convicted on the whole indictment, was sentenced to four successive terms of imprisonment, of equal duration, one on each count, it was held that the sentence on the fourth count was not invalidated by the insufficiency of the third count, and that the imprisonment on it was to be computed from the end of the imprisonment on the second count. Gregory v. R., 15 Q. B. 974; 19 L. J. (Q. B.) 366.

In the case of an independent subsequent offence it appears to be doubtful whether the court can legally impose a sentence to run concurrently with a prior current sentence (see R. v. Woolley, 3 Cr. App. 57), though in practice it is frequently done. Where it is not specifically stated that the second sentence is to be consecutive to it, it is treated as being concurrent with the first sentence. See also R. v. Hemming, 7 Cr. App. R. 236.

By the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 47), s. 4, if the holder of a licence granted under the Penal Servitude Acts "is convicted either by the verdict of a jury or upon his own confession of any offence for which he is indicted his licence is forthwith forfeited by virtue of such conviction." Such a person who pleads guilty, and is thereupon bound over to come up for judgment when called upon, has been "convicted" within the meaning of this section. R. v. Rabjohns [1913] 3 K. B. 171; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 994; 29 T. L. R. 614; 23 Cox, 553; 9 Cr. App. R. 33. By section 9 of the same Act, as amended by s. 3 (3) of the Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 69), "where any licence granted in the form set forth in the said schedule A. (or any form lawfully substituted for it; s. 10, and 1891, s. 5) is forfeited by a conviction [on indictment of any offence], or is revoked in pursuance of any summary conviction under this Act or any other Act of Parliament, the person whose licence is revoked or forfeited shall after undergoing any other punishment to which he may be sentenced for the offence, in consequence of which his licence is forfeited or revoked, further undergo a term of penal servitude equal to the portion of his term of penal servitude that remained unexpired at the time of his licence being granted. . . ."

Having regard to these enactments the proper course in cases to which they apply is to impose the sentence for the subsequent offence without any reference to the remanet sentence; for the court has no power to make the new sentence and the remanet of the old sentence run concurrently. R. v. Hamilton [1908] 1 Cr. App. R. 87; nor can it make the new sentence follow the remanet of the old: R. v. Smith, R. v. Wilson [1909] 2 K. B. 756; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 4: and see R. v. King [1897] 1 Q. B. 214; 60 L. J. (Q. B.) 87; 18 Cox, 447, Hawkins, J.; but the fact that there is a remanet may properly be taken into consideration by the judge in determining the length of the sentence he should pass. R. v. Dorrington, 74 J. P. 392; 5 Cr. App. R. 119. See also R. v. Fisher, 5 Cr. App. R. 269: R. v. Saunders, 7 Cr. App. R. 18.

An appeal does not lie to the Court of Criminal Appeal in respect of the remanet of an old sentence: R. v. Williams [1909] 3 Cr. App. R. 2. Any complaint as to the illegality of compelling a prisoner to serve such remanet must be raised on habeas corpus. Ib.

There is now no objection to a sentence of imprisonment being made to run concurrently with a sentence of penal servitude, as while both stand the sentence of penal servitude only has effect. R. v. Phillips, 85 J. P. 188; 15 Cr. App. R. 161. A sentence of penal servitude consecutive to a sentence of imprisonment should not be passed under ordinary circumstances. R. v. Jones, 1 Cr. App. R. 196: R. v. Hemming, 7 Cr. App. 236: R. v. Baumgarten, 9 Cr. App. R. 212. And a sentence of imprisonment consecutive to a sentence of penal servitude should not be passed, as it interferes with the power to grant a licence under the Penal Servitude Acts. R. v. Johnson, 7 Cr. App. R. 97.

PUNISHMENTS.

Death.

By letter of the 10th June, 1903, Lord Alverstone, C.J., informed the Home Office that the judges had decided on the following form of death sentence to be used in all cases :—

"The sentence of the Court upon you is, that you be taken from this place to a lawful prison and thence to a place of execution, and that you be there hanged by the neck until you be dead; and that your body be afterwards buried within the precincts of the prison in which you shall have been confined before your execution. And may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

Sentence of death may not be pronounced or recorded against a person under sixteen (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 103). In the case of persons of sixteen or over judgment of death can be awarded on a conviction on indictment for four offences only : viz. treason, murder, offences against s. 2 of the Piracy Act, 1837 (7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 88), and offences against the Dockyards Protection Act, 1772 (12 G. 3, c. 24). The provisions as to the execution of the sentence in cases of treason or murder are collected under Treason and Murder, post. The treatment in prison of persons under sentence of death is regulated by the Local Prison Rules, 1899 (St. R. & O., No. 322), rr. 93-95.

4 G. 4, c. 48 (Judgment of Death Act, 1823), s. 1.]—"Whenever any person shall be convicted of any felony except murder and shall by law be excluded (sic) the benefit of clergy in respect thereof, and the court before which such offender shall be convicted shall be of opinion that, under the particular circumstances of the case, such offender is a fit and proper subject to be recommended for the royal mercy, it shall and may be lawful for such court, if it shall think fit so to do, to direct the proper officer then being present in court to require and ask, whereupon such officer shall require and ask, if such offender hath or knoweth anything to say why judgment of death should not be recorded against such offender; and in case such offender shall not allege any matter or thing sufficient in law to arrest or bar such judgment, the court shall and may, and is hereby authorized to abstain from pronouncing judgment of death upon such offender, and instead of pronouncing such judgment to order the same to be entered of record; and thereupon such proper officer as aforesaid shall and may, and is hereby authorized to enter judgment of death on record against such offender in the usual and accustomed form, and in such and the same manner as is now used, and as if judgment of death had actually been pronounced in open court against such offender by the court before whom such offender shall have been convicted." By the Central Criminal Court Act, 1837 (7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 77, ss. 1, 3-7), the practice of that court was assimilated to that of other criminal courts : the report to the crown on capital sentences was abolished, and the practice of recording sentence of death made the same as in other courts under 4 G. 4, c. 48.

The only felonies to which 4 G. 4, c. 48, now applies are those under the Dockyards Protection Act, 1772 (12 G. 3, c. 24), and s. 2 of the Piracy Act, 1837 (7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 88).

4 G. 4, c. 48, excepted murder from the case in which death might be recorded, but by the effect of 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 30, s. 2 (now repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95), sentence of death might from 1836 until 1861 be recorded even in cases of murder. R. v. Hogg, 2 M. & Rob. 380, Denman, C.J. The Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 2), directs that "upon every conviction for murder the court shall pronounce sentence of death."

As to staying execution of a sentence of death on a pregnant woman, see ante, p. 228.

Banishment and Expulsion.

Banishment of a British subject beyond the seas was not a lawful punishment at common law except under the obsolete procedure of abjuring the realm. See Countess of Portland v. Prodgers, 2 Vern. 104; 23 Eng. Rep. 677; 2 Hawk. c. 33, s. 137. 10 G. 4, c. 7, ss. 29, 34, provides for the banishment of certain members of Roman Catholic monastic orders. But this form of banishment seems to have been superseded by penal servitude. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, s. 15; and 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 208.

Expulsion of aliens.]—By the Aliens Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 13), s. 3, the secretary of state may if he thinks fit make an order (in this Act referred to as an expulsion order) requiring an alien to leave the United Kingdom within a time fixed by the order, and thereafter to remain out of the United Kingdom (a) if it is certified to him by any court (including a court of summary jurisdiction) that the alien has been convicted before that court of any felony or misdemeanor or other offence for which the court has power to impose imprisonment without the option of a fine . . . and that the court recommend that an expulsion order should be made in his case either in addition to or in lieu of his sentence. The rest of the statute deals with offences not triable on indictment and with other grounds for expulsion not here material. The rest of the Act and the rules provide for the procedure, etc., relating to expulsion orders, etc.

Penal Servitude.

By the Penal Servitude Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 99), penal servitude was substituted in certain cases and under certain regulations for the punishment of transportation, as to which see 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 209.

(As to the meaning of the term "transportation," see Bullock v. Dodds, 2 B. & Ald. 258.)

Penal servitude can be imposed only where specifically allowed by statute, and persons under sixteen may not be sentenced to penal servitude (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 102, sub-ss. 1, 2).

By the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28), s. 8, "every person convicted of any felony, not punishable with death, shall be punished in the manner prescribed by the statute or statutes specially relating to such felony; and every person convicted of any felony, for which no punishment hath been, or hereafter may be specially provided, shall be deemed to be punishable under this Act, and shall be liable at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years " [now penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, infra; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (1), infra. 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 8, does not provide for imprisonment with hard labour, but see 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (2), infra.]

The following enactments regulating sentences of penal servitude are all that it appears necessary to set out here :—

16 & 17 Vict. c. 99 (Penal Servitude Act, 1853), s. 6—Place and mode of confinement of offenders sentenced to penal servitude—Hard labour.]—Every person who under this Act shall be sentenced or ordered to be kept in penal servitude may, during the term of the sentence or order, be confined in any such prison or place of confinement in any part of the United Kingdom, or in any river, port, or harbour of the United Kingdom, in which persons under sentence or order of transportation may now by law be confined, or in any other prison in the United Kingdom, or in any part of his majesty's dominions beyond the seas, or in any port or harbour thereof, as one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state may from time to time direct; and such person may during such term be kept to hard labour, and otherwise dealt with in all respects as persons sentenced to transportation may now by law be dealt with while so confined.

[As to the scope of this section, see R. v. Mount, L. R. 6 P. C. 283; and the Colonial Prisoners Removal Acts of 1869 and 1884 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 10; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 31). For the Orders in Council made under these Acts, see Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 2, tit. Colonial Prisoner, and subsequent annual vols.]

Sect. 7.—All Acts and provisions of Acts now applicable with respect to persons under sentence of transportation shall, so far as may be consistent with the express provisions of this Act, be considered to extend and be applicable to all persons under any sentence or order of penal servitude under this Act. . . . [The rest of the section deals with the appointment of convict prisons in England.]

Sect. 13.—Saves the prerogative of mercy.

Sect. 14.—Provided, also, that nothing herein contained shall interfere with or affect the authority or discretion of any court in respect of any punishment which such court may now award or pass on any offender other than transportation; but where such punishment may be awarded at the discretion of the court, instead of transportation or in addition thereto, the same may be awarded instead of or (as the case may be) in addition to the punishment substituted for transportation under this Act.

20 & 21 Vict. (Penal Servitude Act, 1857), c. 3.]—Recites 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, and (s. 1) repeals ss. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the recited Act.

Sect. 2.—Penal servitude substituted for transportation.]—" No person shall be sentenced to transportation; and any person who, if this Act and the said Act had not been passed, might have been sentenced to transportation, shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude for a term of the same duration as the term of transportation to which such person would have been liable if the said Act and this Act had not been passed; and in every case where, at the discretion of the court, one of any two or more terms of transportation might have been awarded, the court shall have the like discretion to award one of any two or more of the terms of penal servitude which are hereby authorized to be awarded instead of such terms of transportation." [Transportation was provided by 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 8 (ante, p. 236).]

Sects. 3, 4.—Conveyance of convicts beyond the seas.]—Appointment of places beyond the seas to which convicts may be conveyed. These sections are still in force, but the powers which they give have not been exercised.

The treatment of convicts sentenced to penal servitude is regulated by the Convict Prison Rules, 1899 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1899, No. 321); 1901 (Statutory Rules and Orders, No. 723); and 1905 (Statutory Rules and Orders, No. 75).

Sect. 6.—Construction of statutes referring to "transportation."]—"Where in any enactment now in force the expression 'any crime punishable with transportation,' or any expression of the like import, is used, the enactment shall be construed and take effect as applicable also to any crime punishable with penal servitude."

54 & 55 Vict. c. 69 (Penal Servitude Act, 1891), s. 1.—Length of sentences of penal servitude.]—"(1.) Where under any enactment in force when this section comes into operation [5th August, 1891] a court has power to award a sentence of penal servitude, the sentence may, at the discretion of the court, be for any period not less than three years, and not exceeding either five years, or any greater period authorized by the enactment." (2.) [Imprisonment in lieu of penal servitude, vide infra.] (3.) Repeal of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, s. 2.

Note.—The combined effect of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 8 (ante, p. 236), 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2 (supra), and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (1) (supra), appears to be that where under any enactment in force on 5th August, 1891, an offence is merely declared to be felony and no punishment is specially provided for it, such offence remains punishable with penal servitude for any period not exceeding seven years; but where under any such enactment an offence is declared to be punishable with penal servitude, then the sentence may not exceed five years' penal servitude unless a greater period is authorized by the enactment. The Act of 1891 abolished the minimum sentence of five years' penal servitude introduced by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, s. 2 (rep.), and substituted a minimum sentence of three years' penal servitude, thus restoring the minimum which had been prescribed by the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861, except for offences under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 61, where the minimum sentence was ten years' penal servitude. This exception was done away with by 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, under which the minimum sentence of penal servitude under s. 61, as for other crimes, is now three years.

It is now necessary in every case where the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 prescribe a sentence of penal servitude, to read into them the provisions of 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (1), supra. The editors have endeavoured to do this in describing the punishments for particular offences under those Acts.

IMPRISONMENT.

(a) General Statutory Provisions.

54 & 55 Vict. c. 69 (Penal Servitude Act, 1891), s. 1 (2): "Where under any Act now in force or under any future Act a court is empowered or required to award a sentence of penal servitude, the court may in its discretion, unless such future Act otherwise provides, award imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour."

The effect of this enactment is virtually to repeal all provisions contained in Acts passed before 1891, empowering the substitution for transportation or penal servitude of a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding two years, e.g., under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 193 (smuggling); and in the case of Acts passed since 1891, to allow the substitution of imprisonment for penal servitude where the latter punishment only is mentioned in the later Act. The enactment does not apply to offences for which penal servitude cannot in any case be awarded. Thus it seems not as a matter of law to affect Acts which do not authorize penal servitude, but authorize imprisonment for three or more years, e.g., 9 W. 3, c. 35, s. 1 (blasphemy); and it does not apply to enactments passed after 1891, fixing another term of imprisonment as an alternative to penal servitude.

8 Edw. 7, c. 67 (Children Act, 1908), s. 102 (1): "A child shall not be sentenced to . . . imprisonment for any offence, or committed to prison in default of payment of a fine, damages, or costs. . . . (3) A young person shall not be sentenced to imprisonment for an offence or committed to prison in default of payment of a fine, damages, or costs, unless the court certifies that the young person is of so unruly a character that he cannot be detained in a place of detention provided under this part of this Act, or that he is of so depraved a character that he is not a fit person to be so detained."

The discipline and treatment of prisoners sentenced to imprisonment for crime is regulated by the Local Prison Rules, 1899 (Statutory Rules and Orders, No. 322), as amended by subsequent rules.

(b) Imprisonment without Hard Labour.

Imprisonment without hard labour may be imposed for any common law misdemeanour not subject to special statutory punishment, and for any statutory misdemeanor for which no specific statutory punishment is prescribed. In cases falling within 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (2) (supra), it may be imposed as an alternative to penal servitude. And it is also, under many statutes, a substantive or alternative punishment for felony, and for many misdemeanors.

There is not at common law any limit to the term of imprisonment without hard labour. Castro v. R., 5 Q. B. D. 490, 509; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) 497, Bramwell, L. J.; 1 Stephen Hist. Cr. L. 490: and see Re Forbes, 8 New South Wales Rep. (Law), 68, and 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1353, Appendix H. The ordinary statutory maximum term of imprisonment is two years (see 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (2), ante, p. 239), and in practice this is not exceeded even in the case of offences to which it has not been specifically applied.

Imprisonment without hard labour was substituted in 1816 (56 G. 3, c. 138, s. 2) as a punishment for the pillory; and the latter mode of punishment was wholly abolished by 7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 23 (rep.). See 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 250.

The common law rules as to imprisonment without hard labour are affected by the following statutory provisions :—

40 & 41 Vict. c. 21 (Prison Act, 1877), s. 40.]—" The Prison Commissioners shall see that any prisoner under sentence inflicted on conviction for sedition or seditious libel shall be treated as a misdemeanant of the first division, within the meaning of s. 67 of the Prison Act, 1865 (see post, p. 241), notwithstanding any statute, provision, or rule to the contrary."

61 & 62 Vict. c. 41 (Prison Act, 1898), s. 6.]—" (1.) Prisoners convicted of offences either on indictment or otherwise, and not sentenced to penal servitude or hard labour, shall be divided into three divisions.

"(2.) Where a person is convicted by any court of an offence and is sentenced to imprisonment without hard labour [or committed to prison for non-payment of a fine] the court may, if it thinks fit, having regard to the nature of the offence and the antecedents of the offender, direct that he be treated as an offender of the first division or as an offender of the second division. (a). If no direction is given by the court, the offender shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be treated as an offender of the third division. [The words between square brackets have been added by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 16 (2), infra.]

((3.) Relates to imprisonment for default of paying debts or in lieu of distress.)

" (4.) [repealed by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 28, infra.]

" (5.) References in ss. 40 and 41 of the Prison Act, 1877 (supra, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), to a misdemeanant of the first division within the meaning of s. 67 of the Prison Act, 1865, shall be construed as references to an offender of the first division within the meaning of this section."

4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58 (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), s. 16.]—" (1) Where imprisonment is imposed by any court in respect of the non-payment of any sum adjudged by that or any other court to be paid the imprisonment shall be without hard labour.

" Where a person convicted by or before any court of an offence is sentenced to imprisonment without the option of a fine, the imprisonment may, in the discretion of the court, be either with or without hard labour, notwithstanding that the offence is an offence at common law or that the statute under which the sentence is passed does not authorize the imposition of hard labour or requires the imposition of hard labour.

" (2) If no direction is given by a court in pursuance of the powers conferred by section six of the Prison Act, 1898, as to the division in which an offender is to be placed, the offender shall, subject to the provisions of that section, be treated as an offender of the third division unless the visiting committee consider the case suitable for treatment in the second division, and direct that the offender be so treated.

" Subsection (2) of that section shall be amended by the insertion after the words ' without hard labour ' of the words ' or committed to prison for non-payment of a fine.'

" (3) A court or visiting committee shall not direct an offender to be treated as an offender of the second division if his character and antecedents are such that he is likely to exercise a bad influence on first offenders.

" (4) The provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of section six of the Prison Act, 1898, as amended by this section, which relate to the classification of offenders sentenced to imprisonment for offences, shall apply to cases where the person is sentenced to imprisonment for failing to do or to abstain from doing any act or thing required to be done or left undone.

" (5) Subsection (3) of the same section (which requires that certain prisoners shall be placed in a separate division and treated under special rules and shall not be placed in association with criminal prisoners nor be compelled to wear prison dress unless their own clothing is unfit for use), shall extend to persons committed to prison for contempt of court, and accordingly the words ' or for contempt of court ' shall be inserted in that subsection after the words ' hard labour.' "

[By the effect of s. 15 (2) of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), s. 67 of the Prison Act, 1865, was repealed on May 1, 1899, on the coming into operation of the Local Prison Rules (Statutory Rules and Orders), 1899, No. 322, made under ss. 2, 6, of the Act of 1898.]

By the Local Prison Rules, 1899 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1899, No. 322, r. 40), a prisoner sentenced to imprisonment without hard labour shall be required to work, during such number of hours, not more than ten or less than six (exclusive of meals) in each day, as may be prescribed, unless the medical officer certifies that he is unfit for such labour; and shall be liable to punishment for neglect of work. He shall from the beginning of his sentence be employed on some useful industry for the purpose of which he may, if necessary, be associated, and he shall be entitled to such privileges as can be gained by industry with good conduct under the Progressive Stage System.

The treatment of persons sentenced to imprisonment in the first division is regulated by Part III., rr. 213 et seq. of the above Prison Rules, and that of persons sentenced to imprisonment in the second division by Part IV., rr. 232 et seq. Persons sentenced to imprisonment in the third division are dealt with under the general rules as to local prisons. (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1899, No. 322, r. 243.)

(c) Imprisonment with Hard Labour.

Imprisonment with hard labour can be imposed only under statutory authority. See under 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (2) (ante, p. 239), or the particular enactment dealing with the offence in question, or under 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 16 (1), ante, p. 240.

It would seem that unless the court specifies hard labour in the sentence it cannot be enforced. R. v. Tyrone JJ. [1909] 2 Ir. Rep. 763.

Imprisonment with hard labour for not over two years can be imposed instead of penal servitude. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (2) (ante, p. 239), and also for the following misdemeanors :—

3 G. 4, c. 114 (Hard Labour Act, 1822).]—Recites 56 G. 3, c. 162, and enacts, that " whenever any person shall be convicted of any of the offences thereafter specified and set forth : that is to say, . . . any attempt to commit felony; any riot, . . . keeping a common gaming-house, a common bawdy house, or a common ill-governed and disorderly house; . . . in each and every of the above cases, and whenever any person shall be convicted of any or either of the aforesaid offences, it shall and may be lawful for the court before which any such offender shall be convicted, or which by law is authorized to pass sentence upon any such offender, to award and order (if such court shall think fit) sentence of imprisonment with hard labour, for any term not exceeding the term for which such court may now imprison for such offences, either in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment which may be inflicted on any such offenders by any law in force before the passing of this Act; and every such offender shall thereupon suffer such sentence, in such place, and for such time as aforesaid, as such court shall think fit to direct."

14 & 15 Vict. c. 100 (Criminal Procedure Act, 1851), s. 29.]—" Whenever any person shall be convicted of any one of the offences following, as an indictable misdemeanor; that is to say, any cheat or fraud punishable at common law; any conspiracy to cheat or defraud, or to extort money or goods, or falsely to accuse of any crime, or to obstruct, prevent, pervert, or defeat the course of public justice; any escape or rescue from lawful custody on a criminal charge; any public and indecent exposure of the person; . . . any public selling, or exposing for public sale or to public view, of any obscene book, print, picture, or other indecent exhibition (see R. v. Jackson, 3 Cr. App. R. 192); it shall be lawful for the court to sentence the offender to be imprisoned for any term now warranted by law, and also to be kept to hard labour during the whole or any part of such term of imprisonment." This enactment does not extend to common law forgery. R. v. Hamilton [1901] 1 K. B. 740; 70 L. J. (K. B.) 480; 65 J. P. 265; 19 Cox, 675; nor to a conspiracy to contravene a statute aimed at a particular form of fraud : R. v. Costello [1910] 1 K. B. 28, 34; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 90; 74 J. P. 15.

By 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58 (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), s. 16 (1) (ante, p. 240), imprisonment with hard labour may be imposed for any offence, except for non-payment of a fine; and by the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 12 (1), as well as by the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 37 (4), imprisonment with or without hard labour for not more than two years may be imposed on conviction of any offence against the Act where a sentence of penal servitude may be imposed and in its stead.

The hard labour to be performed is regulated by the Local Prison Rules, 1899 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1889, No. 322).

Rule 39. Males.]—(1) Every male prisoner, not being a juvenile offender, if sentenced to hard labour, shall, for twenty-eight days, or for the whole of his sentence, if it is less than twenty-eight days, be employed in strict separation on hard bodily or hard manual labour, provided that no prisoner shall be so employed for more than ten or less than six hours per diem, exclusive of meals. If his sentence is more than twenty-eight days, he shall, after that period, provided his conduct and industry are good, be employed on labour of a less hard description in association if practicable, and shall be eligible for all the privileges of the Progressive Stage System. Provided that no prisoner shall be required to perform any labour of any description unless certified by the medical officer to be fit for such labour.

(2) An aged prisoner in weak health, or any prisoner suffering from physical or mental infirmity, likely to be aggravated by cellular isolation, shall be employed on such work and in such way as the medical officer may direct.

Rule 42. Females.]—Every female prisoner sentenced to hard labour shall be kept at labour during such number of hours, not more than ten or less than six (exclusive of meals) in each day, as may be prescribed, unless the medical officer certifies that she is unfit for such labour, regard being had to any advice or suggestions that members of the visiting committee or Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society are able to offer on the subject.

Rule 44. Medical examination of hard labour prisoners.]—The medical officer shall from time to time examine the prisoners sentenced to hard labour during the time of their being so employed, and shall enter in his journal the name of any prisoner whose health he thinks to be endangered by a continuance of labour, and thereupon the prisoner shall not again be employed at such labour until the medical officer certifies that he is fit for such employment.

The power of courts of justice in England to impose the punishment of solitary confinement has been taken away by the repeal of the enactments conferring it: see 56 & 57 Vict. c. 54 (S. L. R.). For some time before 1893 solitary confinement was very rarely, if ever, imposed by a criminal court as part of its sentence. This probably arose from the fact that criminal prisoners when consigned to gaol were subjected to a confinement, which, if not in name, was in effect almost solitary. Under the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), s. 17, sub-s. 5:—"In a prison where criminal prisoners are confined, such prisoners shall be prevented from holding any communication with each other, either by every prisoner being kept in a separate cell by day and by night, except when he is at chapel or taking exercise, or by every prisoner being confined by night to his cell and being subjected to such superintendence during the day as will, consistently with the provisions of this Act, prevent his communicating with any other prisoner."

This enactment was repealed by s. 15 (2) of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), on the coming into force (on May 1st, 1899) of the Local Prison Rules, 1899, made and approved by parliament under s. 4 of that Act, and the separate confinement of prisoners is now regulated by these rules, for which see Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 10, tit. Prison (E.), pp. 6, 77.

Temporary Discharge for Ill-health.

3 Geo. 5, c. 4, s. 1. Power of Secretary of State to discharge prisoners temporarily on account of their health.]—(1) If the Secretary of State is satisfied that by reason of the condition of a prisoner's health it is undesirable to detain him in prison, but that, such condition of health being due in whole or in part to the prisoner's own conduct in prison, it is desirable that his release should be temporary and conditional only, the Secretary of State may, if he thinks fit, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, by order authorise the temporary discharge of the prisoner for such period and subject to such conditions as may be stated in the order.

(2) Any prisoner so discharged shall comply with any conditions stated in the order of temporary discharge, and shall return to prison at the expiration of the period stated in the order, or of such extended period as may be fixed by any subsequent order of the Secretary of State, and, if the prisoner fails so to comply or return, he may be arrested without warrant and taken back to prison.

(3) Where a prisoner under sentence is discharged in pursuance of an order of temporary discharge, the currency of the sentence shall be suspended from the day on which he is discharged from prison under the order to the day on which he is received back into prison, so that the former day shall be reckoned and the latter shall not be reckoned as part of the sentence.

(4) Where an order of temporary discharge is made in the case of a prisoner not under sentence, the order shall contain conditions requiring the attendance of the prisoner at any further proceedings on his case at which his presence may be required.

Sect. 2. Savings.]—(1) Where the prisoner is undergoing a sentence of penal servitude, the powers under this Act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for the power of granting licences under the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853 to 1891.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall affect the duties of the medical officer of a prison in respect of a prisoner whom the Secretary of State does not think fit to discharge under this Act.

Sect. 3. Application to Scotland and Ireland.]—In the application of this Act to Scotland and Ireland, references to the Secretary of State shall be construed as references to the Secretary for Scotland and the Lord Lieutenant respectively.

Sect. 4. Short title.]—This Act may be cited as the Prisoners (Temporary Discharge for Ill-health) Act, 1913.

Whipping.

Whipping was one of the ordinary common-law punishments for misdemeanors committed by persons of either sex, but is not now in practice inflicted except under statutory authority. In 1820 it was made illegal to whip females, and imprisonment was substituted. 1 G. 4, c. 57.

4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58 (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), s. 36.]—(1) No person shall be sentenced to be whipped more than once for the same offence. (2) No person shall be sentenced to be whipped otherwise than under a statutory enactment.

Adult males.]—The power of whipping males for felony given by 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28, s. 8, was taken away by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 57 (S. L. R.), but the whipping of adult males, with no limitation as to the number of strokes, is still authorized by statute in the following cases: on conviction under the Knackers Act, 1786 (26 G. 3, c. 71), ss. 8, 9; on the sentence of incorrigible rogues at quarter sessions, 5 G. 4, c. 83, s. 10 (see R. v. Anthony, 1 Cr. App. R. 82): R. v. Herion [1913] 1 K. B. 284; 23 Cox, 387; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 82: R. v. Fidler, 78 J. P. 142; 9 Cr. App. R. 197; on conviction under s. 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), as altered by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 3: see R. v. O'Connor [1913] 1 K. B. 557; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 335; under s. 7 (5) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, R. v. Austen [1913] 1 K. B. 551; 23 Cox, 346; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 387; on conviction of offences against the person of the Sovereign under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, s. 2 (see R. v. O'Connor, 7 St. Tr. (N. S) 3 and n.). Male persons may also be whipped on conviction of offences against s. 23 (1) of the Larceny Act, 1916, or s. 21 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. The last two classes of offences include robbery under arms, assault under arms with intent to rob, robbery or assault with intent to rob by at least two persons, or robbery with violence; and attempting by any means whatever to choke, strangle, or suffocate any person, or any of such cases; or attempting to render any person insensible, unconscious, or incapable of resistance by any means calculated to choke, suffocate, or strangle such person with intent in any of such cases thereby to enable himself or any person to commit, or with intent in any of such cases to assist another in committing any indictable offence (26 & 27 Vict. c. 44). Whipping has been awarded for use of violence of the kind indicated, with intent to commit rape. R. v. Smallbones, Hants Winter Assizes [1898] 33 L. J. Newsp. 124. On conviction of a male person of offences under either of these sections:—"The court before whom he is convicted may, in addition to the punishment awarded by the said sections, or any part thereof, direct that the offender, if a male, be once privately whipped, subject to the following provisions: 1. That in the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, the number of strokes at each whipping do not exceed twenty-five, and the instrument used shall be a birch rod: 2. That in the case of any other male offender the number of strokes do not exceed fifty at such whipping: 3. That in each case the court in its sentence shall specify the number of strokes to be inflicted, and the instrument to be used: provided that in no case shall such whipping take place after the expiration of six months from the passing of the sentence: provided also, that every such whipping to be inflicted on any person sentenced to penal servitude shall be inflicted on him before he shall be removed to a convict prison with a view to his undergoing his sentence of penal servitude." 26 & 27 Vict. c. 44, s. 1 (Garrotters Act, 1863); 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (6).

Youthful male offenders.]—Males under sixteen may be sentenced to whipping on conviction under several sections of the Larceny Act, 1916, the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, and the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, and under s. 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. The age of the offender at the time of conviction is alone to be considered. R. v. Cawthron [1913] 3 K. B. 168; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 981; 29 T. L. R. 600. The mode of adjudging the sentences on conviction on indictment is prescribed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 75; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 70; 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (6). As to whipping children or young persons on summary conviction for indictable offences, see Stone, Justices' Manual; Magistrates' Annual Practice; Douglas, Summary Jurisdiction Procedure.

Prisoners.]—Prisoners in any convict or local prison may be flogged for offences committed against prison discipline in cases falling within s. 5 of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), and the Convict Prison Rules, 1899, rr. 82-85, and the Local Prison Rules, 1899, rr. 88-91, Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 10, tit. Prison (E.).

Fine.

Treason and felony.]—At common law a fine was rarely, if ever, imposed on conviction of treason or felony. Its place was taken by the forfeitures which followed on conviction and attainder, abolished in 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), s. 1, post, p. 264). The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 do not contain any powers to inflict a fine on conviction of felony (except in the case of manslaughter), 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 5; nor is such a fine now ever inflicted without statutory authority, e.g., under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, post, p. 260.

Misdemeanor.]—At common law the court may impose as part or the whole of a sentence for misdemeanor, a fine or ransom, i.e., a pecuniary penalty, or pecuniary forfeiture. There is no general statutory limit to the amount of such fine, except the provisions of Magna Charta, 25 Edw. 1, c. 14, and the Bill of Rights (1 W. & M., sess. 2, c. 2), against excessive and unreasonable fines and assessments; and see 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 490: Re Forbes, 8 N. S. W. Rep. (Law), 68. At common law a married woman could not be fined for misdemeanor: R. v. Thomas, cas. (K. B.) temp. Hard. 278; but since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), there seems no reason why she should not be fined: and statutes authorising a fine are applied to married women as well as to other persons.

In the case of conviction of a person under sixteen powers are given to order the parent or guardian of the child to pay a fine instead of the child, etc. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 99 (1). As to appeal against such order, see s. 99 (6), post, p. 303.

The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 all contain a discretionary power to fine for misdemeanors within the Acts, and so does the Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 12 (2) (a), and the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 37 (5) (a). Reference should be made to the particular enactment creating a misdemeanor or fixing its punishment.

Recognizances.

Felony.]—A person convicted of any felony, except murder, within the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 or later Acts superseding them, may, if the court think fit, be required, in addition to any other punishment, to enter into his own recognizances, with or without sureties, to keep the peace, and on failure to find sureties may be imprisoned for not over a year. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97 (Malicious Damage), s. 73; c. 99 (Coinage Offences), s. 38; c. 100 (Offences against the Person), s. 71: Forgery Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27), s. 12 (2) (b) (c) (d); Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 37 (5) (b).

Misdemeanor.]—A person convicted of any misdemeanor, whether at common law or by statute, may, in addition to, or in substitution for any other punishment, be required to enter into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for a reasonable time to be specified in the order: R. v. Dunn, 12 Q. B. 1026, 1031, 1041 n. See also R. v. Edgar, 77 J. P. 356; 28 Cox, 558; and in cases within s. 5 of the Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), R. v. Trueman [1913] 3 K. B. 164; 23 Cox, 550; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 916; 29 T. L. R. 599; and in cases within the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 and later Acts superseding them (see the sections above quoted), may, in default of sureties, be imprisoned for not over one year. For the text of those enactments, see the particular titles. A married woman may be required to find sureties; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 219. Where such an order is made, it usually prescribes imprisonment until the recognizances are entered into. Where the conditions of such recognizances are broken, the recognizance may be estreated. See Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, rr. 113, 115: Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 289; and ante, pp. 95 et seq.

As to release on probation, vide post, p. 259.

DEALING WITH YOUTHFUL OFFENDERS.

(a) Persons under Sixteen.

8 Edw. 7, c. 67 (Children Act, 1908), s. 107. Methods of dealing with children and young persons charged with offences.]—"Where a child or young person charged with any offence is tried by any court, and the court is satisfied of his guilt, the court shall take into consideration the manner in which, under the provisions of this or any other Act enabling the court to deal with the case, the case should be dealt with, namely, whether—

(a) by dismissing the charge; or

(b) by discharging the offender on his entering into a recognizance; or

(c) by so discharging the offender and placing him under the supervision of a probation officer (see Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, post, p. 260); or

(d) by committing the offender to the care of a relative or other fit person; or

(e) by sending the offender to an industrial school (post, p. 250); or

(f) by sending the offender to a reformatory school (post, p. 250); or

(g) by ordering the offender to be whipped (ante, p. 245); or (h) by ordering the offender to pay a fine, damages, or costs; or
(i) by ordering the parent or guardian of the offender to pay a fine, damages, or costs (s. 99); or
(j) by ordering the parent or guardian of the offender to give security for his good behaviour; or (k) by committing the offender in custody in a place of detention provided under this part of this Act (ss. 103, 104, 108, 109); or
(l) Where the offender is a young person, by sentencing him to imprisonment (see s. 102 (3), infra); or
(m) by dealing with the case in any other manner in which it may be legally dealt with (see s. 106, post):

Provided that nothing in this section shall be construed as authorising the court to deal with any case in any manner in which it could not deal with the case apart from this section." [This section merely enumerates the legal modes of dealing with young persons prescribed by other enactments.]

Sect. 131.—Definition of child and young person.]—"For the purposes of this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'child' means a person under the age of fourteen years, and the expression 'young person' means a person who is fourteen years or upwards, and under the age of sixteen years." [A person who at the time of trial is more than sixteen years old is not a "young person" within the meaning of this section, though he was under sixteen at the time of the commission of the offence: R. v. Fitt [1919] 2 I. R. 35.]

Sect. 102.—Restrictions on punishment of children and young persons.]—(1) A child shall not be sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude for any offence, or committed to prison in default of payment of a fine, damages, or costs.

(2) A young person shall not be sentenced to penal servitude for any offence.

(3) A young person shall not be sentenced to imprisonment for an offence or committed to prison in default of payment of a fine, damages, or costs, unless the court certifies that the young person is of so unruly a character that he cannot be detained in a place of detention provided under this part of this Act [s. 108], or that he is of so depraved a character that he is not a fit person to be so detained.

[Sub-s. (1) of this section does not abolish the power to inflict whipping in addition to imprisonment which is given by the provisions of some other statute, because a sentence of imprisonment may not now be passed, but it merely substitutes a different form of detention. Where a sentence of whipping is imposed, it is the duty of the sheriff to carry out the order, and he may appoint a deputy for that purpose. R. v. Lydford [1914] 2 K. B. 378; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 589; 78 J. P. 213; 30 T. L. R. 349; 10 Cr. App. R. 62.]

For an instance under sub-s. (3), see R. v. Bradford, 76 J. P. 46; 22 Cox, 627. There must be evidence upon which the court can certify under the sub-section. R. v. Foster, 12 Cr. App. R. 164.

Sect. 103.—Abolition of death sentence in case of children and young persons.] —Sentence of death shall not be pronounced on or recorded against a child or young person, but in lieu thereof the court shall sentence the child or young person to be detained during his Majesty's pleasure, and, if so sentenced, he shall, notwithstanding anything in the other provisions of this Act, be liable to be detained in such place and under such conditions as the secretary of state may direct, and whilst so detained shall be deemed to be in legal custody. [Sentence of death may be pronounced on a person who is more than sixteen years of age at the time of trial: R. v. Fitt [1919] 2 I. R. 35.]

Sect. 104.—Detention in the case of certain crimes committed by children or young persons.]—Where a child or young person is convicted on indictment of an attempt to murder, or of manslaughter, or of wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and the court is of opinion that no punishment which under the provisions of this Act it is authorized to inflict is sufficient, the court may sentence the offender to be detained for such period as may be specified in the sentence; and where such a sentence is passed the child or young person shall, during that period, notwithstanding anything in the other provisions of this Act, be liable to be detained in such place and on such conditions as the secretary of state may direct, and whilst so detained shall be deemed to be in legal custody.

Sect. 105.—Provisions as to discharge of children and young persons detained in accordance with directions of secretary of state.]—(1) A person in detention pursuant to the directions of the secretary of state under the last two foregoing sections of this Act may, at any time, be discharged by the secretary of state on licence.

(2) A licence may be in such form and may contain such conditions as the secretary of state may direct.

(3) A licence may at any time be revoked or varied by the secretary of state, and where a licence has been revoked the person to whom the licence related shall return to such place as the secretary of state may direct, and if he fails to do so he may be apprehended without warrant and taken to that place.

Sect. 106.—Substitution of custody in a place of detention for imprisonment.] —Where a child or young person is convicted of an offence punishable in the case of an adult with penal servitude or imprisonment, or would if he were an adult be liable to be imprisoned in default of payment of any fine, damages, or costs, and the court considers that none of the other methods in which the case may legally be dealt with is suitable, the court may, in lieu of sentencing him to imprisonment or committing him to prison, order that he be committed to custody in a place of detention provided under this part of this Act and named in the order for such term as may be specified in the order, not exceeding the term for which he might, but for this part of this Act, be sentenced to imprisonment or committed to prison, nor in any case exceeding one month.

Sect. 108.—[Obligation of the police authority to provide (after 1st Jan., 1914), places of detention for every petty sessional division within the police district.]

Sect. 109.—Provisions as to custody of children and young persons in places of detention.]—(1) The order or judgment in pursuance of which a child or young person is committed to custody in a place of detention provided under this part of this Act shall be delivered with the child or young person to the person in charge of the place of detention and shall be a sufficient authority for his detention in that place in accordance with the tenour thereof.

(2) A child or young person whilst so detained and whilst being conveyed to and from the place of detention shall be deemed to be in legal custody, and if he escapes may be apprehended without warrant and brought back to the place of detention in which he was detained.

(3) [Power of secretary of state as to inspection of places of detention and classification, etc., of persons detained.]

Provided that where the offender is ordered to be sent to a certified reformatory school he shall not in addition be sentenced to imprisonment. [Vide 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, ss. 103, 106, 107, ante, pp. 247 et seq.

(2) Where such an order has been made in respect of a youthful offender of the age of fourteen years or upwards, and no certified reformatory school can be found the managers of which are willing to receive him, the secretary of state may order the offender to be brought before the court which made the order or any court having the like jurisdiction, and that court may in lieu of the detention order make such order or pass such sentence as the court may determine, so however that the order or sentence shall be such as might have been originally made or passed in respect of the offence.

Sect. 58.—Power of court of assize or quarter sessions as to persons under twelve.]—(2) Where a child apparently under the age of twelve years is charged before a court of assize or quarter sessions or a petty sessional court with an offence punishable in the case of an adult by penal servitude or a less punishment, the court, if satisfied on inquiry that it is expedient so to deal with the child, may order him to be sent to a certified industrial school. (7) Where under this section a court is empowered to order a child to be sent to a certified industrial school the court, in lieu of ordering him to be so sent, may in accordance with the provisions of Part II. of this Act make an order for the committal of the child to the care of a relative or other fit person named by the court, and the provisions of that Part shall, so far as applicable, apply as if the order were an order under that Part.

Sect. 60.—Power in such cases to place young persons under supervision of probation officer.]—Where under the provisions of this Part of this Act an order is made for the committal of a child or young person to the care of a relative or other fit person named by the court, the court may in addition to such order make an order under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 [post, p. 260], that the child or young person be placed under the supervision of a probation officer: Provided that the recognizance into which the child, if not charged with an offence, or the young person is required to enter, shall bind him to appear and submit to the further order of the court.

Sect. 61.—Power to defer operation of order.]—An order of a court ordering a youthful offender or child to be sent to and detained in a certified school (in this Act referred to as a detention order) may, if the court think fit, be made to take effect either immediately or at any later date specified therein, regard being had to the age or health of the youthful offender or child.

Sect. 62.—Choice of school.]—(1) The school to which a youthful offender or child is to be sent under a detention order shall be such school as may be specified in the order, being some certified school (whether situate within the jurisdiction of the court making the order or not) the managers of which are willing to receive the youthful offender or child:

Provided that, if it is found impossible to specify the school in the detention order, the school shall, subject to the provisions of this Act with respect to the determination of the place of residence of a youthful offender or child, be such as a justice having jurisdiction in the place where the court which made the order sat may by endorsement on the detention order direct.

(2) Where the court is satisfied that a youthful offender or child is, by reason of mental or physical defect, incapable of receiving proper benefit from industrial training in an ordinary certified school, but is not incapable by reason of such defect of receiving benefit from industrial training in a certified school where special provision is made for the training of youthful offenders or children suffering from such defect, the detention order (if any) shall be for detention in a school where such provision is made.

Sect. 63.—Temporary detention until sent to certified school.]—If—

(a) a detention order is made but is not to take effect immediately; or

(b) at the time specified for the order to take effect the youthful offender or child is unfit to be sent to a certified school; or,

(c) the school to which the youthful offender or child is to be sent cannot be ascertained until inquiry has been made, the court may make an order committing him either to custody in any place to which he might be committed on remand under Part V. of this Act [s. 97], or to the custody of a relative or other fit person to whose care he might be committed under Part II. of this Act, and he shall be kept in that custody accordingly until he is sent to a certified school in pursuance of the detention order.

Sect. 64.—Conveyance to school.]—(1) The person by whom any youthful offender or child ordered to be sent to a certified school is detained shall at the appointed time deliver him into the custody of the constable or other person responsible for his conveyance to school, who shall deliver him to the superintendent or other person in charge of the school in which he is to be detained, together with the order or other document in pursuance of which the offender or child was detained and is sent to the school.

(2) The detention order in pursuance of which the youthful offender or child is sent to a certified school shall be a sufficient authority for his conveyance to and detention in the school or any other school to which he is transferred under this part of this Act.

Sect. 65.—Period of Detention.]—The detention order shall specify the time for which the youthful offender or child is to be detained in the school, being—

(a) in the case of a youthful offender sent to a reformatory school, not less than three and not more than five years, but not in any case extending beyond the time when the younthful offender will, in the opinion of the court, attain the age of nineteen years; and

(b) in the case of a child sent to an industrial school, such time as to the court may seem proper for the teaching and training of the child, but not in any case extending beyond the time when the child will, in the opinion of the court, attain the age of sixteen years.

Sect. 66.—Provision as to religious persuasion.]—(1) The court or justice, in determining the certified school to which a youthful offender or child is to be sent, shall endeavour to ascertain the religious persuasion to which the offender or child belongs, and the detention order shall, where practicable, specify the religious persuasion to which the offender or child appears to belong, and a school conducted in accordance with that persuasion shall, where practicable, be selected.

Sub-ss. (2), (3).—[Deal with visits by a member of the religious persuasions specified in the order, and for transfer of the youthful offender to a school of his own religious persuasion, in the case of courts of assizes or quarter sessions by order of a secretary of state.]

Sect. 67.—[Placing youthful offenders out on licence.]

Sect. 68.—[Supervision of youthful offenders and children after expiration of sentence of detention.]

Sect. 69.—[Discharge of youthful offenders from certified schools and transfer to other such schools.]

Sect. 70.—[Apprenticeship.]

Sect. 71.—[Penalties for refusing to conform to rules of school.]

Sect. 72.—[Escaping from schools.]

Sect. 75.—Contributions by parents.]—(1) The parent, or other person liable to maintain a youthful offender or child ordered to be sent to and detained in a certified school shall, if able to do so, contribute to his maintenance therein a sum not exceeding such sum as may be declared by order in council to represent approximately the average cost of maintenance of youthful offenders or children in the class of school to which such school belongs in the locality in which such school is situate.

(2)—(a) The court by which a detention order (vide ante, p. 249) is made shall at the time of making that order, unless it considers that it is not in possession of the necessary information; . . . make an order on such parent or other person for the payment to the chief inspector of such weekly sum, not exceeding such sum as aforesaid, as having regard to the liability of the parent or other person seems reasonable during the whole or any part of the time for which the offender or child is liable to be detained in the school :

Provided that the court making the detention order, if a court of assize or court of quarter sessions, may, of it thinks fit, remit the case to a court of summary jurisdiction for the place where the offender or child was committed for trial, for the purpose of making an order under this section, and upon the case being so remitted any such court of summary jurisdiction shall have power to make any such order under this section as the court which made the detention order might have made.

(3) Every such order may specify the time during which the payment is to be made, or may direct the payment to be made until further order, and shall be enforceable as an order of affiliation.

(4) Any order made under this section may, on application being made either by the person on whom the order is made or by or at the instance of the chief inspector and on fourteen days' notice of such application being given to the chief inspector or person on whom the order was made, be varied by any court which would have had power to make the order.

(5) An order made under this section shall be binding on the person on whom it is made :

Provided that if that person was not summoned to attend the sitting of the court at which the order was made, the order shall be served on him in manner prescribed by rules of court, and shall be binding on him unless he makes an application against it within the time prescribed by rules of court to the court by which the order was made or any court of like jurisdiction on the ground either that he is not liable to maintain the offender or child, or that he is unable to contribute the sum specified in the order, and on any such application being made the court may confirm the order with or without modifications or may rescind it. . . .

(10) Where there is some person, other than the parent, liable to maintain a youthful offender or child, an order under this section may be made on that person notwithstanding that there may be also a parent.

(11) Any court making an order under this section for contribution by a parent or other such person may, in any case where there is any pension or income payable to such parent or other person and capable of being attached, after giving the person by whom the pension or income is payable an opportunity of being heard, further order that such part as the court may see fit of the pension or income be attached and be paid to the person named by the court. Such further order shall be an authority to the person by whom such pension or other income is payable to make the payment so ordered, and the receipt of the person to whom the payment is ordered to be made shall be a good discharge to such first-named person.

Reformation of Young Offenders.

(b) Juvenile Adults.

8 Edw. 7, c. 59 (Prevention of Crime Act, 1908), s. 1.—Power of court to pass sentence of detention in Borstal Institution.]—(1) Where a person is convicted on indictment of an offence for which he is liable to be sentenced to penal servitude or imprisonment, and it appears to the court—

(a) that the person is not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-one years of age; and

(b) that, by reason of his criminal habits or tendencies, or association with persons of bad character, it is expedient that he should be subject to detention for such term and under such instruction and discipline as appears most conducive to his reformation and the repression of crime;

it shall be lawful for the court, in lieu of passing a sentence of penal servitude or imprisonment, to pass a sentence of detention under penal discipline in a Borstal Institution for a term of not less than two years not more than three years: [The minimum term of one year has been increased to two years by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 11 (1).]

Provided that, before passing such a sentence, the court shall consider any report or representations which may be made to it by or on behalf of the prison commissioners as to the suitability of the case for treatment in a Borstal Institution, and shall be satisfied that the character, state of health, and mental condition of the offender, and the other circumstances of the case, are such that the offender is likely to profit by such instruction and discipline as aforesaid. [The court is not bound by the report of the commissioners. R. v. Watkins, 74 J. P. 382. It is to be noted that no provision is made for specifying the age of the offender in the indictment, nor for any finding on the subject by the jury, and that the court, subject to the statutory conditions, is to decide whether the Act should be applied, and to ascertain whether the offender falls within its scope. Where it appears after conviction that the person sentenced to Borstal is over twenty-one the Court of Criminal Appeal may alter the sentence. R. v. McCann, 6 Cr. App. R. 115.]

(2) The secretary of state may by order direct that this section shall extend to persons apparently under such age not exceeding the age of twenty-three as may be specified in the order, and upon such an order being made this section shall, whilst the order is in force, have effect as if the specified age were substituted for "twenty-one":

Provided that such an order shall not be made until a draft thereof has lain before each House of Parliament for not less than thirty days during the session of Parliament, and if either House, before the expiration of that period, presents an address to his Majesty against the draft or any part thereof, no further proceedings shall be taken thereon, but without prejudice to the making of any new draft order.

Sect. 2.—Application to reformatory school offences.]—Where a youthful offender sentenced to detention in a reformatory school is convicted under any Act before a court of summary jurisdiction of the offence of committing a breach of the rules of the school, or of inciting to such a breach, or of escaping from such a school, and the court might under that Act sentence the offender to imprisonment, the court may, in lieu of sentencing him to imprisonment, sentence him to detention in a Borstal Institution for a term not less than two years not more than three years, and in such case the sentence shall supersede the sentence of detention in a reformatory school. [The minimum term of one year has been increased to two years by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 11 (1).]

Sect. 3.—Power to transfer from prison to Borstal Institution.]—The secretary of state may, if satisfied that a person undergoing penal servitude or imprisoned in consequence of a sentence passed either before or after the passing of this Act, being within the limits of age within which persons may be detained in a Borstal Institution, might with advantage be detained in a Borstal Institution, authorise the prison commissioners to transfer him from prison to a Borstal Institution, there to serve the whole or any part of the unexpired residue of his sentence, and whilst detained in, or placed out on licence from, such an institution, this part of this Act shall apply to him as if he had been originally sentenced to detention in a Borstal Institution.

Sect. 4.—Establishment of Borstal Institutions.]—(1) For the purposes of this part of this Act the secretary of state may establish Borstal Institutions, that is to say, places in which young offenders whilst detained may be given such industrial training and other instruction, and be subjected to such disciplinary and moral influences as will conduce to their reformation and the prevention of crime, and for that purpose may, with the approval of the Treasury, authorise the prison commissioners either to acquire any land or to erect or acquire any building or to appropriate the whole or any part of any land or building vested in them or under their control, and any expenses incurred under this section shall be paid out of moneys provided by parliament.

(2) The secretary of state may make regulations for the rule and management of any Borstal Institution, and the constitution of a visiting committee thereof, and for the classification, treatment, and employment and control of persons sent to it in pursuance of this part of this Act, and for their temporary detention until arrangements can be made for sending them to the institution, and, subject to any adaptations, alterations, and exceptions made by such regulations, the Prison Acts, 1865 to 1898 (including the penal provisions thereof), and the rules thereunder, shall apply in the case of every such institution as if it were a prison. [Regulations were made under this section on 23rd June, 1909, by the secretary of State for England (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1909, No. 724), and on 6th October, 1909, by the lord lieutenant for Ireland (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1909, No. 1371); and see Special Rules of the 24th January, 1902 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1902, No. 502).]

Sect. 5.—Power to release on licence.]—(1) Subject to regulations by the secretary of state, the prison commissioners may at any time after the expiration of six months, or, in the case of a female, three months, from the commencement of the term of detention, if satisfied that there is a reasonable probability that the offender will abstain from crime and lead a useful and industrious life, by licence permit him to be discharged from the Borstal Institution on condition that he be placed under the supervision or authority of any society or person named in the licence who may be willing to take charge of the case. [The regulations of 23rd June, 1909, supra, provide for the forms of licences and revocations, and as to the conditions to be satisfied before discharge or licence is granted.]

(2) A licence under this section shall be in force until the term for which the offender was sentenced to detention has expired, unless sooner revoked or forfeited.

(3) Subject to regulations by the secretary of state, a licence under this section may be revoked at any time by the prison commissioners, and where a licence has been revoked the person to whom the licence related shall return to the Borstal Institution, and, if he fails to do so, may be apprehended without warrant and taken to the institution.

(4) If a person absent from a Borstal Institution under such a licence escapes from the supervision of the society or person in whose charge he is placed, or commits any breach of the conditions contained in the licence, he shall be considered thereby to have forfeited the licence.

(5) A court of summary jurisdiction for the place where the Borstal Institution from which a person has been placed out on licence is situate or where such a person is found may, on information on oath that the licence has been forfeited under this section, issue a warrant for his apprehension, and he shall, on apprehension, be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction, which, if satisfied that the licence has been forfeited, may order him to be remitted to the Borstal Institution, and may commit him to any prison within the jurisdiction of the court until he can conveniently be removed to the institution.

(6) The time during which a person is absent from a Borstal Institution under such a licence shall be treated as part of the time of his detention in the institution : Provided that where that person has failed to return to the institution on the licence being forfeited or revoked, the time which elapses after his failure so to return shall be excluded in computing the time during which he is to be detained in the institution.

(7) A licence under this section shall be in such form and shall contain such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations made by the secretary of state.

Sect. 6.—[Supervision by prison commissioners after expiration of term of sentence to detention in Borstal Institution: amended by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 11 (2) (3).]

Sect. 7.—Transfer of incorrigibles, etc., to prison.]—Where a person detained in a Borstal Institution is reported to the secretary of state by the visiting committee of such institution to be incorrigible, or to be exercising a bad influence on the other inmates of the institution, the secretary of state may commute the unexpired residue of the term of detention to such term of imprisonment, with or without hard labour, as the secretary of state may determine, but in no case exceeding such unexpired residue.

4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58 (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), s. 10.—Power to send youthful delinquents to Borstal Institutions.]—(1) Where a person is summarily convicted of any offence for which the court has power to impose a sentence of imprisonment for one month or upwards without the option of a fine, and—

(a) it appears to the court that the offender is not less than sixteen nor more than twenty-one years of age; and

(b) it is proved that the offender has previously been convicted of any offence or, that having been previously discharged on probation, he failed to observe a condition of his recognizance; and

(c) it appears to the court that by reason of the offender's criminal habits or tendencies, or association with persons of bad character, it is expedient that he should be subject to detention for such term and under such instruction and discipline as appears most conducive to his reformation and the repression of crime, it shall be lawful for the court, in lieu of passing sentence, to commit the offender to prison until the next quarter sessions, and the court of quarter sessions shall inquire into the circumstances of the case, and, if it appears to the court that the offender is of such age as aforesaid and that for any such reason as aforesaid it is expedient that the offender should be subject to such detention as aforesaid, shall pass such sentence of detention in a Borstal Institution as is authorised by Part I. of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, as amended by this Act; otherwise the court shall deal with the case in any way in which the court of summary jurisdiction might have dealt with it.

(2) A court of summary jurisdiction or court of quarter sessions, before dealing with any case under this section, shall consider any report or representations which may be made to it by or on behalf of the prison commissioners as to the suitability of the offender for such detention as aforesaid, and a court of summary jurisdiction shall, where necessary, adjourn the case for the purpose of giving an opportunity for such a report or representations being made.

(3) Where a person is committed to prison under this section, his treatment in prison shall, so far as practicable, be similar to that in Borstal Institutions, or he may, if the secretary of state so directs, be transferred to a Borstal Institution.

(4) The Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, shall apply in the case of a person committed to prison by a court of summary jurisdiction under this section as if that person were committed for trial for an indictable offence. [See post, pp. 267 et seq.]

(5) A person sentenced by a court of quarter sessions under this section to detention in a Borstal Institution may appeal against the sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal as if he had been convicted on indictment, and the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, shall apply accordingly. [See post, pp. 300 et seq.]

(6) This section shall come into operation on the first day of September nineteen hundred and fifteen.

Section 11.—Amendment and application of Part I. of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 59).]—(1) The term for which a person may be sentenced to detention in a Borstal Institution under section one or section two of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, shall not be less than two years, and accordingly "two years" shall be substituted for "one year" in subsection (1) of section one and in section two respectively of that Act.

[Sub-ss. (2) and (3) enact amendments of s. 6 of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908.]

(4) The provisions of Part I. of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, as so amended, shall apply to persons sentenced to detention in a Borstal Institution under this Act in like manner as they apply to persons sentenced under that Part of that Act.

Dealing with Defectives.

3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 28 (Mental Deficiency Act, 1913), s. 1.—Definition of defectives.]—The following classes of persons who are mentally defective shall be deemed to be defectives within the meaning of this Act :—

(a) Idiots; that is to say, persons so deeply defective in mind from birth or from an early age as to be unable to guard themselves against common physical dangers;

(b) Imbeciles; that is to say, persons in whose case there exists from birth or from an early age mental defectiveness not amounting to idiocy, yet so pronounced that they are incapable of managing themselves or their affairs, or, in the case of children, of being taught to do so;

(c) Feeble-minded persons; that is to say, persons in whose case there exists from birth or from an early age mental defectiveness not amounting to imbecility, yet so pronounced that they require care, supervision, and control for their own protection or for the protection of others, or, in the case of children, that they by reason of such defectiveness appear to be permanently incapable of receiving proper benefit from the instruction in ordinary schools;

(d) Moral imbeciles; that is to say, persons who from an early age display some permanent mental defect coupled with strong vicious or criminal propensities on which punishment has had little or no deterrent effect.

Sect. 8.—Procedure in cases of persons guilty of offences, etc.]—(1) On the conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction of any person of any criminal offence punishable in the case of an adult with penal servitude or imprisonment, or on a child brought before a court under section fifty-eight of the Children Act, 1908, being found liable to be sent to an industrial school, the Court, if satisfied on medical evidence that he is a defective within the meaning of this Act, may either—

(a) postpone passing sentence or making an order for committal to an industrial school, and direct that a petition be presented to a judicial authority under this Act with a view to obtaining an order that he be sent to an institution or placed under guardianship; or

(b) in lieu of passing sentence or making an order for committal to an industrial school, itself make any order which if a petition had been duly presented under this Act the judicial authority might have made, which order shall have the like effect as if it had been made by a judicial authority on a petition under this Act :

Provided that, if the court is a court of summary jurisdiction and the case is one which the court has power to deal with summarily, the court, if it finds that the charge is proved, may give such directions or make such order as aforesaid without proceeding to a conviction, and such a person shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be a person found guilty of an offence.

(2) The court may act either on the evidence given during the trial or other proceedings, or may call for further medical or other evidence.

(3) Where the court so directs a petition to be presented against a person, it may order him to be detained in an institution for defectives or in a place of safety for such time as is required for the presentation of the petition and the adjudication thereof.

(4) Where it appears to any court of summary jurisdiction by which a person charged with an offence is remanded or committed for trial that such person is a defective, the court may order that pending the further hearing or trial he shall be detained in an institution for defectives, or be placed under the guardianship of any person on that person entering into a recognizance for his appearance.

(5) Where it appears to the police authority that any person charged with an offence is a defective, they shall communicate with the local authority, and it shall be the duty of the police authority to bring before the court such evidence as to his mental condition as may be available :

Provided that, where it is intended to bring such evidence before the court, the police authority shall give notice of the intention to the person charged, and to his parent or guardian, if known.

Postponing or Mitigating Punishment; and Probation.

Binding over to come up for judgment.]—Instead of imposing any of the punishments above described the court may, except in the case of murder, require the convicted person to enter into recognizances with or without sureties to come up for judgment when called upon.

This course may be adopted (1) when a case is reserved (a) or an appeal is pending (vide post, p. 300); (2) in cases within the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (infra), or in any other case where the circumstances of the case make such a course expedient in the interests of justice. It is not unusual also to require the defendant to enter into recognizances in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour.

It is said that at common law an order of this kind is a substitute for punishment by stay of judgment, and is not a judgment of the court (Burgess v. Boetefeur, ante, p. 230); but there is authority for holding that even when judgment has not been actually given, there is a conviction (vide ante, p. 230).

Where no time is specified for coming up for judgment, and it is proposed to bring the defendant up for judgment, a notice must be given to him and to his bail, which in the King's Bench Division is a four days' notice if the defendant is not under recognizance to appear to receive sentence. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 166: R. v. Chichester, 17 Q. B. 504 n.: R. v. Williams, 18 W. R. 806; Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 126, 553. If he does not appear, a capias is issued, and if he cannot be found, proceedings for outlawry may be taken. The recognizance may also be estreated by order of the court. See Short and Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 127, 559. In a Canadian case, R. v. Young [1901] 2 Ontario L. R. 228, it was held that it is for the crown and not for a private prosecutor to take action in such cases.

[7 Edw. 7, c. 17 (Probation of Offenders Act, 1907), s. 1, sub-s. 1, relates to courts of summary jurisdiction.]

Sub-s. (2) Where any person has been convicted on indictment of any offence punishable with imprisonment, and the court is of opinion that, having regard to the character, antecedents, age, health, or mental condition of the person charged, or to the trivial nature of the offence, or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment or any other than a nominal punishment, or that it is expedient to release the offender on probation, the court may, in lieu of imposing a sentence of imprisonment, make an order discharging the offender conditionally on his entering into a recognizance, with or without sureties, to be of good behaviour and to appear for sentence when called on at any time during such period, not exceeding three years, as may be specified in the order. [Such court has inherent power subsequently to pass sentence. R. v. Spratling [1911] 1 K. B. 77; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 176; 22 Cox, 348; 27 T. L. R. 31; 75 J. P. 39.]

(3) The court may, in addition to any such order, order the offender to pay such damages for injury or compensation for loss (not exceeding in the case of a court of summary jurisdiction ten pounds, or, if a higher limit is fixed by any enactment relating to the offence, that higher limit) and to pay such costs of the proceedings as the court thinks reasonable. [Rest of sub-section repealed by 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 134, and replaced by s. 99 of that Act.]

(4) Where an order under this section is made by a court of summary jurisdiction, the order shall, for the purpose of revesting or restoring stolen property, and of enabling the court to make orders as to the restitution or delivery of property to the owner and as to the payment of money upon or in connection with such restitution or delivery, have the like effect as a conviction.

Sect. 2.—Probation orders and conditions of recognizances.]—(1) A recognizance ordered to be entered into under this Act shall, if the court so order, contain a condition that the offender be under the supervision of such person as may be named in the order during the period specified in the order and such other conditions for securing such supervision as may be specified in the order, and an order requiring the insertion of such conditions as aforesaid in the recognizances is in this Act referred to as a probation order.

(2) A recognizance under this Act may contain such additional conditions with respect to residence, abstention from intoxicating liquor, and any other matters, as the court may, having regard to the particular circumstances of the case, consider necessary for preventing a repetition of the same offence or the commission of other offences. [This sub-s. (2) has been substituted for the original sub-s. (2) of s. 2 by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 8, thus getting rid of the decision in R. v. Davies [1909] 1 K. B. 892; 78 L. J. K. B. 363.]

(3) The court by which a probation order is made shall furnish to the offender a notice in writing stating in simple terms the conditions he is required to observe. [By 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, ss. 58, 59, 60 there is power to apply this section to persons apparently under fourteen, who might be sent to a certified industrial school (vide ante, p. 250).]

Sect. 3.—Probation officers.]—(1) There may be appointed as probation officer or officers for a petty sessional division such person or persons of either sex as the authority having power to appoint a clerk to the justices of that division may determine, and a probation officer when acting under a probation order shall be subject to the control of petty sessional courts for the division for which he is so appointed.

(2) There shall be appointed, where circumstances permit, special probation officers, to be called children's probation officers, who shall, in the absence of any reasons to the contrary, be named in a probation order made in the case of an offender under the age of sixteen.

(3) The person named in any probation order shall,—

(a) where the court making the order is a court of summary jurisdiction, be selected from amongst the probation officers for the petty sessional division in or for which the court acts; or

(b) where the court making the order is a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions, be selected from amongst the probation officers for the petty sessional division from which the person charged was committed for trial:

Provided that the person so named may, if the court considers it expedient on account of the place of residence of the offender, or for any other special reason, be a probation officer for some other petty sessional division, and may, if the court considers that the special circumstances of the case render it desirable, be a person who has not been appointed to be probation officer for any petty sessional division.

(4) A probation officer appointed for a petty sessional division may be paid such salary as the authority having the control of the fund out of which the salary of the clerk to the justices of that petty sessional division is paid may determine, and if not so paid by salary may receive such remuneration for acting under a probation order as the court making the order thinks fit, not exceeding such remuneration as may be allowed by the regulations of such authority as aforesaid, and may in either case be paid such out-of-pocket expenses as may be allowed under such regulations as aforesaid, and the salary or remuneration and expenses shall be paid by that authority out of the said funds.

(5) A person named in a probation order not being a probation officer for a petty sessional division may be paid such remuneration and out-of-pocket expenses out of such fund as the court making the probation order may direct, not exceeding such as may be allowed under the regulations of the authority having control of the fund out of which the remuneration is directed to be paid.

(6) The person named in a probation order may at any time be relieved of his duties, and in any such case or in case of the death of the person so named, another person may be substituted by the court before which the offender is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction or sentence, or, if he be a probation officer for a petty sessional division, by a court to whose control that officer is subject.

(7) In the application of this Act to the City of London and the metropolitan police court district, the city and each division of that district shall be deemed to be a petty sessional division.

Sect. 4.—Duties of probation officers.]—It shall be the duty of a probation officer, subject to the directions of the court—

(a) to visit or receive reports from the persons under supervision at such reasonable intervals as may be specified in the probation order or, subject thereto, as the probation officer may think fit;

(b) to see that he observes the conditions of his recognizance;

(c) to report to the court as to his behaviour;

(d) to advise, assist, and befriend him, and, when necessary, to endeavour to find him suitable employment.

Sect. 5.—Variation of terms and conditions of probation.]—The court before which any person is bound by a recognizance under this Act to appear for conviction and sentence or for sentence—

(a) may at any time if it appears to it, upon the application of the probation officer, that it is expedient that the terms or conditions of the recognizance should be varied, summon the person bound by the recognizance to appear before it, and, if he fails to show cause why such variation should not be made, vary the terms of the recognizance by extending or diminishing the duration thereof (so, however, that it shall not exceed three years from the date of the original order), or by altering the conditions thereof, or by inserting additional conditions; or

(b) may on application being made by the probation officer, and on being satisfied that the conduct of the person bound by the recognizance has been such as to make it unnecessary that he any longer be under supervision, discharge the recognizance.

[This section has been substituted for the original s. 5 by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 9.]

Sect. 6.—Provision in case of offender failing to observe conditions of release.]

—(1) If the court before which an offender is bound by his recognizance under this Act to appear for conviction or sentence, or any court of summary jurisdiction is satisfied by information on oath that the offender has failed to observe any of the conditions of his recognizance, it may issue a warrant for his apprehension, or may, if it thinks fit, instead of issuing a warrant in the first instance, issue a summons to the offender and his sureties (if any) requiring him or them to attend at such court and at such time as may be specified in the summons.

(2) The offender, when apprehended, shall, if not brought forthwith before the court before which he is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction or sentence, be brought before a court of summary jurisdiction.

(3) The court before which an offender on apprehension is brought, or before which he appears in pursuance of such summons as aforesaid, may, if it is not the court before which he is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction or sentence, remand him to custody or on bail until he can be brought before the last-mentioned court.

(4) An offender so remanded to custody may be committed during remand to any prison to which the court having power to convict or sentence him has power to commit prisoners. . . [Rest of sub-section repealed by 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 134, and replaced by s. 97 of that Act.]

(5) A court before which a person is bound by his recognizance to appear for conviction and sentence, on being satisfied that he has failed to observe any condition of his recognizance, may forthwith, without further proof of his guilt, convict and sentence him for the original offence or, if the case was one in which the court in the first instance might, under s. 15 of the Industrial Schools Act, 1866 [29 & 30 Vict. c. 118], have ordered the offender to be sent to a certified industrial school, and the offender is still apparently under the age of twelve years, make such an order. B.) 176; 22 Cox, 348. Section 15 of the Industrial Schools Act, 1866, is repealed by 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 134, and replaced by s. 58 (2) of that Act; ante, p. 250.]

Sect. 7.—Power to make rules.]—The secretary of state may make rules for carrying this Act into effect, and in particular for prescribing such matters incidental to the appointment, resignation, and removal of probation officers, and the performance of their duties, and the reports to be made by them, as may appear necessary. [Rules were made under this section on 27*th Nov.*, 1907 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1907, No. 429).]

Sect. 8.—[Adaptation to Scotland.]

Sect. 9.—[Adaptation to Ireland.]

Sect. 10.—Short title and repeal.]—(1) This Act may be cited as the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907.

(2) The enactments mentioned in the schedule to this Act shall be repealed to the extent specified in the third column of that schedule [viz., 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 16; 50 & 51 Vict. c. 25; 1 Edw. 7, c. 20, s. 12.]

(3) This Act shall come into operation on the first day of January one thousand nine hundred and eight.

CONDITIONAL PARDONS, OR COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE.

7 & 8 G. 4, c. 28 (Criminal Law Act, 1827), s. 13.]—"Where the King's Majesty shall be pleased to extend his royal mercy to any offender convicted of any felony punishable with death or otherwise, and by warrant under his royal sign manual, countersigned by one of his principal secretaries of state, shall grant to such offender either a free or a conditional pardon, the discharge of such offender out of custody in the case of a free pardon, and the performance of the condition in the case of a conditional pardon, shall have the effect of a pardon under the great seal for such offender as to the felony for which such pardon shall be so granted: Provided always that no free pardon nor any such discharge in consequence thereof, nor any conditional pardon, or the performance of the condition thereof in any of the cases aforesaid, shall prevent or mitigate the punishment to which the offender might otherwise be lawfully sentenced on a subsequent conviction for any felony committed after the granting of any such pardon." Cf. 9 G. 4, c. 54, s. 39 (I.). [Where after sentence of death a pardon is granted conditional on imprisonment for a term, the procedure for giving effect to the condition is prescribed by 11 G. 4 and 1 W. 4, c. 39, s. 7, and where after sentence of death a pardon is granted conditional on penal servitude, the enforcement of the condition is regulated by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, s. 5. As to the effect of pardon, see R. v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 456 n.; 1 Russ. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67 (Children Act, 1908), s. 84.—Power to send offenders conditionally pardoned to reformatory schools.]—Where a youthful offender has been sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude, and has been pardoned by his Majesty on condition of his placing himself under the care of some charitable institution for the reception and reformation of youthful offenders, the secretary of state may direct him, if under the age of sixteen years, to be sent to a certified reformatory school, the managers of which consent to receive him, for a period of not less than three and not more than five years, but not in any case extending beyond the time when he will in the opinion of the secretary of state attain the age of nineteen years; and thereupon the offender shall be subject to all the provisions of this part of this Act (vide ante, p. 250) as if he had been originally sentenced to detention in a certified reformatory school.

FORFEITURES AND DISQUALIFICATIONS CONSEQUENT ON CONVICTION.

33 & 34 Vict. c. 23 (Forfeiture Act, 1870), s. 1.]—"No confession, verdict, inquest, conviction, or judgment of or for any treason or felony or felo de se shall cause any attainder or corruption of blood, or any forfeiture (which word by s. 5 of the same statute does not include any fine or penalty imposed on any convict by virtue of his sentence), or escheat; provided that nothing in this Act shall affect the law of forfeiture consequent upon outlawry." [The Act also contains provisions with reference to the property of convicts, i.e., persons "against whom judgment of death, or of penal servitude, shall have been pronounced or recorded by any court of competent jurisdiction in England, Wales, or Ireland, upon any charge of treason or felony" (s. 6). A convict cannot bring an action or alienate his property or make a contract (s. 8). The object of these provisions appears to be to provide for the payment out of such property of all just claims upon it, and while placing it out of the power of the convict, during the continuance of his sentence, to provide for its management and to secure its eventual return to himself or to his representatives. See Carr v. Anderson [1903] 1 Ch. 90; 2 Ch. 279; 72 L. the great seal as to the felony whereof the offender was convicted. CHAPTER VI.

COSTS AND REWARDS.

SECT. 1.

COSTS PAYABLE OUT OF LOCAL FUNDS.

Former Law.

AT common law the crown neither pays nor receives costs : and all the provisions as to payment of costs in criminal cases rest upon statute. See Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 389. 25 G. 2, c. 36, and 27 G. 2, c. 3, authorized payment out of the county rates of the costs of prosecution for felony in the event of conviction. 18 G. 3, c. 19, extended the power to award costs to cases of acquittal where the prosecution was properly instituted, and to witnesses attending on recognizance or subpœna : and see 58 G. 3, c. 70. These Acts were repealed and consolidated by 7 G. 4, c. 64, ss. 22-25, on which sections, as subsequently amended, the law as to costs in criminal cases in England rested until their repeal by the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, infra. For the history of this subject, see Parl. Pap. 1903, C. 1650, 1651.

Present Law.

8 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908), s. 1.]—(1) The following courts, namely,—

(a) a court of assize (a) or a court of quarter sessions (b) before which any indictable offence is prosecuted or tried, and

(a) I.e., a court of assize, a court of oyer and terminer and a court of gaol delivery, including the Central Criminal Court (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 13 (4)).

(b) Meaning the justices of any county, riding, parts, division, or liberty of a county, or of any county of a city or county of a town in general or quarter sessions assembled, and includes the court of quarter sessions of a municipal borough having a separate court of quarter sessions (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 13 (14)).

(b) a court of summary jurisdiction by which an indictable offence is dealt with summarily under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and may on any such proceedings by order direct the payment of the costs of the prosecution or defence or both in accordance with the provisions of this Act out of the funds of the county or county borough out of which they are payable under this Act (in this Act referred to as local funds).

(2) The costs which may be so directed to be paid are such sums as, subject to the regulations of the secretary of state under this Act, appear to the court reasonably sufficient to compensate the prosecutor for the expenses properly incurred by him in carrying on the prosecution, and to compensate any person properly attending to give evidence for the prosecution or defence, or called to give evidence at the instance of the court, for the expense, trouble, or loss of time properly incurred in or incidental to the attendance and giving of evidence, and the amount of any costs so directed to be paid shall be ascertained as soon as practicable by the proper officer of the court. [Under the repealed Acts the extra cost of a writ of subpœna was allowed in the case of an infant, whose recognizances could not be estreated: R. v. Smith, 17 Cox, 601. The cost of any copy of the indictment supplied to an accused person is to be treated as part of the costs of the prosecution under this section. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 13 (2), ante, p. 78. There is discretion in the court to allow costs on a higher scale than that usually allowed, but such an order will only be made where there are exceptional circumstances. R. v. Studds, 75 J. P. 248.]

(3) Where it has been certified that a prisoner ought to have legal aid under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 38), the costs which may be directed to be paid under this section shall, subject to the regulations of the secretary of state under this Act, include the fees of solicitor and counsel, the costs of a copy of the depositions, and any other expenses properly incurred in carrying on the defence. [This re-enacts 3 Edw. 7, c. 38, s. 1 (2).]

(4) No expenses to witnesses, whether for the prosecution or defence shall be allowed at a court of assize or quarter sessions before which an indictable offence is prosecuted or tried, if such witnesses are witnesses to character only, unless the court shall otherwise order. [The provisions of the Inebriates Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 35), as to costs are not repealed, but are adapted to the present Act (sect. 9 (6), post, p. 271.]

Sect. 2.—Payment of costs directed to be paid at assizes or quarter sessions.]—As soon as the amount due to any person in respect of costs directed by a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions to be paid out of local funds has been ascertained, the proper officer shall make out and deliver to that person, or to any person who appears to the proper officer to be acting on behalf of that person, an order upon the treasurer of the county or borough out of the funds of which the costs are payable under this Act for the payment of that amount.

Sect 3.—Payment of costs directed to be paid by court of summary jurisdiction or examining justices.]—(1) As soon as the amount due to any person in respect of costs directed by a court of summary jurisdiction or by examining justices to be paid out of local funds has been ascertained, the proper officer—

(a) shall pay to that person the amount due forthwith, if the amount is due for travelling or personal expenses in respect of his attendance to give evidence; and

(b) so far as the amount is not due in respect of attendance to give evidence, shall forward a certificate of the amount in the case of a committal to the proper officer of the court to which the defendant is committed, and in any other case to the clerk of the peace of the county or place for which the court or justices act.

(2) Any amount so paid by the proper officer to any person in respect of his attendance to give evidence shall be reimbursed to that officer by the treasurer of the county or borough out of the funds of which that sum is payable under this Act, and the treasurer shall be allowed any amount so reimbursed in his account.

(3) The certificate so forwarded shall be laid in the case of a certificate forwarded to the officer of the court to which the defendant is committed before that court, and in the case of a certificate forwarded to the clerk of the peace before the next court of quarter sessions, and in either case the court shall consider the certificate and cause an order to be made on the treasurer of the county or borough out of the funds of which the amount is payable for the payment of the amount so certified, or of any less amount which the court considers should have been allowed in the circumstances under this Act.

Where a certificate is forwarded to the officer of a court to which a defendant is committed for trial, the officer shall when practicable include the amount payable in respect of the costs so certified in the order for payment of any costs directed to be paid by the court to which the defendant is committed for trial.

Sect. 4.—Definition of local funds and procedure for payment of orders on local funds.]—(1) Costs in the case of offences committed or supposed to have been committed in a county borough, whether the court directing the payment is held in the borough or not, are payable under this Act out of the borough fund or borough rate of the county borough, and costs in the case of other offences are payable under this Act out of the county fund of the administrative county in which the offence is committed or is supposed to have been committed. [Under the repealed Acts the costs fell on boroughs which did not contribute to the county rate. R. v. Brown, 19 Cox, 33. Under this Act all boroughs except county boroughs are treated as part of the county to which they belong, and this change in the law gets rid of the controversies dealt with in Re Kent County Council [1891] 1 Q. B. 389; 60 L. J. (Q. B.) 314: Mayor, etc., of Thetford v. Norfolk County Council [1898] 2 Q. B. 468; 67 L. J. Q. B. 907. Where a person is prosecuted in one county for bigamy committed in another county, costs are payable out of the county fund of the county where the offence was committed. R. v. London County Council, ex parte Keys [1914] 3 K. B. 310; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 1381; 78 J. P. 302; 30 T. L. R. 504.]

For the purposes of this provision, offences committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England shall be deemed to have been committed in the place where the offender is prosecuted or tried, or, where the offender is tried at the Central Criminal Court, in the county of London; but any costs paid in the case of those offences out of the funds of any county or county borough shall be repaid out of moneys provided by parliament. [This re-enacts 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 701.]

(2) The treasurer of any county or county borough on whom an order is made for payment of any sum on account of costs under this Act shall, upon sight of the order, pay out of the county fund or borough fund or rate, as the case may be, to the person named therein or his duly authorised agent the sum specified in the order, and shall be allowed the sum in his accounts.

(3) The council of every county and of every county borough shall cause their treasurer, or some other person on his behalf, to attend at every court of assize or quarter sessions at which any indictable offence in respect of which an order can be made under this Act on the treasurer is to be tried for the purpose of paying any orders so made, and to remain in attendance for that purpose during the sitting of the court, or until such hour as the court shall direct.

(4) For the purpose of meeting any change in the financial relations between any counties and boroughs which may arise by virtue of the provisions of this Act as to the payment of any costs allowed under this Act, any necessary equitable adjustment may be made by agreement between the councils of the counties or boroughs concerned, or, in default of agreement, by the Local Government Board.

The board may at their option determine the matter as arbitrators or otherwise, and, if they elect to determine the matter as arbitrators, the provisions of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), respecting arbitrations by the Board of Trade, and the enactments amending those provisions, shall apply as if they were herein re-enacted and in terms made applicable to the Local Government Board and the determination of matters under this subsection.

For the purpose of this subsection the Local Government Board may hold any local inquiry, and sub-ss. 1 and 5 of s. 87 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), shall apply accordingly.

Sect. 5.—Power to make regulations as to scales of costs, etc.]—A secretary of state may make regulations generally for carrying into effect this Act and in particular with respect to the following matters, namely :—

(a) the rates or scales of payment of any costs which are payable out of local funds under this Act and the conditions under which any such costs may be allowed; and

(b) the manner in which an officer of the court making any payment on account of costs to any person in respect of his attendance to give evidence is to be reimbursed out of local funds; and

(c) the form of orders, certificates, and notices under this Act, and the furnishing of information when certificates are forwarded under this Act by officers of courts of summary jurisdiction or of examining justices.

(For s. 6, vide post, p. 284.)

Sect. 7.—Power as to costs where person committed for trial is not ultimately tried.]—Where a person has been committed for trial for an indictable offence and is not ultimately tried, the court to which he is committed shall have power to direct or order payment of costs under this Act in the same manner as if the defendant had been tried and acquitted.

Sect. 8.—Saving.]—Nothing in this Act shall affect the operation of any enactment for the time being in force which provides for the payment of the costs of the prosecution or defence of an indictable offence out of any assets, money, or fund other than local funds, or by any person other than the prosecutor or defendant.

Sect. 9.—Interpretation, etc.]—(1) In this Act the expression "indictable offence" includes any offence punishable on summary conviction when that offence is under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts deemed to be as respects the person charged an indictable offence, and the expression "prosecutor" includes any person who appears to the court to be a person at whose instance the prosecution has been instituted, or under whose conduct the prosecution is at any time carried on.

(2) Any reference in this Act to a person committed for trial shall include a reference to a person whom a prosecutor is bound over to prosecute under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, ante, p. 67), and any reference to the court to which a person is committed shall in such a case be construed as a reference to the court at which the prosecutor is so bound over to prosecute.

(3) This Act shall not apply in the case of an offence in relation to the non-repair or obstruction of any highway, public bridge, or navigable river, and costs in any such case may be allowed as in civil proceedings as if the prosecutor or defendant were plaintiff or defendant in any such proceedings.

(4) This Act shall apply in a case of a person committed as an incorrigible rogue under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 G. 4, c. 83), as if that person were committed for trial for an indictable offence, and in the case of any appeal under that Act as if the hearing of the appeal by the court of quarter sessions were the trial of an indictable offence.

(5) For the purpose of s. 13 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23) (which relates to the costs of appeal), the hearing of a case stated under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78), shall be deemed to be an appeal, and the person in relation to whose conviction the case is stated shall be deemed to be an appellant, and the provisions of this Act giving power to direct the payment of the costs of the prosecution and defence shall not apply to the hearing of any case so stated.

(6) A reference to the payment of costs out of local funds under this Act shall be substituted for any reference to the payment of expenses in the case of an indictment for felony, or in cases of felony, or in the case of a misdemeanor under the Criminal Law Act, 1826 (7 G. 4, c. 64), or any like reference in s. 1 of the Inebriates Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 35), or in s. 13 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), or in any other enactment. REGULATIONS MADE BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, DATED JUNE 14, 1904, GOVERNING THE ALLOWANCES PAYABLE TO PROSECUTORS AND WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS. (STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1904, No. 1219, LEGAL SERIES No. 9.) AS AMENDED BY THE WITNESSES' ALLOWANCES ORDER, 1920, DATED MARCH 1, 1920. (STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1920, No. 354 —L. 6.)

In pursuance of the powers vested in me by s. 5 of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 55), I hereby make the following regulations :—(a).

1. Witnesses giving Professional Evidence.

There may be allowed to practising members of the legal and medical professions, for attending to give professional evidence, but not otherwise, allowance not exceeding the sums stated in the following scale :—

For attending to give evidence in the town or place where the witness resides or practises—

If the witness attends to give evidence in one case only, not more than one and a half guineas per diem;

(a) These regulations are kept in force by s. 10 (1), supra, until new regulations are made under s. 5, ante, p. 270. They have now been amended by the Witnesses' Allowances Order, March 1, 1920.

If the witness gives evidence on the same day in two or more separate and distinct cases, not more than three guineas;

For attending to give evidence elsewhere than in any town or place where the witness resides or practises, whether in one or more cases, not more than three guineas per diem.

In this regulation "town" means municipal borough or urban district; and "place" means within a radius of three miles from the court at which the witness attends to give evidence.

No allowance may be given under this regulation to the solicitor for the prosecution, except that, if such solicitor gives professional evidence which, in the opinion of the court, was necessary and saved the attendance of another witness, a fee of 10*s.* may be allowed.

2. Expert Witnesses and Interpreters.

There may be allowed (a) to expert witnesses such allowances for attending to give expert evidence as the court may consider reasonable, including, where necessary, an allowance for qualifying to give evidence, and (b) to persons employed as interpreters, such allowances as the court may consider reasonable.

3. Police Officers.

There may be allowed to police officers :—

When attending as prosecutors or witnesses at courts situate within the area of their own police authority, no allowance other than travelling allowances as provided in Regulation 8.

When attending as prosecutors or witnesses at courts situate outside the area of their own police authority—

(a) In the case of constables and sergeants, a sum not exceeding—

For the day . . . . . 6*s.*
For the night . . . . . 6*s.*

(b) In the case of inspectors, a sum not exceeding—

For the day . . . . . 7*s.* 6*d.*
For the night . . . . . 7*s.* 6*d.*

(c) In the case of superintendents and chief constables, a sum not exceeding—

For the day . . . . . 10*s.* 6*d.*
For the night . . . . . 7*s.* 6*d.*

For the purposes of this regulation, any court at which cases arising in the area of any police authority or part thereof are ordinarily heard or tried shall be deemed, so far as regards such cases, to be situate within that area.

4. Prison Warders.

There may be allowed to prison warders attending as prosecutors or witnesses or in charge of a prisoner produced to give evidence, a sum not exceeding that allowed them when absent from home on duty by the Regulations of the Prison

Department for the time being in force. The allowances in force at the present time are :—

	Day and Night,			Night only,
Chief warders . . .	10*s.*	Breakfast . 2*s.*	6*s.* 6*d.*	3*s.* 6*d.*
		Dinner . 3*s.*
		Supper 1*s.* 6*d.*
	Day and Night,			Night only,
Principal warders and warders,	8*s.*	Breakfast, 1*s.* 6*d.*	5*s.* 6*d.*	2*s.* 6*d.*
		Dinner 2*s.* 6*d.*
		Supper 1*s.* 6*d.*

For a prisoner so produced in the custody of warders, such sum for subsistence as the warders have been authorized to spend, and has been actually expended, on his behalf.

5. Ordinary Witnesses.

There may be allowed to witnesses, other than those hereinbefore mentioned, allowances not exceeding 14*s.* for the day and 10*s.* for the night :

Provided that the day allowance to the under-mentioned classes of witnesses, when they are not necessarily detained from home for a night, shall not, except for special reasons allowed by the court, exceed the following rates :—

(1) For children the allowance shall not exceed 2*s.* per diem ;

(2) For persons of the pauper or vagrant class the allowance shall not exceed 2*s.* per diem ;

(3) For other persons who do not lose wages, earnings, or income by attendance, the allowance shall not exceed 5*s.* per diem ;

(4) For persons in the service of an employer who loses wages by attendance, the allowance shall not exceed the following rates, except on the production of a certificate from the employer showing that the wages so lost are in excess of such rates :—

	s.	d.
For agricultural labourers, unskilled labourers, and others similarly employed . . .	7	0	per diem.
For artisans, mechanics, and others similarly employed	10	0	,,
For clerks, shop assistants, and others similarly employed	10	0	,, Provided also that no night allowance, within the above-mentioned limit of 10*s.*, shall exceed the expense reasonably incurred by the witness.

6. Seamen.

Where seamen have been detained on shore for the purpose of giving evidence in a criminal prosecution, the amount actually and reasonably incurred for their maintenance during their detention may be allowed in addition to any allowances made under the foregoing rule.

7. General Regulation.

No full day allowance under Regulations 1, 3, and 5 shall be paid unless the witness is necessarily detained away from his home, or place of business or employment, for at least four hours for the purpose of giving evidence.

If the time during which the witness is necessarily detained away from his home, or place of business or employment, be less than four hours, he shall receive not more than one-half of the allowance which he would have received had he been detained for the full day:

Provided that this regulation shall not apply (1) where the full day allowance is not more than 2*s*.; and (2) where the court is satisfied that a witness, though absent for less than four hours, necessarily loses, in consequence of his attendance, his whole day's wages.

No night allowance under Regulations 3, 4, and 5 shall be paid unless the witness in order to give evidence is necessarily detained away from home for the night.

There may be allowed to any prosecutor or other person who, in the opinion of the court, necessarily attends for the purpose of the prosecution otherwise than as a witness, the same allowance, including travelling allowance, as to an ordinary witness.

8. Travelling Allowances.

For attending court from a distance of over two miles there may be allowed:—

(1) To witnesses travelling by railway or other public conveyance, the fare actually paid. Railway fares, except for special reasons allowed by the court, shall be 3rd class; and if return tickets are available, only return rates shall be allowed. In the case of police witnesses, the reduced rates under the Cheap Trains Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 34), shall not be exceeded, except where the single fare is less than 1*s*., or for special reasons allowed by the Court.

(2) Where no railway or other public conveyance is available, and one or more witnesses necessarily travel by a hired vehicle, the sum actually paid for the hire of such vehicle, not exceeding 1*s*. 6*d*. a mile each way: provided that, where two or more witnesses attend from the same place, the total allowance shall not exceed 1*s*. 6*d*. a mile each way, unless the court is satisfied that it was reasonably necessary to hire more than one vehicle.

(3) To each witness travelling on foot or by a private conveyance, where no railway or other public conveyance is available, a sum not to exceed 3*d*. a mile each way.

Allowances made under (2) and (3) shall be made separately as mileage.

For the conveyance of witnesses suffering from serious illness, or for the carriage of heavy exhibits, sums in excess of the above rates may be allowed if the court is satisfied that the expense incurred was reasonably necessary.

Warders in charge of prisoners produced to give evidence may be allowed the cost of travelling by such means of conveyance as the governor of the prison may have directed.

9. Form of Certificate.

Revoked by regulations of November 28, 1908, infra.

10. Date of Commencement (1 July, 1904).

Given under my hand at Whitehall this 14th day of June, 1904.

REGULATIONS, DATED DECEMBER 16, 1908, MADE BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE UNDER SECTION 5 OF THE COSTS IN CRIMINAL CASES ACT, 1908 (8 EDW. 7, C. 15). (STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1908, No. 1235, LEGAL SERIES 40.)

In pursuance of the power vested in me by s. 5 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 15), I hereby make the following regulations :—

1. Regulation 3 of the regulations dated 28th November, 1908, shall in the police courts of the metropolis and of Chatham and Sheerness apply only to the payment of allowances to those persons who by order of the magistrate are paid before the case is disposed of and to those persons who are in attendance at the termination of the proceedings and who receive payment at the court on the same day. The payment of allowances to other persons shall be made by the receiver for the metropolitan police district, who shall be the proper officer for that purpose; and the receipt of the person to whom payment is so made or, where payment of a sum less than two pounds is made by money order or postal order, the discharged money order or postal order shall be attached to the magistrate's order.

2. Regulation 4 of the said regulations shall in its application to the said police courts be modified so that the Order in Form A or Form C with the receipts of the persons to whom the allowances have been paid or the discharged money orders or postal orders shall be presented by the receiver monthly to the treasurer of the county or county borough named in the Order, and re-imbursement shall be made to the receiver by such treasurer accordingly.

One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Counsel and solicitors.]—The regulations above printed do not make specific provision for the fees to be paid to counsel or solicitors for the prosecution, and these fees stand in a somewhat anomalous position. Under s. 26 of 7 G. 4, c. 64, county and borough quarter sessions had power to make and alter regulations as to the rate of costs. That section was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, s. 4, with a proviso that the regulations in force on August 1, 1851, should remain in force until revoked, or until regulations in relation to the matter thereof were made by the secretary of state. The secretary of state has never made any regulations as to the fees of solicitors and counsel, and county and borough justices have from time to time varied their rules as to such fees.

A return of the practice of county sessions is printed in Parl. Pap., 1903, C. 1651, p. 154. As to borough sessions and assizes, no returns are available. The result is that counsel's and solicitor's fees were until 1908 regulated by scales framed in the different jurisdictions under the Act of 1826 (Parl. Pap., 1903, C. 1650, p. 8, C. 1651, p. 154). As regards such allowances by courts of quarter sessions the practice is now regulated by s. 10 (1) (b) of the Act of 1908, ante, p. 272. Directions were issued by the Treasury in 1869 in the form of rules, which indicated the view of the Treasury as to the amount of the allowances in cases not covered by the Home Office Regulations then in force. These directions are still used as a guide in those counties and boroughs where a definite scale of county allowance has not been settled. In the matter of allowances to counsel and solicitors the taxing-officer exercises his discretion subject to the direction of the court. See R. v. Jones, 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 41; 63 J. P. 139, and Parl. Pap., 1903, C. 1651, p. 154.

Costs of the defence of poor prisoners.]—Where it has been certified that a prisoner ought to have legal aid under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 38), the costs which may be directed to be paid under the Act of 1908 shall, subject to the regulations of the secretary of state under that Act, "include the fees of solicitor and counsel, the costs of a copy of the depositions, and any other expenses properly incurred in carrying on the defence." 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (3) (ante, p. 268).

The rates and scales of payment in force are as follows :—

REGULATIONS OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, DATED DECEMBER 30, 1903, AS TO THE ALLOWANCES WHICH MAY BE MADE UNDER SECTION 1 (2) OF THE POOR PRISONERS DEFENCE ACT, 1903. (STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1903, No. 1150.) (a)

In pursuance of s. 1 (2) of the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 38), I hereby make the following regulations as to the rates and scales of payment which may be made for the expenses of the defence :—

1. There may be allowed to the solicitor a fee not exceeding £2 2*s*. 0*d*., provided that the presiding judge, after the conclusion of the trial, may, if he thinks fit, certify that the case was one of exceptional length or difficulty, and thereupon the fee may be increased to such sum as he may direct, but not in any case exceed £5.

In addition to such fee the solicitor may be allowed travelling expenses actually and necessarily incurred by himself and his clerk on the scale applicable to the travelling expenses of ordinary witnesses for a prosecution.

2. There may be allowed to counsel a fee of £1 3*s*. 6*d*.; provided that the presiding judge, after the conclusion of the trial, may, if he think fit, certify that the case was one of exceptional length or difficulty, and thereupon the fee may be increased to such sum as he may direct, but not in any case exceeding £3 5*s*. 6*d*.

(a) Sub-s. (2) is repealed by s. 10 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908; but these regulations appear to be continued in force by s. 10 (1) (a), ante, p. 272.

3. There may be allowed to the clerk to the justices or other person by whom a copy of the depositions is supplied to the prisoner's solicitors payment for the same at the rate of twopence per folio of 90 words.

4. There may be allowed to witnesses giving professional evidence and to expert witnesses the same expenses as might be allowed to witnesses for a prosecution (ante, pp. 272, 273), provided that the said sum shall not in any case exceed one guinea a day, except in pursuance of a special order made by the presiding judge.

5. There may be allowed to other witnesses the same expenses as may be allowed to witnesses for a prosecution (ante, p. 274).

6. The travelling expenses of witnesses may be allowed as in the case of a prosecution (ante, p. 275).

7. In these regulations the term "presiding judge" includes a recorder and a chairman of quarter sessions or their deputies.

Given under my hand at Whitehall, this 30th day of December, 1903.

Costs of appellant in Court of Criminal Appeal.]—ORDER OF SECRETARY OF STATE, DATED 27TH MARCH, 1908, UNDER S. 13 (2) OF THE CRIMINAL APPEAL ACT, 1907. (STATUTORY RULES AND ORDERS, 1908, No. 247.)

In pursuance of the power conferred on me by s. 13 (2) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, I hereby make the following regulations :—

1. The expenses of any solicitor or counsel assigned to an appellant by the Court of Criminal Appeal shall be allowed as follows :—

As respects an application for leave to appeal or an application for extension of time—

A fee not exceeding £2 2*s*. for a solicitor, and £1 3*s*. 6*d*. for counsel.

As respects any appeal—

A fee not exceeding £2 2*s*. for a solicitor and a fee for counsel not exceeding £1 3*s*. 6*d*., or, if in the opinion of the court the case is one of difficulty, not exceeding £2 4*s*. 6*d*.: provided that the court, after the conclusion of the appeal, may, if it thinks fit, certify that the case was one of exceptional length or difficulty, and thereupon the fee may be increased to such sum as the court, having regard to the length and difficulty of the case, may direct, but not exceeding £7 7*s*. for a solicitor and £11 for counsel.

In addition to such fees as aforesaid, a solicitor may be allowed travelling expenses actually and necessarily incurred by himself or his clerk on the scale applicable to an ordinary witness in a case of felony tried at assizes under the secretary of state's order of the 14th June, 1904.

2. The expenses of any witnesses attending on the order of the court or examined in any proceedings incidental to the appeal shall be allowed on the same scale as those of a witness in a case of felony tried at assizes under the secretary of state's order of 14th June, 1904: except that the night allowance of witnesses necessarily detained away from home in London for one or more nights may, if the court thinks fit, be increased to not more than 8*s*. a night, but shall not exceed the expense reasonably incurred by the witness.

3. The expenses of the appearance of an appellant not in custody on the hearing of his appeal or on any proceeding preliminary or incidental to the appeal may be allowed on the same scale as those of an ordinary witness in a case of felony tried at assizes under the secretary of state's order of 14th June, 1904. (See ante, p. 272.)

Where the appellant appears in custody, the warders attending in charge of him may receive the same allowances as warders in charge of a prisoner may receive under the said order. (See ante, p. 273.)

4. Where any examination of witnesses is conducted by a person appointed by the court for the purpose, the person so appointed shall be allowed, if he be a stipendiary magistrate or justice of the peace, the actual expenses of travelling, the actual cost of hiring a room for the examination, if no court or public room is available, and such other incidental expenses as in the opinion of the court are necessarily and reasonably incurred. If the person appointed be a practising barrister he shall be allowed such expenses as aforesaid, and in addition such fee, not exceeding five guineas a day, as the court may allow.

5. Where any question is referred to a special commissioner appointed by the court, or where any person is appointed as assessor to the court, he shall be allowed such fee as the court having regard to his qualifications and ordinary remuneration may think reasonable, not exceeding ten guineas a day.

Local taxation grant.]—For some time prior to the passing of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), a parliamentary grant in aid was made in respect of the costs in criminal cases paid out of local funds under 7 G. 4, c. 64, and other Acts superseded by the Act of 1908. Section 24 of the Act of 1888 substituted for a grant in aid a system of local taxation grants under which the Treasury has no direct concern in the amounts allowed at assizes and sessions, except in the case of offences within the admiralty jurisdiction. See 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 4 (1) (ante, p. 269); Parl. Pap. 1903, C. 1650, pp. vi.-viii.

Taxation and payment.]—Under the repealed enactments the entire order of the court, including all details or particulars, must be served on the treasurer: R. v. Jones, 2 Mood. 171; 9 C. & P. 401; and if the treasurer refused to pay, the remedy seems to have been by indictment, and not by mandamus. R. v. Jeyes, 3 A. & E. 416: R. v. Bristow, 6 T. R. 168: R. v. Johnson, 4 M. & Sel. 515 (and see ante, p. 6). But see R. v. Treasurer of Oswestry, 12 Q. B. 239; 17 L. J. (Q. B.) 223: R. v. Treasurer of Exeter, 5 Man. & Ry. 167.

The allowances are made to the director of public prosecutions in Treasury and Mint cases (8 Edw. 7, c. 3, s. 2 (4), (5)); and to the solicitor to the Post Office in Post Office cases.

ORDERS FOR PAYMENT OF COSTS BY DEFENDANT OR PROSECUTOR.

8 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908).—Sect. 6.—Power of court to order payment of costs of prosecution by defendant or of defence by prosecutor.]—(1) The court by or before which any person is convicted of an indictable offence may, if they think fit, in addition to any other lawful punishment, order the person convicted to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the prosecution and conviction including any proceedings before the examining justices, as taxed by the proper officer of the court. [This section is not limited to courts of assize or quarter sessions and covers trial on indictment or criminal information in the King's Bench Division. Before this enactment a defendant could be ordered to pay costs on conviction of felony (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 3), or of certain misdemeanors. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 74. Where the offender is under sixteen, the court, in cases within 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 99, can order his parent or guardian to pay the costs; and on making a probation order the court may order the offender to pay costs (7 Edw. 7, c. 17, s. 1 (3). There is no power to order imprisonment in default of payment of costs ordered to be paid under this section. R. v. McCluskey, 15 Cr. App. R. 148.]

(2) Where a person is acquitted on any indictment or information by a private prosecutor for the publication of a defamatory libel, or for any offence against the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 102), or for the offence of any corrupt practice within the meaning of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), or on an indictment for an offence under the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1887 to 1894, or on an indictment presented to a grand jury under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, ante, p. 67), in a case where the person acquitted has not been committed to or detained in custody or bound by recognizance to answer the indictment, the court before which the person acquitted is tried may order the prosecutor to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the defence, including any proceedings before the examining justices, as taxed by the proper officer of the court. [The limitation in this sub-section to private prosecutions only applies to defamatory libel and corrupt practices, and follows the limitations of the repealed enactments (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 8; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, ss. 10, 12; and 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 57 (2)).]

(3) Where a charge made against any person for any indictable offence (not dealt with summarily) is dismissed by the examining justices, the justices may, if they are of opinion that the charge was not made in good faith, order the prosecutor to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the defence, but if the amount ordered to be paid exceeds twenty-five pounds the prosecutor may appeal against the order to a court of quarter sessions in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and no proceedings shall be taken upon the order until either the time within which the appeal can be made has elapsed without an appeal being made, or, in case an appeal is made, until the appeal is determined or ceases to be prosecuted. [The justices have power to state a case on the question whether an order under this subsection is rightly made. R. v. Allen [1912] 1 K. B. 365; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 258; 22 Cox, 669.]

(4) An order under this section for the payment of costs by the person convicted or by the prosecutor may be made in addition to an order directing payment of costs out of local funds (ante, pp. 267 et seq.), and, where an order is made directing payment out of local funds, the costs shall primarily be payable out of local funds in accordance with this Act, but notice of any order under this section for the payment of costs by the person convicted or by the prosecutor shall be sent to the council of the county or borough out of the funds of which they are so payable.

(5) Any order under this section may be enforced, as to any costs primarily paid out of local funds, by the council of the county or borough out of the funds of which they have been so paid, and, as to any other costs, by the person to whom the costs are ordered to be paid, in the same manner as an order for the payment of costs made by the high court in civil proceedings, or as a civil debt in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and, in the case of costs which a person convicted is ordered to pay, out of any money taken on his apprehension from the person convicted, so far as the court so directs.

Orders made under the section are suspended pending appeal. Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, r. 11.

It is assumed that the section extends to prosecutions for corrupt practices in municipal elections. 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, s. 2, incorporates the definition of corrupt practice in 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 3, for the purpose of municipal elections. 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, s. 30, which applied 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 53, to municipal elections, was held to warrant an order on the prosecutor to pay the defendant's costs on an unsuccessful private prosecution : R. v. Law [1900] 1 Q. B. 605; 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 348; 19 Cox, 452.

As to the position of the director of public prosecutions who takes up a prosecution after a private prosecutor has been bound over under the Vexatious Indictments Act, 1859 (ante, p. 67), and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22, s. 7, see Stubbs v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 24 Q. B. D. 577; 59 L. J. Q. B. 201.

An order for costs under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 3 (rep.), was not affected by the bankruptcy of the offender after apprehension but before trial. R. v. Roberts, L. R. 9 Q. B. 77; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 17. Where local solicitors conducted a prosecution under the Debtors Act, 1869, on behalf of the treasury, and an arrangement was made by which the defendant paid certain costs, the solicitors were held accountable to the treasury for the costs so received. Re Parkinson, 76 L. T. (N. S.) 715.

5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90 (Indictments Act, 1915).—Sect. 5. Orders for amendment of indictment, etc.]—(1) Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, it appears to the court that the indictment is defective, the court shall make such order for the amendment of the indictment as the court thinks necessary to meet the circumstances of the case, unless, having regard to the merits of the case, the required amendments cannot be made without injustice, and may make such order as to the payment of any costs incurred owing to the necessity for amendment as the court thinks fit.

Sect. 6. Costs of defective or redundant indictments.]—Where it appears to the court that an indictment contains unnecessary matter, or is of unnecessary length, or is materially defective in any respect, the court may make such order as to the payment of that part of the costs of the prosecution which has been incurred by reason of the indictment so containing unnecessary matter, or being of unnecessary length, or being materially defective as the court thinks fit.

SECT. 3.

COSTS OF REMOVED INDICTMENTS.

SECTION 1 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, applies to courts of assize, but appears not to apply to trials in the King's Bench Division at the Royal Courts of Justice, whether proceedings began there or were removed thither by certiorari. The repealed Acts, 7 G. 4, c. 64, did not apply to indictments removed by certiorari into the King's Bench Division. R. v. Johnson, 1 Mood. 173 : R. v. Richards, 8 B. & C. 420; 2 Man. & Ry. 405 : R. v. Treasurer of Exeter, 5 Man. & Ry. 167; 6 L. J. (M. C.) 104 : R. v. Kelsey, 4 Dowl. 481 : R. v. Oates, 1 Mood. 175, cit. But there is some ground for saying that these authorities only applied to cases where the prosecutor had himself removed the indictment by certiorari. See the report of R. v. Richards, 1 Archb. Peel's Acts (3rd ed.) 214; and Anon., 8 A. & E. 589, 591. As to indictments transmitted from sessions to assizes, see ante, p. 119.

Where an indictment or inquisition is sent to the Central Criminal Court for trial under the "Palmer Act" (19 & 20 Vict. c. 16), the court may order the costs of the prosecutor and witnesses to be paid by the same persons and in the same manner as if the court were held in the county or place where the indictment or inquisition was found or taken. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, s. 13. There are similar provisions in the Jurisdiction in Homicides Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 65), ss. 11, 12. And where the removal under the "Palmer Act" was at the instance of the crown, and the defendant is acquitted, the court may order the treasury to reimburse to him the amount properly expended for the removal of the trial, less any amount advanced to him by the treasury under certificate of the high court granted on ordering the removal. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, ss. 25, 26.

The Acts of 1856 and 1862 are not repealed by 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 10, but so far as the fund out of which the costs are payable seem to fall within s. 9 (6) of that Act (ante, p. 271).

Where an offence committed in a county of a city is tried at the assizes in the next adjoining county, the costs of prosecution are payable by and to the same persons and in the same manner as if the indictment had been tried in a court of oyer and terminer, or general gaol delivery, in the county of the city.

51 G. 3, c. 100, s. 2; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, ss. 19, 23. The present effect of these sections seems to be that the costs fall on the county of a city only if it is also a county borough (ante, p. 270).

SECT. 4.

COSTS OF PROSECUTION BY GUARDIANS OF THE POOR.

GUARDIANS of a poor-law union may charge to the common fund of the union their reasonable costs of prosecutions at their instance, [and so far as not defrayed by the offender, or (ut supra) out of the county or other local rate], in respect of the following offences; (a) obstructing or assaulting any officer engaged in the administration of the poor law; (b) neglect or breach of duty in his office by an officer employed in the administration of the poor laws, or maltreatment or abuse by such officer of any poor person; (c) fraudulently obtaining, stealing, purloining, embezzling, wasting, injuring, or wilfully misapplying property applicable to or connected with the relief of the poor; (d) any offence directly affecting the administration of the poor laws, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 9; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79, s. 9; (e) ill-treatment of servants or apprentices or bodily injury to persons under sixteen where two justices certify that the prosecution ought in the interests of justice to be conducted by the guardians, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 73; (f) offences in relation to a child or young person within Part II. and Sched. I. of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 34 (1)). See 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 8 (ante, p. 271).

SECT. 5.

REWARDS.

7 G. 4, c. 64 (Criminal Law Act, 1826), s. 28.]—For the better remuneration of persons who have been active in the apprehension of certain offenders, be it enacted, that where any person shall appear to any court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery [superior criminal court of a county palatine, or court of great sessions], to have been active in or towards the apprehension of any person charged with murder (R. v. Durkin, 2 Lew. 163), or with feloniously and maliciously shooting at, or attempting to discharge any kind of loaded firearms at any other person, or with stabbing, cutting (not necessarily with a knife; R. v. Platt, 69 J. P. 624), or poisoning, or with administering anything to procure the miscarriage of any woman, or with rape, or with burglary (R. v. Dunning, 5 Cox, 142), or felonious housebreaking, or with robbery on the person (but not stealing from the person: R. v. Thompson, 1 Cox, 43), or with arson, or with horse-stealing, bullock-stealing (bullock, cow, heifer, etc.: R. v. Gillbrass, 7 C. & P. 444; 1 Cox, 43), or sheep-stealing, or with being accessory before the fact to any of the offences aforesaid, or with receiving any stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, every such court is hereby authorized and empowered in any of the cases aforesaid, to order the sheriff of the county in which the offence shall have been committed to pay to the person or persons who shall appear to the court to have been active in or towards the apprehension of any person charged with any of the said offences, such sum or sums of money as to the court shall seem reasonable and sufficient to compensate such person or persons for his, her, or other expenses, exertions, and loss of time in or towards such apprehension; and where any person shall appear to any court of sessions of the peace to have been active in or towards the apprehension of any party charged with receiving stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, such court shall have power to order compensation to such person in the same manner as the other courts hereinbefore mentioned: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any of the said courts from also allowing to any such persons, if prosecutors or witnesses, such costs, expenses, and compensation as courts are by this Act empowered to allow to prosecutors and witnesses respectively.

Sect. 29. Every order for payment to any person in respect of such apprehension as aforesaid, shall be forthwith made out and delivered by the proper officer of the court unto such person, upon being paid for the same the sum of five shillings and no more; and the sheriff of the county for the time being is hereby authorized and required, upon sight of such order, forthwith to pay to such person, or to anyone duly authorized on his or her behalf, the money in such order mentioned; and every such sheriff may immediately apply for repayment of the same to the treasury, who, upon inspecting such order, together with the acquittance of the person entitled to receive the money thereon, shall forthwith order repayment to the sheriff of the money so by him paid, without any fee or reward whatsoever.

14 & 15 Vict. c. 55 (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1851), s. 8.]—And whereas by the Criminal Law Act, 1826, any court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, and other courts therein mentioned, are empowered to order compensation to be paid to persons who shall appear to the court to have been active in or towards the apprehension of any person charged with murder or with any other of the crimes therein mentioned: and whereas it is expedient to extend such power to courts of sessions of the peace: be it enacted, that when any person appears to any court of sessions of the peace to have been active in or towards the apprehension of any party charged with any of the offences in the said enactment mentioned which such sessions may have power to try, such court of sessions shall have power to order compensation to be paid to such person in the same manner as the other courts in the said enactment mentioned; provided that such compensation to any one person shall not exceed the sum of five pounds, and that every order for payment to any person of such compensation be made out and delivered by the proper officer of the court unto such person without fee or payment for the same.

Such rewards are not confined to cases where the person apprehending has had an actual loss of time, or been at an expense. R. v. Barnes, 7 C. & P. 166. They are said not to extend to cases where the offender has escaped from England. R. v. Barrett, 6 Cox, 78. But they have been given for display of courage: R. v. Womersley, 2 Lew. 162; and for locking burglars in a room till help arrived. R. v. Dunning, 5 Cox, 142.

Under the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 100), the rewards appear to be payable from the same funds as the costs of assizes and sessions. If the facts, whether as to expense, exertion, or loss of time, on which the application is grounded have not appeared in evidence, the judge will require them to be laid before him on affidavit. The secretary of state has powers (which have not yet been exercised) to make regulations as to the amount of compensation to be paid for expenses, exertions, or loss of time, except where the court considers that extraordinary courage, diligence, or exertion towards apprehension was shown, in which case the court may adjudge any reward which it deems reasonable. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, ss. 5, 6, 7. As to quarter sessions see s. 8, ante, p. 288, and see R. v. Jones, 7 C. & P. 167: R. v. Haines, 5 Cox, 114.

A person who discovers and prosecutes to conviction a person at large without licence during a term of penal servitude is entitled to a reward of £20, payable by order of the court before whom the conviction is made, out of the county fund. 5 G. 4, c. 84, s. 22; R. v. Emmons, 2 M. & Rob. 279: R. v. Ambury, 6 Cox, 79.

7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 30.—Compensation to relatives of persons killed in attempting to effect arrest.]—If any man shall happen to be killed in endeavouring to apprehend any person who shall be charged with any of the offences hereinbefore last mentioned, it shall be lawful for the court before whom such person shall be tried to order the sheriff of the county to pay to the widow of the man so killed, in case he shall have been married, or to his child or children in case his wife shall be dead, or to his father or mother in case he shall have left neither wife nor child, such sum of money as to the court in its discretion shall seem meet; and the order for payment of such money shall be made out and delivered by the proper officer of the court unto the party entitled to receive the same, or unto some one on his or her behalf to be named in such order by the direction of the court; and every such order shall be paid by and repaid to the sheriff in the manner hereinbefore mentioned. [Orders under this section are suspended pending appeal. Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, r. 11.]

The enactments above referred to are not repealed or affected by the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 15), ante, p. 267.

In R. v. Platel (C. C. C., May, 1903) an order was made by Grantham, J., for the payment of £233 to the widow and family of a man who was shot and killed in endeavouring to arrest a man who had shot a police constable. See 38 L. J. Newsp. 273.

CHAPTER VII.

COMPENSATION AND RESTITUTION OF PROPERTY.

SECT. 1.

COMPENSATION.

Relation of civil and criminal remedies.]—At common law the remedies for civil injuries and crimes cannot be enforced in the same proceeding.

"Upon an indictment or other criminal prosecution no damages can be given to the party grieved; but it is every day's practice in the Court of King's Bench to induce defendants to make satisfaction to the prosecutors by intimating an inclination on that account to mitigate the fine due to the King." 2 Hawk. 210, cited; Burn's Justice (ed. 1797), vol. 1, xxxi.

In a few cases the court which tries an indictable offence is authorized by statute to award compensation to persons injured by it. Compensation to the relatives of persons killed in arresting certain offenders is dealt with ante, p. 289.

The Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), provides (s. 4), that "it shall be lawful for any such court as aforesaid (i.e., for any court by which judgment shall be pronounced or recorded, s. 3), if it shall think fit, upon the application of any person aggrieved, and immediately after the conviction of any person for felony, to award any sum of money not exceeding one hundred pounds, by way of satisfaction or compensation for any loss of property suffered by the applicant through or by means of the said felony, and the amount awarded for such satisfaction or compensation shall be deemed a judgment debt due to the person entitled to receive the same from the person so convicted, and the order for payment of such amount may be enforced in such and the same manner as in the case of any costs ordered by the court to be paid under the last preceding section of this Act." The discretionary power given by this section is not limited to cases of larceny or cognate offences, as to which see post, p. 293, but does not extend to offences against the person. As to its object and the proper cases for its exercise, see R. v. Lovett, 11 Cox, 602. The cases in which it is most easily applied are to the compensation of persons who are required under a restitution order to give up property obtained by larceny and acquired by them even in good faith before the conviction. But the courts usually act under 6 & 7 Geo. 5. c. 50, s. 45 (3) (post, p. 294). As to suspension of order made under either of these enactments pending appeal, see post, pp. 305, 316.

Compensation for injuries to property may be awarded in lieu of a conviction on summary prosecution for a first offence against the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 108), or the Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 66).

By the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 17), s. 1 (3), the court, in addition to making a probation order under the Act, may order the offender to pay such damages for injury or compensation for loss not exceeding in the case of a court of summary conviction ten pounds (or if a higher limit is fixed by any enactment relating to the offence that higher limit), and to pay such costs as the court thinks reasonable.

By the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), s. 99 (1), where the offender is under sixteen, the court, if it thinks the case would be best met by imposing a fine, damages, or costs, shall, if the offender is under fourteen, and may, if he is fourteen or over, order his parent or guardian to pay such damages or costs unless satisfied that he has not conduced to the offence by neglecting to exercise due care over the young offender.

Except in the cases above referred to, it is not usual to allow civil and criminal proceedings in respect of the same act or omission to be carried on concurrently. In the case of misdemeanors, there never seems to have been any ruling that concurrent proceedings might not be taken. But until a comparatively recent date, it was considered that the civil remedy in cases of injury by a felonious act could not be pursued until the completion of the prosecution of the alleged felon. In Crosby v. Leng, 12 East, 413, Lord Ellenborough says : " The policy of the law requires that before the party injured by any felonious act can seek civil redress for it, the matter should be heard and disposed of before the proper criminal tribunal, in order that the justice of the county may be first satisfied in respect of the public offence; and after the verdict, either of conviction or acquittal, the judgment is so far conclusive in any particular matter, that the objection is thereby removed of bringing that sub judice in a civil action which was the proper subject of a criminal prosecution." Similar views are expressed in Stone v. Marsh, 6 B. & C. 551; 5 L. J. (K. B.) (O. S.) 201 : Marsh v. Keating, 1 Mont. & A. 592; 8 Bligh (N. S.) 651; 2 Cl. & F. 250 : Ex parte Bolland, Mont. & Mac. 397 : and Ex parte Elliott, Re Jermyn, 3 Mont. & A. 110.

Another mode of stating this rule is that the King's rights to the forfeitures of felons would be defeated by a failure to prosecute the offender effectively, and an acquittal by collusion of the prosecutor would debar him from his civil remedy. Crosby v. Leng, supra. The rule was also explained on the ground that it was the duty of the person injured by a felony to prosecute before suing. But this has been questioned in Ward v. Lloyd, 7 Scott (N. R.) 499, 507, Maule, J. : and Wells v. Abrahams, L. R. 7 Q. B. 554, 663, Lush, J. The rule barred proof in bankruptcy as well as suits at law or in equity : Ex parte Elliott, supra : but did not bar an action where the felon had been convicted and executed for another felony : Ex parte Bolland, supra ; nor actions against persons other than the felon in possession of the proceeds of the felony, unless it were larceny and the stolen goods had been sold in market overt : White v.

Spettigue, 13 M. & W. 603 : Lee v. Bayes, 18 C. B. 599; nor to an action by A.'s master against B. for loss of servant caused by felonious act of B.'s servant : Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Ex. 88.

A distinction seems to have once been drawn between actions of trespass or other tort and actions of debt : see Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 322; but it has now evaporated, and the authorities now lay down as follows :—

(1) Money obtained by theft or forgery is a debt due to the loser of it, which is sufficient consideration for the assignment of the offender's property to the injured person. Chowne v. Baylis, 31 L. J. (Ch.) 757; 31 Beav. 351 : Ex parte Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, where all the cases are collected : but where a debt arises out of a felonious act by the debtor the civil remedy may have to be postponed until public justice is satisfied. Where the plaintiff, who claimed to be a creditor for the amount paid by him on a forged cheque had commenced a prosecution for the forgery upon which a bill was found and the prisoner arraigned, abstained from bringing on the trial by the direction of the judge, who thought the ends of justice were satisfied by sentencing the prisoner on an indictment for another forgery to which he pleaded guilty, it was held that the plaintiff had done enough to satisfy the rule of law, and that his civil remedy revived. Dudley, etc., Banking Co. v. Spittle, 1 J. & H. 114; Ex parte Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667; 48 L. J. (Bankry.) 57 : Ex parte Leslie, Re Guerrier, 20 Ch. D. 131; 51 L. J. (Ch.) 689. The acquittal of the accused on an indictment for felony is no bar to an action for civil injury arising out of the incriminated acts, unless the plaintiff colluded with the defendant in procuring the acquittal. Crosby v. Leng, 12 East, 409.

(2) Where the felonious act also constitutes a trespass it used to be considered that the trespass merged in the felony. Markham v. Cobb, Sir W. Jones, 147; Noy, 82 : Higgins v. Butcher, Yelv. 89 : Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282 : White v. Spettigue, 13 M. & W. 603. But it is now held that the criminal remedy merely suspends, or must precede, the civil remedy.

Most of the authorities with reference to the basis and extent of the rule are discussed in Wells v. Abrahams, supra: in Midland Insurance Co. v. Smith, 6 Q. B. D. 561; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) 329 : A. v. B., 24 L. R. Ir. 235, reported also as S. v. S., 16 Cox, 566 (a), and in Ex parte Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667; 48 L. J. (Bankry.) 57. In the last case, Bramwell, L.J., suggested four theories to support the supposed rule. 1. That no cause of action arises at all out of the felony. 2. That it does not arise till prosecution. 3. That it arises on the act, but is suspended till prosecution. 4. That there is neither defence nor suspension of the claim by or at the instance of the felon debtor, but that the court, of its own motion, or on the suggestion of the crown, should stay proceedings till public justice is satisfied. He indicates the difficulties of each theory, but accepts Wellock v. Constantine, 32 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 285; 2 H. & C. 146, as establishing the existence of the rule, and see also Ex parte Ball, 10 Ch. D. at p. 673; 48 L. J. (Bankry.) 57, per Baggallay, L.J.

The most recent decision of the Court of Appeal on this subject has declared that an action for damages based upon a felonious act on the part of the defendant committed against the plaintiff is not maintainable so long as the defendant has not been prosecuted or a reasonable excuse shown for his not having been prosecuted. and the proper course for the court to adopt in such a case is to stay further proceedings in the action until the defendant has been prosecuted. Smith v. Selwyn [1914] 3 K. SECT. 2.

RESTITUTION OF PROPERTY.

Common Law.

AT common law the court of King's Bench could award a writ of restitution as part of its judgment on an appeal of larceny; but this power ceased on the abolition of these appeals by 59 G. 3, c. 46 (rep.). R. v. Mayor, etc., of London, L. R. 4 Q. B. 371; S. C. 38 L. J. (M. C.) 107; 11 Cox, 280: sub nom. Walker v. Mayor, etc., of London. 21 H. 8, c. 11 (which is now repealed and is replaced by 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 45 below), empowered the court of trial to award restitution on conviction on indictment (see 2 Hawk. c. 23, ss. 49-57), but gave no authority to the Court of King's Bench. Id.

Statutes.

2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 7; 31 Eliz. c. 12 (restitution of horses). These Acts are not repealed by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 71; s. 22 (2); but are now rarely used: see Moran v. Pitt, 42 L. J. (Q. B.) 47: Josephs v. Adkins, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 76; Chalmers, Sale of Goods (7th ed.). 171, 174.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 45 (1.).—Restitution.]—If any person guilty of any such felony or misdemeanor as is mentioned in this Act, in stealing, taking, obtaining, extorting, embezzling, converting, or disposing of, or in knowingly receiving, any property, is prosecuted to conviction by or on behalf of the owner of such property, the property shall be restored to the owner or his representative.

(2) In every case in this section aforesaid, the court before whom such person is convicted shall have power to award from time to time writs of restitution for the said property, or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner:

Provided that where goods as defined in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, have been obtained by fraud or other wrongful means not amounting to stealing, the property in such goods shall not revest in the person who was the owner of the goods or his personal representative by reason only of the conviction of the offender:

And provided that nothing in this section shall apply to the case of:—

(a) any valuable security which has been in good faith paid or discharged by some person or body corporate liable to the payment thereof, or, being a negotiable instrument, has been in good faith taken or received by transfer or delivery by some person or body corporate for a just and valuable consideration without any notice or without any reasonable cause to suspect that the same had been stolen.

(3) On the restitution of any stolen property if it appears to the court by the evidence that the offender has sold the stolen property to any person, and that such person has had no knowledge that the same was stolen, and that any moneys have been taken from the offender on his apprehension, the court may, on the application of such purchaser, order that out of such moneys a sum not exceeding the amount of the proceeds of such sale be delivered to the said purchaser.

The prosecution of an offender by the director of public prosecutions shall, for the purpose of enabling a person to obtain a restitution of property, or obtaining, exercising, or enforcing any right, claim, or advantage whatsoever, have the same effect as if such person had been bound over to prosecute, and had prosecuted the offender, subject to this proviso, that such person shall give all reasonable information and assistance to the said director in relation to the prosecution.

(2) " If any person is convicted in any court of feloniously taking or fraudulently obtaining any goods or chattels, and it appears to the court that the same have been pawned with a pawnbroker . . . the court, on proof of the ownership of the goods and chattels, may, if it thinks fit, order the delivery thereof to the owner, either on payment to the pawnbroker of the amount of the loan or of any part thereof, or without payment thereof or of any part thereof, as to the court, according to the conduct of the owner and the other circumstances of the case, seems just and fitting." As to protection from such actions, see Bullock v. Dunlap, 2 Ex. D. 43.

Effect of the enactments as to restitution.]—The law relating to restitution of stolen property has not been altered by the Larceny Act, 1916. Section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (repealed and replaced by s. 45. sub-ss. 1. 2 of the Larceny Act, 1916, ante, p. 293) had (until limited by s. 24 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, ante, p. 294) a wider scope than 21 H. 8. c. 11 (rep.) (R. v.

de Veaux, 2 Leach, 585; 2 East, P. C. 789, 839: Bentley v. Vilmont, 12 App. Cas. 471; 57 L. J. (Q. B.) 18; and extended to all offences under the Larceny Act, 1861, excepting offences under ss. 77-86, or under 1 Edw. 7, c. 10 (rep.), but including obtaining goods by false pretences (Bentley v. Vilmont, supra), or receiving goods so obtained. R. v. Goldsmith, 12 Cox, 594.

The operation of s. 100 was restricted by s. 24 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), in the case of "goods" as defined in s. 62 of that Act (ante, p. 294). But the section was held to apply in cases where on an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretences, where no property had passed, the defendant was convicted on evidence proving larceny by a trick or otherwise, and in such cases the court has made a restitution order: R. v. Walker, 65 J. P. 729, Fulton, Recorder. In R. v. Bianci, 67 J. P. 443, where a defendant pleaded guilty to two indictments with respect to the same goods, the first for obtaining them by false pretences, the second for stealing them, it was held that a restitution order could be made on a pawnbroker with whom the defendant had pledged the goods.

In R. v. George, 65 J. P. 729, the question arose whether the court could make an order of restitution where property had been obtained by false pretences. Bosanquet, Common Serjeant, after consulting Bigham, J., and Fulton, Recorder, said that they were all of opinion that s. 24 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, prevented property obtained by fraud being revested by the mere fact of the conviction, and that therefore restitution could not be ordered against a bonâ fide purchaser who had a good title in law. He quoted the law as stated by Lord Watson in Bentley v. Vilmont, 12 App. Cas. 471; 57 L. J. (Q. B.) 18; "it now appears that the sale was induced by fraud, a circumstance which gives the seller the option either of adhering to his bargain or of rescinding it in a question with the fraudulent purchaser," and held that where, as in the case under consideration, the goods were found in the possession of the person who had obtained them by fraud, the former owner might disaffirm the transaction, and was then entitled to recover the property; and in that case an order of restitution should be made. It is submitted that the above decisions are still good law, for the provisions of s. 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and of s. 24 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, have been reproduced in s. 45 of the Larceny Act, 1916. As to power in such a case to make a restitution order against a trustee in bankruptcy, see R. v. Cohen, 71 J. P. 190.

The proviso (a) to s. 45 (1) (2) of 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, which replaces the first proviso to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100 (rep.), protects from restitution bonâ fide holders for value of negotiable instruments, including bank-notes. Chichester v. Hill, 52 L. J. (Q. B.) 160; 15 Cox, 258: Miller v. Race, 1 Smith, L. C. (11th ed.) 463; 1 Burr. 452. An order cannot be made for the restitution of current coin stolen and passed as currency to innocent persons; but can be made where the money is found on the thief or under his control. Moss v. Hancock, [1899] 2 Q. B. 111, 120; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 657, Channell, J.: cf. Holiday v. Hicks, Cro. Eliz. 638, 661; 1 Hale, 542. And where a 5*l.* piece was stolen, and though a current coin was sold as a curiosity, it was held that a restitution order could be made against the buyer. Moss v. Hancock, supra.

Certain difficulties in applying the enactment arise from ss. 8, 9 of the Factors

Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), and s. 25 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, under which mercantile agents, bailees or factors, and certain other persons can give to purchasers from them a better title than they have themselves. See Helby v. Matthews [1895] A. C. 471; 64 L. J. (Q. B.) 465 : Payne v. Wilson [1895] 1 Q. B. 653; 2 Q. B. 537; 64 L. J. (Q. B.) 328 : Kircham v. Gill [1897] 1 Q. B. 201; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 169 : Farquharson v. King [1902] A. C. 325; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 667 : Oppenheimer v. Frazer [1907] 2 K. B. 50; 76 L. J. (K. B.) 806 : Weiner v. Harris [1910] 1 K. B. 285; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 342; and as to factors, R. v. Wollez, 8 Cox, 337. It is doubtful how far restitution can be made in cases where a bailee under a hire-purchase agreement misappropriates the goods hired. See Payne v. Wilson [1893] 1 Q. B. 653; 64 L. J. (Q. B.) 328 : Helby v. Matthews, supra: Lee v. Butler [1893] 2 Q. B. 318; 64 L. J. (Q. B.) 465.

Revesting on conviction.]—On a conviction for larceny of goods the property in the goods stolen revests in the person who was the owner of the goods or his personal representative notwithstanding any intermediate dealing with them, whether by sale in market overt or otherwise (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71, s. 24, ante, p. 294). This merely expresses the rule laid down in Horwood v. Smith, 2 T. R. 750 : Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. B. 506; 19 L. J. (Q. B.) 447 : White v. Spettigue, 13 M. & W. 603 : Moss v. Hancock [1899] 2 Q. B. 111, 118; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 657 : R. v. Horan, Ir. Rep. 6 C. L. 293, and makes good the title of the original owner even against an innocent purchaser. This rule only applies to "goods" as defined in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (s. 62, ante, p. 294), and does not apply to money nor to negotiable instruments. Chichester v. Hill, 52 L. J. (Q. B.) 160; 15 Cox, 258; 47 J. P. 324. Restitution orders cannot be made as to coin if dealt with as currency (Moss v. Hancock, supra), nor as to negotiable instruments if they have been already paid or negotiated in good faith (ante, p. 296). Until conviction of the thief "goods" innocently bought in market overt are the property of the purchaser. Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 22 : Walker v. Matthews, 8 Q. B. D. 109; 51 L. J. (Q. B.) 243 : Hargreave v. Spink [1892] 1 Q. B. 25; 61 L. J. (Q. B.) 318; and therefore, if he sells them again before the conviction, even if previously to selling them he has had notice of the theft, no order for restitution can be made against him. Horwood v. Smith, 2 T. R. 750. There is a special remedy against pawnbrokers in London who sell stolen goods after notice : see 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 27, ante, 294 : Ex parte Davison, 60 J. P. 808.

By whom and how made.]—An order of restitution can be made only by the court before which the offender is convicted, and the high court has no summary power to award restitution. R. v. Mayor, etc., of London, L. R. 4 Q. B. 371; S. C. sub nom. Walker v. Mayor, etc., of London, 38 L. J. (M. C.) 107; 11 Cox, 280.

The order is discretionary. See Vilmont v. Bentley, 18 Q. B. D. 327; 57 L. J. (Q. B.) 18. Its refusal is no bar to a civil action or summary proceedings to recover the goods. Ex parte Davison, 60 J. P. 808 : Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. B. 506; 19 L. J. (Q. B.) 447. In cases of difficulty or complications it is usual to refuse an order and leave the prosecutor to his other legal remedies for recovery of his property. And it is the practice not to make an order of restitution in a case where the circumstances require that there should be terms imposed, unless the prosecutor consents to compensate the person who has possession of the stolen goods. See Leicester v. Cherryman [1907] 1 K. B. 101, 103; 76 L. J. (K. B.) 678.

The Recorder of London, upon the trial and conviction at the Central Criminal Court of a prisoner charged with larceny, having refused to order (under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100) (rep.) the person with whom the stolen property was pledged to restore it to the prosecutor, the Queen's Bench Division refused to grant a mandamus directed to "the judges and justices of the Central Criminal Court," to compel the recorder to make such order, on the ground that the Central Criminal Court being a Superior Court, no mandamus would lie against it. R. v. Justices of Central Criminal Court, 11 Q. B. D. 479; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 121: and see ante, p. 217.

Before making the order the court may hear counsel on behalf of persons in possession of the goods. R. v. Macklin, 5 Cox, 216. The order if made by a court of assize (including the Central Criminal Court) is enforceable by attachment. R. v. Wollez, 8 Cox, 337.

On whom made.]—The order may be made on the offender or on his agent or on his trustee in bankruptcy or on any pledgee or sub-purchaser or possessor of the goods, even though he innocently bought in market overt. Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 A. C. 459; 47 L. J. (Q. B.) 481; 13 Cox, 162, 588: Horwood v. Smith, 2 T. R. 750; 1 R. R. 613; but it cannot be made on a purchaser who has re-sold before conviction. Cundy v. Lindsay (supra); and see R. v. Stancliffe, 11 Cox, 318: R. v. Goldsmith, 12 Cox, 594. As to the law when the offender has become bankrupt, see Re Vautin [1899] 2 Q. B. 549; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 971.

As to what made.]—The power to award restitution seems to be limited to property produced and identified at the time (or more probably to property specified in the indictment) as being the subject of the offence. R. v. Goldsmith, 12 Cox, 594: R. v. Smith, Id. 597. The power does not extend to property found on the prisoner but not connected with the offence: R. v. Mayor, etc., of London, E. B. & E. 509; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 231: S. C. sub nom. R. v. Pierce, Bell, 235; 8 Cox, 344; and an order made in such a case was quashed by the high court. Id. The power to award restitution extends to the proceeds of the property as well as the property itself if in the hands of the prisoner or of an agent holding for him. R. v. Justices of Central Criminal Court, 18 Q. B. D. 314; 56 L. J. (M. C.) 25; 16 Cox, 196, C. A. But it does not authorize delivery to the prosecutor of pawntickets supposed to represent the stolen goods; R. v. Rolfe, 53 J. P. 823; nor an order restoring both the property and the proceeds of its conversion or sale. Ex parte Dettmer, 72 J. P. 513.

Annulling, quashing, or varying the order.]—In the case of an order made by a court of assize, including the Central Criminal Court, the High Court (King's Bench Division) has no power to intervene by certiorari or otherwise to quash or vary the order, except incidentally to the determination of a criminal appeal, see post, pp. 305, 316. Awards illegally made by a court of quarter sessions may be dealt with on certiorari. Ex parte Dettmer, supra.

CHAPTER VIII.

CRIMINAL APPEAL.

SECT. 1.

APPEALS UNDER THE CRIMINAL APPEAL ACT, 1907.

THE Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 23), introduced a new system and procedure with respect to the review (in England and Wales) of convictions on indictment or criminal information. That Act has abolished writs of error (a) and the jurisdiction and practice of the King's Bench Division as to the grant of new trials in criminal cases (b), and has substituted a procedure by appeal on questions of law or fact or of mixed law and fact, or as to the legality or propriety of the sentence imposed.

It makes no provision for appeals in case of acquittal or where judgment has been given against the crown on a demurrer or motion to quash an indictment or to arrest judgment, and it makes no provision for the grant of a new trial, even where the conviction on the first trial is quashed for technical reasons.

As to venire de novo, vide post, p. 346.

Court of Criminal Appeal.

7 Edw. 7, c. 23 (Criminal Appeal Act, 1907), s. 1.—Constitution of Court of Criminal Appeal.]—(1) There shall be a Court of Criminal Appeal, and the lord chief justice of England and all the judges of the King's Bench Division of the high court [appointed for the purpose by the lord chief justice with the consent of the lord chancellor for such period as he thinks desirable in each case] shall be judges of that court. [The words in italics were substituted for the word "eight," and the words in brackets were virtually repealed by the Criminal Appeal Amendment Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 46), s. 1.]

(a) As to writs of error, vide Archb. Cr. Pl. (23rd Ed.) 278; Short & Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd Ed.) 149, 205, 301.

(b) As to new trials in criminal cases see Archb. Cr. Pl. (23rd Ed.) 291; Short & Mellor Cr. Pr. (2nd Ed.) 142.

(2) For the purpose of hearing and determining appeals under this Act, and for the purpose of any other proceedings under this Act, the Court of Criminal Appeal shall be summoned in accordance with directions given by the lord chief justice of England with the consent of the lord chancellor, and the court shall be duly constituted if it consists of not less than three judges and of an uneven number of judges.

If the lord chief justice so directs, the court may sit in two or more divisions.

The court shall sit in London except in cases where the lord chief justice gives special directions that it shall sit at some other place.

(3) The lord chief justice, if present, and in his absence the senior member of the court, shall be president of the court.

(4) The determination of any question before the Court of Criminal Appeal shall be according to the opinion of the majority of the members of the court hearing the case.

(5) Unless the court direct to the contrary in cases where, in the opinion of the court, the question is a question of law on which it would be convenient that separate judgments should be pronounced by the members of the court, the judgment of the court shall be pronounced by the president of the court or such other member of the court hearing the case as the president of the court directs, and no judgment with respect to the determination of any question shall be separately pronounced by any other member of the court. [For an instance of separate judgments, see R. v. Kerr, 15 Cr. App. R. 165.]

(6) If in any case the director of public prosecutions or the prosecutor or defendant obtains the certificate of the attorney-general that the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal involves a point of law of exceptional public importance, and that it is desirable in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought, he may appeal from that decision to the House of Lords, but subject thereto the determination by the Court of Criminal Appeal of any appeal or other matter which it has power to determine shall be final, and no appeal shall lie from that court to any other court. [Under former practice no appeal lay to any court from the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, but an appeal lay to the Court of Appeal and to the House of Lords from judgments of the high court in a criminal cause or matter where error in law appeared on the record (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 47 : Castro v. R., 6 A. C. 229; 50 L. J. (Q. B.) 497. As to procedure on appeals to the House of Lords, see R. v. Ball [1911] A. C. 47, at pp. 61, 76; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 691; 22 Cox, 366; 75 J. P. 180; 6 Cr. App. R. 31.]

(7) The Court of Criminal Appeal shall be a superior court of record, and shall, for the purposes of and subject to the provisions of this Act, have full power to determine, in accordance with this Act, any questions necessary to be determined for the purpose of doing justice in the case before the court.

(8) Rules of court shall provide for securing sittings of the Court of Criminal Appeal, if necessary, during vacation. (Vide, r. 50, post, p. 327.)

(9) Any direction which may be given by the lord chief justice under this section may, in the event of any vacancy in that office, or in the event of the incapacity of the lord chief justice to act from any reason, be given by the senior judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

Sect. 2.—Registrar and staff of the court.]—There shall be a registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal (in this Act referred to as the registrar) who [shall be appointed by the lord chief justice from among the masters of the Supreme Court acting in the King's Bench Division, and] shall be entitled to such additional salary (if any), and be provided with such additional staff (if any), in respect of the office of registrar as the lord chancellor, with the concurrence of the treasury, may determine.

The senior master of the Supreme Court shall be the first registrar. [The words in square brackets are virtually repealed by 8 Edw. 7, c. 46, s. 2 (1), infra.]

8 Edw. 7, c. 46 (Criminal Appeal Amendment Act, 1908), s. 2.—[Registrar and assistant registrar.]—(1) "Notwithstanding anything in s. 2 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, from and after the passing of this Act (21st December, 1908), the master of the crown office shall be the registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal;" (2) "The power to provide additional staff for the registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal includes a power to appoint an assistant registrar, but any assistant registrar so appointed shall be either a master of the Supreme Court or a practising barrister of not less than seven years' standing, and shall be appointed by the lord chief justice of England."

Right of Appeal and Determination of Appeals.

7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 3.—Right of appeal.]—A person convicted on indictment may appeal under this Act to the Court of Criminal Appeal—

(a) against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone; and

(b) with the leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal or upon the certificate of the judge who tried him that it is a fit case for appeal against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of fact alone, or a question of mixed law and fact, or any other ground which appears to the court to be a sufficient ground of appeal; and

(c) with the leave of the Court of Criminal Appeal against the sentence passed on his conviction, unless the sentence is one fixed by law.

Sect. 20.—Abolition of writs of error and new trials.]—(1) Writs of error and the powers and practice now existing in the high court in respect of motions for new trials and the granting thereof in criminal cases are hereby abolished.

(2) This Act shall apply in the case of convictions on criminal informations (ante, p. 127) and coroners' inquisitions (ante, p. 140) and in cases where a person is dealt with by a court of quarter sessions as an incorrigible rogue under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 G. 4, c. 83, s. 5), as it applies in the case of convictions on indictments, but shall not apply in the case of convictions on indictments or inquisitions charging any peer or peeress, or other person claiming the privilege of peerage, with any offence not now lawfully triable by a court of assize. ["Criminal information" does not include an information for smuggling under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, s. 186, filed by the attorney-general in the King's Bench Division. R. v. Hausmann, 3 Cr. App. R. 3; 73 J. P. 516. As to the cases to which the exception applies, vide ante, p. 169.]

(3) Notwithstanding anything in any other Act, an appeal shall lie from a conviction on indictment at common law in relation to the non-repair or obstruction of any highway, public bridge, or navigable river in whatever court the indictment is tried, in all respects as though the conviction were a verdict in a civil action tried at assizes, and shall not lie under this Act. [Vide post, tit. Highways.]

(4) All jurisdiction and authority under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, post, p. 340), in relation to questions of law arising in criminal trials which is transferred to the judges of the high court by s. 47 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), shall be vested in the Court of Criminal Appeal under this Act, and in any case where a person convicted appeals under this Act against his conviction on any ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone, the Court of Criminal Appeal may, if they think fit, decide that the procedure under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, as to the statement of a case should be followed, and require a case to be stated accordingly under that Act in the same manner as if a question of law had been reserved. [This power has not yet been exercised.]

Sect. 21.—Definitions.]—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

The expression "appellant" includes a person who has been convicted and desires to appeal under this Act; and [It also includes a prisoner on whose conviction a case has been reserved under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, post, p. 340.]

The expression "sentence" includes any order of the court made on conviction with reference to the person convicted or his wife or children, and any recommendation of the court as to the making of an expulsion order in the case of a person convicted, and the power of the Court of Criminal Appeal to pass a sentence includes a power to make any such order of the court or recommendation, and a recommendation so made by the Court of Criminal Appeal shall have the same effect for the purposes of s. 3 of the Aliens Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 13, ante. p. 236), as the certificate and recommendation of the convicting court.

[In a clear case the court may quash that part of the sentence which consists of a recommendation that an expulsion order be made. R. v. Schaffner, 14 Cr. App. R. 131 : R. v. Gilbert, 16 Cr. App. R. 34; but ordinarily will leave the matter to the Home Secretary. R. v. Josephson, 10 Cr. App. R. 8. By virtue of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, s. 6, *anorder for payment of costs by the person convicted is part of the sentence, and appeal therefore lies from such order to the Court of Criminal Appeal. [R. v. Smith [1910] 1 K. B. 17; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 1.]

8 Edw. 7, c. 67 (Children Act, 1908), s. 99 (6).]—"A parent or guardian may appeal against an order under this section— . . .

(b) If made by a court of assize or a court of quarter sessions to the Court of Criminal Appeal in accordance with the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, as if the parent or guardian against whom the order was made had been convicted on indictment, and the order was a sentence on conviction."

Under the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 10 (5), a person sentenced by a court of quarter sessions under that section to detention in a Borstal Institution may appeal against the sentence to the Court of Criminal Appeal as if he had been convicted on indictment, and the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, shall apply accordingly.

7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 4.—Determination of appeals in ordinary cases.]—(1) The Court of Criminal Appeal on any such appeal against conviction shall allow the appeal if they think that the verdict of the jury should be set aside on the ground that it is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence, or that the judgment of the court before whom the appellant was convicted should be set aside on the ground of a wrong decision of any question of law or that on any ground there was a miscarriage of justice, and in any other case shall dismiss the appeal:

Provided that the court may, notwithstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, dismiss the appeal if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice had actually occurred (vide post, p. 334).

(2) Subject to the special provisions of this Act (infra, s. 5), the Court of Criminal Appeal shall, if they allow an appeal against conviction, quash the conviction and direct a judgment and verdict of acquittal to be entered. [There is no power to order a new trial: R. v. Dyson [1908] 2 K. B. 454; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 813; 72 J. P. 303; 1 Cr. App. R. 13: R. v. Stoddart, 73 J. P. 348; 2 Cr. App. R. 245; but see post, p. 346, venire de novo.]

(3) On an appeal against sentence the Court of Criminal Appeal shall, if they think that a different sentence should have been passed, quash the sentence passed at the trial, and pass such other sentence warranted in law by the verdict (whether more or less severe) in substitution therefor as they think ought to have been passed, and in any other case shall dismiss the appeal. [The words "by the verdict" are treated as superfluous: R. v. Ettridge [1909] 2 K. B. 24; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 479. The Court is not compelled by the words of this sub-section to pass another sentence, and may simply quash the sentence passed at the trial. R. v. Johnson [1909] 1 K. B. 439: R. v. Bradford, 76 J. P. 46; 22 Cox, 627; 7 Cr. App. R. 42.]

Sect. 5.—Powers of court in special cases.]—(1) If it appears to the Court of Criminal Appeal that an appellant, though not properly convicted on some count or part of the indictment, has been properly convicted on some other count or part of the indictment, the court may either affirm the sentence passed on the appellant at the trial, or pass such sentence in substitution therefor as they think proper, and as may be warranted in law by the verdict on the count or part of the indictment on which the court consider that the appellant has been properly convicted. [See R. v. Cooper, 24 T. L. R. 867: R. v. George, 73 J. P. 11: R. v. Wong Chey, 6 Cr. App. R. 59.]

(2) Where an appellant has been convicted of an offence and the jury could on the indictment have found him guilty of some other offence (vide ante, pp. 211 et seq.), and on the finding of the jury it appears to the Court of Criminal Appeal that the jury must have been satisfied of facts which proved him guilty of that other offence, the court may, instead of allowing or dismissing the appeal, substitute for the verdict found by the jury a verdict of guilty of that other offence, and pass such sentence in substitution for the sentence passed at the trial as may be warranted in law for that other offence, not being a sentence of greater severity. [See R. v. Rose, 2 Cr. App. R. 265 : R. v. Taylor [1911] 1 K. B. 674; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 311 : R. v. Fisher, 103 L. T. 320; 74 J. P. 427; 22 Cox, 340 : R. v. Dargue, 6 Cr. App. R. 8 : R. v. Gilbert, 11 Cr. App. R. 23; 24 Cox, 586.]

(3) Where on the conviction of the appellant the jury have found a special verdict (vide ante, p. 216), and the Court of Criminal Appeal consider that a wrong conclusion has been arrived at by the court before which the appellant has been convicted on the effect of that verdict, the Court of Criminal Appeal may, instead of allowing the appeal, order such conclusion to be recorded as appears to the court to be in law required by the verdict, and pass such sentence in substitution for the sentence passed at the trial as may be warranted in law.

(4) If on any appeal it appears to the Court of Criminal Appeal that, although the appellant was guilty of the act or omission charged against him, he was insane at the time the act was done or omission made so as not to be responsible according to law for his actions (vide ante, p. 217), the court may quash the sentence passed at the trial and order the appellant to be kept in custody as a criminal lunatic under the Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 38), in the same manner as if a special verdict had been found by the jury under that Act. [The court has acted under this sub-section in R. v. Jefferson, 72 J. P. 467; 1 Cr. App. R. 95 : and in R. v. Gilbert, 11 Cr. App. R. 23; 24 Cox, 586.]

Sect. 6.—Re-vesting and restitution of property on conviction.]—(1) The operation of any order for the restitution of any property to any person made on a conviction on indictment, and the operation in case of any such conviction, of the provisions of sub-section (1) of s. 24 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71, ante, p. 294), as to the re-vesting of the property in stolen goods on conviction, shall (unless the court before whom the conviction takes place direct to the contrary in any case in which, in their opinion, the title to the property is not in dispute) be suspended—

(a) in any case until the expiration of ten days after the date of the conviction; and

(b) in cases where notice of appeal or leave to appeal is given within ten days after the date of conviction, until the determination of the appeal; and in cases where the operation of any such order, or the operation of the said provisions, is suspended until the determination of the appeal, the order or provisions, as the case may be, shall not take effect as to the property in question if the conviction is quashed on appeal. Provision may be made by rules of court for securing the safe custody of any property, pending the suspension of the operation of any such order or of the said provisions. [See

Rules 9-13, post, p. 316. This section does not give any right of appeal to any person, other than the accused, on whom the order of restitution is made: R. v. Elliott [1908] 2 K. B. 452; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 812.]

(2) The Court of Criminal Appeal may by order annul or vary any order made on a trial for the restitution of any property to any person, although the conviction is not quashed; and the order, if annulled, shall not take effect, and, if varied, shall take effect as so varied.

Procedure.

Sect. 7.—Time for appealing.]—(1) Where a person convicted desires to appeal under this Act to the Court of Criminal Appeal, or to obtain the leave of that court to appeal, he shall give notice of appeal or notice of his application for leave to appeal in such manner as may be directed by rules of court within ten days of the date of conviction: Such rules shall enable any convicted person to present his case and his argument in writing instead of by oral argument if he so desires. Any case or argument so presented shall be considered by the court. [See Rules 17-25, p. 318.]

Except in the case of a conviction involving sentence of death, the time within which notice of appeal or notice of an application for leave to appeal may be given, may be extended at any time by the Court of Criminal Appeal. [There is no power to grant extension of time in the case of a conviction of murder even though the sentence of death has been commuted. R. v. Twynham, 85 J. P. 48; 15 Cr. App. R. 38.]

(2) In the case of a conviction involving sentence of death or corporal punishment—

(a) the sentence shall not in any case be executed until after the expiration of the time within which notice of appeal or of an application for leave to appeal may be given under this section; and

(b) if notice is so given, the appeal or application shall be heard and determined with as much expedition as practicable, and the sentence shall not be executed until after the determination of the appeal, or, in cases where an application for leave to appeal is finally refused, of the application.

Sect. 8.—Judge's notes and report.]—The judge or chairman of any court before whom a person is convicted shall, in the case of an appeal under this Act against the conviction or against the sentence, or in the case of an application for leave to appeal under this Act, furnish to the registrar, in accordance with rules of court, his notes of the trial; and shall also furnish to the registrar in accordance with rules of court a report giving his opinion upon the case or upon any point arising in the case. [As to obtaining this report, see Rules 14, 15, post, p. 318.]

Sect. 9.—Supplemental powers of court.]—For the purposes of this Act, the Court of Criminal Appeal may, if they think it necessary or expedient in the interests of justice,—

(a) order the production of any document, exhibit, or other thing connected with the proceedings, the production of which appears to them necessary for the determination of the case; and

(b) if they think fit order any witnesses who would have been compellable witnesses at the trial (vide post, pp. 457, 467), to attend and be examined before the court, whether they were or were not called at the trial, or order the examination of any such witnesses to be conducted in manner provided by rules of court before any judge of the court or before any officer of the court or justice of the peace or other person appointed by the court for the purpose, and allow the admission of any depositions so taken as evidence before the court. [The court will only act upon this power under very special circumstances. For recent instances where witnesses were ordered, see R. v. Hamilton, 13 Cr. App. R. 32: R. v. Kurasch, 13 Cr. App. R. 13: R. v. Warren, 14 Cr. App, R. 4]; and

(c) if they think fit receive the evidence if tendered, of any witness (including the appellant) who is a competent but not compellable witness, and, if the appellant makes an application for the purpose, of the husband or wife of the appellant, in cases where the evidence of the husband or wife could not have been given at the trial except on such an application [The court will very rarely indeed allow the appellant to give evidence where he did not give evidence at the trial: R. v. Rose, 14 Cr. App. R. 14]; and

(d) where any question arising on the appeal involves prolonged examination of documents or accounts, or any scientific or local investigation, which cannot in the opinion of the court conveniently be conducted before the court, order the reference of the question in manner provided by rules of court for inquiry and report to a special commissioner appointed by the court, and act upon the report of any such commissioner so far as they think fit to adopt it; and

and exercise in relation to the proceedings of the court any other powers which may for the time being be exercised by the court of appeal on appeals in civil matters, and issue any warrants necessary for enforcing the orders and sentences of the court: Provided that in no case shall any sentence be increased by reason of or in consideration of any evidence that was not given at the trial. [As to procedure on orders of reference under this section, see Rule 41, post: and as to issue of a warrant, see R. v. Ball, 6 Cr. App. R. 49: and as to hearing evidence of matters subsequent to the trial, see R. v. Robinson [1917] 2 K. B. 108; 86 L. J. (K. B.) 773; 12 Cr. App. R. 226.]

Sect. 10.—Legal aid for applicant.]—The Court of Criminal Appeal may at any time assign to an appellant a solicitor and counsel or counsel only in any appeal or proceedings preliminary or incidental to an appeal in which, in the opinion of the court, it appears desirable in the interests of justice that the appellant should have legal aid, and that he has not sufficient means to enable him to obtain that aid. [A solicitor as well as counsel is rarely assigned in any appeal, and in appeals against sentence only legal aid is very rarely granted.]

standing that he is in custody, shall be entitled to be present, if he desires it, on the hearing of his appeal, except where the appeal is on some ground involving a question of law alone, but, in that case and on an application for leave to appeal, and on any proceedings preliminary or incidental to an appeal, shall not be entitled to be present, except where rules of court provide that he shall have the right to be present, or where the court gives him leave to be present. [See R. v. Dunleavey [1909] 1 K. B. 200; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 359.]

(2) The power of the court to pass any sentence under this Act may be exercised notwithstanding that the appellant is for any reason not present.

Sect. 12.—Duty of director of public prosecutions.]—It shall be the duty of the director of public prosecutions to appear for the crown on every appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal under this Act, except so far as the solicitor of a government department, or a private prosecutor in the case of a private prosecution, undertakes the defence of the appeal, and the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 22), shall apply as though the duty of the director of public prosecutions under this section were a duty under s. 2 of that Act, and provision shall be made by rules of court for the transmission to the director of public prosecutions of all such documents, exhibits, and other things connected with the proceedings as he may require for the purpose of his duties under this section. [See Rules 27, 28, post, p. 321.]

Sect. 13.—Costs.]—(1) On the hearing and determination of an appeal or any proceedings preliminary or incidental thereto under this Act no costs shall be allowed on either side.

(2) The expenses of any solicitor or counsel assigned to an appellant under this Act, and the expenses of any witnesses attending on the order of the court or examined in any proceedings incidental to the appeal, and of the appearance of an appellant on the hearing of his appeal or on any proceedings preliminary or incidental to the appeal, and all expenses of and incidental to any examination of witnesses conducted by any person appointed by the court for the purpose or any reference of a question to a special commissioner appointed by the court, or of any person appointed as assessor to the court, shall be defrayed, up to an amount allowed by the court, but subject to any regulations as to rates and scales of payment made by the secretary of state, in the same manner as the expenses of a prosecution in cases of felony. [See the Regulations, ante, p. 282.]

8 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908), s. 9 (5).]—"For the purposes of s. 13 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (which relates to the costs of appeal), the hearing of a case stated under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, shall be deemed to be an appeal and the person in relation to whose conviction the case is stated shall be deemed to be an appellant, and the provisions of this Act (ante, p. 267) giving power to direct the payment of the costs of the prosecution and defence shall not apply to the hearing of any case so stated."

(6) "A reference to the payment of costs out of local funds under this Act (ante, p. 271) shall be substituted for any reference to the payment of expenses in the case of an indictment for felony, or any like reference . . . in s. 13 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907."

7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 14.—Admission of appellant to bail, and custody when attending court.]—(1) An appellant who is not admitted to bail shall, pending the determination of his appeal, be treated in such manner as may be directed by prison rules within the meaning of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), s. 2. [See the Prison Rules, 1908.]

(2) The Court of Criminal Appeal may, if it seems fit, on the application of an appellant, admit the appellant to bail pending the determination of his appeal. [As to persons sentenced to fine, or in default of payment to imprisonment, see Rule 7, post, p. 315. As to bail, etc., see Rules 29-31, post, pp. 321.]

(3) The time during which an appellant, pending the determination of his appeal, is admitted to bail, and subject to any directions which the Court of Criminal Appeal may give to the contrary on any appeal, the time during which the appellant, if in custody, is specially treated as an appellant under this section, shall not count as part of any term of imprisonment or penal servitude under his sentence, and, in the case of an appeal under this Act, any imprisonment or penal servitude under the sentence of the appellant, whether it is the sentence passed by the court of trial or the sentence passed by the Court of Criminal Appeal, shall, subject to any directions which may be given by the court as aforesaid, be deemed to be resumed or to begin to run, as the case requires, if the appellant is in custody, as from the day on which the appeal is determined, and, if he is not in custody, as from the day on which he is received into prison under the sentence. [The court leans against giving directions that the time an appellant has been specially treated in custody as an appellant shall count as part of the sentence, and in practice rarely does so except where leave to appeal has been given, and in some cases, though not in all, where the sentence is imprisonment in the second division. As to warrant to arrest appellant, see Rule 47, post, p. 327.]

(4) Where a case is stated under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, post, p. 340), this section shall apply to the person in relation to whose conviction the case is stated as it applies to an appellant.

(5) Provision shall be made by prison rules within the meaning of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), for the manner in which an appellant, when in custody, is to be brought to any place at which he is entitled to be present for the purposes of this Act, or to any place to which the Court of Criminal Appeal or any judge thereof may order him to be taken for the purpose of any proceedings of that court, and for the manner in which he is to be kept in custody while absent from prison for the purpose; and an appellant whilst in custody in accordance with those rules shall be deemed to be in legal custody. [See the Prison Rules, 1908.]

Sect. 15.—Duties of registrar with respect to notices of appeal, etc.]—(1) The registrar shall take all necessary steps for obtaining a hearing under this Act of any appeals or applications, notice of which is given to him under this Act, and shall obtain and lay before the court in proper form all documents, exhibits, and other things relating to the proceedings in the court before which the appellant or applicant was tried which appear necessary for the proper determination of the appeal or application. [For definition of exhibits and dealing with them at the trial, see Rules 2, 8, 32, 36, 39, post, pp. 313 et seq.]

(2) If it appears to the registrar that any notice of an appeal against a conviction purporting to be on a ground of appeal which involves a question of law alone does not show any substantial ground of appeal, the registrar may refer the appeal to the court for summary determination, and, where the case is so referred, the court may, if they consider that the appeal is frivolous or vexatious, and can be determined without adjourning the same for a full hearing, dismiss the appeal summarily, without calling on any persons to attend the hearing or to appear for the crown thereon.

(3) Any documents, exhibits, or other things connected with the proceedings on the trial of any person on indictment, who, if convicted, is entitled or may be authorised to appeal under this Act, shall be kept in the custody of the court of trial in accordance with rules of court made for the purpose, for such time as may be provided by the rules, and subject to such power as may be given by the rules for the conditional release of any such documents, exhibits, or things from that custody.

(4) The registrar shall furnish the necessary forms and instructions in relation to notices of appeal or notices of application under this Act to any person who demands the same, and to officers of courts, governors of prisons, and such other officers or persons as he thinks fit, and the governor of a prison shall cause those forms and instructions to be placed at the disposal of prisoners desiring to appeal or to make any application under this Act, and shall cause any such notice given by a prisoner in his custody to be forwarded on behalf of the prisoner to the registrar.

(5) The registrar shall report to the court or some judge thereof any case in which it appears to him that, although no application had been made for the purpose, a solicitor and counsel or counsel only ought to be assigned to an appellant under the powers given to the court by this Act.

Sect. 16.—Shorthand notes of trial.]—(1) Shorthand notes shall be taken of the proceedings at the trial of any person on indictment who, if convicted, is entitled or may be authorised to appeal under this Act, and on any appeal or application for leave to appeal a transcript of the notes or any part thereof shall be made if the registrar so directs, and furnished to the registrar for the use of the Court of Criminal Appeal or any judge thereof : Provided that a transcript shall be furnished to any party interested upon the payment of such charges as the treasury may fix. [The provisions of this sub-section are directory: and if no shorthand note was taken, or the note taken is inadequate, the Court of Criminal Appeal can proceed on the materials available: R. v. Rutter, 73 J. P. 12; 25 T. L. R. 73 : R. v. Elliott, 25 T. L. R. 572; 2 Cr. App. R. 171; including the statement of counsel present at the trial: R. v. Bennett, 2 Cr. App. R. 182; 25 T. L. R. 528. The court may, however, be placed in a position of great difficulty through the absence of a transcript. See R. v. Moran, 75 J. P. 110 : R. v. Bennett, supra. And it is of great importance that the utmost care be taken by shorthand writers in order to ensure that the notes and transcript shall be as perfect as possible. See R. v. Rimes, 28 T. L. R. 409; 7 Cr. App. R. 240 : R. v. Harris, 8 Cr. App. R. 30, 35 : R. v. Austin and Davies, 12 Cr. App. R. 171, at p. 177. As to appointment and duties of shorthand writers, see Rule 5, post, p. 314.]

(2) The secretary of state may also, if he thinks fit in any case, direct a transcript of the shorthand notes to be made and furnished to him for his use.

The proper officer of the Court of Trial shall keep a record of any directions given under this Rule.

(c.) Suspension of Disqualifications consequent on Conviction.]—Where upon conviction of any person of any offence any disqualification, forfeiture or disability attaches to such person by reason of such conviction, such disqualification, forfeiture or disability shall not attach for the period of ten days from the date of the verdict against such person nor in the event of an appeal under the Act to the Court of Appeal, until the determination thereof. This Rule shall not affect the provisions of section 8 of the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23) (ante, p. 265).

(d.) Judge's Directions as to securing Payment of Money by Convicted Person pending Appeal.]—When the Judge of the Court of Trial on the conviction of a person before him, makes any order for the payment of money by such person or by any other person upon such conviction, and, by reason of this Rule, such order would otherwise be suspended, such Judge may, if he thinks right so to do, direct that the operation of such order shall not be suspended unless the person on whom such order has been made shall in such manner and within such time as the said Judge shall direct, give security by way of undertaking or otherwise for the payment to the person in whose favour such order shall have been made of the amount therein named. Such security may be to the satisfaction of the person in whose favour the order for payment shall have been made or of any other person as such Judge shall direct.

(f.) Suspension of Proceedings or Claims consequent on Conviction.]—Where, upon conviction of any person of any offence, any claim may be made or any proceedings may be taken under any statute against such person or any other person in consequence of such conviction, such proceedings shall not be taken until after the period of ten days from the date on which the verdict against such person was returned nor in the event of an appeal under the Act to the Court of Appeal until the determination thereof.

Any person affected by any orders which are suspended under this Rule may, with the leave of the Court of Appeal, be heard on the final determination of any appeal, before any such orders are varied or annulled by the Court of Appeal.

12. Period of Suspension of Orders under Section 6 of Act.]—The time during which an Order of Restitution or the operation of sub-section 1 of section 24 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (ante, p. 294), is suspended under section 6 of the Act, shall commence to run from the day on which the verdict of the Jury was returned, and, in cases where Notice of Appeal or Notice of Application for leave to appeal is duly given within ten days after such day, the period of suspension of such order or of the operation of the sub-section shall continue until the determination of the appeal.

13. (a.) Certificate of Conviction when not to Issue.]—The Clerk of the Court of Trial or other officer thereof, having the custody of the Records of such Court, or the deputy of such Clerk or other officer, shall not issue, under any Statutes authorising him so to do, a certificate of conviction of any person convicted on indictment in the Court to (b.) Where an application is made to such Clerk, officer, or deputy to issue such certificate of conviction as in this Rule mentioned after the expiration of the said period of ten days, he shall require, before issuing the same, to be satisfied that there is no appeal then pending in the Court of Appeal against such conviction. A person desirous of obtaining a certificate of conviction from such Clerk, officer, or deputy shall be entitled to obtain from the Registrar a certificate in such form as the said Registrar may think right for the purpose of satisfying, by the production thereof, such Clerk, officer, or deputy that no appeal against such conviction is then pending. After the expiration of two months from the date of the conviction a certificate thereof may be issued by such Clerk, officer, or deputy as heretofore, except in cases in which he has had notice of an appeal still undetermined.

For the purposes of this Rule the expression "conviction" shall mean the verdict or plea of guilty and any final judgment passed thereon.

22. Notice of Application for Leave to Appeal.]—Where the Court of Appeal has, on a Notice of Application for leave to appeal duly served, and in the form provided under these Rules, given an Appellant leave to appeal, it shall not be necessary for such Appellant to give any Notice of Appeal, but the Notice of Application for leave to appeal shall in such case be deemed to be a Notice of Appeal.

23. Abandonment of Appeal.]—An Appellant at any time after he has duly served Notice of Appeal or of Application for leave to appeal, or of application for extension of time within which under the Act such notices shall be given, may abandon his appeal by giving notice of abandonment thereof in the form (III.) in the Schedule to these Rules to the Registrar and upon such notice being given the appeal shall be deemed to have been dismissed by the Court of Appeal.

Every person making an application for such extension of time, shall send to the Registrar together with the proper form of such application, a form, duly filled up, of Notice of Appeal, or of Notice of Application for leave to appeal, appropriate to the ground or grounds upon which he desires to question his conviction or sentence, as the case may be.

In the event of such Judge refusing all or any of such applications the Registrar on notifying such refusal to the Appellant shall forward to him form (XIII.) in the Schedule hereto, which form the Appellant is hereby required to fill up and forthwith return to the Registrar. If the appellant does not desire to have his said application or applications determined by the Court of Appeal as duly constituted for the hearing of appeals under the Act, or does not return within five days to the Registrar form (XIV.) duly filled up by him, the refusal of his application or applications by such Judge shall be final. If the Appellant desires that his said application or applications shall be determined by the Court of Appeal as duly constituted for the hearing of appeals under the Act and is not legally represented he may, if the Court of Appeal give him leave, be present at the hearing and determination by the Court of Appeal of his said application: provided that an Appellant who is legally represented shall not be entitled to be present without special leave of the Court of Appeal.

When an Appellant duly fills up and returns within the prescribed time to the Registrar form (XIV.) expressing a desire to be present at the hearing and determination by the Court of Appeal of the applications mentioned in this Rule, such form shall be deemed to be an application by the Appellant for leave to be so present. And the Registrar, on receiving the said form, shall take the necessary steps for placing the said application before the Court of Appeal. If the said application to be present is refused by the Court of Appeal, the Registrar shall notify the Appellant; and if the said application is granted, the Registrar shall notify the Appellant and the Governor of the Prison wherein the Appellant is in custody, and the Prison Commissioners, as provided by these Rules. And the Court of Appeal may upon such application, or upon a report made to them by the Registrar that the procedure under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, as amended by the Act, would, in his opinion, be a more convenient method of dealing with the points of law raised in such appeal, make an order that the same shall be so dealt with.

(b.) When an order has been made under this Rule, the Registrar shall notify the Judge of the Court of Trial thereof, and shall forward to him for the purpose of giving to him facilities in the statement of the case, a copy of the Notice of Appeal and any supplemental or explanatory statement furnished by the Appellant to the Registrar and any other information or material which the Registrar may think necessary or such Judge may require.

(a.) Registrar's Duties as to Ascertaining Respondent.]—When the Registrar has received a Notice of Appeal, or a Notice of Appeal on grounds of law alone, which does not, in his opinion, fall within the provisions of section 15, sub-section 2, of the Act (ante, p. 309), or where leave to appeal is granted to any Appellant, he shall forthwith ascertain from the person specified in form (II.) as the Prosecutor, unless such person shall be the Director of Public Prosecutions, or a Government Department, or from the Solicitor of such person, whether the Prosecutor intends to undertake the defence of the appeal. And in the event of the Prosecutor declining to undertake the defence of the appeal, notice to that effect shall be sent by the Registrar to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

(b.) In the event of the Court of Appeal not making any special order or giving special directions under this Rule, the recognizances of the Appellant may be taken before a Justice of the Peace being a member of the Visiting Committee of and at the Prison in which he shall then be confined or the Governor thereof, and the recognizances of his surety or sureties (if any) may be taken before any Petty Sessional Court.

(c.) The Registrar shall notify the Appellant and the Governor of the Prison within which he is confined, the terms and conditions on which the Court shall admit the Appellant to bail under the Act.

(d.) The said Petty Sessional Court shall be entitled to require the assistance of the Police acting within such Petty Sessional Division for the purpose of making inquiry as to the sufficiency or otherwise of any person offering himself as a surety on behalf of any Appellant who has, under the Act, been granted bail, and it shall be the duty of such Police to give such assistance to and as and when required by a Petty Sessional Court under this Rule.

(e.) After the recognizance of a surety has been duly taken under these Rules by such Petty Sessional Court, the Clerk thereof shall forward such recognizance to the Registrar, and the Governor of the Prison in which the Appellant is then confined shall, after the Appellant's recognizance has been duly taken in pursuance of this Rule, forward the same to the Registrar. The Clerk shall after the recognizances of a surety are taken give to him a certificate in the form (XV.) in the Schedule hereto, which such surety shall sign, and retain.

(f.) The Registrar on being satisfied that the recognizances of the appellant and his surety or sureties (if any) are in due form and in compliance with the order of the Court admitting the Appellant to bail, shall send in the form (XII.) in the Schedule to these Rules a notice to the Governor of the Prison in which the Appellant shall then be confined. This notice, when received by the said Governor, shall be a sufficient authority to him to release the Appellant from custody.

(g.) The recognizances provided for in this Rule shall be in the forms (X.) and (XI.) in the Schedule hereto.

(h.) An Appellant who has been admitted to bail under the Act, shall, by the order of the Court of Appeal or a Judge thereof under which he was so admitted to bail, be ordered to be and shall be personally present at each and every hearing of his appeal, and at the final determination thereof. The Court of Appeal may, in the event of such Appellant not being present at any hearing of his appeal, if they think right so to do, decline to consider the appeal, and may proceed to summarily dismiss the same, and may issue a Warrant for the apprehension of the Appellant in the form (XIX.) in the Schedule hereto. Provided that the Court of Appeal may consider the appeal in his absence, or make such other order as they think fit.

(i.) When an Appellant is present before the Court of Appeal, such Court may on an application made by any person or, if they think right so to do, without any application make any order admitting the Appellant to bail, or revoke or vary any such order previously made, or enlarge from time to time the recognizance of the Appellant or of his sureties or substitute any other surety for a surety previously bound as they think right.

(j.) Where the surety or sureties, for an Appellant under the Act, upon whose recognizances such Appellant has been released on bail by the Court of Criminal Appeal, suspects that the said Appellant is about to depart out of England or Wales, or in any manner to fail to observe the conditions of his recognizances on which he was so released, such surety or sureties may lay an information before one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace acting in and for the Petty Sessional Division in which the said Appellant is, or is by such surety or sureties believed to be, or in which such surety or sureties may then be, in the form (XVI) in the Schedule hereto, and such Justice shall thereupon issue a Warrant in the form (XVII.) in the Schedule hereto, for the apprehension of the said Appellant.

(k.) The said Appellant shall, upon being apprehended under the said Warrant, be brought before the Petty Sessional Court in and for which the said Justice acts before whom the said information was laid, or some other Petty Sessional Court specified in the said Warrant. The said Petty Sessional Court shall on verification of the said information by oath of the informant, by Warrant of Commitment in the form (XVIII.) in the Schedule hereto, commit him to the prison to which persons charged with indictable offences before such Petty Sessional Court are ordinarily committed. The Governor of such prison shall, unless such prison was the prison from which the Appellant was released on bail under these Rules, notify the Prison Commissioners of such commitment, as in this Rule mentioned.

Where the Appellant is by such Petty Sessional Court committed to a prison which was not the prison from which he was released on bail after his conviction, the Prison Commissioners subject to any order of the Court of Appeal may transfer him to the prison from which he was so released.

(l) The Clerk of the said Petty Sessional Court on the commitment of any such Appellant, shall forthwith notify the Registrar to that effect, and forward to him the said information and the deposition in verification thereof taken before such Petty Sessional Court together with a copy of the said Warrant of Commitment.

(m.) At any time after an Appellant has been released on bail under the Act, the Court of Appeal may, if satisfied that it is in the interest of justice so to do, revoke the order admitting him to bail, and issue a Warrant in the form (XIX.) in the Schedule hereto for his apprehension, and order him to be committed to prison.

(n.) When an Appellant has been released on bail and has, under a Warrant under these Rules or by his surety or sureties, been apprehended and is in prison, the Governor thereof shall forthwith notify the Registrar, who shall take steps to inform the Court thereof, and the Court of Appeal may give to the Registrar such directions as to the appeal or otherwise as they shall think right.

(o.) Nothing in these Rules shall affect the lawful right of a surety to apprehend and surrender into custody the person for whose appearance he has become bound, and thereby to discharge himself of his suretyship.

(p.) The Court of Appeal may on any breach of the recognizances of the Appellant, if it thinks right so to do, order such recognizances and those of his surety or sureties to be estreated, and the manner of such estreat shall be that provided for estreating recognizances under the Crown Office Rules, 1906 (Rule 115, ante, p. 96).

30. Enquiry and Report by Police as to Appellant's Means.]—It shall be the duty of the Chief Officer of Police of the district in which the Appellant shall have resided before his conviction, or of the district from which he was committed, to enquire as to and to report to the Registrar when applied to by him, upon the means and circumstances of any Appellant where a question as to his means and circumstances arises under the Act or these Rules.

31. (a.) Attendance of Warders at Sittings of Court of Appeal.]—The Prison Commissioners shall on notice from the Registrar cause from time to time such sufficient number of male and female warders to attend the sittings of the Court of Appeal, as having regard to the list of appeals thereat they shall consider necessary.

(b.) An Appellant who is not in custody, shall, whenever his case is called on before the Court of Appeal, surrender himself to such persons as the Court shall from time to time direct, and thereupon shall be searched by them, and shall be deemed to be in their lawful custody until further released on bail or otherwise dealt with as the Court shall direct.

32. (a.) Obtaining Documents, Exhibits, etc., for Purposes of Appeal, and same to be Open for Inspection.]—The Registrar may, on an application made to him by the Appellant or Respondent in any appeal, or where he considers the same to be necessary for the proper determination of any appeal or application, or shall where directed by the Court of Appeal so to do, obtain and keep available for use by the Court of Appeal any documents, exhibits, or other things relating to the proceedings before the Court, and pending the determination of the appeal, such documents, exhibits, or other things shall be open as and when the Registrar may arrange, for the inspection of any party interested.

(b.) Ordering Production of any Document or Exhibits, etc.]—The Court of Criminal Appeal may, at any stage of an appeal, whenever they think it necessary or expedient in the interest of justice so to do, on the application of an Appellant or Respondent, order any document, exhibit, or other thing connected with the proceedings, to be produced to the Registrar or before them, by any person having the custody or control thereof. Any order of the Court of Appeal under this Rule may be served as in this Rule provided.

(c.) Service of Orders.]—Service of any order made under this Rule shall be personal service, unless the Court otherwise order, and for the purpose of effecting due service thereof the Registrar may require the assistance of the Metropolitan Police, or may forward the order together with instructions to the Chief Officer of Police of the County or Borough in which the person is, or is believed to be, in whose custody or under whose control such document, exhibit, or other thing is; and it shall be the duty of the Metropolitan Police or of such Chief Officer of Police to carry out any directions of the Registrar under this Rule.

(b.) In any case of an appeal in relation to a conviction involving sentence of death, the Registrar shall on receiving the Notice of Appeal or of Application for leave to appeal, send a copy thereof to the Secretary of State, and on the final determination of any such appeal by the Court of Appeal shall forthwith notify the Appellant, the Secretary of State, the Governor of the prison in which the Appellant then is or to which he is committed under such determination, and the Prison Commissioners thereof.

The Registrar shall cause to be served on every witness to be so examined a notice in the form (XXVII.) in the schedule hereto.

(f.) Every witness examined before an Examiner under this Rule shall give his evidence upon oath, to be administered by such Examiner, except where any such witness if giving evidence as a witness on a trial on indictment need not be sworn.

(c.) The Registrar shall also prepare from such general list a list of appeals and applications which have been refused by a Judge of the Court of Appeal when sitting under section 17 of the Act, which the Court of Appeal may consider on the days on which the Court of Appeal as fully constituted shall sit, and shall cause such list to be published at such times, in such places, and in such a manner as he, subject to the approval of the Court of Appeal, shall think convenient for giving due notice to any parties interested therein of the hearing of the cases in such list by the Court of Appeal. 43. (a.) Application not specially provided for, how made.]—Except where otherwise provided in these Rules, any application to the Court of Appeal may be made by the Appellant or Respondent, or by Counsel on their behalf, orally or in writing, but in regard to such applications if the Appellant is unrepresented and in custody and is not entitled or has not obtained leave to be present before the Court, he shall make any such application by forwarding the same in writing to the Registrar, who shall take the proper steps to obtain the decision of the Court thereon.

45. Waiver of Non-compliance with Rules not wilful.]—Non-compliance on the part of an Appellant with these Rules or with any rule of practice for the time being in force under the Act, shall not prevent the further prosecution of his appeal if the Court of Appeal or a Judge thereof consider that such non-compliance was not wilful and that the same may be waived or remedied by amendment or otherwise. The Court of Appeal or a Judge thereof may in such manner as he or they think right, direct the Appellant to remedy such non-compliance, and thereupon the appeal shall proceed. The Registrar shall forthwith notify to the Appellant any directions given by the Court or the Judge thereof under this Rule, where the Appellant was not present at the time when such directions were given.

APPEALS AGAINST CONVICTION.

Meaning of conviction.]—The word "conviction" includes a conviction upon the defendant's plea of guilty, as well as upon the verdict of guilty found by the jury. R. v. Verney, 73 J. P. 288; 2 Cr. App. R. 107 : R. v. Alexander, 76 J. P. 215; 28 T. L. R. 200; 7 Cr. App. R. 110 : R. v. Ingleson [1915] 1 K. B. 512; 11 Cr. App. R. 21. It does not include the finding of a jury that a person arraigned was or was not fit to plead. R. v. Jefferson, 72 J. P. 467; 1 Cr. App. R. 95 : R. v. Larkins, 75 J. P. 320; 22 Cox, 598; 6 Cr. App. R. 194; nor the finding of a jury that the accused was insane at the time he committed the act or made the omission charged in the indictment. Felstead v. R. [1914] A. C. 534; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 1132; 24 Cox, 243; 30 T. L. R. 422; 10 Cr. App. R. 129 : R. v. Taylor, 11 Cr. App. R. 198; 31 T. L. R. 449. A conviction includes a verdict which is held to warrant a judgment against the accused, as well as a verdict actually followed by judgment, as the judge at the trial might postpone sentence. In Rule 18 (ante, p. 319) conviction is used in the latter sense; in Rules 13-19, in the former.

No appeal lies under s. 20 (2) against the conviction of an incorrigible rogue, but only against the sentence, as the conviction is not by the court of quarter sessions, which merely imposes a sentence on the conviction at petty sessions. R. v. Johnson [1909] 1 K. B. 439; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 290; 73 J. P. 135; 25 T. L. R. 229.

Grounds of Appeal.

1. Questions of law.]—An appeal by a person convicted lies as of right on grounds involving a question of law alone, not only in cases which under the former practice might have been dealt with by case reserved (post, p. 340), or writ of error, or motion for a new trial on conviction of misdemeanor, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, or on a special verdict (ante, pp. 216, 305) (a) but also in the cases, if any, not within the statutes and decisions regulating the former practice. The following are the grounds most commonly met with in practice—

Defects in the indictment.—Where it is alleged that the indictment was bad in law an appeal lies as of right, but the court does not encourage appeals on this ground unless the defect is one of substance. See R. v. Elliott [1908] 2 K. B. 452; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 812; 72 J. P. 285; 1 Cr. App. R. 15 : R. v. Stoddart, 73 J. P. 348; 25 T. L. R. 612. Where possible the court will apply its powers to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred : R. v. Harris, 5 Cr. App. R. 285 : or may resort to its power to substitute a verdict of guilty of some other offence. R. v.

(a) As to motion to enter judgment non obstante veredicto, see R. v. Platts, 48 L. J. (Q. B.) 848; 24 W. R. 915; Cr. Off. Rules 1906, r. 156. Error might be assigned on a special verdict whereon judgment was passed on the defendant. R. v. Chadwick, 11 Q. B. 205; 17 L. J. (M. C.) 33.

Garland, [1910] 1 K. B. 154; 74 J. P. 135; 102 L. T. 254; 26 T. L. R. 130; 3 Cr. App. R. 199; and see ante, p. 211. But where the defect in the indictment may have caused real embarrassment to the accused the court will quash the conviction. R. v. Edwards and Gilbert [1913] 1 K. B. 187; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 347; 23 Cox, 380; 8 Cr. App. R. 128: R. v. Thompson [1914] 2 K. B. 99; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 643; 78 J. P. 212; 9 Cr. App. R. 252; 30 T. L. R. 223.

Wrongful admission of evidence.—Where it is established that evidence has been wrongfully admitted the court will quash the conviction unless it holds that the evidence so admitted cannot reasonably be said to have affected the minds of the jury in arriving at their verdict, and that they would have arrived at the same verdict if the evidence had not been admitted. In considering this question the nature of the evidence so admitted and the direction with regard to it in the summing-up are the most material matters. See on the one hand R. v. Beecham, [1921] 3 K. B. 464; 37 T. L. R. 932; 85 J. P. 276; 16 Cr. App. R. 26; and on the other R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K. B. 149; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 187; 102 L. T. 111; 74 J. P. 104; 3 Cr. App. R. 176; 26 T. L. R. 122: R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K. B. 746; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 841; 102 L. T. 922; 26 T. L. R. 535; 74 J. P. 388; 5 Cr. App. R. 41: R. v. Norton [1910] 2 K. B. 496; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 756; 74 J. P. 375; 5 Cr. App. R. 65: R. v. Westfall, 76 J. P. 336; 107 L. T. 463; 7 Cr. App. R. 176; 28 T. L. R. 297: R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K. B. 468; 23 Cox, 574; 29 T. L. R. 700; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 1070; 9 Cr. App. R. 69.

Wrongful exclusion of evidence.—Where evidence has been wrongly excluded the court have to consider what would have been its effect upon the minds of the jury had it been allowed to be given, and unless the verdict would in all probability have been the same the conviction will be quashed. Cf. R. v. Sagar, [1914] 3 K. B. 1112; 10 Cr. App. R. 279; and R. v. Smallman, 10 Cr. App. R. 1.

No case to go to the jury.—That the judge of the court of trial wrongfully refused to withdraw the case from the jury, at the close of the case for the prosecution, on a submission being made to him that there was no evidence to be left to them, involves either a question of law alone, or, more correctly, perhaps two questions—one of fact and one of law. Whether or not a submission is made at the close of the case for the prosecution that there is no evidence to be left to the jury, which the judge wrongly overrules, the Court of Criminal Appeal will not quash the conviction if the evidence given for the defence supplies that which was lacking on the part of the prosecution. R. v. Power [1919] 1 K. B. 572: R. v. Jackson, 74 J. P. 352; 5 Cr. App. R. 22. Where the evidence given in the case does not prove the offence charged the conviction will be quashed. For instances, see R. v. Clay, 74 J. P. 55; 3 Cr. App. R. 92: R. v. Pearson, 74 J. P. 175; 4 Cr. App. R. 40: R. v. Johnson, 6 Cr. App. R. 82: R. v. Davis, 9 Cr. App. R. 66.

Absence of corroboration.—Where evidence is given by an accomplice, if the judge has failed to give the proper warning to the jury as to the danger of convicting on his evidence without corroboration in material particulars implicating the accused, the Court of Criminal Appeal will quash the conviction. R. v. Tate [1908] 2 K. B. 680; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 1043; 99 L. T. 620; 1 Cr. App. R. 39: R. v. Baskerville [1916] 2 K. B. 658; 12 Cr. App. R. 81. If after the proper caution by the judge the jury convict the prisoner the court will not quash the conviction merely upon the ground that the accomplice's evidence was uncorroborated, but will review all the facts of the case, and if it thinks the verdict unreasonable or that it cannot be supported having regard to the evidence the court will quash the conviction. R. v. Baskerville, supra. See also R. v. Norris, 12 Cr. App. R. 156. Where corroboration is required by statute similar rules obtain. R. v. Baskerville, supra. See also R. v. Goldstein, 11 Cr. App. R. 27: R. v. Davies, 85 L. J. (K. B.) 208; 114 L. T. 80; 11 Cr. App. R. 272.

Matters within the discretion of the judge of the court of trial.—Discharge of the jury by the judge before verdict is a matter within the discretion of the judge, and does not afford a ground of appeal. R. v. Lewis, 73 J. P. 446; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 722; 2 Cr. App. R. 180, following Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 390; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 121, 161; and see ante, p. 221. So also allowing evidence to be given by the crown in rebuttal of evidence called for the defence. R. v. Crippen [1911] 1 K. B. 149; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 290; 75 J. P. 141; 27 T. L. R. 269; 5 Cr. App. R. 255 (ante, p. 206), and allowing a witness to be treated as hostile. R. v. Williams, 77 J. P. 240; 29 T. L. R. 188; 8 Cr. App. R. 132; refusing to order separate trials of two or more defendants. R. v. Gibbons & Proctor, 13 Cr. App. R. 134; 82 J. P. 287; commenting on the accused not going into the witness box. R. v. Voisin, 13 Cr. App. R. 89, are not grounds of appeal under ordinary circumstances.

Construction of the verdict.—Where the finding of the jury is ambiguous there may arise a ground of appeal involving a question of law, e.g., where it is contended that the jury have negatived by their finding the existence of some essential element of the offence charged. R. v. Muirhead, 73 J. P. 31; 25 T. L. R. 88; 1 Cr. App. R. 189: R. v. Knight, 73 J. P. 14; 25 T. L. R. 87; 1 Cr. App. R. 186: R. v. Lomas, 30 T. L. R. 125: R. v. Johnson, 9 Cr. App. R. 57: R. v. Chainey, 9 Cr. App. R. 175; though it may only afford a ground involving a question of fact, i.e., as to what in fact the jury has actually found. See R. v. Petch, 25 T. L. R. 401; 2 Cr. App. R. 71: R. v. Charlton, 6 Cr. App. R. 119: R. v. Rawlings, 3 Cr. App. R. 5: R. v. Rutter, 25 T. L. R. 73: R. v. Syme, 27 T. L. R. 562; 6 Cr. App. R. 257.

Misdirection.—Misdirection as to the law applicable to the case being tried gives a right of appeal without leave, but misdirection as to the evidence is not a ground involving a question of law, and leave to appeal is necessary. Where misdirection as to the law is established by the appellant the conviction will be quashed unless the prosecution can show that on a right direction the jury would have come to the same conclusion. R. v. Cohen and Bateman, 73 J. P. 352; 2 Cr. App. R. 197, at p. 207: R. v. Stoddart, 73 J. P. 384; 25 T. L. R.

Misdirection as to the evidence to be of any avail to an appellant must be of such a nature and the circumstances of the case must be such that it is reasonably probable that the jury would not have returned their verdict had there been no misdirection. The burden of establishing this lies upon the appellant, not upon the prosecution. R. v. Cohen and Bateman, 73 J. P. 352; 2 Cr. App. R. 197, 207 : R. v. Rodda, 74 J. P. 412; 5 Cr. App. R. 85 : R. v. Ellsom, 76 J. P. 38; 28 T. L. R. 1; 7 Cr. App. R. 4 : R. v. Wann, 76 J. P. 269; 107 L. T. 462; 23 Cox, 153; 7 Cr. App. R. 135 : R. v. Corrigan, 8 Cr. App. R. 4 : R. v. Hagan, 9 Cr. App. R. 25. As to omission to put the defence to the jury, see R. v. Richards, 4 Cr. App. R. 161 : R. v. Dinnick, 74 J. P. 18; 26 T. L. R. 74; 3 Cr. App. R. 77 : R. v. Rowan, 5 Cr. App. R. 279 : R. v. Hill, 7 Cr. App. R. 26 : R. v. Immer & Davis, 13 Cr. App. R. 22; and as to omission to direct the jury sufficiently, see R. v. Wolff, 10 Cr. App. R. 107 : R. v. Finch, 85 L. J. (K. B.) 1575; 12 Cr. App. R. 77 : R. v. Hamilton, 13 Cr. App. R. 32 : R. v. Twigg, 14 Cr. App. R. 71 : R. v. Smith, 84 J. P. 67 : R. v. Bartlett, 14 Cr. App. R. 157. Where misdirection is alleged substantial particulars must be given in the notice of appeal. R. v. Wyman, 13 Cr. App. R. 163.

Verdict against the weight of evidence.—In order to succeed on this ground it is necessary to show that the verdict is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence. It is not sufficient to show merely that the case against the appellant was a very weak one : R. v. McNair, 25 T. L. R. 228; 2 Cr. App. R. 2; nor is it enough that the members of the Court of Criminal Appeal feel some doubt as to the correctness of the verdict : R. v. Simpson, 2 Cr. App. R. 128 : R. v. Crook, 4 Cr. App. R. 60 : R. v. Graham, 74 J. P. 246; 4 Cr. App. R. 218; nor that the judge of the court of trial has given a certificate on that ground. R. v. Perfect, 12 Cr. App. R. 273. If there was evidence to support the conviction the appeal will be dismissed. R. v. Hancox, 29 T. L. R. 331; 8 Cr. App. R. 193. For recent instances where the appeal has been allowed on the ground that the verdict was unreasonable, see R. v. Chadwick, 12 Cr. App. R. 247 : R. v. Hall, 14 Cr. App. R. 58; 84 J. P. 56 : R. v. Smith, 14 Cr. App. R. 81 : R. v. Scranton, 15 Cr. App. R. 104 : and cf. R. v. Weisz, 15 Cr. App. R. 85.

Question of mixed law and fact.—Under section 3 (b) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, leave to appeal is necessary where the ground involves a question of mixed law and fact. It is not quite clear what this means, but it enables the court to act if there is doubt or confusion as to whether in the points raised questions of law and fact can be separated.

"Any other ground which appears to the court to be a sufficient ground of appeal."—These are general words inserted in section 3 (b) of the Criminal Appeal Act to cover any ground which cannot be said to involve a question of law alone or of fact alone or of mixed fact and law. They may be compared with the general words in section 4 (which defines the grounds on which appeals may be allowed) "or that on any ground there was a miscarriage of justice." They include questions as to the constitution of the jury or misconduct on the part of one or more jurymen. See R. v. Syme, 10 Cr. App. R. 284; 24 Cox, 502; 79 J. P. 40; and cases of mis-trial, surprise, or the like. It is doubtful whether the Court of Criminal Appeal can alone give leave to appeal on this ground, or whether the judge of the court of trial can also give a certificate. Cf. section 3 (b) of the Criminal Appeal Act, with rule 7 (c) of the Criminal Appeal Rules. It is submitted that an appeal might lie under these words in the case of evidence being irregularly given to the jury at a view, as to which doubts existed under former practice. R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 113.

"On any ground there was a miscarriage of justice."—These general words in section 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act cover cases where there has been misdirection as to the evidence (see ante, p. 337), or where the court allows further evidence owing to insufficient time to call it at the trial or other sufficient reason (see ante, p. 307), or where the trial was conducted unfairly: R. v. Hill, 7 Cr. App. R. 1; 28 T. L. R. 15: R. v. Crippen [1911] 1 K. B. 149, at p. 158; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 290: R. v. Howarth, 82 J. P. 152; 13 Cr. App. R. 99: R. v. Ratcliffe, 84 J. P. 15; 14 Cr. App. 95; or where it has accidentally become known to the jury that the defendant has been previously convicted. Cf. R. v. Hemingway, 8 Cr. App. R. 47: and R. v. Williams & Woodley, 14 Cr. App. R. 135; or where the identification of the accused has not been conducted properly in a case where it is important: R. v. Dickman, 26 T. L. R. 640; 74 J. P. 449; 5 Cr. App. R. 135; or there has been any tampering with a juror: R. v. Crippen, supra: R. v. Morrison, 6 Cr. App. R. 159, at p. 171; or the jury have taken into consideration matters which they ought not to have done. R. v. Newton, 7 Cr. App. R. 214; 28 T. L. R. 362.

Substantial miscarriage of justice.—By the proviso to section 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act (ante, p. 304), notwithstanding that the court are of opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, they may dismiss the appeal if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred. The chief application of this proviso occurs where the ground alleged is misdirection as to the law or wrongful admission or rejection of evidence, as to which see ante, pp. 335 et seq.

APPEALS AGAINST SENTENCE.

Where appeal lies.—Where the sentence is one which could not lawfully be given for the offence, no appeal lies as of right without leave as being on a ground of law alone, though in such a case leave is given almost as a matter of course. See R. v. Briggs [1909] 1 K. B. 381; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 116. An appeal lies as of right against a sentence of preventive detention as a habitual criminal (ante, p. 303), and, in practice, against the sentence of penal servitude, which must precede such sentence of detention : R. v. Smith and R. v. Weston [1910] 1 K. B. 17, 21; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 1. No appeal lies against the commutation of a sentence by the crown : R. v. Lord, 1 Cr. App. R. 110 : R. v. Keating, 74 J. P. 452; 22 Cox, 343; 5 Cr. App. R. 181; nor against the remanet of a sentence of a penal servitude. R. v. Williams, 3 Cr. App. R. 2.

Where the sentence imposed is not one fixed by law, but is one which could lawfully be imposed, appeal lies only by leave of the court (s. 3) or a judge (s. 17). On such appeal the appellate court may dismiss the appeal, or may quash the sentence, if illegal, or excessive, or inadequate, and substitute such other sentence, whether more or less severe, warranted in law by the verdict, as they think ought to have been passed. But the court are not obliged to pass any other sentence, and may, in a proper case, merely quash the sentence passed at the trial. R. v. Johnson [1909] 1 K. B. 439; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 290 : R. v. Bradford, 76 J. P. 46; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 475.

Where the appellate court substitutes for the verdict of the jury a verdict of guilty of another offence involved in the original finding, they may substitute for the original sentence such other, but not severer sentence, as may be warranted by law for the offence found by the substituted verdict; s. 5 (2) (ante, p. 304). A like power exists where the Court of Criminal Appeal differs from the court of trial as to the legal effect of a special verdict; s. 5 (3) (ante, p 305).

In passing sentence the judge may take into account other charges pending against the accused which he admits to be well founded, but is not bound to do so. R. v. Syres, 73 J. P. 13; 25 T. L. R. 71 : R. v. M'Lean [1911] 1 K. B. 332; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 309; 75 J. P. 127; 27 T. L. R. 138; 6 Cr. App. R. 26 : R. v. Davies, 7 Cr. App. R. 254 : R. v. Smith, 85 J. P. 224; 15 Cr. App. R. 172. The Court of Criminal Appeal may order that the sentence shall include other similar offences admitted by the appellant. R. v. Aleron, 2 Cr. App. R. 152 : R. v. Wells, 3 Cr. App. R. 197 : R. v. Smith, 6 Cr. App. R. 207.

In exercising its jurisdiction to review sentences the Court of Criminal Appeal has sought so far as possible to standardise sentences : R. v. Nuttall, 73 J. P. 30; 1 Cr. App. R. 180 : R. v. Woodman, 73 J. P. 286; 2 Cr. App. R. 67. For a statement of the principles on which the Court acts, see R. v. Sherskewsky, 28 T. L. R. 364. The power to increase the sentence has rarely been exercised : R. v. Mortimer, 72 J. P. 349; 99 L. T. 204; 24 T. L. R. 745; R. v. Simpson, 5 Cr. App. R. 217. The court has discouraged the passing of sentences of penal servitude to follow on a term of imprisonment. R. v. Islip, 3 Cr. App. R. 209 : R. v. Jones, 1 Cr. App. R. 196 : R. v. Hemming, 28 T. L. R. 402; 7 Cr. App. R. 402 : R. v. Johnston, 12 Cr. App. R. 137; and a sentence of imprisonment to follow upon a term of penal servitude : R. v. Johnson, 7 Cr. App. R. 97 : R. v. Veale, 11 Cr. App. R. 114.

In reviewing the sentence the court will take into account errors made by the judge at the trial in appreciating the matters laid before him with respect to the history of the accused : R. v. Whiteman, 73 J. P. 102 : R. v. Raybould, 73 J. P. 334. It has strongly discouraged delaying bringing a prisoner for trial till after he has served the term of imprisonment imposed for some other offence : R. v. Higson, 5 Cr. App. R. 167 : R. v. Sullivan, 6 Cr. App. R. 4 : R. v. Ward, 7 Cr. App. R. 180 : R. v. Davies, 7 Cr. App. R. 254. It will take into account the circumstances of the offence to see if there are grounds for mitigating the punishment : R. v. O'Connell, 73 J. P. 118; and it may take into consideration also the powers of the Prison Commissioners with regard to the alteration of sentences. R. v. Thompson, 2 Cr. App. R. 112 : R. v. Morton, 2 Cr. App. R. 145. It has been held that it is not proper for the judge of the court of trial to impose a longer term than is appropriate in the particular case in order that the prisoner may get the benefit of the modified Borstal system as it is administered in prison. R. v. Oxlade [1919] 2 K. B. 628; 83 J. P. 218; 14 Cr. App. R. 65. But this does not apply to a sentence of detention in a Borstal Institution. R. v. Kirkpatrick, 73 J. P. 29; 1 Cr. App. R. 170 : R. v. Webb, 5 Cr. App. R. 112. The court will very rarely interfere with such a sentence. See Note, 14., Cr. App. R. 84.

APPEALS BY CROWN CASES RESERVED.

STATUTES.

11 & 12 Vict. c. 78 (Crown Cases Act, 1848), s. 1.]—" When any person shall have been convicted of any treason, felony, or misdemeanor, before any court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or court of quarter sessions, the judge or commissioner or justice of the peace before whom the case shall have been tried, may, in his or their discretion, reserve any question of law which shall have arisen on the trial for the consideration of the justices of either bench and barons of the exchequer [now of the Court of Criminal Appeal, ante, p. 290] ; and thereupon shall have authority to respite execution of the judgment on such conviction, or postpone the judgment, until such question shall have been considered and decided, as he or they may think fit; and in either case the court in its discretion shall commit the person convicted to prison, or shall take a recognizance of bail, with one or two sufficient sureties, and in such sum as the court shall think fit, conditioned to appear at such time or times as the court shall direct, and receive judgment, or to render himself in execution, as the case may be."

Sect. 2.—Statement and hearing of the case.]—"The judge or commissioner or court of quarter sessions shall thereupon state, in a case signed in the manner now usual (a), the question or questions of law which shall have been so reserved, with the special circumstances upon which the same shall have arisen (see ante, p. 290, now to the Court of Criminal Appeal in England); and such case shall be transmitted to the said justices and barons; and the said justices and barons shall thereupon have full power and authority to hear and finally determine the said question or questions, and thereupon to reverse, affirm, or amend any judgment which shall have been given on the indictment or inquisition on the trial whereof such question or questions have arisen, or to avoid such judgment, and to order an entry to be made on the record, that in the judgment of the said justices and barons, the party convicted ought not to have been convicted, or to arrest the judgment, or order judgment to be given thereon at some other session of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or other sessions of the peace, if no judgment shall have been before that time given, as they shall be advised, or to make such other order as justice may require; and such judgment and order, if any, of the said justices and barons shall be certified, under the hand of the presiding chief justice or chief baron, to the clerk of assize, or his deputy, or the clerk of the peace, or his deputy, as the case may be, who shall enter the same on the original record in proper form; and a certificate of such entry, under the hand of the clerk of assize, or his deputy, or the clerk of the peace, or his deputy, as the case may be, in the form as near as may be or to the effect mentioned in the schedule annexed to this Act, with the necessary alterations to adapt it to the circumstances of the case, shall be delivered or transmitted by him to the sheriff or gaoler in whose custody the person convicted shall be; and the said certificate shall be a sufficient warrant to such sheriff or gaoler, and all other persons, for the execution of the judgment, as the same shall be so certified to have been affirmed or amended, and execution shall be thereupon executed on such judgment, and for the discharge of the person convicted from further imprisonment, if the judgment shall be reversed, avoided, or arrested, and, in that case, such sheriff or gaoler shall forthwith discharge him, and, also, the next court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, or sessions of the peace, shall vacate the recognizance of the bail, if any; and, if the court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, or court of quarter sessions, shall be directed to give judgment, the said court shall proceed to give judgment at the next session." The determination of any such question by the judges of the high court in manner aforesaid shall be final and without appeal; and no appeal shall lie from any judgment of the said high court in any criminal cause or matter, save for some error of law apparent upon the record, as to which no question shall have been reserved for the consideration of the said judges under the Crown Cases Act, 1848." 8 Edw. 7, c. 15 (Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, s. 9 (6).—Costs of an appeal by case stated.]—See ante, p. 271.

Effect of Criminal Appeal Act, 1907.]—The Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, does not take away from any court having power to reserve a question of law under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, the power to reserve such question for the Court of Criminal Appeal, and the provisions of the Act of 1907 as to appeals from convictions on indictment in relation to highways, bridges or rivers, 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 20 (3), ante, p. 303, do not specifically exclude the right to reserve a case under the Act of 1848. Where the judge at the trial reserves a case it is for the purposes of the Criminal Appeal Rules treated as an appeal under s 3 (a) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, but cannot be summarily dealt with under s. 15 (2), as showing no substantial ground of appeal. Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, r. 26 (d), ante, p. 321.

The power to reserve a case is rarely exercised since the judge can certify for an appeal on a point of law under s. 3 (b) of the Act of 1907. The power was exercised in R. v. Garland [1910] 1 K. B. 154; 74 J. P. 135 : R. v. Turner [1910] 1 K. B. 346; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 176; 74 J. P. 81; 3 Cr. App. R. 103 : R. v. Spratling [1911] 1 K. B. 77; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 176; 22 Cox, 348 : R. v. Levy [1912] 1 K. B. 158; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 264; 22 Cox, 702 : R. v. Jones, 6 Cr. App. R. 290 : R. v. Castiglioni, 76 J. P. 351; 23 Cox, 46 : R. v. Cade [1914] 2 K. B. 209; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 796; 10 Cr. App. R. 23.

But the Act of 1907 gives power to the Court of Criminal Appeal (but not to a single judge under s. 17) to require the court of trial to state in the form of a case reserved questions of law alone raised by an appeal; 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 20 (4). This power applies to matters not within the Crown Cases Act, 1848, e.g., conviction on trials on the civil side at assizes or in the King's Bench Division. The procedure for this purpose is contained in Criminal Appeal Rules, 1908, r. 26 (a), (c), ante, p. 320.

This power seems not to have been exercised, as it is found simpler to deal with such matters by the ordinary process of appeal.

Questions of law which shall have arisen "at the trial."]—The words of s. 1 of the Act of 1848, "any question of law which shall have arisen at the trial," include not only questions of law raised by the evidence, but also questions of law arising on a motion in arrest of judgment : R. v. Martin, 1 Den. 398; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 137; or as to the sufficiency of the indictment : R. v. Webb, 1 Den. 338; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 39 : R. v. Craddock, 2 Den. 31; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 31 : R. v. Garland, 11 Cox, 224 (Ir.); 39 L. J. (Q. B.) 86; Ir. Rep. 3 C. L. 383; or as to the legality of the sentence. R. v. Summers, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 182; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 62 : R. v. Garland (supra) : R. v. Horn, 15 Cox, 205. A case cannot be reserved by the court of trial on questions which arise on demurrer : R. v. Fadermann, 1 Den. 565; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 147. But under s. 20 (4) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (ante, p. 303), the Court of Criminal Appeal could apparently have a point raised on demurrer reviewed by case stated. Where a prisoner pleaded guilty to an indictment and after the judge left the assize town his attention was called to an unreported case (R. v. Dodd, 1877), which, if law, showed that the indictment was bad on the face of it, and he thereupon stated a case, requesting the opinion of the court whether the conviction was good, it was held that the objection to the indictment was a question which had arisen at the trial so as to give the court jurisdiction (a). R. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. D. 357; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 16 Cox, 715. In this case the court distinguished a prior case to the contrary effect. R. v. Clark, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 54; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 16; 10 Cox, 338, but were prepared to overrule it had it been directly in point, and it was disapproved in R. v. Plummer [1902]

(a) See R. v. Martin [1904] 4 N. S. W. State Rep. 720, where a magistrate pleaded guilty to administering an unlawful oath: Held, that a case could not be reserved as to whether he had mens rea.

2 K. B. 339; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 805. Where it was discovered, on the day after the conviction of a prisoner for felony, that one of the jurors who tried the case had by mistake answered to the name of another juror on the panel when called, and so had served on the jury without objection, whereby it was suggested that there had been a mis-trial, this was held not to be "a question of law which arose on the trial," and therefore that the court had not jurisdiction to set aside the verdict and judgment, or to award a venire de novo. R. v. Mellor, Dears. & B. 468; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 121; 7 Cox, 454. It seems to have been thought that the court had no authority to award a venire de novo, or to order a new trial. Id. See also R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 113; 12 Cox, 204. The court did, however, award a venire de novo in R. v. Yeadon, L. & C. 81; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 70; 9 Cox, 91, where a court of quarter sessions had declined to receive a verdict of common assault on an indictment under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29, and the jury had therefore returned a general verdict of guilty. In R. v. Saunders [1899] 1 Q. B. 490; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 296, the court directed the reversal of judgment against one of three prisoners who had not joined in an objection to the admissibility of evidence which had been taken on behalf of another prisoner, and had been held to be a valid objection on a case reserved on the latter's behalf. They purported to act on the words "make such other order as justice may require," in s. 2 (ante, p. 341). (a). R. v. Gibson, 18 Q. B. D. 537; 56 L. J. (M. C.) 49; 16 Cox, 181: R. v. Saunders, supra, and the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, appear to exclude all jurisdiction to grant a new trial: but see R. v. Crane [1921] 2 A. C. 399, post, p. 348. It is uncertain whether, if a view is allowed during the trial, and if any evidence is given irregularly to the jury at such view, that fact is ground for reserving a case, or for appeal, or whether it merely furnishes ground for an application to the home secretary for remission of the sentence. R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 113. The appellate court cannot amend the indictment: R. v. Garland, 11 Cox, 224 (Ir.); 39 L. J. (Q. B.) 86; Ir. Rep. 3 C. L. 383, but can consider its sufficiency, even if no question is reserved upon it: R. v. Webb, 1 Den. 338; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 39; and may look at it even if it is not set out in the case. R. v. Williams, 2 Den. 61; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 106; 4 Cox, 356. The court did not entertain questions of mere practice, such as whether a case was properly left to the jury on the unconfirmed testimony of an accomplice: R. v. Stubbs, Dears. 555; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 16; 7 Cox, 48; and decided only the points reserved for its opinion, although other points in the prisoner's favour might appear on the face of the case, but were not reserved for the opinion of the court. R. v. Tyree, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 177; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 6 Cox, 377.

Where an amendment, without which the indictment was bad, had been improperly made after verdict, the appellate court ordered the record to be restored to its original state, and a verdict of not guilty to be entered. R. v. Larkin, Dears. 365; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 125.

Preparation and argument of case.]—By rules of court made 1st June, 1850, signed by all the judges, it was ordered . . .

(2) "That every case transmitted for the consideration of this court shall briefly state the question or questions of law reserved (R. v. Gray, 68 J. P. 40), and such facts only as raise the question or questions submitted; if the question turn upon the indictment, or upon any count thereof, then the case must set forth the indictment, or the particular count."

(3) "That no case be heard upon any demurrer to the pleadings" (vide ante, p. 151).

(4) "That every case state whether judgment on the conviction was passed or postponed, or the execution of the judgment respited, and whether the person convicted be in prison, or has been discharged on recognizance of bail to appear and receive judgment, or to render himself in execution." (a)

The case should not contain hypothetical questions for the guidance of the court below on future occasions. R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 33; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 186; 10 Cox. 234; nor statements of a jury which are not part of the verdict. R. v. Trebilcock, Dears. & B. 453, 457; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 103: 7 Cox, 408. It should state the facts briefly: R. v. Steer, 18 L. J. (M. C.) 30; 1 Den. 349; and be submitted in a complete form. R. v. Holloway, 1 Den. 370; 2 C. & K. 942; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 60; 3 Cox, 241; and should not adopt or annex shorthand notes: R. v. Gray, supra. If the case appears to omit a material point, counsel may properly communicate with the judge and ask for any amendment which appears necessary. R. v. Smith, 1 Den. 510, 512: 2 C. & K. 882; 4 Cox, 42. As to signing a case where the judge who tried the indictment dies, see R. v. Featherstone, Dears. 369; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 127. (b) The case may be returned for amendment; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, s. 4 (ante, p. 341); but if, after being so sent back, it is returned substantially unaltered, the court will not interfere, nor receive affidavits to supplement its defects. R. v. Studd, 10 Cox, 258.

The cases are now lodged with the registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

By regulations made on Jan. 25, 1886, under the Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879 (Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 4, tit. Criminal Procedure, E.)—

"(4) Where it is brought to the notice of the director of public prosecutions that a case has been reserved for the opinion of the High Court of Justice under the Crown Cases Act, 1848 (ante, p. 340), and that counsel has not been instructed for the prosecution, he shall, if he thinks the case of sufficient importance or is so directed by the attorney-general, instruct counsel to appear for the prosecution." This provision is extended by 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 12, ante, p. 308, and the rules set out on p. 321.

Before 1908, counsel who appeared on the trial of the prisoner, but was not instructed to argue the case reserved, was allowed to cite authorities as amicus curiæ. R. v. Thomas, L. & C. 313; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 22; 9 Cox, 376, 382; and even allowed to argue the case. R. v. Moore, 61 L. J. (M. C.) 80; 17 Cox, 458. Prisoners jointly defended below were held not to be entitled to appear separately on the argument of a case reserved. R. v. Bird, 5 Cox, 11 (C. C. R.).

Under the Criminal Appeal Act and Rules the Court of Criminal Appeal can assign to the prisoner (who is an appellant) counsel and solicitor in a case in which it appears desirable, if he has not sufficient means to obtain legal aid. 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 10, ante, p. 307.

Counsel, in arguing the case, must confine themselves to the facts as they appear on the case stated. R. v. Smith, 1 Den. 510 : R. v. Blakemore, 2 Den. 410; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 60. Counsel for the prisoner begins ,and has a reply. R. v. Gate Fulford, Dears. & B. 74, 94; 7 Cox, 230. The court may hear counsel for the prisoner, or for the prosecution, although no counsel appears on the other side. R. v. Garner, 1 Den. 329; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 1 : R. v. Masters, 1 Den. 322 : R. v. Martin, (ante, p. 344). Where no counsel appear, the presiding judge reads the case, and then judgment is pronounced as in other criminal appeals (ante, p. 301).

If the judges differed on a question of law it was usual to have the case re-argued before all the judges. R. v. Burrell, L. & C. 354; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 9 Cox, 368 : R. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 63; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 17.

Costs.]—The jurisdiction and practice (a) as to costs under the Crown Cases Act, 1848, appears to be wholly superseded in England by the provisions of s. 13 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, as amended and explained by s. 9 (5) of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908 (ante, p. 271).

VENIRE DE NOVO.

THE abolition of the powers and practice of granting new trials in criminal cases in the High Court (7 Edw. 7, c. 23, s. 20 (1), ante, p. 302) has not directly affected the law as to grant of a writ of venire facias de novo juratores (i.e., an order to summon and swear a fresh jury to re-try the case). The distinction between this writ and an order for a new trial is that the latter could only be granted by the High Court (King's Bench Division), after a general verdict for the crown, in the case of indictments or informations for misdemeanor tried in the King's Bench Division, or on a record of the King's Bench Division, Archb. Cr. Pl. (23rd ed.) 291.

Venire de novo could be awarded (1) before the completion of the first trial if the judge thought fit to discharge the first jury (vide ante, p. 221).

(2) Where a special verdict had been returned on which the appellate court could not enter judgment for either party : R. v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 266 : R. v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619, 637 : R. v. Rowlands, 2 Den. 364, 386; 21 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 81; or in cases in which there had been some irregularity in the proceedings at the trial not affecting the merits, but amounting to a mis-trial, e.g., cases of defect of jurisdiction in respect of time, place, and person (see Arundel's case, 6 Co. Rep. 14 (a), or of verdicts so imperfectly worded or so ambiguous or inconsistent, that no judgment could be founded thereon. R. v. Keite, 1 Ld. Raym. 138 : R. v. Huggins, 2 Ld. Raym. 1574 : R. v. Evans, 6 Ir. C. L. R. 500; 7 Cox, 151 (Ir.) : R. v. Murphy, L. R. 2 P. C. 535, 538. And see R. v. Oxfordshire, 13 East, 411, 416, n, (b); 1 Chit. Cr. L. 654; 2 Tidd's Prac. 905; Burns, J. (30th ed.) New Trial : R. v. Day, Sayer, 202 : R. v. Peters, 1 Burr. 568; Bac. Abr., Trial (L.) : R. v. Mayor of Oxford, 3 Nev. & M. 877 : Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, pp. 1000, et seq.

(3) By a court of error in cases of mistrial of treason, felony, or misdemeanor; e.g., where the defendant was denied his right of challenge : R. v. Edmonds, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 785; 4 B. & Ald. 471 : Gray v. R., 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 117, 158; 11 Cl. & F. 427; 8 Eng. Rep. 1164, or the jury process had been misawarded : Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B. 799; 17 L. J. (M. C.) 89; but see 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 21 (ante, p. 44), or where the jury has been improperly chosen or irregularly returned, and perhaps in some cases of misconduct by the jury, discovered after judgment. See 2 Tidd's Prac. 922 : Witham v. Lewis, 1 Wils. (K. B.) 48. It had, however, been held that in a case of felony, where the indictment was good, and the prisoner has been given in charge to a jury duly impanelled, chosen, and sworn, and a verdict has been returned, and judgment given, a venire de novo would not lie, although there might have been conduct on the part of the jury which the court considers unsatisfactory. R. v. Murphy, L. R. 2 P. C. 535; 38 L. J. (P. C.) 53. R. v. Fowler, 4 B. & Ald. 273, which at first sight appears to be an authority to the contrary, was explained in R. v. Murphy, supra, to be in fact no decision on this point. A court of error could also, it seems, award a venire de novo in felony on an imperfect verdict : Conway and Lynch v. R. [1845] 7 L. R. (Ir.) 149 : per Blackburn, J., in Winsor v. R., 35 L. J. (M. C.) 121, 133; L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, citing Campbell v. R., 11 Q. B. 799; 17 L. J. (M. C.) 89.

(4) The Court for Crown Cases Reserved in R. v. Yeadon, L. & C. 81; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 70; 9 Cox, 91, granted a venire de novo on a case reserved, where it appeared that the court below had wrongly refused to receive the first verdict returned by the jury (of common assault), and they had under his direction returned another verdict, which it was held could not stand. In this case it was ruled that the first verdict would have been good and valid if it had been accepted. (a)

In cases in which a verdict had been actually returned and received a venire de novo has been awarded only for matter appearing on the record, e.g., where the verdict as recorded was a nullity, and a new trial where the verdict was wrong, e.g., against the weight of evidence as obtained by misdirection. Witham v. Lewis, 1 Wils. (K. B.) 48.

(a) This seems to be the only case in which the Court for Crown Cases Reserved granted a venire de novo, and their authority to grant it is somewhat doubtful. See R. v. Mellor, D. & B. 468; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 121; 7 Cox, 454. R. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 113; 12 Cox, 204. R. v. Crane [1921] A. C. 299.

The Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, does not affect the discretionary power of the judges of the court of trial to discharge a jury before verdict, and to direct a fresh jury to be summoned. As to these powers, vide ante, pp. 221 et seq.

In the case of a defective, inconsistent, ambiguous, or special verdict the court of trial would seem now to be bound to interpret the verdict and to enter judgment for or against the crown, or to rule that the findings were too imperfect to amount to a verdict at all. In the latter case the power to summon a fresh jury would seem to survive. Where judgment is entered against the accused his remedy is by appeal. See R. v. Harding, 1 Cr. App. R. 219; 25 T. L. R. 139 : R. v. Petch, 25 T. L. R. 401; 2 Cr. App. R. 71 : R. v. Knight, 73 J. P. 14 : R. v. Muirhead, 73 J. P. 31 : R. v. Charlton, 6 Cr. App. R. 119 : R. v. Johnson, 9 Cr. App. R. 57 : R. v. Chainey, 9 Cr. App. R. 175; 30 T. L. R. 51.

Where the Court of Criminal Appeal holds that the trial of an appellant has been a nullity it has power to order that the appellant be tried on the indictment in question. R. v. Crane [1921] 2 A. C. 299; 85 J. P. 245; 37 T. L. R. 788; 15 Cr. App. R. 183.

Effect and form of writ.]—When a venire de novo is awarded, the parties stand precisely as they did before the first trial, and the whole of the facts are to be reheard.

The following is the form of a venire de novo at quarter sessions, in a case of felony, where there has been a mis-trial :—

Therefore let a new jury come before the justices at the next general quarter sessions of the peace, to be holden at Chichester, in and for the said county, to try whether the defendants or either of them are guilty of the premises in the indictment charged against them or not; because as well W. B. L., who prosecutes for our lord the King, as the said defendants, have put themselves upon the jury: the same day, etc.; at which last-mentioned general quarter sessions, holden at Chichester aforesaid, on, etc., before, etc., justices of our said lord the King, assigned to keep the peace in the said county, also to hear and determine divers felonies, etc., committed in the county aforesaid, come as well the said W. B. L., who prosecutes for our lord the King, as the defendants in their proper persons, etc. [For other forms, see Huband, Grand Jury in Ireland, p. 1001.]

PART II.

EVIDENCE GENERALLY.

CHAPTER I.

WHAT ALLEGATIONS MUST BE PROVED.

WHERE the defendant pleads the general issue, "not guilty" (see ante, p. 165), the prosecutor is obliged to prove at the trial every fact or circumstance stated in the indictment which is material and necessary to constitute the offence charged.

Where the replication or other pleading on the part of the prosecution consists of a general traverse of the defendant's pleading, the defendant must prove the facts thus traversed and put in issue.

Caution is necessary as to the evidence adduced for the prosecution, because in criminal cases, if any evidence not legally admissible against the prisoner is left to the jury, and they find him guilty, the Court of Criminal Appeal may feel constrained to quash the conviction, notwithstanding that there was other evidence before the jury properly admitted and sufficient in itself to warrant conviction. See R. v. Dyson [1908] 2 K. B. 454; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 813: R. v. Stoddart, 73 J. P. 348; 3 Cr. App. R. 217: R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K. B. 149; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 187: R. v. Norton [1910] 2 K. B. 496; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 756: R. v. Westfall, 76 J. P. 336; 107 L. T. 463; and other cases cited ante, p. 335.

Amendment.]—Under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 5 (1): Where, before trial, or at any stage of the trial, it appears to the court that the indictment is defective, the court shall make such order for the amendment of the indictment as the court thinks necessary to meet the circumstances of the case, unless, having regard to the merits of the case, the required amendments cannot be made without injustice, and may make such order as to the payment of any costs incurred owing to the necessity for amendment as the court thinks fit.

This enactment repealed several previous enactments which regulated the amendment of variances between the description of an offence in the indictment and the evidence given in support, and both by the wide power of amendment given under the above section and by the simplification of indictments enacted in the other sections and the rules made under the Act (see ante, p. 54) much of the former law has become obsolete. It may, however, be still of some value to consider the parts of an indictment necessary to be proved under the following heads.

Dates.]—The almanack annexed to the Common Prayer Book has been held evidence that such a day of the year was Sunday, or the like. In R. v. Dyer, 6 Mod. 41, it was stated that the almanack was part of the law of England to be judicially noticed. Cf. Page v. Faucet, Cro. Eliz. 227; 1 Leon, 242: Brough v. Perkins, 6 Mod. 81. The original almanack was superseded in 1750, by that scheduled to the Style Act (24 G. 2, c. 23).

Time.]—As a general rule the time at which an offence took place is not an essential part of the offence. Where, however, it is, e.g., in the case of burglary, the offence must be proved to have been committed within the essential time. In the case of manslaughter by injury the death must be proved to have taken place within a year and a day from the time at which the injury is proved to have been caused, counting the day on which it was done as the first day. 1 Hawk. c. 31, s. 9; 4 Bl. Com. 197; 1 East, P. C. 343, 344: R. v. Dyson [1908] 2 K. B. 454; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 813.

Place.]—The forms of indictment prescribed under the Indictments Act require the county in which the offence took place to be stated in the indictment. And it is necessary to prove that the offence was committed within the county or other extent of the court's jurisdiction; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 84, and see ante, p. 51. The parish and place are as a rule immaterial. To this rule there are said to be several exceptions: (1) That if the statute upon which the indictment is framed gives the penalty to the poor of the parish in which the offence was committed, the offence must be proved to have been committed in the parish stated in the indictment. R. v. Glossop, 4 B. & Ald. 616. (2) Upon an indictment against a parish for not repairing a road, the part of the road out of repair must be proved to be within the parish; and the same in all other cases in which the place where the fact occurred is a necessary ingredient in the offence. R. v. Steventon, 1 C. & K. 55. (3) In the case of affray, the offence must be alleged and proved to have been committed in a public street or highway. R. v. O'Neill [1871] Ir. Rep. 6 C. L. 1.

The offence.]—Under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 8 (1), nothing in the Act is to prejudice or diminish in any respect the obligation to establish by evidence according to law any acts, omissions, or intentions which are legally necessary to constitute the offence with which the person accused is charged. By rule 4 (3) the statement of the offence in the indictment need not necessarily include all the essential elements of the offence.

Money.]—Allegations as to money, so far as regards the description of the property, are sustained by proof of any amount of coin, or of any bank-note, although the particular species of coin of which such amount was composed, or the particular nature of the bank-note, is not proved. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, p. 52).

By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 40 (2), an allegation in an indictment that money or bank-notes have been embezzled or obtained by false pretences can, so far as regards the description of the property, be sustained by proof that the offender embezzled or obtained any piece of coin or bank-note or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or bank-note may have been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to any person and such part has been returned accordingly.

Words.]—Where words are the gist of the offence (as in defamatory, blasphemous, or seditious libels), and are set out verbatim in the indictment, they must be proved as laid: and before the Indictments Act, 1915, the defendant was entitled to acquittal if there was any material variance between the words proved and those laid—even if laid as spoken in the third person, and proved to have been spoken in the second (R. v. Berry, 4 T. R. 217) or laid as spoken affirmatively, and proved to have been spoken by way of interrogation, Barnes v. Holloway, 8 T. R. 150, or the like. The powers of amendment given by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100 (rep.), do not seem to have extended to material variances in a libel case. See R. v. Fussell, 3 Cox, 291: Re Crowe, 3 Cox, 123. But if some of the words were proved as laid, and the words so proved were sufficient to constitute the offence for which the defendant is indicted, failure to prove the remainder of the words was not material. The rule was the same as in civil actions for defamation under the practice prior to the Common Law Procedure Acts. See Compagnon v. Martin, 2 W. Bl. 790: Walters v. Mace, 2 B. & Ald. 756: Hancock v. Winter, 7 Taunt. 205; and see Odgers on Libel (4th ed.) 668. Under the Indictments Act, 1915, where it appears to the court that the indictment is defective, the court shall make such order for the amendment of the indictment as the court thinks necessary to meet the circumstances of the case. See ante, p. 54.

Identity.]—Identification by finger prints by a person expert in such prints is allowed, and may be the only evidence of identification. R. v. Castleton, 3 Cr. App. R. 74; and see 46 Sol. J. 757, 769; 112 L. T. J. 445, 447 (a) So is identification by handwriting, even without the aid of experts. R. v. Smith, 74 J. P. 54; 3 Cr. App. R. 87. Where photographs have been used by the police in order to secure the arrest of the accused, care should be taken by the prosecution that the accused should not be prejudiced at the trial by the evidence being given in such a way as to lead the jury to suppose that he must have been previously convicted. See R. v. Palmer, 10 Cr. App. R. 77; R. v. Varley, 10 Cr. App. R. 125: R. v. Kingsland, 14 Cr. App. R. 8.

(a) The High Court of Australia refused leave to appeal from a conviction for shop-breaking, where the only evidence of identity against the accused consisted of a resemblance between his finger prints and those of the criminal; Griffith, C.J., saying "Signatures have been accepted as evidence of identity as long as they have been used. The fact of the individuality of the corrugation of the skin on the fingers of the human hand is now so generally recognised as to require very little, if any, evidence of it, although it seems to be still the practice to offer some expert evidence on the point. A finger-print is therefore in reality an unforgeable signature." Parker v. R. [1912] 14 C. L. R. 681. As to the value of finger-print evidence, see R. v. Kransch [1913] 32 N. Z. L. R. 1229, Chapman, J.

Intent.]—The intention of the party at the time when he commits an offence is often an essential ingredient in it; and, in such case, it is as necessary to be proved as any other fact or circumstance laid in the indictment. Intention, however, is not capable of positive proof: it can only be implied from overt acts. As a general rule every man is taken to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own acts. R. v. Dixon, 3 M. & Sel. 11: R. v. Farrington, R. & R. 207: R. v. Harvey, 2 B. & C. 257, at p. 264, Bayley, J.: Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 892: R. v. Martin, 14 Cox, 633, 637: R. v. Meade [1909] 1 K. B. 895, 899; Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard [1920] A. C. 479; though the inference may be rebutted. This presumption does not of course extend to accidental acts. R. v. Davies, 29 T. L. R. 350; 8 Cr. App. R. 211. If it cannot be implied from the facts and circumstances which, together with it, constitute the offence, other acts of the defendant, from which it can be inferred by the jury, must be proved at the trial. See R. v. Philipps, 6 East, 464. As to what other acts are admissible, see post, p. 353 et seq.

In some cases the intent is inferred as a necessary conclusion from the act done; as if a man knowingly uttered a forged instrument as a genuine one, the intent to defraud the person to whom he utters it is a necessary inference. R. v. Hill, 2 Mood. 30; 8 C. & P. 274: R. v. Cooke, Id. 582. See further post, p 363.

As to presumptions, see post, p. 396.

As to intent to defraud in indictments for obtaining by false pretences, see R. v. Carpenter, 76 J. P. 158; 22 Cox, 618: R. v. Ferguson, 9 Cr. App. R. 113: R. v. Bennett, 9 Cr. App. R. 146; and post, p. 361.

Exception, Exemptions, Qualifications.]—Under the Indictments Act, 1915, rule 5 (2), it is not necessary in a count of an indictment charging a statutory offence to negative any exception or exemption from or qualification to the operation of the statute creating the offence. But by section 8 (1) of the Act nothing in the Act or rules is to affect the laws of evidence in criminal cases. See ante, p. 60. As to the duty of proving the matter contained in an exception, etc., see the particular offence to which it relates.

Negative Averments.]—Negative averments, it seems, must formerly have been proved in all cases by the prosecutor (see Over v. Harwood [1900] 1 Q. B. 803, 806; 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 272, Channell, J.; but the present rule upon the subject appears to be, that, in cases where the subject of such averment relates to the defendant personally, or is peculiarly within his knowledge, the negative is not to be proved by the prosecutor, but, on the contrary, the affirmative must be proved by the defendant, as matter of defence; on the other hand, if the subject of the averment does not relate personally to the defendant, or is not peculiarly within his knowledge, but either relates personally to the prosecutor, or is peculiarly within his knowledge or at least be as much within his knowledge as within the knowledge of the defendant, the prosecutor must prove the negative. See 1 Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 364; 1 Hawk. c. 89, s. 17: Apothecaries Co. v. Bentley, 1 C. & P. 538; Ry. & M. 159: Elkin v. Janson, 13 M. & W. 655, 662, Alderson, B.; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1954. On an indictment under 43 G. 3, c. 107, s. 1 (rep.), which made it felony to course deer in an enclosed ground without the consent of the owner—that the deer were coursed without the consent of the owner was held necessary to be proved on the part of the prosecution. R. v. Rogers, 2 Camp. 654. But although it was once supposed that the negative, in such cases, could only be proved by the owner, it is now fully established that it may be presumed from circumstances, or be proved by the agent of the owner. R. v. Allen, R. v. Argent, R. v. Chamberlain, 1 Mood. 154 : R. v. Hazy, 2 C. & P. 458.

Alternative averments.]—Where an indictment contains alternative averments laid conjunctively, e.g., that the defendant "forged and caused to be forged," proof of either averment is sufficient. R. v. Middlehurst, 1 Burr. 399. So, a defendant may be convicted of printing and publishing a libel upon an indictment which charges him with "composing, printing, and publishing" it. R. v. Hunt, 2 Camp. 583; 31 St. Tr. 408 : R. v. Williams, 2 Camp. 646. And where two intentions are ascribed to one act, as that a libel was published against magistrates with intent to defame them, and also to bring the administration of justice into contempt, R. v. Evans, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 35, Bayley, J., or that an assault was committed on a female, with intent to abuse and carnally know her, R. v. Dawson, 3 Stark. (N. P.) 62, Holroyd, J., the averments are alternative and proof of either intention is sufficient. The same principle will apply where an indictment contains alternative averments laid disjunctively, as provided by the Indictments Act, 1915, rule 5 (ante, pp. 46). In larceny, it is sufficient to prove that any one of the articles enumerated in the indictment was stolen by the prisoner. 2 Hale, 302 : and cf. R. v. Elkins, R. & R. 188. Upon an indictment for extortion, alleging that the defendant extorted twenty shillings, it was held sufficient to prove that he extorted one shilling. R. v. Burdett, 1 Ld. Raym. 148. See R. v. Carson, R. & R. 303. And upon an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, proof of part of the pretence alleged is sufficient, if the money was obtained upon that part. R. v. Hill, R. & R. 190. As to cases in which rejection of an alternative averment involves a verdict for an offence less or other than the offence alleged in the indictment, see ante, p. 211.

Immaterial averments—surplusage.]—Allegations which are not essential to constitute the offence, and which may be omitted, without affecting the charge, or vitiating the indictment, do not require proof, and may be rejected as surplusage. R. v. Jones, 2 B. & Ad. 611 : R. v. Barraclough [1906] 1 K. B. 201, 210; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 77.

Evidence which may not be given: General rule.]—The general rule in criminal (as in civil) cases is, that nothing may be given in evidence which does not directly tend to the proof or disproof of the matter in issue. "It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried." Makin v. Att.-Gen. for N. S. W. [1894] A. C. 57; 63 L. J. (P. C.) 41; 17 Cox, 704 : R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K. B. 149; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 187 : R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K. B. 468; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 1070; 77 J. P. 465; 23 Cox, 574; 109 L. T. 476; 29 T. L. R. 700; 9 Cr. App. R. 69; and see also R. v. Mullins, 5 Cr. App. R. 13 : R. v. Coulter, 5 Cr. App. R. 147 : R. v. Gray, 6 Cr. App. R. 242 : R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K. B. 746; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 841 : 22 Cox, 330 : R. v. Barron, 78 J. P. 184; 24 Cox, 83; 9 Cr. App. R. 236. Upon an indictment for an infamous crime, an admission by the defendant that he had committed such an offence at any other time with another person, and had a tendency to such practices, ought not to be received. R. v. Cole, 1 Phill. Ev. (7th ed.) 181; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2116. And upon the trial of a prisoner for wounding a constable, who had arrested him on suspicion of felony, it was held that the prosecutor was not entitled to ask the constable what the prisoner's previous character had been, in order to assist in showing that there were reasonable grounds for the arrest. R. v. Turberfield or Tuberfield, L. & C. 495; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 20. Acts by the defendant inconsistent with his belief in the truth of his defence may be given in evidence against him; e.g., that he had induced a witness to give false evidence. R. v. Watt [1905] 70 J. P. 29; 20 Cox, 852, Phillimore, J., citing Moriarty v. L. C. & D. R., L. R. 5 Q. B. 314; 39 L. J. (Q. B.) 109 : Doe d. Annesley v. Lord Anglesea, 17 St. Tr. 712 : Lord Stafford's case, 7 St. Tr. 1461, 1479; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed), s. 804; Wigmore (Anglo-American System of Evidence), vol. i., s. 278.

Exceptions.]—To the general rule, as above stated, some exceptions have been admitted by statute, and there are also some apparent exceptions to it at common law.

Treason.]—In high treason, when tried under 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 8, no evidence is admissible of any overt act not expressly laid in the indictment. But this does not prevent overt acts, not laid, from being given in evidence, if they are direct proof of any of the overt acts which are laid : R. v. Rookwood, 13 St. Tr. 139; cas. temp. Holt, 683 : and see R. v. Lowicke, 13 St. Tr. 276, 296 : R. v. Layer, 16 St. Tr. 211, 232; 8 Mod. 82, 91 : R. v. Deacon, 18 St. Tr. 365, Fost. 9 : R. v. Wedderburne, Id. : R. v. Watson, 32 St. Tr. 1; 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116, 134. And if any one overt act be proved against the defendant in the proper county, acts of treason tending to prove such overt act, though done in a foreign country, may be given in evidence. Fost. 9, 22 : R. v. Deacon, supra : R. v. Parkyns, 13 St. Tr. 63, 126, 127 : Lord Strafford's case, 3 St. Tr. 138 : Lord Lovat's case, 18 St. Tr. 529. Or, if the treason consist of a conspiracy, not only the acts of the defendant himself, but also any acts of the defendant's accomplices no matter when committed, if done in furtherance of the common design, although not laid as an overt act in the indictment, may be given in evidence, provided it be direct proof of an overt act laid. R. v. Hardy, 24 St. Tr. 199; 1 East, P. C. 98, 99 : R. v. Horne Tooke, 1 East, P. C. 98; 25 St. Tr. 1, 127 : R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 85; 9 C. & P. 129, 149.

Conspiracy.]—In cases of conspiracy when acts done by some of the conspirators in the county in which the offence is laid have been proved, acts done by others of the conspirators in other counties may be given in evidence. R. v. Bowes, 4 East, 171, cit. And in an indictment for conspiracy to carry on the business of common cheats, evidence was admitted of the defendants having made false representations to other tradesmen besides those named in the indictment. R. v. Roberts, 1 Camp. 399. But before such evidence can be admitted it is necessary (1) to prove the existence of the conspiracy; (2) to connect the defendants with the conspiracy; (3) to prove that the person whose acts are about to be given in evidence was connected with the defendants in the same conspiracy. The prosecutor may, however, either prove the conspiracy, which renders the acts of the conspirators admissible in evidence, or he may prove the acts of the different parties, and so prove the conspiracy. R. v. Lord Lovat, 18 St. Tr. 529. See also R. v. Stone, 6 T. R. 527; 25 St. Tr. 1155 : R. v. Standley, R. & R. 305 : R. v. Gogerly, Id. 343 : R. v. Bingley, Id. 446 : R. v. Frost, supra: R. v. Shellard, 9 C. & P. 277; 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1386 : R. v. Burdett, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 171, Bayley, J. : Redford v. Birley, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1071. In R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 566; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 171, upon an indictment for conspiring and unlawfully meeting for the purpose of exciting disaffection and discontent among his Majesty's subjects at Manchester, it was held that the previous conduct of a portion of the assembly, in training, etc., and in assaulting persons whom they called spies, was competent evidence as to the general character and intention of the meeting, although the effect of it, as to each particular defendant, was a distinct matter for the consideration of the jury. It was also held, that it was competent to show, as against Hunt (who though a stranger, except by political connection, had been invited to preside as chairman at the meeting), that at a similar meeting in another place, holden for an object professedly similar, certain resolutions had been proposed by that person : it being in its nature a declaration of his sentiments and views on the particular subject of such meetings and of the topics there discussed. But the court held, that evidence of the misconduct of the military and others in the subsequent dispersion of the meeting, was properly refused by the judge at the trial, as irrelevant and having no bearing upon the intention and objects of the meeting, which intention and objects obviously existed previously to the alleged misconduct of the military attempted to be given in evidence.

Evidence tending to prove other offences admissible because relevant.]—"The mere fact that evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears on the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would be otherwise open to the accused." Makin v. Att.-Gen. for N. S. W. [1894] A. C. 57; 63 L. J. (P. C.) 41; 17 Cox, 704, per Lord Herschell, C., at p. 65. In this, the leading case on the subject, most of the prior cases are collected. In R. v. Bond [1906] 2 K. B. 389; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 693, the leading case was carefully considered. Darling, J., in the course of his judgment, said, at p. 409, "I do not suppose that Lord Herschell meant that such evidence might be called to rebut any defence possibly open, but of an intention to rely on which there was no probability whatever. Here, however, the evidence objected to was called to overthrow a defence already set up and admitted to be the defendant's answer to the charge. It appears that the defence adopted by the defendant in this case was that he was performing a lawful operation in using instruments adapted to procure abortion." And Bray, J., added, at p. 417, "I think, bearing in mind the strong prejudice that would necessarily be created in the minds of the jury by evidence of this class, which shows that the prisoner has been guilty on another occasion of a similar offence, the greatest care ought to be taken to reject such evidence, unless it is plainly necessary to prove something which is really in issue." (a). For other instances as to admissibility of such evidence, see R. v. Wyatt [1904] 1 K. B. 188; 73 L. J. (K. B.) 15 : R. v. Mean [1904] 69 J. P. Rep. 26; 21 T. L. P. 431; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 892 : R. v. Shellaker [1914] 1 K. B. 414; 78 J. P. 159; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 413; 30 T. L. R. 194; and the cases grouped under the following sub-headings. It may also be relevant as corroborative of other evidence. R. v. Chitson [1909] 2 K. B. 945; 73 J. P. 499; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 10 : R. v. Lovegrove [1920] 3 K. B. 643; 85 J. P. 75; 15 Cr. App. R. 50.

1. Offences connected with the transaction on which the indictment is based.] —Even before the Indictments Act, 1915, where several offences were connected together and formed one entire transaction, upon an indictment for one, the others could be proved to show the character of the transaction. R. v. Ellis, 6 B. & C. 145 : R. v. Egerton, R. & R. 375 : R. v. Rooney, 7 C. & P. 517 : R. v. Mansfield, C. & Mar. 140 : R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765 : R. v. Firth, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 172; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 54 : 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2101. Thus with a view to prove the identity of the defendant, it could be shown that other goods not included in the indictment, which were stolen from the premises at the same time, were found in his possession. So, it could be shown, upon an indictment for arson, that property taken out of the house at the time of the firing was afterwards found secreted in the possession of the prisoner. R. v. Rickman, 2 East, P. C. 1035. Upon the trial of four men for a burglary at W., evidence of three other burglaries by the same men on the same night was admitted in order to explain why none of the property taken from W. was found upon one of the prisoners as his share of the booty. R. v. Cobden, 3 F. & F. 833. On a trial for feloniously abusing and carnally knowing a female child under the age of ten years, evidence was admitted of subsequent perpetrations of the same offence on different days, previous to the complaint, it appearing that the prisoner had threatened the child on the first occasion—on the ground that, virtually, in such a case it was all part of one and the same transaction. R. v. Rearden, 4 F. & F. 76. To prove the defendant to be the author of a libel, evidence of other libels written by the same person and concerning the same subject have been admitted. R. v. Pearce, 1 Peake (3rd ed.) 106. But it is said that they must expressly refer to the libel in the indictment or at least to the same subject matter. Finnerly v. Tipper, 2 Camp. 72.

Under the Indictments Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 4, and rule 3, ante, p. 44, charges for more than one felony or misdemeanor and charges for both felonies and misdemeanors may now be joined in the same indictment if the charges are founded on the same facts or form or are part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character. Though the Act expressly enacts that nothing in it or the rules made under it is to affect the laws of evidence in criminal cases, it seems plain that the inclusion of offences in an indictment which could not formerly have been included must affect the evidence which may be given. Some of the cases following, grouped under different offences, may therefore not be of the same importance as heretofore, as in practice where different charges are founded on the same facts or form or are a part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character they will probably be included in one indictment. But if the offences are distinct, and not part of one scheme or transaction (subject to what is stated below), evidence of one offence is, in general, inadmissible on the trial of the prisoner for another offence : R. v. Birdseye, 4 C. & P. 386 : R. v. Holt, Bell, 280; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 11 : R. v. Fuidge, L. & C. 390; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 74 : R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, 82, even where it is derived from the admission of the prisoner himself.

Where on cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution evidence is given that persons previously convicted of an offence, which is now charged by the prosecution to have been committed by the prisoners at the bar, were in fact the guilty parties, and that the prisoners at the bar were not,—the evidence of such convicted persons, to establish their own alibi, was held to be admissible, apparently on the ground that if the convicts were the guilty parties, the prisoners on trial could not be, and therefore the question of the guilt or innocence of the convicts became relevant to the question of the guilt or innocence of the prisoners. R. v. Dytche, 17 Cox, 39, Hawkins, J.

2. To prove design, system, criminal intent, or guilty knowledge.]—Where design, system, criminal intent, or guilty knowledge on the part of the defendant is to be proved, or the defence of accident or the like is to be met, the prosecutor may give in evidence other instances of the defendant's having committed offences similar to that for which he is under trial.

The principle on which this is allowed is laid down in Makin v. Att.-Gen. for N. S. W. [1894] A. C. 57; 63 L. J. P. C. 41; 17 Cox, 704 (ante, p. 355). See also Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Society, 4 C. P. D. 94; 48 L. J. (C. P.) 169.

The following instances illustrate its application to particular kinds of offence :—

Homicide.]—Where four indictments were found against a woman, which respectively charged her with poisoning her husband and two of her sons, and with attempting to poison a third son, evidence was tendered on the trial of the first indictment that arsenic had been taken by the three sons a few months after their father's death, that all the four persons when taken ill exhibited the same symptoms: and that the prisoner had been in the habit of preparing their meals: the court held the evidence admissible for the purpose of proving that the husband died of arsenic, and that his death had not been accidental. R. v. Geering, 18 L. J. (M. C.) 215: R. v. Garner, 4 F. & F. 346. In Makin v. Att.-Gen. for N. S. W. [1894] A. C. 57; 63 L. J. (P. C.) 41; 17 Cox, 704, R. v. Geering was approved, and the Privy Council held that on an indictment for the murder of an infant, in order to prove malice or meet the defence of accident, the prosecution could properly adduce evidence that other infants had been received by the prisoners for a small sum, on a representation that they desired to adopt them, that the payments were insufficient to support the infants long, and that several bodies of infants had been found buried in the prisoner's garden. In R. v. Cotton, 12 Cox, 400, on a charge against a mother for poisoning, evidence of the death of other children by the same poison was held admissible. In R. v. Roden, 12 Cox, 630, on a charge against a mother of murdering her infant by suffocation in bed, evidence was admitted of the previous death of other children at earlier ages. In R. v. Smith, 114 L. T. 239; 80 J. P. 31; 31 T. L. R. 617; 25 Cox, 271; 11 Cr. App. R. 229, where the accused was indicted for the murder of B. M. and a prima facie case that the accused had committed the act charged in the indictment was made by the prosecution, evidence as to the deaths of A. B. and M. L. on dates subsequent to the death of B. M. under circumstances similar to those attending the death of B. M. was held to have been rightly allowed in order to show that the death of B. M. was not accidental but designed. So, for the same reason, former menaces or assaults of the prisoner, or expressions of malicious or vindictive feeling towards the deceased, or, in fact, the existence of any motive likely to instigate him to the commission of the offence in question, are also in such a case receivable in evidence. R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221: see R. v. Hopkins, 10 Cox, 229. Thus, on the trial of an indictment for the murder of an infant child, the fact that the prisoner had said to the mother of the child, about a fortnight before the alleged murder, "The child is no good; it is eating the other children's food," was held to be admissible as evidence. R. v. Hagan, 12 Cox, 357. Archibald, J., after consultation with Pollock, B. So, on a trial for murder, the deposition of the deceased against the prisoner, taken before the magistrates on another charge against him, for which he was afterwards convicted, was held to be admissible evidence for the prosecution in order to prove malice or motive against the prisoner. R. v. Buckley, 13 Cox, 293, Lush, J. Upon an indictment for murder by poison of S., evidence is admissible of the previous death of J., and of the subsequent death of L., under like circumstances and attended by similar symptoms, to show that the poisoning was not accidental: and where it is proved that a motive for the death of S. might exist, by the fact of the prisoner having insured the life of S., evidence may also be given upon the same indictment that there might be an equal motive for the deaths of J. and L. by showing that their lives also had been insured by the prisoner. R. v. Heesom, 14 Cox, 40. See also R. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox, 403, a case of murder by arsenical poisoning (in which Butt, J., followed the ruling in R. v. Geering, supra, and disapproved R. v. Winslow, 8 Cox, 397,: R. v. Neill Cream, 116 C. Abortion.]—Upon the trial of an indictment under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58, for "feloniously and unlawfully using a certain instrument, with intent to procure a miscarriage," in order to prove the intent, evidence may be given that at other times the prisoner had caused miscarriages by similar means, and had then used expressions tending to show that he was in the habit of performing similar operations for the same illegal purpose. R. v. Bond [1906] 2 K. B. 389; 75 L. J. (K. B.) 693; 21 Cox, 252 (ante, p. 355). In this case former decisions are fully considered. See also R. v. Thomson [1912] 3 K. B. 19; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 892; 23 Cox, 187; 76 J. P. 431; 28 T. L. R. 478; R. v. Lovegrove [1920] 3 K. B. 643 (a). Evidence that the accused administered drugs to one woman with intent to procure her abortion may be admissible in support of a charge of having used an instrument with the like intent on another woman, and vice versa in order to refute the contention of the defence that the acts were done innocently. R. v. Starkie, 28 T. L. R. 181.

Arson.]—Where the prisoner was indicted for arson with intent to defraud an insurance company, for the purpose of throwing light upon the prisoner's intention, and proving that the fire was the result of design and not of accident, evidence was admitted that the prisoner had previously occupied two houses in succession, both of which had been insured, that fires had broken out in both, and that the prisoner had made claims upon and been paid by the insurance companies in respect of the loss caused by each fire. R. v. Gray, 4 F. & F. 1102: approved in Makin v. Att.-Gen. for N. S. W., supra. The same rule applies where it is necessary to prove malice or intent on the part of the prisoner. Thus, on an indictment for maliciously shooting, or for arson, where it is questionable whether the shooting or burning was by accident or design, proof may be given that at some other time the prisoner intentionally shot at the same person, or was attempting to set fire to the same building or stack. R. v. Voke, R. & R. 531: R. v. Dossett, 2 C. & K. 306. (b)

Burglary.]—Upon a charge of burglary with intent to commit a rape, the defence at the trial was that the prisoner went to the house for the purpose of courting the prosecutrix with her consent, that he did not break into the house, and did not intend or attempt to ravish her. Evidence was thereupon given by the prosecution that the prisoner immediately afterwards went to the house of another woman, gained access to her bedroom down the chimney, and with her consent had connection with her. It was held that this evidence had been wrongly admitted, and the conviction was quashed. R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K. B. 468; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 1070; 23 Cox, 574; 109 L. T. 476; 77 J. P. 465; 29 T. L. R. 700; 9 Cr. App. R. 69.

(b) In support of a charge of arson, evidence that about twelve months prior to the date of the alleged offence the accused was found under suspicious circumstances in an unoccupied house; that preparations for setting that house on fire were discovered on the premises being searched; and that the accused had been noticed at other fires occurring some twelve to fifteen months previously, was held to be inadmissible as being too remote to show system or to negative the defence of accident. R. v. Willoughby [1913] 32 N. Z. L. R. 1295.

Carnal Knowledge.]—On the trial of an indictment for carnal knowledge in December, 1912, of a girl under the age of sixteen years, evidence which went to show that the accused had had guilty relations with the girl in the previous April was held to have been rightly admitted as being relevant to the charge in the indictment. R. v. Shellaker [1914] 1 K. B. 414; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 413; 110 L. T. 351; 78 J. P. 159; 30 T. L. R. 194; 9 Cr. App. R. 240.

Coinage offences.]—Upon an indictment for procuring base coin with intent to utter it, evidence of the defendant having a large quantity of such coin is admissible to prove the intent. R. v. Fuller, R. & R. 308. And upon an indictment for uttering counterfeit money, it is competent to the prosecutor to prove that other pieces of such counterfeit money were found upon the defendant, or were uttered by him at different times. R. v. Wylie, 1 B. & P. (N. R.) 94: S. C. sub nom. R. v. Whiley, 2 Leach, 983; or were found in the possession of persons with whom he is proved to have been acting in concert. R. v. Johnson, 3 Cr. App. R. 168. For the same reason, proof of the defendant's conduct in such other uttering, as, for example, that he passed by different names, is admissible. Bayley on Bills, 449. So, on an indictment for having knowingly and with guilty intent the possession of coining instruments, evidence may be given of the defendant's previously uttering bad money. R. v. Weeks, L. & C. 18; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 141.

Conspiracy.]—Where several persons were indicted for conspiring by means of a mock auction to defraud the prosecutor and in defence denied the false pretences, and alleged that they were merely servants of a woman who owned the auction business, it was held that questions put to A., one of the accused, in cross-examination, to show that at the date of the offence he and the woman were living as man and wife, were held admissible as showing what were the real relations existing between them. R. v. Kurasch [1915] 2 K. B. 749; 25 Cox, 55; 11 Cr. App. R. 166.

Embezzlement.]—On an indictment for embezzlement, where the embezzlement had been effected by falsifying accounts, the prosecutor was allowed to give evidence of a number of analogous errors in the prisoner's accounts for the purpose of proving that the case on which the indictment was founded was not accidental. R. v. Richardson, 8 Cox, 448; 2 F. & F. 343. And in R. v. Proud, L. & C. 97; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 71, another case of embezzlement, the master's books, kept by the prisoner, were given generally in evidence by the prosecution, though it was objected on behalf of the prisoner that the evidence must be confined to the three particular entries referring to the three charges in the indictment, and the prisoner having been convicted, the conviction was affirmed. So where an indictment for embezzlement contained three counts, each charging a distinct act of embezzlement, it was held that the jury might consider the evidence that had been given as to the conduct of the prisoner in relation to the matters referred to in all the counts, when considering any one of them in order to determine whether the prisoner had failed to pay over money accidentally or fraudulently. R. v. Stephens, 16 Cox, 387 (C. C. R.). See now the Indictments Act, 1915, s. 4, and rule 3, ante, p. 44.

False pretences and fraud.]—Where the gist of the alleged offence is fraud intent is material, and evidence of other similar offences is admissible to prove the intent. R. v. Simmonds, 2 Cr. App. R. 303. On an indictment for attempting to obtain money by false pretences, evidence is admissible of a previous obtaining or attempting to obtain money by the defendant by false pretences, not charged in the indictment, in order to prove that the defendant had a guilty knowledge of the falsehood of the pretence charged in the indictment. R. v. Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 97; 12 Cox. 612: R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, 83; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 83: R. v. Stenson, 12 Cox, 111: R. v. Cooper, 1 Q. B. D. 19; 45 L. J. (M. C.) 15; 13 Cox, 123. And on this ground it was held that on an indictment for attempting to obtain money by falsely pretending that a ring, which in fact was composed of crystals, was composed of diamonds, evidence was admissible of a false pretence by the defendant on a prior occasion to another person that a chain was gold, whereas it was plated, and on another distinct prior occasion that a ring was of diamonds, which it was not. R. v. Francis, supra. If there is a sufficient nexus between the transactions, evidence of similar transactions subsequent to that charged in the indictment may be given. Where the fraud consisted of representations by the defendant that he was carrying on a bonâ fide dairyman's business, and the means by which the fraud was perpetrated was by advertisements in newspapers, evidence of three transactions which were all connected by the advertisement which formed part of the scheme was held admissible. R. v. Rhodes, supra. And see R. v. Mason, 10 Cr. App. R. 169. On a charge of obtaining money by false pretences, evidence of the defendant's obtaining, within a week after the offence charged in the indictment, other money from a different person by a similar false pretence was held inadmissible in R. v. Holt, Bell, 280; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 11; 8 Cox, 411. "The question in R. v. Holt was whether the prisoner had the authority or not which he said he had. The piece of evidence there objected to seems to me to be quite immaterial on that point, and how the reception of a perfectly immaterial piece of evidence caused the court to quash the conviction I cannot understand." R. v. Francis, 43 L. J. (M. C.) 99, Blackburn, J. The other false pretences, to be admissible in evidence, must not be isolated and distinct transactions, but must have some nexus or connection with the offence charged, e.g., as showing part of a scheme for carrying on a bogus business. R. v. Rhodes, supra. In that case R. v. Holt was distinguished as dealing with distinct and separate transactions. In R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K. B. 149; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 187, the indictment was for (a) obtaining chattels by false pretences; (b) for obtaining credit under false pretences; and (c) for obtaining credit by fraud other than false pretences. The false pretences alleged related to the obtaining of a pony and cart. Evidence of obtaining provender by means of false pretences different from those used in obtaining the pony and cart was held to have been wrongly admitted as being irrelevant to prove the particular fraud in respect of which the defendant was charged, and only amounting to a suggestion that he was of a generally fraudulent disposition. This was cited with approval in R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K. B. 746, at p. 760; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 841, and in R. v. Wilson, 11 Cr. App. R. 251 : R. v. Baird, 11 Cr. App. R. 186. (a)

R. v. Francis and R. v. Rhodes were followed in R. v. Wyatt [1904] 1 K. B. 188; 73 L. J. (K. B.) 15; 68 J. P. 31, where the defendant was charged with obtaining credit by fraud other than false pretences (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 13). The evidence was to the effect that he had obtained board and lodging and had not paid. The court held that evidence that he had shortly before obtained lodgings at other places and had left without paying was admissible as tending to establish a systematic course of conduct on the part of the accused, and as negativing any accident or mistake, or the existence of any reasonable or honest motive. This case was followed in R. v. Walford [1907] 71 J. P. 215, an indictment for incurring liability for lodgings by fraud.

In R. v. Ollis [1900] 2 Q. B. 758; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 918; 19 Cox, 554, on an indictment for obtaining money by falsely pretending that certain cheques given by the prisoner were good and valid orders for the payment of money, it was held that to prove guilty knowledge evidence was admissible that the prisoner had given another prosecutor in another case another cheque which was dishonoured on presentation notwithstanding that the prisoner had already been indicted and acquitted on a charge of fraud in respect of this last cheque. Channell, J., in the course of his judgment, said, at p. 781, "In such cases evidence of other transactions is admitted, not for the purpose of showing that the prisoner committed other offences, but for the purpose of showing that the transaction the subject of the indictment was done with the intent to defraud, or with guilty knowledge, as the case may be. Such evidence is admitted, not because it tends to show that other offences have been committed, but notwithstanding that, in the particular case, it may happen to do so." This ruling was approved and followed by the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Shellaker [1914] 1 K. B. 414; 83 L. J. (K. B.) 413; 110 L. T. 351; 78 J. P. 159; 30 T. L. R. 194; 9 Cr. App. R. 240.

Evidence of another transaction where a similar false pretence was used by the accused may also be admissible in a proper case to rebut the defence that the pretence had been used for an innocent purpose in the transaction which forms the subject matter of the indictment. R. v. Wilks, 10 Cr. App. R. 16.

Where the false pretence alleged was that the accused was carrying on a genuine and bonâ fide business as a manufacturer's agent and merchant, it was held that the accused was entitled to put in as evidence on his behalf to show that in fact he was carrying on a genuine business receipts sworn to by him as having been given to him for payments for other goods purchased by him and his bank book containing entries showing such payments. R. v. Sagar [1914] 3 K. B. 1112; 84 L. J. (K. B.) 303; 24 Cox, 500; 10 Cr. App. R. 279.

Forgery.]—Upon an indictment for uttering a forged bank-note, knowing it to be forged, the prosecutor may give evidence of other forged notes having been uttered by the prisoner at other times, before or after the commission of the offence for which he is indicted; R. v. Millard, R. & R. 245: R. v. Wylie, 1 B. & P. (N. R.) 93: S. C. sub nom. R. v. Whiley, 2 Leach. 983: R. v. Tattersal, 1 B. & P. (N. R.) 93, sit.: R. v. Ball, R. & R. 132; 1 Camp. 324; 1 Den. p. iv.; or that he had in his possession other forged notes of the same kind; R. v. Hough, R. & R. 120 (or it would seem of a different kind; Bayley on Bills, 450); in order to prove, or at least to raise a presumption of, his knowledge that the note in question was forged. So also, upon an indictment for uttering a forged bill of exchange, guilty knowledge may be proved by showing that the prisoner has at different times uttered other bills forged in other names. R. v. Salt, 3 F. & F. 834. On a charge of uttering a forged deed evidence that other forged deeds of a similar character were found in the prisoner's possession on arrest is admissible to rebut the defence that the accused did not know the deed to be forged. R. v. Mason, 10 Cr. App. R. 169; 24 Cox, 305; and it makes no difference that the deeds concern acts subsequent to that which forms the subject matter of the indictment. Id. On an indictment for forging and uttering a will, where evidence in chief had been given by two accomplices that the accused had told them he had done the same thing eighteen years before and gave that fact as his reason for not taking a certain part in the uttering charged in the indictment, questions in cross-examination of the accused tending to show that in fact he had forged and uttered a will eighteen years ago, were held to be admissible as corroboration of the accomplices' evidence. R. v. Kennaway [1917] 1 K. B. 25; 86 L. J. (K. B.) 300; 115 L. T. 720; 81 J. P. 99; 25 Cox, 559; 12 Cr. App. R. 147. See also R. v. Colclough, 15 Cox, 92; 10 L. R. Ir. 241, as to the sufficiency of the proof of the other utterings, not the subject of the indictment, but offered in evidence to prove guilty knowledge.

Incest.]—Where a brother and sister were indicted for incest committed in July and September, 1910, and it was proved that at these times they were living together and occupying the same bed, evidence was held to have been rightly admitted which showed that they had had a child in 1908, since it went to establish the existence of sexual passion between the parties as an element in proving that they had had illicit connexion in fact on or between the dates charged, and as negativing the defence of living together innocently. R. v. Ball [1911] A. C. 47; 22 Cox, 366; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 691.

Indecency.]—The respondent was charged under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, with having indecently exposed his person to Miss T. on July 16, 1914. In giving evidence he denied the offence, and also denied, in cross-examination, that he had indecently exposed himself to Miss T. in May, 1914. The complainant desired to re-call Miss T. to rebut this denial and to call other witnesses to show a systematic course of similar conduct towards other females. On a case stated, it was held that the question in cross-examination and the evidence of Miss T. were relevant on the question of identification and to show that the act was done intentionally, but that the evidence of the other witnesses was not admissible unless accident or mistake was put forward as a defence. Perkins v. Jeffery [1915] 2 K. B. 702; 25 Cox, 59; 31 T. L. R. 444.

Where the defence to a charge of gross indecency was an alibi, evidence of the finding of two powder puffs upon the accused on arrest and of photographs of naked boys in a drawer in one of the rooms where he lived was held to have been properly admitted. R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K. B. 630; [1918] A. C. 221; 12 Cr. App. R., 261; 13 Cr. App. R. 61. See also R. v. Twiss [1918] 2 K. B. 853.

Larceny.]—B. was indicted under 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 37 (rep.), in one count, for stealing coal from the mine of G. and from the mines of thirty other coal owners, and it appeared that the prisoner was himself the lessee of coal, and had carried workings from his own mine into the beds of forty different coal owners, from all of which he had got coal without their sanction. Erle, J., thought it better that the attention of the jury should be confined to the charge of taking the coal of one owner, G.; but in order to show that when B. took G.'s coal he knew he was out of his boundary, the learned judge permitted it to be proved that the prisoner had gone out of his boundary in many other instances, and into the property of many other persons, taking in all 15,000 yards of coal. R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765. (a) In R. v. Adamson, 6 Cr. App. R. 205, the defendant was indicted for larceny by a trick committed on March 24, in conjunction with one A. Evidence that on March 31 both men were seen acting in an exactly similar way to that adopted on the previous date was held to have been rightly admitted.

Libel.]—See R. v. Pearce, cited ante, p. 356; R. v. Whiley, cited ante, pp. 360, 363.

Rape.]—See R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K. B. 468; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 1070, ante, p. 359.

Receiving.]—The cases and statutes as to evidence on a charge of receiving are given post, tit. Receiving.

Threatening letters.]—On an indictment for sending a threatening letter, prior and subsequent letters from the prisoner to the party threatened may be given in evidence to explain the meaning and intent of the particular letter upon which the indictment is framed, R. v. Robinson, 2 Leach, 749, if the intent cannot be inferred from the letter itself. R. v. Boucher, 4 C. & P. 562.

Matter of defence.]—Matter of defence, when given in evidence under the general issue (see ante, p. 166), is proved by parol evidence, or by records or other written evidence, according to the rules laid down in the next chapter; when pleaded, and put in issue by the replication, it is also proved in the same manner, subject to the same rules as indictments (ante, p. 61).

Upon an indictment for a rape, the defendant may give general evidence of the woman's character for want of chastity (or that she is a common prostitute, R. v. Clay, 5 Cox, 146), or he may prove that she had before had connection with him: R. v. Riley, 18 Q. B. D. 481; 56 L. J. (M. C.) 52: R. v. Martin, 6 C. & P. 562, and n.; but not that she had had connection with others: R. v. Holmes, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 334; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 12: R. v. Cockroft, 11 Cox, 410, per Martin, B., and Willes, J. (overruling R. v. Robins, 2 M. & Rob. 512): R. v. Hodgson, R. & R. 211; and see post, tit. Rape. The same rule applies to indictments for assault with intent to commit rape: R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 241: or for indecent assault: R. v. Holmes, supra. See R. v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 589; and 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 945; or for carnal knowledge of girls under sixteen. See R. v. Cargill, [1913] 2 K. B. 271; 77 J. P. 347; 108 L. T. 816; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 665; 23 Cox, 382. Upon an indictment for libel, the defendant has been allowed to give in evidence such other parts of the same publication as were fairly connected with the libel in question, and upon the same topic, in order to disprove the motive imputed to him by the indictment, and to show the fair construction that should be put upon the passages therein set out. R. v. Lambert, 31 St. Tr. 335; 2 Camp. 398. And in R. v. Horne Tooke, 25 St. Tr. 1; 1 East, P. C. 61, 62, it being proved by the prosecution that the defendant had distributed several publications advocating republican principles, which were offered in evidence, in order to produce a presumption that parliamentary reform (which was expected to be set up by the prisoner in his defence) was a mere pretext to cover his treasonable purposes, the defendant, in order to rebut that presumption, was allowed to give in evidence a book upon parliamentary reform, written by him, and published twelve years before.

Character.]—The prisoner is allowed to call witnesses to speak generally as to his character, but not to give evidence of particular acts, unless it tends directly to the disproof of some of the facts in issue. The proper time for calling witnesses to character is before verdict and not after verdict in mitigation of sentence. R. v. Mullins, 3 Cox, 526; 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1110. A witness to character is not allowed to speak to his own opinion of the prisoner's disposition, but only as to the general reputation in which the prisoner is held. R. v. Rowton, L. & C. 520; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 57. Witnesses called by the prisoner as to character may be cross-examined either as to particular facts, R. v. Hodgkiss, 7 C. & P. 298, or as to the grounds of their belief. Taylor. Evid. (11th ed.) s. 352. But it has been held that such a witness cannot be cross-examined as to circumstances of suspicion against the accused arising on the day of the alleged offence. R. v. Rogan, 1 Cox, 291, Erle, J. General evidence of good character may be rebutted by general evidence of bad character. R. v. Rowton, supra. As to the proper direction to be given to the jury with regard to the effect of evidence of good character see R. v. Bliss Hill, 82 J. P. 194; 13 Cr. App. R. 125. And if the prisoner endeavours to establish a good character, either by calling witnesses himself, or by cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution, the prosecution is at liberty, in most cases, to give proof of the prisoner's previous convictions. R. v. Gadbury, 8 C. & P. 676 : R. v. Shrimpton, 2 Den. 319; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 37. (a) And where he is himself called as a witness he may be cross-examined as to his character or previous offences, charges, or convictions, if the proof that he has committed or been convicted of another offence is admissible to prove that he is guilty of the offence charged or if he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establishing his good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or if the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution, or he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (f) (ii.), (iii.), post, pp. 458 et seq. The statute does not refer to mere assertions of innocence on the part of the accused nor to reasons given by him for such assertions, but to cases where evidence as to character is given by the accused, or where evidence of the good character of the accused is sought to be elicited from the witnesses for the prosecution. R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K. B. 746; 22 Cox, 330; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 841. Cf. R. v. Ferguson, 2 Cr. App. R. 250; and see further, post, p. 462. The same course may be adopted if proof of the commission or conviction of another offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence charged (ante, pp. 355 et seq.). And apparently the previous convictions can now be put in evidence under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 6 (post, p. 474).

The several cases just mentioned, when carefully considered, will be found to be not exceptions to, but rather illustrations of, the rule that nothing may be given in evidence which does not tend directly to the proof or disproof of the matter in issue. In most of them, the evidence admitted tended directly to the proof of the knowledge or intention of the defendant at the time of the commission of the offence, which was a material ingredient in the crime imputed (ante, p. 355). In the case of rape (ante, p. 365, under heading "Matter of Defence") the evidence tended to show the great improbability of any resistance upon the part of the woman, and also that she was not entitled to credit as a witness.

CHAPTER II.

THE MANNER OF PROVING THE MATTERS PUT IN ISSUE.

SECT. 1.

PRELIMINARY MATTERS.

EVIDENCE may be classed under three heads: (1) admissions or confessions, (2) presumptions, and (3) proofs. These will be considered in detail in the several sections of this chapter. But before entering on particular consideration of the subject, it may be necessary first to notice one or two general rules relating to evidence. Generally speaking, at common law the rules of evidence in criminal cases are the same as in civil cases, R. v. Burdett, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 3 B. & Ald. 717; subject to certain specific statutory modifications, and to the rule of practice that more evidence is required to justify conviction of crime than a verdict for the plaintiff in a civil action for trespass arising out of the same circumstances. See R. v. White, 4 F. & F. 383, and note; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2055; and see post, p. 396, Presumptions.

Primary evidence.]—It is a general rule that the best evidence of which the nature of the case will admit must be produced, if it can possibly be obtained; if not, then the next best evidence that can be obtained is admitted. This means that, as a general rule, where a written document is to be used as proof, the original document must be itself produced, and where a fact can be proved by persons who actually saw or heard it they must be called (but see post, p 370). For if it appears that there is any better evidence existing than that which is produced, the non-production of such evidence creates a presumption that, if produced, it would have revealed some falsehood which at present is concealed. 3 B. Com. 368; Gilb. Evid. 16; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) s. 391: R. v. James, 1 Show. 397; Carth. 220; cas. temp. Holt, 284; R. v. Paine, 1 Ld. Raym. 729; 1 Salk. 281: Williams v. H. E. I. Co., 3 East. 192. Therefore, before secondary evidence is offered, a foundation for it must first be laid, by proving that evidence at first hand cannot be obtained. The best evidence of the contents of a deed or other written instrument is the written instrument itself; secondary evidence is a true copy, or parol evidence of the contents, of the original. Therefore, before a copy of a written instrument, or parol evidence of its contents. can be received as proof, the absence of the original instrument must be accounted for, by proving that it is lost or destroyed, or that it is in possession of the opposite party. Thus, where it is sought to give in evidence the contents of a telegram sent by the prisoner to a witness, it is necessary that the original message handed to the post office should be produced, and the copy received by the witness cannot be given in evidence unless it is proved that such original has been lost or destroyed. R. v. Regan, 16 Cox, 203, Field, J. The declarations or admissions of the opposite party, however, are always receivable in evidence against him, although they relate to the contents of a deed or other written instrument, and even though its contents be directly in issue in the suit. Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; 10 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 8 : Howard v. Smith, 3 Scott (N. R.) 574; 10 L. J. (N. S.) C. P. 245. See post, Admissions, p. 379.

Records are an exception to the rule as to primary evidence, for they may be proved by exemplifications or other copies, in all cases, unless they are records of the court in which they are to be produced, and the matter of record forms the gist of the pleading to be proved. See Reid v. Margison, 1 Camp. 469; and Burnand v. Nerot, 1 C. & P. 578. This exception has been adopted from necessity because of the difficulty or impossibility of removing the record from its proper custody. To require the record itself to be given in evidence would be productive of great inconvenience, for it probably might be wanted for that purpose in several parts of the kingdom at the same time; besides, by removing it from the place in which it was deposited, there would necessarily be great danger of its being lost. Gilb. Evid. 7, 8. For the same reasons, journals of the House of Lords or House of Commons, libels, answers, depositions, etc., in the ecclesiastical courts in most cases—the rolls of a court baron, and other inferior courts—parish registers—entries in corporation books, or the books of public companies, relating to things public and general, or entries in foreign registers which may not be removed from their proper place of custody, may all be proved by copies duly certified. See Lyall v. Kennedy, 14 App. Cas. 437; 59 L. J. (Q. B.) 268. As to the modes of proving such documents, see post, pp. 448 et seq.; and as to evidence of entries in bankers' books, see post, p. 448.

When the copy of a document, the original whereof is not evidence at common law, is made evidence by Act of Parliament, a copy must be produced; the original is not made admissible evidence by implication. Burdon v. Rickets, 2 Camp. 121, n.

Notice to produce.]—Where a written instrument is in the hands of the opposite party, it is necessary to serve him or his solicitor with a notice to produce it : and if he does not produce it at the trial, in pursuance of the notice, then, upon proving the service of the notice, secondary evidence of its contents may be given. The rule in this respect is the same in criminal as in civil cases : Att.-Gen. v. Le Marchant, 2 T. R. 201, n.; subject to the qualification that the rules for compelling discovery of documents by the defendant do not apply to criminal cases, save in the case of proceedings under the Crown Suits Acts and of indictments on which a civil right is in issue. See Spokes v. Grosvenor Hotel Co. [1897] 2 Q. B. 124; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 572. The notice to produce must be served a reasonable time before the trial. What is such reasonable time must of course depend on the circumstances of each case. In general, when the parties live at a distance from the assize town, notice must be served before the commission day: R. v. Ellicombe, 1 M. & Rob. 260: see Trist v. Johnson, Id. 259; but this will depend on the nature of the document and the knowledge or probability of its being in the hands of the parties at the assize town, or the contrary. See the cases collected, Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.); 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2074. In cases where the nature of the pleading gives sufficient notice to the defendant of the subject of inquiry, so that he may prepare himself to produce the written instrument, if necessary for his defence, a notice to produce it is not required. Thus, it has been held that in trover for a bond the plaintiff may give parol evidence of it, to support the general description of it in the declaration, without having given the defendant previous notice to produce it. How v. Hall, 14 East, 274. So. upon an indictment for stealing a bill of exchange, parol evidence of it was admitted without a notice to produce it. R. v. Aickles, 1 Leach, 294; 2 East, P. C. 675. And on an indictment for stealing a post letter described as addressed in a certain way, Pollock, C.B., held that a witness might be asked how the letter was addressed, although no notice to produce it had been given. R. v. Clube, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 698. So upon an indictment for administering an unlawful oath, where it appeared that the defendant read the oath from a paper, parol evidence of what the defendant in fact said was held sufficient, without giving him notice to produce the paper. R. v. Moors, 6 East, 419, n., 421, n. So, where a seditious meeting came to certain resolutions, and the defendant, who was chairman, gave a copy of these resolutions to another person it was held that this copy might be given in evidence, without a notice to produce the original. R. v. Hunt, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 171; 3 B. & Ald. 566. In the same case it was also held that it was not necessary to produce or account for banners bearing certain inscriptions, etc., exhibited at such meeting, but that parol evidence of such matters by eye-witnesses was perfectly admissible to show the general character and intention of the assembly. But upon an indictment for setting fire to a house, with intent to defraud an insurance office, secondary evidence of the policy of insurance cannot be given, without proof of proper notice to produce the original. R. v. Kitson, Dears, 187; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 118. And upon an indictment for perjury in falsely swearing that there was no draft of a statutory declaration which had been prepared by the defendant, the materiality of the existence of such draft turned upon its contents and the fact of certain alterations having been made upon it. Parol evidence of the contents of the draft and of the alterations made in it was held inadmissible, no notice to produce such draft having been given to the defendant. R. v. Elworthy, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 103; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 3. On the trial of an indictment for stealing a ring which had not been recovered, Channell, B., refused to allow evidence to be given of the contents of an inscription upon it, as no notice had been given to the prisoner to produce the ring, although his lordship admitted evidence of the fact that the ring bore some inscription. R. v. Farr, 4 F. & F. 336. But it is submitted that this case is inconsistent with those above cited. And in R. v. Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 97, it was decided by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved that although where the question is as to the effect of a written instrument, the instrument itself is primary evidence of its contents, and until its non-production is excused, no secondary evidence can be received, there is no case whatever deciding that when the issue is as to the state of a chattel, e.g., the soundness of a horse, or the equality of the bulk of goods to the sample, the production of the chattel is primary evidence, and that no evidence can be given in regard to it, unless it is produced in court, or its absence is accounted for. And therefore on the trial of an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, evidence was held to have been properly admitted that the prisoner had on a previous occasion endeavoured to obtain money by pretending that a ring, which was not produced at the trial, was a diamond ring, which it was not. Id.

Hearsay, generally.]—It is a general rule that hearsay is no evidence and for two reasons: (a) what the other person said was not put upon oath: (b) the party who is to be affected by it had no opportunity of cross-examining him. R. v. Gunnell, 16 Cox, 154 (C. C. R.): R. v. Saunders [1899] 1 Q. B. 490; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 296; 1 Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.) 44. The rule applies with equal force to such evidence tendered on behalf of the defence as it does with regard to evidence for the prosecution. R. v. Thomson [1912] 3 K. B. 19; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 892; 23 Cox, 187; 76 J. P. 431; 28 T. L. R. 478. To this rule, however, there are some exceptions, arising from necessity:—

(1) Hearsay is admissible to prove the death of a person beyond sea. Bull. (N. P.) 294; Doe v. Griffin, 15 East, 293.

(2) Hearsay is good evidence to prove a prescription, Bull. (N. P.) 295; or custom, Nicholls v. Parker, 14 East, 331, n.: Doe v. Sisson, 12 East, 62: see R. v. Antrobus, 2 A. & E. 788: Pim. v. Currell, 6 M. & W. 234; or public right; R. v. Bedfordshire 4 E. & B. 535, 541; 24 L. J. (Q. B.) 81; and for this purpose old witnesses are usually called to prove what they heard in their youth, from old persons since deceased, on the subject. See Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.) 48; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) s. 607.

(3) What a witness has been heard to say at another time may, it is said, be given in evidence, in order to invalidate or confirm the testimony he gives in court. 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 23; but see Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) s. 1443. Where a witness has been cross-examined with a view to showing that his evidence on a material matter was a mere afterthought, evidence that he had previously made a similar statement may be given, though it is but hearsay, in order to rebut the allegation. R. v. Benjamin, 8 Cr. App. R. 146.

(4) Res gestæ.]—When hearsay is introduced not as a medium of proof to establish a distinct fact, but as being part of the transaction in question, it is admissible. R. v. Gordon, 21 St. Tr. 485, 535; 2 Doug. 591. This kind of evidence is usually described as res gestæ: and it does not seem quite accurate to class it as hearsay. See Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.) 51; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) s. 583. Under this head declarations made by an agent, acting at the time within the scope of his authority, are received against his principal. R. v. Hall, 8 C. & P. 358. It would seem that the conduct of a person against whom an offence is committed, and especially the fact that he complained soon after the offence to persons to whom he would naturally complain, is relevant and admissible. Steph. Dig. Evid. (5th ed.) art. 8, p. 11; R. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246; and see infra.

Homicide.]—On an indictment for murder or manslaughter, a statement made by the deceased immediately after he was knocked down, as to how the accident happened, has been held admissible. R. v. Foster, 6 C. & P. 325, Park, J., Patteson, J., and Gurney, B.; R. v. Lunny, 6 Cox, 477 (Ir.), Monahan, C.J. In R. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox, 341, on an indictment for murder, a statement made by the deceased almost immediately after the fatal wound was inflicted, on coming out of the house where it had been inflicted, and in which house the prisoner was directly afterwards found lying with his throat cut and speechless, was rejected by Cockburn, C.J., as not being part of the res gestæ. See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 583, n. (a). R. v. Bedingfield was followed in R. v. Goddard, 15 Cox, 7, by Hawkins, J., in which case the deceased shortly after the occurrence which resulted in her death was found in a fainting condition and apparently dying. It was proposed to give in evidence, as part of the res gestæ, a statement which she then made as to the cause of her injuries. The judge, however, refused to receive it in evidence as part of the res gestæ, but it afterwards appearing that the deceased had prefaced her statement by the words "I'm dying, look to my children," he admitted the statement as a dying declaration. In R. v. Lunny, 6 Cox, 477 (Ir.), statements made by a deceased person to the first person who came up after the fatal wound was inflicted were held admissible as part of the res gestæ. Where on the trial of a prisoner for the murder of his wife, a neighbour swore that a week before the alleged crime was committed the deceased visited her house, bring an axe and carving-knife, and handed them to the witness, evidence was admitted of what was said by the deceased to the witness on handing her the instruments. R. v. Edwards, 12 Cox, 230, Quain, J. Where on a trial for murder it was proposed by the prosecution to ask a witness what the deceased said on leaving her lodgings, that being the last occasion on which she was seen alive, Cockburn, C.J., refused to allow the question to be put, on the ground that what the deceased said was no part of the act of leaving, but only an incidental remark or statement of intention, which might or might not have been carried out. R. v. Wainwright, 13 Cox, 171. See also R. v. Pook, Id. 172 n.; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2082.

Except in the class of cases next to be considered only the fact and not the terms of the complaint may be proved. Steph. Dig. Evid. (5th ed.), p. 11.

Rape, etc.]—In R. v. Lillyman [1896] 2 Q. B. 167; 65 L. J. (M. C.) 195; 18 Cox, 346; 60 J. P. 536, it was held after consideration of the earlier authorities that upon the trial of an indictment for rape or other kindred offences against women or girls (including indecent assault and offences within 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, ss. 4, 5) the fact that a complaint was made by the prosecutrix shortly after the alleged occurrence, and the particulars of such complaint, may, so far as they relate to the charge against the prisoner, be given in evidence by the prosecution, not as being evidence of the facts complained of, but as evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with the story told by her in the witness box, and as negativing consent on her part. (a).

The court accepted R. v. Brazier, 1 Leach, 199; 1 East, P. C. 443, as correctly deciding that the mere complaint is no evidence of the facts complained of, and that its admissibility depends on proof of the facts by sworn or other legalized testimony; and it also accepted the ruling of Bramwell, L.J., in R. v. Wood, 14 Cox, 46, and the opinion of Sir James Stephen, Dig. Evid. (5th ed.), art. 8, note v.; and see 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 9; 4 Bl. Com. 211, 213.

In R. v. Lillyman (supra) the charges in the indictment were—

(1) Attempt to have carnal knowledge of a girl of the age of 13 and under 16: (2) Assault on the same girl with intent to ravish (vide R. v. Brazier, supra): and (3) Indecent assault. The defendant was convicted on the first count only. On the first charge consent was immaterial, on the second and third it was material.

Some differences of judicial opinion arose as to the extent of the application of the rule laid down in R. v. Lillyman. These differences have been for the most part settled by R. v. Osborne [1905] 1 K. B. 551; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 311; 92 L. T. 393; 69 J. P. 189; 53 W. R. 494; 21 T. L. R. 288. In that case the indictment was for an indecent assault on a girl under 13, and consent was immaterial. It was held that in the case of charges of sexual offences against females, evidence of fresh complaint is admissible "whether non-consent is legally a necessary part of the issue or whether on the other hand it is what may be called a collateral issue of fact," in consequence of the story told by the complainant in the witness box, and the complaint is not admissible merely as negativing consent, but as being consistent with the sworn evidence of the complainant (b). In R. v. Folley, 60 J. P. 569, Hall, Recorder, held that the rule was applicable to all criminal cases, and applied it to a charge of felonious wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm. But it is very doubtful whether this view can be sustained, so as to admit the particulars of the complaint.

(a) This decision overrules certain earlier authorities so far as they excluded proof of the particulars of the complaint. R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 241; 1 Phillips and Amos on Evidence, p. 204 (2): R. v. Walker, 2 M. & Rob. 212: R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 420: R. v. Wink, 6 C. & P. 397; R. v. Osborne, C. & Mar. 622. But the C. C. R. to some extent distinguished these authorities as deciding no more than that the complaint was not part of the res gestæ, but only confirmatory evidence. For colonial decision on this subject, see R. v. Jenkinson [1904] 21 Cape Sup. Ct. 233: R. v. McNeill [1907] Victoria L. R. 265; and 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 943.

(b) This decision appears to overrule R. v. Rowlands, 62 J. P. 459, and R. v. Kingham, 66 J. P. 393, and to approve R. v. Kiddle, 19 Cox, 77.

The rule as to fresh complaint has not been applied in the temporal courts to charges of sexual misconduct with males. R. v. Hoodless, 64 J. P. 282. As to ecclesiastical courts, see Chesney v. Newsholme [1908] Prob. 301.

To be admissible the complaint must be made on the first opportunity which reasonably offers itself after the offence (R. v. Lillyman and R. v. Osborne, supra), which is for the court before which the complaint is offered in evidence. R. v. Ingrey, 64 J. P. 107, Russell, L.C.J.: R. v. Lee, 7 Cr. App. R. 31. If a considerable time has elapsed between the commission of the offence charged and the complaint, it is inadmissible. R. v. Rush, 60 J. P. 777, Wright, J. In this case a day elapsed between the alleged assault and the complaint, and it was elicited by questions put by the girl's mother. In R. v. Ingrey, supra, a complaint of an offence committed on a Saturday was rejected because it was not made till the Tuesday following; and in R. v. Pantaney, 71 J. P. 101 (C. C. R.), on a charge of indecent assault, a statement made by a girl to her sister on the day of the alleged assault as to something alleged to have been done by the defendant three weeks before was held inadmissible; and see 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 944. But the complaint need not be on the very earliest opportunity. R. v. Kiddle, 19 Cox, 77. In R. v. Guttridge, 9 C. & P. 471, where the prosecutrix was not called, it was sought to put in her complaint, but it was rejected by Parke, B., on the ground that, not being part of the res gestæ, but only confirmatory evidence, it could not be used, as the prosecutrix had given no evidence. Where the complaint is made by the female alleged to have been wronged, not on her own initiative, but in answer to questions, it is not admissible if it was elicited by questions of a leading and inducing or intimidating character. R. v. Osborne [1905] 1 K. B. 551, 561; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 311. The mere fact that the statement is made in answer to a question is not in itself sufficient to make it inadmissible as a complaint. The question for the court is whether the statement is spontaneous in the sense that it is an unassisted and unvarnished story of what happened. In each case the questions as to the character of any questions put, the relationship between the questioner and the complainant, as well as the other circumstances, are matters within the discretion of the judge. R. v. Norcott [1917] 1 K. B. 347; 86 L. J. (K. B.) 78; 81 J. P. 123; 25 Cox, 698; 12 Cr. App. R. 166; and see R. v. Wilbourne, 12 Cr. App. R. 280.

(5) Statements as to bodily or mental feelings.]—Whenever the bodily or mental feelings of a person are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings, made at the time in question, are admissible. Areson v. Lord Kinnaird, 6 East, 188; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed), s. 580: Aylesford Peerage Claim, 11 App. Cas. 1; and see Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed), p. 52. Thus the representations by a sick person of the nature and effects of the malady under which he is labouring are receivable. R. v. Blandy, 18 St. Tr. 1117, 1135-1138: and see R. v. Guttridge, 9 C. & P. 471, 472, Parke, B. But written communications from a patient to his doctor describing his symptoms have been held inadmissible. Witt v. Witt, 3 Sw. & Tr. 143; 32 L. J. (P. & M.) 179, Cresswell, J. On a trial for murder by poisoning, statements by the deceased, shortly before he took poison, are admissible to prove the state of his health at that time. R. v. Johnson, 2 C. & K. 354; 15 L. J. (M. C.) 7 : R. v. Blandy, supra. On an indictment for murder alleged to have been committed by withholding proper food from a child, a complaint by the child of being hungry is admissible. R. v. Conde, 10 Cox, 547. But such expressions, statements, and complaints, although admissible in evidence so far as they show the bodily condition of the person making them, at the time when they were made, cannot be given in evidence to show who caused such condition, or how it was caused. R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox, 471, Charles, J. : R. v. Abbott, 67 J. P. 151, Kennedy, J. : R. v. Thomson [1912] 3 K. B. 19; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 892; 28 T. L. R. 478; 76 J. P. 431. As to dying declarations, see infra.

(6) Declarations against interest by deceased persons.]—Declarations made by persons since deceased against their pecuniary or proprietary interest are admissible. Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East, 109 : Sturla v. Freccia, 5 App. Cas. 643; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 668 et seq. Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), p. 55; 2 Smith, L. C. (12th ed.), 301 et seq. The rule laid down in Higham v. Ridgway does not make the books of a firm evidence merely because one partner is dead. Re Fountaine [1909] 2 Ch. 382, 390, 396; 78 L. J. Ch. 648.

(7) Declarations by deceased persons in course of duty or business.]—A statement (whether written or oral, R. v. Birmingham, 1 B. & S. 763; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 63) or entry, which it is the duty of a person to make in the ordinary course of his business or professional employment, is admissible in evidence after his decease, Price v. Earl of Torrington, 1 Salk. 285; 2 Smith, L. C. (12th ed.), 294, provided it be made contemporaneously with the act to which it relates. Doe v. Turford, 3 B. & Ad. 890. On this principle field-book entries by a deceased surveyor made on a survey in which he was professionally employed have been held admissible. Mellor v. Walmesley [1905] 2 Ch. 164 (C. A.); 74 L. J. (Ch.) 475. It is essential to show that the statements were made contemporaneously and in pursuance of an ascertained duty or definite instructions. Mercer v. Denne [1905] 2 Ch. 538, 558; 74 L. J. (Ch.) 723. But such statement or entry is only admissible to prove those facts which it was the duty of the person making the statement or entry to include in it, Chambers v. Bernasconi, 1 C. M. & R. 347, 368; 3 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 373, and of which he had personal knowledge. Brain v. Preece, 11 M. & W. 773 : R. v. Clapham, 4 C. & P. 29; and see Stephen, Evid. (5th ed.), p. 36; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 697 : and Re Fountaine [1909] 2 Ch. 382, 396; 78 L. J. (Ch.) 648 et seq. In accordance with this exception to the general rule excluding hearsay, where on a trial for murder it appeared that the deceased, a constable, in the course of his duty had made, shortly before his death, a verbal statement to his superior officer as to where he was going, and what he was going to do, it was held that such statement, which was to the effect that deceased was going to watch the prisoner, was admissible. R. v. Buckley, 13 Cox, 293, Lush and Mellor, JJ.

(8) Dying declarations.]—Upon an indictment for murder or manslaughter, the dying declarations of the deceased are receivable in evidence, if it appears to the satisfaction of the judge (R. v. John, 1 East, P. C. 357, 358; 1 Leach, 504 n. :

R. v. Welbourn, 1 East, P. C. 358, 360; R. v. Hucks, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 521) that the deceased was conscious of his being in a dying state at the time he made them (R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, 502; 1 East, P. C. 354, 356: R. v. Welbourn, 1 East, P. C. 358: R. v. Christie, Carr. "The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted is that they are declarations made in extremity when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone: when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth: a situation so solemn and so awful is considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath administered in a court of justice." Eyre, C.B., in R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach. 500, cited and approved in R. v. Perry [1909] 2 K. B. 697, 701; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 1034.

The result of the decisions is that there must be a settled hopeless expectation of imminent death, i.e., that the declarant must have abandoned all hope of living; but that the declarant need not be expecting immediate death, i.e., within the day, though he must be expecting to die within a very short distance of time. R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 21, Willes, J., adopted in R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox, 471, Charles, J., and approved in R. v. Perry, supra. (b) See also R. v. Austin, 8 Cr. App. R. 27.

"There must be an expectation of impending and almost immediate death, from the causes then operating. The authorities show that there must be no hope whatever." R. v. Jenkins, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 187; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 82; 11 Cox, 250. "Dying declarations ought to be admitted with scrupulous, and I had almost said with superstitious care," Id. per Byles, J., and see R. v. Brooks, 1 Cox, 6: R. v. Dalmas, 1 Cox, 95: R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 21: R. v. Mooney, 5 Cox, 318 (Ir.): R. v. Nicolas, 6 Cox, 120: R. v. Qualter, Id. 357. It must be shown for the prosecution that the deceased, when he made the statement, was under the impression that death was impending, not merely that he had received an injury from which death must ensue, but that he then believed that he was at the point of death. R. v. Forester, 4 F. & F. 857; 10 Cox, 368: R. v. Smith, 16 Cox, 170: R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox, 503: R. v. Whitmarsh, 62 J. is not enough. R. v. Thomas, 1 Cox, 52; R. v. Errington, 2 Lew. 148. Where the party expressed an opinion that she should not recover, and made a declaration at that time; but afterwards, on the same day, asked a person whether he thought she would "rise again," it was held that this showed such a hope of recovery as rendered the previous declaration inadmissible. R. v. Fagent, 7 C. & P. 238 : see R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 418 : R. v. Welbourn, 1 East, P. C. 358. Where, however, it is clearly proved that the declaration was made under the solemn belief of impending death it was held admissible, although the declarant at a later period of the same day thought that she should recover. R. v. Hubbard, 14 Cox, 565, Hawkins, J. : R. v. Austin, 8 Cr. App. R. 27 : and cf. R. v. Taylor, 3 Cox, 84. Where the declaration was reduced into writing, and in it the declarant was represented in the first instance as saying, "I have made the above statement with the fear of death before me, and with no hope of my recovery," but on its being read over to her, and on her being asked to correct any mistake, she said, "no hope at present of my recovery," and the writer then inserted the words "at present," it was held that this declaration was not admissible in evidence, as it did not appear to have been made under a settled hopeless expectation of death. R. v. Jenkins, ante, p. 375. So, where a declarant within half an hour before making her declaration said, "I do not think I shall be long with you," and after the declaration, at the request of a doctor, had been made, said "Yes," in answer to the doctor's question, "Do you make this statement with the fear of death before your eyes?" it was held that these circumstances did not warrant the conclusion that the declaration had been made under such a settled, hopeless expectation of immediate death as to render it admissible. R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox, 471, Charles, J.; and cf. R. v. Abbott, 67 J. P. 151, Kennedy, J. If the declarant believed himself to be in a dying state when he made the declaration, the fact that the surgeon thought him likely to recover will not render the declaration inadmissible. R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 21, Willes, J. : R. v. Whitworth, 1 F. & F. 382. The dying declarations of a boy ten years old have been held admissible. R. v. Perkins, 9 C. & P. 395; 2 Mood. 135. Those of a child of four have been held not so. R. v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598.

In R. v. Cleary, 2 F. & F. 850, Erle, J., said that he could not, in the face of a statement by the deceased, from which it appeared that he did not think he should die, presume that a man who had been shot through the body must necessarily feel that he was about to die. In R. v. Morgan, 14 Cox, 337, 389, Denman, J., acting, it would seem, upon a misconception of the ruling in R. v. Cleary (supra), said that there was no case in which the consciousness of the deceased that he was in a dying state at the time he made the declaration had been founded entirely upon an inference drawn from the nature of the wound itself, and from giving the deceased credit for ordinary intelligence as to its natural results; but the attention of Denman, J., was not drawn to R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, 500; 1 East, P. C. 354, 356 : R. v. Dingler, 1 Leach, 504 n. : and R. v. Bonner, 6 C. & P. 386, in which the contrary was expressly held. Nor were those cases referred to, nor was the question to which they relate raised in R. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox, 341 (ante, p. 371), where Cockburn, C.J., rejected the declaration of a woman made almost immediately after her throat had been cut, and a few minutes before her death, there being nothing beyond the nature of the wound to show that she was under the sense of impending death. It would seem to be clear from R. v. Woodcock, R. v. Dingler, R. v. Bonner, and R. v. Cleary (supra) that the nature of the wound may be of itself sufficient evidence of impending death: see the reporters' notes to R. v. Morgan and R. v. Bedingfield (supra).

A statement made by a person under circumstances which would not render it admissible as a dying declaration becomes admissible as such if subsequently repeated in his presence and at his request by the person to whom it was previously made, and if assented to by him, if at the time of such repetition he was in such a state that if he had made a statement it would have been admissible as a dying declaration. R. v. Steele, 12 Cox, 168, per Lush, J. (a)

Dying declarations are only admissible where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the cause of the death the subject of the dying declaration. A dying declaration is not admissible to disprove a fact upon which perjury is assigned: R. v. Mead, 1 L. J. (K. B.) 88; 2 B. & C. 605; 4 D. & R. 120, Abbott, C.J.; nor to prove rape: R. v. Newton, 1 F. & F. 641; or robbery: R. v. Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233. So upon an indictment for administering savin or using instruments to procure abortion, or for using instruments with intent to procure miscarriage, the woman's dying declarations are not admissible, though they relate to the cause of her death. R. v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & C. 608 n.: R. v. Hind, Bell, 253; 29 L. J. (M. C.) 147; 8 Cox, 300. And where a man was robbed, and died before the trial of the person charged with the robbery. Bolland, B., refused to receive his dying declarations respecting the robbery, holding that such declarations were evidence only in cases where the death of the party is the subject of the inquiry. R. v. Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233. But on an indictment for the murder of A. by poison, which was also taken by B., who died in consequence, the dying declarations of B. were held admissible. R. v. Baker, 2 M. & Rob. 53. On an indictment for manslaughter, the declaration of the deceased at the time when she believed herself dying was admitted in evidence, although it related generally to the conduct of the prisoner, and not to the particular violence. R. v. Murton, 3 F. & F. 492. The dying declarations of an accomplice have been held to be admissible in evidence. R. v. Tinckler, 1 East, P. C. 354, 356 (more correctly reported 1 Den. v., vi.), provided he were at the time such a person as would be competent as a witness. R. v. Drummond, 1 East, P. C. 353 (a); 1 Leach, 378. And as dying declarations are only admissible where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge (R. v. Mead, supra), it would seem that the only case in which the dying declaration of an accomplice can be given in evidence against the prisoner is where the prisoner is charged in assisting in the self-destruction of the accomplice. 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2085. In R. v. Jessop, 16 Cox, 204, on an indictment charging with murder the survivor of two persons who had agreed to commit suicide together, Field, J., admitted statements by the deceased made when purchasing poison in the absence of the prisoner, on the ground that the acts and words of the deceased in carrying out a pre-arranged plan were evidence against the prisoner. Dying declarations in favour of the party charged with the death are admissible in evidence, as they may have an influence on the amount of punishment. R. v. Scaife, 2 M. & Rob. 551; 2 Lew. 150. Where two such declarations were made, the second of which alone was reduced into writing in the presence of a magistrate, this written declaration not being forthcoming at the trial, the judges held that, in the absence of it, the first declaration was admissible. R. v. Tranter and Reason, 16 St. Tr. 1; 1 Str. 499; Fost. 292. But where a declaration in articulo mortis was reduced into writing and signed by the party, the judge required production of the original and refused to receive either a copy of the paper or parol evidence of the declaration. R. v. Gay, 7 C. & P. 230 : R. v. Trowter, 1 East, P. C. 356 : R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, 500. (a) The declaration need not be on oath, R. v. Bernadotti, 11 Cox, 316 : it is equivalent to sworn evidence, R. v. Ashton, 2 Lew.147; but no statement in the declaration is admissible which would not have been so if the declarant had been examined on oath. R. v. Sellers, Carr. Supp. 233. Declarations taken under Russell Gurney's Act (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), s. 6, are distinct from dying declarations. See post, p. 435.

It was formerly held to be no objection against a declaration which had been reduced into writing that it was made in answer to questions put to the deceased, and was not a continuous statement made by him, R. v. Fagent, 7 C. & P. 238, nor, apparently, that it was made in answer to leading questions. R. v. Smith, L. & C. 607; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 153; 10 Cox, 82. In R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox, 503, Cave, J., held that a statement which had been reduced into writing must, to be admissible as a dying declaration, be in the actual words of the deceased, and if questions are put the questions and answers must both be given. But in R. v. Bottomley [1903] 38 L. J. Newsp. 311; 115 L. T. J. 88, Lawrance, J., ruled that a dying deposition in the form of question and answer was admissible, although the answers only and not the questions had been taken down. (b) In R. v. Mann, 49 J. P. 743, Denman, J., is reported to have held that a statement, although not admissible as a deposition or a dying declaration, was admissible as a statement made by the deceased in the presence of the prisoner; but in R. v. Mitchell (supra), Cave, J., expressly dissented from R. v. Mann (supra), saying that he thought Denman, J., must have been misreported.

(b) In R. v. Corbett [1903] Queensland St. Rep. 246, Griffith, C.J., said, that R. v. Mitchell unsettled what had before been the law, and followed R. v. Smith, saying further, that it was not essential that a dying declaration should be proved by writing.

SECT. 2.

ADMISSIONS AND CONFESSIONS.

ADMISSIONS and confessions fall into two classes, judicial and extra-judicial :—

I. Judicial confessions.]—These may be subdivided into four kinds—1.) Where the defendant in open court freely and voluntarily confesses that he s guilty of the offence of which he is charged in the indictment. See Powlter's ase, 11 Co. Rep. 29. This admission may be of guilt as to the facts, subject to he view of the court as to whether admission of the facts amounts to a plea of uilty in law. See R. v. Brown, 17 L. J. (M. C.) 145; and ante, p. 168. Where he defendant pleads guilty, and the court accepts the plea, further proof or trial s needless, and the plea is recorded by the proper officer, and the court proceeds o judgment on the prisoner's own confession. This rule applies to treason and nisprision of treason, where the accused confesses "willingly, without violence, n open court." 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, s. 2; Fost. 241. Confession may be made n arraignment, or at any subsequent stage of the proceedings on the trial, by withdrawal (retraxit), with the consent of the court, the plea of not guilty, and substitution of a plea of guilty (postea cognovit indictamentum). 1 Chit. Cr. L. 429. In Sir Hardres Waller's case [1660] Kelyng. (ed. Loveland), p. 13, an ndictment for treason was found and the next day delivered at the gaol delivery at the Old Bailey Sessions House, on which day all the prisoners were arraigned and pleaded not guilty, but afterwards some of them withdrew their plea and confessed the indictment, viz., Sir H. Waller and George Fleetwood, which was accordingly recorded by the court: and it was agreed by all the judges that his might be done, although the clerk had recorded their plea of not guilty, for the entry is that such a one postea, or relictâ verificatione, cognovit indictamentum. The report in Howell, 5 St. Tr. 998, 1006, if complete, shows that Waller pleaded guilty before he was given in charge to the jury. The above ruling in Kelyng, was followed in Holdsworth's case [1832] 1 Lew. 279. As to the procedure where the trial is in the High Court, see Crown Office Rules, 1906, rr. 149, 150: Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.), 119, 120. The court will not allow a criminal case to be tried on admissions by the solicitors on both sides, nor unless the admissions are made at the trial by the defendant or his counsel. R. v. Thornhill, 8 C. & P. 575.

(2.) Where the defendant, upon an indictment for misdemeanor, yields himself to the King's mercy, and desires to submit to a small fine: the court may accept such submission if they think fit, without putting the defendant to a direct confession. 2 Hawk. c. 31, s. 3; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 430, 431. If the plea is accepted the procedure is as in case 1. Lambarde, Eirenarcha, Book IV. c. 9.

(3) Where the defendant, upon the preliminary inquiry as to any indictable offence, before justices of the peace, under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), ss. 17, 18, admits either his guilt or any fact which may tend to prove it at the trial.

(4.) Where in other legal proceedings the defendant has made admissions criminating himself. See post, p. 382.

Confession, etc., to justices.]—What may be termed magisterial confessions are admissions either of guilt or of any fact which may tend to prove guilt at the trial made by a defendant on a preliminary inquiry before a justice of the peace in respect of any indictable offence under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848. A distinction has been drawn in the books between treason and misprision of treason on the one side, and felony and misdemeanor on the other. See Berwick's case, Fost. 10; 18 St. Tr. 367: R. v. Willis, 15 St. Tr. 613, 624. But the Act above cited applies to all indictable offences. As to the old mode of proof of a magisterial confession in cases of treason and misprision, see post, p. 395.

The Indictable Offences Act, 1848, provides (s. 18) that, after the examinations of all the witnesses on the part of the prosecution of a person brought before any justice or justices of the peace, charged with any indictable offence, shall have been completed, "the justice of the peace or one of the justices by or before whom such examination shall have been so completed as aforesaid shall, without requiring the attendance of the witnesses, read or cause to be read to the accused the depositions taken against him, and shall say to him these words, or words to the like effect: 'Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? You are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial;' and whatever the prisoner shall then say in answer thereto shall be taken down in writing and read over to him, and shall be signed by the said justice or justices, and kept with the depositions of the witnesses, and shall be transmitted with them as hereinafter mentioned, and afterwards upon the trial of the said accused person the same may, if necessary, be given in evidence against him, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that the justice or justices purporting to sign the same did not in fact sign the same: provided always that the said justice or justices, before such accused person shall make any statement, shall state to him, and give him clearly to understand, that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been holden out to him to induce him to make any admission or confession of his guilt, but that whatever he shall then say may be given in evidence against him upon his trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat; provided nevertheless, that nothing herein enacted or contained shall prevent the prosecutor in any case from giving in evidence any admission or confession or other statement of the person accused or charged, made at any time, which by law would be admissible as evidence against such person." (a)

(a) Before this Act it was a common practice for justices to question or examine the accused: and confessions elicited by such questions were held admissible against him on the trial if no undue influence was exercised. 2 Hawk. c. 46, ss. 31—45: R. v. Ellis, Ry. & M. 432. But since the Act of 1848, the magistrate appears not to be entitled to question the accused at all (R. v. Pettit, 4 Cox, 164, Wilde, C.J.); and answers to questions put to him are inadmissible at the trial (R. v. Berriman, 6 Cox, 388, Erle, J.) unless he elects to be sworn as a witness under 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, post, p. 458. Even before 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, it was established that where a prisoner is willing to make a statement, the justice ought to receive it, but ought, before doing so, entirely to

The second caution contained in the above proviso is not strictly necessary nless it appears that some inducement or threat had previously been held out o the accused, but it is prudent always to give it. R. v. Sansome, 1 Den. 545; 9 L. J. (M. C.) 143. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 28, declares, that the forms given n the schedule to that Act are to be deemed good, valid, and sufficient in law. The form (N.) of the prisoner's statement before the magistrate contains the rst caution, but not the second. And it has accordingly been held that, if the risoner's statement be returned purporting to be signed by the magistrate, nd bearing on the face of it the first caution, it is admissible, by virtue of ection 18, without further proof. Id. But it will always be prudent in the nagistrate to give the prisoner the second caution, as being the only course vhich will preclude all possibility of question as to the admissibility of his tatement; for as it has not been decided whether that caution is not absolutely equisite when a previous inducement or threat has been held out, and as the nagistrate can never be certain whether such previous inducement or threat as or has not been held out, a perplexing question might arise as to the suffiiency of the first caution to remove the effect on the prisoner's mind of such nducement or threat, should it turn out in fact that it had been held out. See per Erle, J., R. v. Sansome, supra. A prisoner, having been once xamined before a justice, and cautioned by him in the manner prescribed y this statute, made a statement, which was taken down in writing but not igned by him or by the justice; he was then remanded, and on a subsequent lay was brought again before the justice; no new witnesses were then examined, ut the prisoner's solicitor put some questions to a witness, who had been xamined before; the prisoner was again cautioned, but declined to make any urther statement; the statement made by him on the first occasion was held dmissible against him on his trial. R. v. Bond, 1 Den. 517; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 38; see R. v. Stripp, Dears. 648; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 109. Where the prisoner as been duly cautioned by the magistrate in pursuance of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, . 18, anything said by him thereupon is admissible in evidence against him, lthough there may have been a previous promise or threat held out to him o induce him to confess. R. v. Bate, 11 Cox, 686, Montague Smith, J. That he caution has been given requires no further proof than the fact of its appearng to have been so given on the face of the prisoner's statement, returned ogether with the depositions. Id. Oral evidence may be given against a risoner at his trial, of statements made by him while cross-examining a witness efore the magistrate; unless they have been reduced to writing as part of the epositions, in which case they must be proved by the depositions, and not by he witness so cross-examined. R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox, 77, Brett, J.

At common law examinations of a prisoner taken upon oath before justices especting a criminal charge then made against him were not admissible. Hale, 585; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 37. This rule did not apply to depositions made o rid of any impression on the prisoner's mind, that the statement may be used for s own benefit; and the justice ought also to tell him, that what he thinks fit to say ll be taken down, and may be used against him on his trial. See R. v. Arnold, C. & P. 621, Denman, C.J. And the rule is now expressed in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18, ra.

by him as a witness in another case. Depositions made by the accused before a magistrate under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), are admissible against him at the trial, even though he declines to give evidence on his trial. R. v. Bird, 62 J. P. 760; 15 T. L. R. 26 (C. C. R.): R. v. Boyle, 20 T. L. R. 192: R. v. Chapman, 29 T. L. R. 117.

Statements by prisoner before coroners.]—It is now the practice to admit statements or depositions of the prisoner before the coroner if properly proved. These depositions are not taken under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, and that Act does not apply to them, but are taken under 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4 (ante, p. 144). Formerly there was some doubt as to their admissibility, and the cases on the subject were conflicting. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2244: R. v. Wheeley, 8 C. & P. 250: R. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83, 238; R. v. Haworth, Greenw. Coll. Stat. 137: R. v. Sandys, C. & Mar. 345; 2 Mood. 229. In 1886, Martin, B., after consulting with Willes, J., on a trial for manslaughter, admitted as evidence against the prisoner his deposition on oath taken by the coroner upon the inquest held on the deceased. R. v. Bateman, 4 F. & F. 1068: cf. R. v. Colmer, 9 Cox, 506, and the cases ante, p. 148; and see R. v. Marriott, 75 J. P. 288; 22 Cox, 211. By statutes of Quebec, commissioners were appointed to investigate the origin of any fires in the city of Quebec, with power to compel the attendance of witnesses and to examine them on oath. The prisoner being indicted for arson, it was held that his deposition taken on oath upon an inquiry before the commissioners into the cause of the fire was admissible as evidence against him. R. v. Coote, L. R. 4 P. C. 599; 42 L. J. (P. C.) 45.

Admissions in other cases.]—Admissions by the prisoner on oath in another case are admissible against him, except as to questions which he was improperly compelled to answer, if he was under no obligation to criminate himself. Thus in R. v. Chidley, 8 Cox, 365, Cockburn, C.J., admitted as evidence against a prisoner a deposition made by him before a justice while under examination as a witness, another person being at that time charged with the crime; and this case was followed in R. v. Laurent, 62 J. P. 250, where admissions of indecent acts made by L. in his evidence on the prosecution of another for larceny were held admissible against him on a charge under 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, s. 11. In R. v. Chapman, 29 T. L. R. 117, admissions by the accused when before the magistrates on a charge of carnal knowledge of a girl between thirteen and sixteen, that he had had carnal knowledge of her when she was under thirteen, were admitted on an indictment against him for carnal knowledge of her when under thirteen. But this rule does not usually apply to a compulsory examination in which he is bound to answer incriminating questions. See infra.

Examinations in bankruptcy.]—The examination of a person taken on oath before commissioners of bankruptcy, he having been cautioned, and allowed to elect what questions he would answer, was held admissible against him on a charge of forgery. R. v. Wheater, 2 Mood. 45. So, where a bankrupt was examined touching a matter not relating to his trade, dealings, or estate, and did not refuse to answer on the ground that the answers would tend to criminate him, but answered without objection, his answers were held voluntary, and his examination admissible against him on a criminal charge. R. v. Sloggett, Dears. 656; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 93. And it has since been held, that where a bankrupt was examined under s. 117 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, now repealed, but in substance re-enacted in ss. 15 and 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), he was bound to answer all questions, touching matters relating to his trade, dealings, or estate, or which might tend to disclose any secret grant, conveyance, or concealment of his lands, tenements, goods, money, or debts, although his answers might criminate him; and such answers, though they do tend to criminate him, may be given in evidence against him on a criminal charge; R. v. Scott, Dears. & B. 47; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 128: R. v. Cross, Dears. & B. 68: R. v. Robinson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 80; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 78: R. v. Hillam, 12 Cox, 174, even though a promise may have been made to the bankrupt before his examination that it should not be used against him or filed; R. v. Cherry, 12 Cox, 32, Martin, B. These decisions do not apply to a proceeding in respect of the offences referred to in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (see 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59 (Bankruptcy Act, 1914), s. 166), and in 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 43 (3): see post, p. 506. But on an indictment of a trader for obtaining property on credit, under the false pretence of dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, within four months before his liquidation, contrary to s. 11 (14) of the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), now repealed, but in substance re-enacted by s. 154 (14) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), an examination of the trader in liquidation taken under ss. 96 and 97 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, now repealed, but analogous provisions to which are contained in s. 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), was held admissible in evidence against him; R. v. Widdop, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 3; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 9; although the summons to the trader to come up for examination might have been irregularly issued, as the trader by appearing, and submitting to be examined, waived the irregularity: Id. But a witness other than the bankrupt examined under the Acts is entitled to refuse to answer questions on the ground that his answers may criminate him; Ex parte Schofield, 6 Ch. D. 230 (C. A.). The Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 15 (1), enacts that where the court makes a receiving order, it shall hold a public sitting for the examination of the debtor as to his conduct, dealings, and property; and sub-s. 8 of the same section enacts that "the debtor shall be examined upon oath, and it shall be his duty to answer all such questions as the court may put, or allow to be put to him. Such notes of the examination as the court thinks proper shall be taken down in writing, and shall be read over to, or by the debtor, and signed by him, and may thereafter, save as in this Act provided, be used in evidence against him." This sub-section does not exclude other modes of proving the debtor's admissions: R. v. Erdheim [1896] 2 Q. B. 260; 18 Cox, 355: R. v. Hirschfield, 61 J. P. 520. Section 25 of the Act of 1914 also authorizes other examinations of the debtor, but they contain no provision like that above cited in s. 15, sub-s. 8, for using the examination in evidence against him. It would appear, however, from the cases above mentioned, decided under former bankruptcy statutes containing enactments similar to s. 25, that examinations under that section, as well as under s. 15, may be so used. But by s. 166 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, a statement or admission made by any person in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy is not admissible as evidence against that person in any proceeding in respect of any of the misdemeanors referred to in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85. A similar protection is afforded by s. 43 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (post, p. 506), in respect of the offences therein referred to. A statement of affairs filed by a bankrupt under s. 16 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (now repealed and replaced by s. 14 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914) has been held not to be within 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27, sub-s. 2 (now s. 166 of the Act of 1914), and is therefore admissible in evidence against him on a charge of misappropriation of trust moneys under s. 21 of the Larceny Act, 1916. R. v. Pike [1902] 1 K. B. 552; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 287; 20 Cox, 164; 66 J. P. 296 : and see R. v. Oliver, 3 Cr. App. R. 246. The answers of a promoter or director or other officer of a company on his examination in proceedings to wind up the company may be used in evidence against him. 8 Edw. 7, c. 69 (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908), s. 175 (7). The answer of the defendant in a suit in equity, instituted against him by the prosecutor, is admissible on an indictment against him : R. v. Goldshede, 1 C. & K. 657, except in cases where it is otherwise provided by statute; see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85; 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 43 (2). But on an indictment against a bankrupt for concealing his effects, where it was proposed to prove the petitioning creditor's debt by putting in the bankrupt's balance-sheet delivered upon oath, Alderson, B., and Patteson, J., held that it was not receivable for that purpose; R. v. Britton, 1 M. & Rob. 297; because, as explained by Patteson, J., in R. v. Wheater, 2 Mood. 45, 51, the balance-sheet was only admissible in the event of the commission being valid, and therefore it could not itself be given in evidence to prove the petitioning creditor's debt as a part of the commission.

Where the defendant on cross-examination in a civil action has been compelled to answer questions tending to criminate him, the admission so obtained cannot be used against him upon his trial on a criminal charge. R. v. Garbett, 1 Den. 236; 2 C. & K. 474. Cf. R. v. Noel [1914] 3 K. B. 848, 10 Cr. App. R. 255 (post, p. 561). But declarations of a defendant, though made as a witness before a committee of the House of Commons, and under compulsory process, was held by Abbott, C.J., in R. v. Merceron, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 366, to be admissible against him upon an indictment for corruptly granting licences to public-houses.

Confessions excluded by statute.]—By certain statutes admissions by a person on a former trial or inquiry in which he was examined as a witness cannot be given in evidence against him on a criminal charge. Thus, by 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51 (Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883), s. 59, sub-s. 1 (b), " an answer by a person to a question put by or before any election court shall not, except in the case of any criminal proceeding for perjury in respect of such evidence, be in any proceeding, civil or criminal, admissible in evidence against him." This provision, which applies primarily to inquiries before an election court respecting parliamentary elections, is extended to similar inquiries respecting municipal elections by 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, ss. 30, 35, and respecting certain other elections to public offices. Id. s. 36. See R. v. Buttle, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 248; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 115: R. v. Slator, 8 Q. B. D. 267; 51 L. J. (Q. B.) 426. Provisions of a similar nature are contained in 26 & 27 Vict. c. 119 (Exhibition Medals Act, 1863), s. 5, in 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87 (Land Transfer Act, 1875), s. 103, in 50 & 51 Vict. c. 28 (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887), s. 19, sub-s. 2, and in 46 & 47 Vict. c. 3 (Explosive Substances Act, 1883), s. 6, sub-s. 2. Subject, however, to any exceptions introduced by statute, the general rule deducible from the modern cases seems to be that any statement made by a person upon oath, when being examined as a witness, either before a civil tribunal, a coroner, or a magistrate, may be afterwards used against him on his trial on a criminal charge, unless, indeed, at the time of his examination he objected to answer the questions on the ground that the answers would tend to criminate him, and yet was improperly compelled to answer them. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 900; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2189, 23-48; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (post, p. 458). And see R. v. Coote, L. R. 4 P. C. 599, ante, p. 382: R. v. Erdheim [1896] 2 Q. B. 260, at p. 270, per Russell, C.J.: R. v. Colpus [1917] 1 K. B. 574; 86 L. J. K. B. 459; 81 J. P. 135; 25 Cox, 716; 33 T. L. R. 184.

II. Extrajudicial confessions.]—An extrajudicial confession is made where the defendant makes an admission or confession of his guilt, or of any fact which may tend to the proof of it, to any person other than a judge or magistrate seised of the charge against him; or assents to what is said in his presence and hearing, relative to a fact within his knowledge. Thus, upon the trial of a prisoner for receiving stolen property, a list of the stolen articles which the prisoner had bought was received in evidence in order to show that he had bought at an under-value. The circumstances under which the list was written were that a constable asked the prisoner to say when he had bought the stolen property, to which the prisoner replied that his wife should make out a list of it, and on the next day the prisoner's wife in her husband's presence handed to another constable the list tendered in evidence, saying in her husband's hearing, "This is a list of what we bought and what we gave for them." It was held that this list was clearly admissible in evidence. R. v. Mallory, 13 Q. B. D. 33; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 134.

Confessions must be voluntary.]—These several species of confession, in order to be admissible, must be free and voluntary. And in the case of a confession before a magistrate (who before 1848 exercised inquisitorial as well as judicial functions, 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 221), or before any other person, unless it be shown affirmatively on the part of the prosecution that it was made without the defendant's being induced to make it by any promise of favour, or by menaces, or undue terror, it shall not be received in evidence against him. 2 Hale, 285: R. v. Thompson [1893] 2 Q. B. 12; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 93; 17 Cox, 641: and see generally on this question, R. v. Baldry, 2 Den. 430; 21 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 30: Ibrahim v. Rex [1914] A. C. 599, at p. 609; 83 L. J. P. C. 185; 24 Cox, 14; 30 T. L. R. 383: R. v. Colpus (supra). "If it proceeds from remorse or a desire to make reparation for the crime, it is admissible; if it flows from hope or fear excited by a person in authority it is inadmissible. On this point the authorities are unanimous." R. v. Thompson [1893] 2 Q. B. at p. 15; 62 L. J. (M. C.) 93, Cave, J. Therefore a confession will be inadmissible if it be said to the defendant that it will be better or worse for him if he does or does not confess; 2 East, P. C. 659; or if the confession is procured by a threat to take the defendant before a magistrate if he does not give a more satisfactory account: R. v. Thompson, 1 Leach, 291: R. v. Parratt, 4 C. & P. 570; or to send a constable for that purpose: R. v. Richards, 5 C. & P. 318: R. v. Hearn, C. & Mar. 109; or a promise that if the defendant will confess there will be no prosecution: R. v. Boughton, 6 Cr. App. R. 8; or by saying, "Tell me where the things are, and I will be favourable to you": R. v. Cass, 1 Leach, 293 n.; or, "You had better tell all you know": R. v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387; or "You had better tell where you got the property": R. v. Dunn, 4 C. & P. 543; or, "You had better split, and not suffer for all of them": R. v. Thomas, 6 C. & P. 353; or, "It would have been better if you had told at first"; R. v. Walkley, 6 C. & P. 175; or, "I should be obliged to you if you would tell us what you know about it; if you will not, of course we can do nothing": R. v. Partridge, 7 C. & P. 551; or, "It will be best for you if you tell me how it was transacted": R. v. Warringham, 2 Den. 447 n.; or "It might be better for you to tell the truth and not a lie": R. v. Bate, 11 Cox, 686; or, "You had better tell the truth, it may be better for you": R. v. Fennell, 7 Q. B. D. 147; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 126; or, "You had better tell me all about the corn that is gone": R. v. Rose, 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 289; 18 Cox, 717. Where the prosecutor asked the defendant for the money which he had taken, and, before it was produced, said, "I only want my money, and if you give me that you may go to the devil if you please," upon which the defendant took part of the money from his pocket, and said that was all he had left, a majority of the judges held that the evidence was inadmissible. R. v. Jones, R. & R. 152.

In R. v. Brown [1903] 68 J. P. 15, on a trial for murder, the prosecutor proposed to put in evidence answers given by one of the prisoners—a soldier, to a commanding officer of military police. The officer had come to the barracks of the prisoner's regiment, and a parade of the regiment was ordered. The prisoner was arrested and taken to the guard-room, where the officer asked him certain questions at the suggestion of the superintendent of the police. After the prisoner had answered a few questions, the superintendent stopped the officer from asking more, and arrested the prisoner. Wills, J., held that the answers were admissible, as the officer had held out no threat nor inducement, and there was no compulsion, and nothing to force the prisoner into a position in which he would be likely to make an untruthful answer. In R. v. Colpus [1917] 1 K. B. 574, it was held that admissions made before a military court of inquiry may be given in evidence at the trial on indictment of the person making the admissions. In R. v. Godinho, 76 J. P. 16; 28 T. L. R. 3, a statement in the nature of a confession made by a person accused of murder on the high seas to a police officer in charge of him at Bow Street Police Station, just before being brought before a magistrate, without any hope of pardon having been held out to him, was held to be admissible.

The prisoner made a confession which was inadmissible in evidence in consequence of its having been made after a promise held out by the person to whom it was made. That person, shortly after the confession so made to her, sent for a neighbour and informed him of the confession, and he then had an interview alone with the prisoner, and asked her questions upon the subject, but he held out no inducement, and she then made a confession to him. It was held that this second confession was so connected with the promise held out by the person to whom the first confession was made as to be inadmissible. R. v. Rue, 13 Cox, 209, Denman, J., after consulting Kelly, C.B. Where a prisoner was told by the constable at 10 o'clock a.m. that it would be better for him to tell the truth, an admission by the prisoner to another constable after 6 o'clock in the evening of the same day was not allowed to be given in evidence, although the second constable had, before the prisoner made the admission, cautioned him not to say anything to criminate himself. This decision proceeded on the ground that the caution given by the second constable might not have had the effect of removing the expectation which might have been raised by the language of the first constable. R. v. Doherty (1), 13 Cox, 23, Whiteside, C.J.: R. v. Doherty (2), 13 Cox, 24, Fitzgerald, B.

A confession, made with a view, and under a hope, of being thereby permitted to turn King's evidence, or of obtaining a pardon or reward, has been held inadmissible. R. v. Hall, 2 Leach, 559: R. v. Blackburn, 6 Cox, 333, Talfourd, J. And it is clearly so where such hope is the reasonable result of a communication from, or the conduct of, a person in authority. R. v. Gillis, 11 Cox, 69. See R. v. Burley, 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2284: R. v. Boswell, C. & Mar. 584. But cf. R. v. Dingley, 1 C. & K. 637.

Promise or threat by one without authority.]—To exclude a confession made under the influence of a promise or threat, the promise or threat must be of a description which may be presumed to have had such an effect on the mind of the defendant as to induce him to confess; and therefore an exhortation, admonition, promise or threat, proceeding at a prior time from some one who has no concern in the apprehension, prosecution, or examination of the prisoner, but interferes without any authority, will not be sufficient to render a confession inadmissible. R. v. Row, R. & R. 153: R. v. Hardwick, 1 Phill. Evid. (7th ed.) 111: R. v. Gibbons, 1 C. & P. 97: R. v. Tyler, Id. 129: R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221. It seems that there was at one time a difference of opinion among the judges on this point—whether a confession made to a person who has no authority, after an inducement held out by that person, is receivable or not. R. v. Spencer, 7 C. & P. 776. It has, however, been long settled that evidence of any confession is receivable, unless there has been some inducement held out by some person in authority, and that if a person not in any office or authority holds out to the accused party an inducement to confess, this will not exclude a confession made to that party. R. v. Taylor, 8 C. & P. 733: R. v. Moore, 2 Den. 526; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 199.

It is immaterial whether the inducement is held out by the person in authority or in his presence without his dissent by a third person. Thus, where such a person held out an inducement in the presence of the prosecutor's wife, who expressed no dissent, the confession was held not to be receivable. R. v. Taylor, supra. And see R. v. Hewett, C. & Mar. 534 : R. v. Garner, 1 Den. 329; 2 C. & K. 920; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 1 : R. v. Luckhurst, Dears. 245; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 18. So where the prisoner was taken by the constable to an inn, and the innkeeper, in the constable's hearing, held out an inducement to him to confess, and the prisoner, in the constable's hearing, made a confession to the innkeeper, which the constable was called to prove, Alderson, B., thought the evidence inadmissible. R. v. Pountney, 7 C. & P. 302. And see R. v. Dunn, 4 C. & P. 543 : R. v. Slaughter, Id. 544 n. : for the fact of the constable being present and not dissenting from what was said places the expressions used on the same footing as if they had been used by the constable. R. v. Laugher, 2 C. & K. 225, Pollock, C.B. Where one of two defendants charged with larceny said to the other (a constable, and the owner of the property, W., being present), "You had better tell Mr. W. the truth," neither the policeman nor W. saying anything, a confession made thereupon by the other defendant was held admissible. R. v. Parker, L. & C. 42; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 144. Where a girl, being apprehended for the murder of her child, was left by the constable in the custody of a woman, who told her she had better tell the truth, otherwise it would lie upon her and the man would go free, upon which she made a confession : Parke, J., and Taunton, J., held this confession not receivable, as it was made in consequence of an inducement held out to the prisoner by a person who had her in custody. R. v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539. A woman in custody on a charge of murder was placed in a room alone with E. to be searched. E. was a "searcher" of female prisoners, but had no other duties or authority in the gaol. Whilst the search was being made, the prisoner said, "If I tell the truth, shall I be hung?" to which E. answered, "No, nonsense, you will not be hung." It was held that a statement made by the prisoner to E. immediately afterwards was not receivable. R. v. Windsor, 4 F. & F. 361. And confessions obtained from a servant through hopes and threats held out by the wife or by the relations and neighbours of her master and prosecutor (or, in the case of an offence committed against several persons in partnership, by the wife, etc., of any of them, R. v. Warringham, 2 Den. 447 n.), have been held inadmissible by all the judges. R. v. Simpson, 1 Mood. 410 : R. v. Upchurch, Id. 465. This, however, does not apply to a case where the charge against the servant has no relation to the persons or property of the master or his family; e.g., to a case of child murder or concealment of birth. R. v. Moore, 2 Den. 522; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 199.

The subject matter of the inducement.]—The inducement must refer to a temporal benefit; for hopes which are referable to a future state merely are not within the principle which excludes confessions obtained by improper influence. R. v. Gilham, 1 Mood. 186. Where the inducements merely amount to a moral exhortation and do not refer to a temporal benefit, the confession is admissible. Thus where the defendant being in custody on a charge of setting fire to her master's farm-building, her master's married daughter said to her, "I am very sorry for you; you ought to have known better; tell me the truth, whether you did it or no"; the defendant replied, "I am innocent"; whereupon the other said, "Don't run your soul into more sin, but tell the truth"; a confession thereupon made by the defendant was held admissible. R. v. Sleeman, Dears. 249; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 19. And see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2166. Where one of the prisoner's employers, having called him up into his private room, said, "I think it right that I should tell you that, besides being in the presence of my brother and myself, you are in the presence of two police officers; and I should advise you that, to any questions that may be put to you, you will answer truthfully, so that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue"; and having shown a letter to him, which he denied having written, added, "Take care; we know more than you think we know," and the prisoner thereupon made a confession; it was held that such confession was admissible. R. v. Jarvis, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 96; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 1. So where the mother of a little boy in custody on a criminal charge said to him and another little boy also in custody on the same charge, in the presence of the mother of the latter and of the policeman, "You had better, as good boys, tell the truth," whereupon both boys confessed, it was held that the confession was admissible. R. v. Reeve, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 362; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 92. That case, as well as R. v. Jarvis, supra, is shaken, if not overruled, by R. v. Thompson [1893] 2 Q. B. 12; 62 L. J. (Q. B.) 93; 17 Cox, 641 (ante, p. 385), unless the inducements are treated as amounting only to moral exhortations, as in R. v. Sleeman (supra). See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2166. But in R. v. Stanton, 6 Cr. App. R. 198, where a mistress had said to a servant accused of larceny, "Now, Ellen, have you seen my rings? Be a good girl and tell the truth"; whereupon the girl said she had taken the rings and given them to her mother, it was held that no inducement had been held out and the confession was therefore admissible, and R. v. Reeve (supra) was not apparently doubted.

So, where a prisoner under fourteen years of age, charged with murder, was told by a man, who was present when he was apprehended, "Now, kneel down; I am going to ask you a very serious question, and I hope you will tell me the truth, in the presence of the Almighty," and the prisoner in consequence made a statement, this was held (strictly) admissible. R. v. Wild, 1 Mood. 452. But where a constable, after having asked the prisoner what he had done with the stolen property, said, "You had better not add a lie to the crime of theft," Gaselee, J., refused to receive a statement thereupon made by the prisoner in evidence. R. v. Shepherd, 7 C. & P. 579.

The only proper questions are, whether the inducement held out to the prisoner was calculated to make his confession an untrue one, and whether the inducement continued to operate at the moment of the confession: if not, it will be admissible. Thus, where a prisoner asked of a witness with whom he was in conversation whether he had better confess, and the witness replied that he had better not confess, but he might say what he had to say to him, for it should go no further, a statement thereupon made by the prisoner was held admissible. R. v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 345. This rule was approved in R. v. James, 2 Cr. App. R. 319, 320.

It is no objection to the admissibility of a confession that it was made under a mistaken supposition that some of the defendant's accomplices were in custody, even though it were created by artifice, with a view to obtain the confession. R. v. Burley, 1 Phill. Evid. (7th ed.) 111. A statement made by a prisoner when drunk has been held admissible, even though the liquor was given him in the hope that he would make admissions. R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187 : but see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2168 n. A letter given by a defendant to the gaoler to put into the post is evidence against him. R. v. Derrington, 2 C. & P. 418.

If the promise, or menace, etc., has been made before the prisoner is brought before the magistrate, the court will, in general, refuse to admit the confession in evidence, unless it appears that the prisoner was undeceived by the magistrate, and cautioned by him not to expect the favour, or not to regard the menaces held out to him; 2 East, P. C. 658 : and see R. v. Lingate, 1 Phill. Evid. (7th ed.) 414; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) 878. But where (before 11 and 12 Vict. c. 42) a defendant having been told by a constable that he might do himself some good by confessing, afterwards asked the magistrate if it would benefit him to confess, and the magistrate saying he could not say it would, the defendant then declined to confess, but afterwards, when going to prison, made a confession to the constable, the judges held the confession to be admissible, because the answer of the magistrate was sufficient to remove any expectation which the constable might have caused. R. v. Rosier, 2 Phill. Evid. (7th ed.) 112. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2182 : R. v. Green, 5 C. & P. 312 : R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221 : R. v. Richards, 5 C. & P. 318 : R. v. Howes, 6 C. & P. 404 : R. v. Dingley, 1 C. & K. 637.

The only questions in these cases really are—was any promise of favour, or any menace or undue terror made use of, to induce the prisoner to confess? and if so, was the prisoner induced by such promise or menace, etc., to make the confession attempted to be given in evidence? If the judge be of opinion in the affirmative upon both these questions, he will reject the evidence. If, on the contrary, it appears to him, from the circumstances, that, although such promises or menaces were held out, they did not operate upon the mind of the prisoner, but that his confession was voluntary notwithstanding, and he was not biased by such impression in making it, the judge will admit the evidence. See 2 East, P. C. 658 : R. v. Thompson [1893] 2 Q. B. 12; 62 L. J. (Q. B.) 93 : R. v. White, 1 Phill. Evid. (7th ed.) 406 : and R. v. Nute, 1 Burn's J. 973 (30th ed.); 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2180.

A confession is not necessarily inadmissible on the ground that the exact words used cannot be given, but only a police officer's recollection of them put into writing subsequently. R. v. Godinho, 76 J. P. 16; 28 T. L. R. 3, doubting R. v. Sexton, M.S. Chetw., 1. Burn's Justice, ed. Doyle and Williams, tit. Confessions, p. 1086.

Questions to prisoners by police constables.]—The admissibility of answers to questions put by the police before arrest must depend in each case upon the whole of the circumstances. R. v. Miller, 18 Cox, 54, Hawkins, J.; and see R. v. Winkel, 76 J. P. 191.

The following rules have been approved by His Majesty's Judges :—

1. When a police officer is endeavouring to discover the author of a crime, there is no objection to his putting questions in respect thereof to any person or persons, whether suspected or not, from whom he thinks that useful information can be obtained.

2. Whenever a police officer has made up his mind to charge a person with a crime, he should first caution such person before asking him any questions, or any further questions, as the case may be.

3. Persons in custody should not be questioned without the usual caution being first administered.

4. If the prisoner wishes to volunteer any statement, the usual caution should be administered. It is desirable that the last two words of such caution should be omitted, and that the caution should end with the words "be given in evidence."

5. The caution to be administered to a prisoner, when he is formally charged, should therefore be in the following words: "Do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? You are not obliged to say anything unless you wish to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing and may be given in evidence." Care should be taken to avoid any suggestion that his answers can only be used in evidence against him, as this may prevent an innocent person making a statement which might assist to clear him of the charge.

6. A statement made by a prisoner before there is time to caution him is not rendered inadmissible in evidence merely by reason of no caution having been given, but in such a case he should be cautioned as soon as possible.

7. A prisoner making a voluntary statement must not be cross-examined, and no questions should be put to him about it except for the purpose of removing ambiguity in what he has actually said. For instance, if he has mentioned an hour without saying whether it was morning or evening, or has given a day of the week and day of the month which do not agree, or has not made it clear to what individual or what place he intended to refer in some part of his statement, he may be questioned sufficiently to clear up the point.

8. When two or more persons are charged with the same offence and statements are taken separately from the persons charged, the police should not read these statements to the other persons charged, but each of such persons should be furnished by the police with a copy of such statements and nothing should be said or done by the police to invite a reply. If the person charged desires to make a statement in reply, the usual caution should be administered.

9. Any statement made in accordance with the above rules should, whenever possible, be taken down in writing and signed by the person making it after it has been read to him and he has been invited to make any corrections he may wish.

Where a constable said to the prisoner, who was suspected of the murder of her child, that "if she did not tell him where it was she might get herself into trouble, and that it would be the worse for her," a statement thereupon made by her to the constable was rejected. R. v. Coley, 10 Cox, 536, Mellor. J. But a statement made to a constable, after he had told the defendant the nature of the charge against him and that he need not say anything to criminate himself, but that what he did say would be taken down, and used as evidence against him, was held to be admissible. R. v. Baldry, 2 Den. 430; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 130 : overruling R. v. Drew, 8 C. & P. 140, Coleridge, J. : R. v. Morton, 2 M. & Rob. 514 : R. v. Furley, 1 Cox, 76, Maule, J. : and R. v. Harris, Id. 106, Maule, J.

Where a constable in the course of a conversation between himself and the prisoner respecting the subject matter of the charge and immediately before apprehending the prisoner said to the prisoner, "I must know more about it," it was held that the use of this expression by the constable did not render a statement thereupon made by the prisoner inadmissible. R. v. Reason, 12 Cox, 228, Keating, J., after consultation with Quain, J. This case was approved in R. v. James, 2 Cr. App. R. 319.

Where a constable said to the prisoner, who was suspected of having stolen the prosecutrix's purse, "Now is the time for you to take it back to her" (the prosecutrix), it was held that the use of these words by the constable did not render inadmissible a statement subsequently made to him by the prisoner, as the words imported no promise or threat to the prisoner to induce him to confess. R. v. Jones, 12 Cox, 241 (C. C. R.).

The fact that a prisoner's statement is made by him in reply to a question put to him by a police constable after he has been taken into custody does not of itself render the statement inadmissible in evidence. R. v. Best [1909] 1 K. B. 692; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 658; 2 Cr. App. R. 30, overruling R. v. Gavin, 15 Cox, 656, and apparently also R. v. Male and Cooper, 17 Cox, 689. See also R. v. Crowe and Myerscough, 81 J. P. 288 : R. v. Voisin [1918] 1 K. B. 531; 82 J. P. 96; 13 Cr. App. R. 89 : R. v. Cook, 34 T. L. R. 515. The practice has, however, been strongly condemned. R. v. Winkel, 76 J. P. 191, Avory, J. R. v. Grayson, 16 Cr. App. R. 7. Where a constable said to the prisoner, before formally taking him into custody, "I am going to ask you some questions, and what you say may be taken down in writing, and might be used as evidence against you," the prisoner's admissions were held admissible. R. v. Brackenbury, 17 Cox, 628, Day, J. : cf. R. v. Morgan, 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 526; 59 J. P. 827. These decisions do not make a preliminary caution essential. Rogers v. Hawken, 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 528; 62 J. P. 279, Russell, L.C.J. : Lewis v. Harris, 110 L. T. 337; 78 J. P. 68; 30 T. L. R. 109; and see on this subject generally Ibrahim v. Rex [1914] A. C. 599; 83 L. J. (P. C.) 185; 24 Cox, 174; 30 T. L. R. 383. Where one of two prisoners in custody on a joint charge voluntarily made and signed a statement implicating the other, and such statement was read over to the prisoner implicated, and the latter, after being cautioned, made a confession which was taken down in writing and signed by him, it was held that the statement of the one prisoner and the confession of the other might be given in evidence upon the trial of the latter. R. v. Hirst, 18 Cox, 374, Dugdale, Q.C. (Commissioner), after consulting Cave, J. Where the prisoner was questioned by a police constable whilst in prison awaiting her trial without being cautioned, and the court was of opinion that such questions had been put to her for the purpose of entrapping her into making admissions, her answers were held inadmissible. R. v. Histed, 19 Cox, 16, Hawkins, J. : and see R. v. Knight, 69 J. P. 108; 20 Cox, 711, Channell, J. As to confessions made in answer to questions put by post office officials when conducting inquiries, see R. v. Booth and Jones, 74 J. P. 475; 5 Cr. App. R. 177.

Accusations made in the presence of the accused.]—A statement made in the presence of an accused person, accusing him of a crime upon an occasion which may be expected reasonably to call for some explanation or denial from him, is not evidence against him of the facts stated, save so far as he accepts the statement so as to make it in effect his own. If he accepts the statement in part only, then to that extent alone does it become his statement. He may accept the statement by word or conduct, action or demeanour, and it is the function of the jury which tries the case to determine whether his words, action, conduct or demeanour at the time when the statement was made amount to an acceptance of it in whole or in part. A mere denial by the accused does not necessarily render the statement inadmissible. There is no rule of law that evidence cannot be given of an accusation of a crime and of the behaviour of the accused on hearing such accusation where that behaviour amounts to a denial of guilt. But though there is no such rule of law, the evidential value of the behaviour of the accused where he denies the charge is very small either for or against him, and the effect on the minds of the jury of his being publicly or repeatedly charged to his face with the crime may seriously prejudice the fairness of his trial: therefore the judge may in most cases rightly exercise his influence in order to prevent such evidence being given where it would have little or no evidential value. R. v. Christie [1914] A. C. 545; 10 Cr. App. R. 141. (a) In this, the leading case on a vexed subject, the following passage from the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Norton was approved as affording valuable practical guidance, although it must not be taken as an accurate expression of rules of law: "When the statement is admitted the jury should be directed that if they come to the conclusion that the prisoner acknowledged the truth of the whole or any part of the facts stated they may take so much of the statement as was acknowledged to be true (but no more) into consideration as evidence in the case generally, not because the statement, standing alone, affords any evidence of the matter contained in it, but solely because of the prisoner's acknowledgment of its truth; but they should also be told that unless they find as a fact that there was such an acknowledgment they ought to disregard the statement altogether." R. v. Norton [1910] 2 K. B. 496; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 756; 26 T. L. R. 550; 5 Cr. App. R. 65. For previous cases, see R. v. Smith, 18 Cox, 470: R. v. Head. 69 J. P. 224: R. v. Bexley. 70 J. P. 263: R. v. Bromhead, 71 J. P. 103 (C. C. R.): R. v. Thompson [1910] 1 K. B. 640; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 321; 26 T. L. R. 252; and see also the subsequent cases of R. v. Altshuler, 11 Cr. App. R. 243: R. v. Gardner and R. v. Hancox, 85 L. J. (K. B.) 206; 114 L. T. 78; 80 J. P. 135; 25 Cox, 221; 32 T. L. R. 97; 11 Cr. App. R. 265.

Evidence obtained in consequence of inadmissible confessions.]—Although a confession for the above or any other reasons may not be receivable in evidence, yet any discovery that takes place in consequence of such confession, or any act done by the defendant, if it is confirmed by the finding of the property, will be admitted; as, for instance, if a man by a promise of favour is induced to confess that he knowingly received certain stolen goods, and that they are in such a room in his house, and the goods are found there accordingly, although the confession itself cannot in that case be given in evidence, yet it may be proved that in consequence of something the witness heard from the defendant he found the goods in question in the defendant's house. R. v. Lockhart, 2 East, P. C. 658; 1 Leach, 386: and see R. v. Warickshall, 1 Leach, 263: R. v. Mosey, Id. 265 n: R. v. Butcher, 2 East, P. C. 658: R. v. Gould, 9 C. & P. 364. And it would seem also, that declaration of the defendant accompanying such acts, may be received in evidence, even though the confession itself may be inadmissible. R. v. Griffin, R. & R. 151: R. v. Jones, R. & R. 152: R. v. Leatham, 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 205; 8 Cox, 498; and see R. v. Jenkins, R. & R. 492.

Proof of confessions.]—Confessions by the accused in open court before the court of trial are recorded and need no further proof, vide ante, p. 379.

A confession before a magistrate, if taken down in writing at the time, should be produced, and proved to be have been duly taken. It was at one time supposed that it must be proved by the magistrate who took and signed it, or by his clerk who wrote it: see 1 Hale, 585; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 43: R. v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 162; but it is clearly settled by later authorities that it may be given in evidence on the prisoner's handwriting being proved by any person who was present at the preliminary inquiry: R. v. Chappel, 1 M. & Rob. 395: R. v. Hopes, Id. 396 n.; 7 C. & P. 136: R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 148: R. v. Rees, Id. 568: R. v. Reading, Id. 649: R. v. Pikesley, 9 C. & P. 124. Under s. 18 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (ante, p. 380), it is proved by production of the statement signed by the justices before whom it was made, from the custody of the officer to whom it has been committed with the depositions; but the statutory mode of proof does not exclude other modes recognized by the common law. R. v. Bird, 79 L. T. (N. S.) 359; 62 J. P. 761. Before 1848 it was held that if the prisoner admitted, when examined before the magistrate, that the deposition of a witness examined against him was true, that deposition might be read at the trial as part of the prisoner's statement, although the witness himself had been examined at the trial. R. v. John, 7 C. & P. 324. But the statement of one of several prisoners, brought before a magistrate for the same offence, cannot be read in evidence against the others; because they are only called upon to answer the depositions of the witnesses, taken on oath, not the statements of their fellow-prisoners. R. v. Swinnerton, C. & Mar. 593. Where a defendant was examined before the Privy Council, and a witness took notes of his examination, which were not signed by or read over to the defendant, it was held that the witness might refresh his memory from the notes, but that the minutes were not admissible as a judicial examination. R. v. Layer, 16 St. Tr. 93, 215. The effect of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18, so far as regards the evidence of a confession, seems to be, that a written examination taken as the statute directs, is evidence per se, and is the only admissible written evidence of the defendant's having made a declaration of the things therein contained; whereas, at common law (unless the defendant signed the paper, or, on its being read, allowed it to be true), the confession must have been proved by some person who heard it, and the writing could only have been made use of by the person who wrote it, for the purpose of refreshing his memory. 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2205, 2217. (a)

Admissions or confessions to persons other than magistrates, if in writing, are proved as any other written instrument. R. v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548. If made by parol, they are proved by parol evidence of some person who heard them. What the prisoner has been overheard to say to another, or to himself, is equally admissible; though it is evidence to be acted on with much caution, as being liable to be unintentionally misrepresented by the witnesses. See R. v. Simons, 6 C. & P. 540.

Admissions in cases of treason.]—11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 18 (ante. p. 380), applies to treason. Apart from that Act the confession of an overt act upon an examination before a magistrate or other person having authority for that purpose, if proved at the trial by two witnesses, was held sufficient to convict the defendant: R. v. Francia, 15 St. Tr. 859; 1 East, P. C. 133 n.; Fost. 240; but evidence of a confession to a person not having such authority, although given by two or more witnesses, can only be received in corroboration of the other evidence in the case; and the treason must still be proved by two witnesses. R. v. Willis, 15 St. Tr. 613; and see Fost. 241, 243. But a confession before a magistrate or other person may be given in evidence to prove a collateral fact, as, for instance, that the defendant is a natural-born subject: R. v. Vaughan, 13 St. Tr. 485: R. v. Smith, Fost. 242, or the like, and may be proved by one witness, as in ordinary cases.

Effect of confessions.]—As to the effect of direct confessions in open court see ante, p. 380. The court is usually reluctant to accept and record a confession of guilt on indictments for grave crimes, and will generally advise the defendant to retract it and plead not guilty. 2 Hale, 255. But where the defendant refuses to withdraw his confession, there is no alternative but to accept it, even in the case of murder, of which instances have occurred.

A free and voluntary confession of guilt by a defendant, whether under examination before magistrates or otherwise, if it is direct and positive, and is duly made and satisfactorily proved, is sufficient to warrant a conviction, without any corroborative evidence. R. v. White, R. & R. 508: R. v. Tippet, Id. 509: R. v. Eldridge, Id. 440: R. v. Falkner, Id. 481: R. v. Francia, supra: R. v. Lambe, 2 Leach, 552: R. v. Wheeling, 1 Leach, 311 n.; and see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2156.

In all cases, the whole of the confession should be given in evidence: for it is a general rule, that the whole of the account which a party gives of a transaction must be taken together; and his admission of a fact disadvantageous to himself shall not be received, without receiving at the same time his contemporaneous assertion of a fact favourable to him, not merely as evidence that he had made such assertion, but admissible evidence of the matter thus alleged by him in his discharge. 4 Taunt. 245; and see Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 294; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348. It has been said, that if there be no other evidence in the case, or none which is incompatible with the confession, it must be taken as true: R. v. Jones, 2 C. & P. 629; but the better opinion seems to be that, as in the case of all other evidence, the whole should be left to the jury, to say whether the facts asserted by the prisoner in his favour be true. Smith v. Blandy, Ry. & M. 257: R. v. Higgins, 3 C. & P. 603: R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221.

A man's confession is only evidence against himself, and not against his accomplices; 1 Hale, 585 n.; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 34: R. v. Tonge, Kel. (J.) 17, 18; 6 St. Tr. 225: R. v. Boroski, 9 St. Tr. 1: R. v. Swinnerton, C. & Mar. 593.

PRESUMPTIONS.

In general.]—Presumptive or (as it is usually termed) circumstantial evidence is receivable in criminal as well as in civil cases; and, indeed, the necessity of admitting such evidence is more obvious in the former than the latter; for, in criminal cases, the possibility of proving the matter charged in the pleading by the direct and positive testimony of eye-witnesses or by conclusive documents is much more rare than in civil cases; and where such testimony is not available the jury are permitted to infer from the facts proved other facts necessary to complete the elements of guilt or establish innocence. Although presumptive evidence must, from necessity, be admitted, yet it should be admitted cautiously. And Hale, in particular, lays down (2 Hist. P. C. 290) two rules as most prudent and necessary to be observed in this respect: firstly, Never to convict a man for stealing the goods of a person unknown, merely because he will give no account how he came by them, unless an actual felony be proved of such goods (see R. v. Trainer [1906] 3 Austr. C. L. R. 126; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2063); and secondly, Never to convict any person of murder or manslaughter, till at least the body be found—on account of two instances he mentions, where persons were executed for the murder of others who were then alive, although missing. See 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 822, 823. This rule is obviously inapplicable in cases of murder at sea. See R. v. Armstrong, 13 Cox, 184: R. v. Kersey, 21 Cox, 690; and post, tit. Homicide, p. 853.

Presumptions of fact.]—A presumption arises where from the proof of some fact the existence of another fact may naturally be inferred from the mere probability of its having occurred, without further proof. The fact thus inferred to have occurred is said to be presumed, i.e., is taken for granted until the contrary is proved by the opposite party; stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. 4 Co. Rep. 71 b. And it is presumed the more readily, in proportion to the difficulty of proving the fact by positive evidence, and to the facility of disproving it or of proving facts inconsistent with it, if it really never occurred. See Stephen, Evid. (5th ed.), pp. 2, 161; Wills, Circumstantial Evid. (6th ed.).

Presumptions of fact are usually divided into three classes: violent presumptions where the facts and circumstances proved necessarily attend the fact presumed; Gilb. Evid. 147; probable presumptions, where the facts and circumstances proved usually attend the fact presumed; 3 Bl. Com. 372; and light or rash presumptions, which have no weight or validity at all. Id.; Gilb. Evid. 147; Co. Litt. 6 b: R. v. Stoddart, 73 J. P. 348; 2 Cr. App. R. 217, 241. If, upon an indictment for murder, it were proved that the deceased was murdered in a house, and that the defendant was immediately afterwards seen running out of it with a bloody sword in his hand; these facts would raise a violent presumption that the defendant was the murderer; for the blood, the weapon, and the hasty flight, are all circumstances necessarily attending the fact presumed, namely, the murder. Co. Litt. 6 b; Staundf. 179 a; Gilb. Evid. 157.

So, upon an indictment for stealing in a dwelling house, if the defendant were apprehended a few yards from the outer door, with the stolen goods in his possession, there would arise a violent presumption of his having stolen them; but if they were found in his lodgings some time after the larceny, and he refused to account for his possession of them, this, together with proof that they were actually stolen, would amount, not to a violent, but to a probable presumption merely; but, if the property were not found recently after the loss, as, for instance, not till sixteen months after, it would be merely a light or rash presumption, and entitled to no weight. Anon., 2 C. & P. 459; see R. v. Adams, 3 C. & P. 600, Parke, B.: R. v. Cooper, 3 C. & K. 318, Maule, J. If the prisoner gives a reasonable account of the manner in which he became possessed of the goods, this will so far rebut the presumption as to throw it upon the prosecutor to negative that account. R. v. Crowhurst, 1 C. & K. 370, Alderson, B.: R. v. Smith, 2 C. & K. 207, Denman, C.J.: R. v. Harmer, 2 Cox, 487, Pollock, C.B.: R. v. Schama and Abramovitch, 84 L. J. (K. B.) 396; 79 J. P. 184; 24 Cox, 591; 31 T. L. R. 88; 11 Cr. App. R. 45. If he fails to give a reasonable explanation on the first opportunity, or gives inconsistent explanations, or does not give evidence on his own behalf in support of the explanation, he may confirm the presumption. See R. v. Kelson, 3 Cr. App. R. 231: R. v. Theadorus, ib. 269. And generally where the facts proved by the prosecution amount to evidence establishing a primâ facie case, the defendant is put to explain or rebut the presumption thus created, and if his explanations are not such as the jury can properly accept, they are entitled to convict on the presumptive case proved by the prosecution. R. v. Stoddart, 2 Cr. App. R. 217, 241, 242; 73 J. P. 348. Where a prisoner was convicted of stealing some articles of dress and the evidence against him consisted of proof that he was in possession of the property recently after it had been stolen, that he sold it openly, and on his arrest stated to the constable that C. and D. brought the things to his house, and that W., who was at his house, would say that that was true; C., D., and W. were persons known to the constable, and might have been produced as witnesses, but were not called; and inquiry was made of W., but the result of the inquiry was not given in evidence; it was held that the conviction was good, and that it was not incumbent on the prosecution to call the witnesses to whom the prisoner had referred, to disprove his statement. R. v. Wilson, Dears. & B. 157; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 45. Although the last-mentioned case may at first sight seem at variance with the doctrine laid down in R. v. Crowhurst, R. v. Smith, and R. v. Harmer, supra, it is not so in reality; for although R. v. Crowhurst and R. v. Smith were cited in R. v. Wilson, the decision in R. v. Wilson did not turn on those cases, but on the question whether the whole evidence taken together was sufficient to justify a conviction. Best on Evidence (10th ed.) 196. So, where on the trial of an indictment for receiving stolen goods it appeared that the prisoner had told the constable who found the stolen property in his possession that he had purchased it of a tradesman in the same town, and that tradesman, although known, was not called for the prosecution, it was held that there being other circumstances in the case from which the jury might fairly infer the falsehood of the prisoner's story, it was unnecessary to call the tradesman on the part of the prosecution. R. v. Ritson, 15 Cox, 478 (C. C. R.). The presumption of guilt arising from the possession of stolen property will, of course, vary according to the nature of the property stolen, and whether it is or is not likely to pass readily from hand to hand. See R. v. Partridge, 7 C. & P. 551, Patteson, J.

The presumption can, of course, only arise where the possession is proved. A bag was left by the owner near a place where the prisoner and two other persons were at the time. The prisoner passed the place on his way home, and shortly afterwards one of the other two persons followed in the same direction along with the prosecutor. They met the prisoner coming back to his home from the opposite direction, and, being questioned, he denied all knowledge of the bag, and said that he had been in a neighbouring wood for firewood. The wood, the prisoner's cottage, and some disused farm buildings near it, were then searched without success. About twenty-four hours afterwards the bag was found in a hayloft in one of the disused farm buildings, near the highway. There was no door to it, and passers-by had easy access to it. The prisoner was then taken into custody, and said to the constable, after previously denying he had taken the bag, "I suppose I shall get a month for this." It was held that there was no evidence from which the jury might infer the prisoner had had possession of the bag, and therefore that the case could not be treated as one of recent possession. R. v. Hughes, 14 Cox, 223 (C. C. R.).

Although upon an indictment for larceny it is necessary to prove that goods of the prosecutor have been taken, they may be proved by circumstances, although the witnesses for the prosecution cannot swear to the loss of the article said to be stolen, nor that the property found upon the prisoner and alleged to have been stolen is the prosecutor's. A large quantity of pepper was kept in bulk in a warehouse where the prisoner had no business. He was met coming out of the warehouse, having on him a quantity of pepper of the same description as that in the warehouse. On being stopped, he threw down the pepper, and said, "I hope you will not be hard with me." From the large quantity in the warehouse, it could not be proved that any pepper had been taken from the bulk. Upon these facts, it was held that there was abundant evidence to justify the conviction of the prisoner for stealing the pepper. R. v. Burton, Dears. 282; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 52. "If a man go into the London Docks sober, without means of getting drunk, and come out of one of the cellars very drunk, wherein are a million gallons of wine, I think that would be reasonable evidence that he had stolen some of the wine in that cellar, though you could not prove that any wine was stolen, or any wine was missed." Maule, J., in R. v. Burton, supra. Cf. R. v. Dredge, 1 Cox, 235, Erle, J.: R. v. Mockford, 11 Cox, 16 (C. C. R.): R. v. Joiner, 74 J. P. 200; 26 T. L. R. 265.

Upon an indictment for arson, proof that property, which was in the house at the time it was burnt, was afterwards found in the possession of the defendant, raises a probable presumption that the defendant was present and concerned in the arson.—See R. v. Rickman, 2 East, P. C. 1034, 1035. A like presumption may arise in the case of murder, accompanied by robbery; Wills, Circumstantial Evidence (6th ed.) 216-218; in a case of burglary, R. v. Gould, 9 C. & P. 364, Parke, B.: R. v. Exall, 4 F. & F. 922, Pollock, C.B.; and in the case of the possession of a quantity of counterfeit money: R. v. Fuller, R. & R. 308: R. v. Jarvis, Dears. 552; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 30; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 142.

Where, upon an indictment for perjury, in falsely taking the freeholder's oath in the name of J. W., at a parliamentary election, it was proved that the freeholder's oath was administered to a person who polled on the second day of the election by the name of J. W.; that there was no such person in fact as J. W.; that the defendant voted on the second day, though he was not a freeholder; that he did not vote in his own name or in any other than the name of J. W.; that there was but one false vote given on the second day's poll; and that the defendant some time afterwards boasted that he had "done the trick," and was not paid enough for the job, and was afraid he should be "pulled up for his bad vote"; the court held that this was sufficient evidence for the jury to presume that the defendant voted in the name of J. W., and consequently to find him guilty of the charge in the indictment. R. v. Price, 6 East, 323.

Upon an indictment for disposing of and putting away a forged bank-note, knowing it to be forged, proof that the defendant has passed other forged notes raises a probable presumption that he knew the present note to be forged; and if, in addition to this, it be proved that the defendant when he passed these notes gave a false name or address, it amounts to a violent presumption of a guilty knowledge. And the same upon indictments for uttering counterfeit money. See ante, p. 363.

The fact that a person is alive on a given day may be presumed from proof of his being alive on an antecedent day. If, for example, it was proved on the trial of a man for bigamy that the first wife was in good health on the day preceding the second marriage, the inference would be almost irresistible that she was living on the latter day, and the jury would, in all probability, find that she was so. If, on the other hand, it was proved that she was on the day before the second marriage in a dying condition, and nothing further was proved, they would probably decline to draw that inference. The question is, however, entirely for the jury, the law making no presumption either way.

R. v. Lumley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 196; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 86. And see R. v. Willshire, 6 Q. B. D. 366; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 57, post, p. 401.

Presumptions of law.]—"Presumptions of law consist of these rules, which in certain cases forbid or dispense with further inquiry." Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 70. They fall into two classes—disputable presumptions, which can be rebutted by evidence sufficient to displace them; and conclusive, which are absolute, and cannot be rebutted by any evidence.

1. Disputable presumptions.]—The most important of the disputable presumptions of law in criminal cases is the presumption that the accused is innocent. This is the maxim, "semper præsumitur pro negante," or that the burden of proof lies on the person who affirms a fact. R. v. Twyning, 2 B. & Ald. 386 : Sissons v. Dixon, 5 B. & C. 758; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 109 et seq. But this presumption is easily rebutted by proof of acts tending to show guilt, and when these acts are wrongful and not accidental a presumption of malice or criminal intent arises. And where certain facts are proved against a defendant the law in certain cases presumes against him malice or intent, or some state of mind involving criminal responsibility, as having accompanied the act proved. This rule may also be expressed by saying that to justify conviction in a criminal case the evidence of guilt must not be a mere balance of probabilities; but must satisfy the jury beyond reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty. See R. v. White, 4 F. & F. 384 : R. v. Beal, 8 Cr. App. R. 95. In murder, the law presumes malice from the act of killing, until the contrary is proved by the defendant. Fost. 255; 1 East, P. C. 340. And malice is also presumed where any wrongful act is done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. "Malice," says Bayley, J., in delivering the judgment of the court in Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 247, 255, "in common acceptation means ill-will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. If I give a perfect stranger a blow likely to produce death, I do it of malice, because I do it intentionally, and without just cause or excuse. If I maim cattle, without knowing whose they are,—if I poison a fishery, without knowing the owner,—I do it of malice, because it is a wrongful act, and done intentionally. And if I traduce a man, whether I know him or not, and whether I intend to do him an injury or not, I apprehend the law considers it as done of malice, because it is wrongful and intentional." (a)

On an indictment for libel a défamatory statement is presumed to be malicious unless the occasion is privileged. R. v. Harvey, 2 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1; 2 B. & C. 257 : Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 247; 3 L. J. (K. B.) 203 : R. v. Creevey, 1 M. & Sel. 273. The meaning of malice in a criminal case varies to some extent with the common-law or statutory definition of each offence. See McDowell v. Mayor, etc., of Dublin [1903] 2 Ir. Rep. 541 (C. A.).

So also where a man is charged with doing an act of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing of the act. R. v. Dixon, 3 M. & Sel. 11, at p. 15, per Lord Ellenborough, C.J.; or, put more broadly, a person who does an act necessarily intends or must be taken to have intended the natural and probable consequences of his act. R. v. Farrington, R. & R. 207 : R. v. Martin, 14 Cox, 633, at p. 637, per Coleridge, J. : R. v. Harvey, 2 B. & C. 257, at p. 264 : R. v. Meade [1909 1 K. B. 895, at p. 899. See also Taylor on Evidence (11th ed.), s. 80. Thus, the uttering of a forged receipt for money to a person who advanced the money to the prisoner for the purchase of stock, was held sufficient evidence of an attempt to defraud, notwithstanding the belief of the person to whom it was uttered that the prisoner had no such intention. R. v. Sheppard, R. & R. 169. And upon an indictment for forgery, an intention to defraud the person who would have to pay the instrument if it were genuine, may be inferred even though the instrument be so framed as not to impose upon him, and the intention to defraud be general, and not confined or in any way pointed to the person by whom, if genuine, the instrument would be paid. R. v. Mazagora, R. & R. 291 : R. v. Hill, 2 Mood. 30; 8 C. & P. 274 : R. v. Cooke, Id. 582. Where a man has in his possession a large quantity of counterfeit coin unaccounted for, it may be inferred that he procured it with intent to utter it, if there is no evidence that he was the maker. R. v. Fuller, R. & R. 308. Where a man was indicted under 43 G. 3, c. 58 (rep.), for setting fire to a mill, with intent to injure the occupiers, it was held that the intent might be inferred from the act. R. v. Farrington, R. & R. 207. So, in every case, intention can be but matter of presumption, arising either from the facts stated in the instrument, or from extrinsic facts stated in evidence. See ante, pp. 355 et seq.

(a) This definition was considered in Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 1; 67 L. J. Q. B. 119, and seems to have been there approved. That case, which draws a distinction between malice in criminal and civil cases, has been explained in Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A. C. 495; 70 L. J. P. C. 76.

In the case of possession of instruments adapted for forgery or coining and counterfeit coins and certain forged documents, the presumption of guilt is placed by statute on the person found in possession, and he must prove a lawful excuse. See the statutes in these titles, post; and as to presumptions in cases of larceny, see ante, p. 397.

The intention to be implied from an act is not to be rebutted or got rid of, because the person committing such act has some ulterior intention. Steele v. Brannan, 41 L. J. (M. C.) 85, 91, Grove, J.

There is no presumption of law that a person proved to have been alive on a certain day was alive on a subsequent day, although a jury may be well warranted by such proof, in finding as a matter of fact that he was so. R. v. Lumley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 196; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 86 (ante, p. 399). And where the question was whether a person was alive on the 7th September, 1879, and the only evidence of her being alive at that date was that she was living in June, 1868, it was held that such evidence ought to have been submitted to the jury. R. v. Willshire, 6 Q. B. D. 366; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 57. Nor is there any presumption of law in favour of, or against, the continuance of life for any given period. R. v. Lumley, supra: R. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168; 58 L. J. (M. C.) 97.

It is also a maxim of law, that "omnia præsumuntur ritè et solenniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium"; upon which ground it will be presumed, even in a case of murder, that a man who has acted in a public capacity or situation was duly appointed, and has properly discharged his official duties. R. v. Gordon, 1 Leach, 515 : R. v. Rees, 6 C. & P. 606 : R. v. Jones, 2 Camp. 131 : R. v. Verelst, 3 Camp. 432 : R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297 : R. v. Catesby, 2 B. & C. 814 : R. v. Newton, 1 C. & K. 469 : R. v. Townsend, C. & Mar. 178 : R. v. Cresswell, 1 Q. B. D. 446; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 77; 13 Cox, 126 : R. v. Manwaring, 26 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 10; Dears. & B. 132; 7 Cox, 192 : R. v. Stewart, 13 Cox, 296 : R. v. Roberts, 14 Cox, 101 (C. C. R.).

The rule that ignorance of the law shall not excuse a man or relieve him from the penal consequences of a crime (ante, p. 24), is usually spoken of as arising from a presumption that every person knows the law. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 80. The following language, however, used by Maule, J., in Martindale v. Falkner, 2 C. B. 706, 720, is characterised by Blackburn, J., in R. v. Mayor, etc., of Tewkesbury, L. R. 3 Q. B. 629; 37 L. J. (Q. B.) 288, as clear and common sense : "There is no presumption in this country that every person knows the law; it would be contrary to common sense and reason if it were so."

As to the presumption of law that a child of seven but under fourteen cannot commit felony, see ante, p. 10; and as to the presumption arising from the possession of recently stolen property, see post, p. 726.

2. Conclusive presumptions.]—It is an incontrovertible presumption of law (1) that a child under seven is incapable of committing crime; (2) that a male under fourteen is incapable of sexual intercourse. See ante, p. 11. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 45), s. 2, enacts that the consent of a child of either sex who is under thirteen is no defence to a charge of indecent assault on such child, and the consent of a female under sixteen to unlawful carnal intercourse is no defence to proceedings under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), ss. 4, 5 : but these enactments only take away a defence and create no presumption as to capacity.

SECT. 4.

WRITTEN EVIDENCE.

1. Public documents, p. 402.
2. Private documents, p. 443.

1. PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Proof by Copies.

PUBLIC document was defined by Lord Blackburn (from the point of view of the law of evidence) as a document that is made by a public officer for the purpose of the public making use of it and being able to refer to it. Sturla v. Freccia, 5 App. Cas. 623, 643. This definition is wide enough to include entries in the books of a manor which concern all parties interested in the manor and also entries in a corporation book concerning a corporate matter or something in which all the corporation is concerned. Ib.; and see Mercer v. Denne [1905] 2 Ch. 538; 74 L. J. (Ch.) 723.

As a general rule it is unnecessary to produce in evidence the original of any public document, for the reasons given ante, p. 367.

Copies of public documents admissible in evidence fall into four classes.

1. Exemplifications (i.e., copies under seals of state).]—An exemplification under the Great Seal is itself a record, and needs no further proof. Leyfield's case, 10 Co. Rep. 93; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 96; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1536, 1537. Exemplifications under the seal of the court, to which the record belongs, whether it be a statutory or a common-law court, are in the same position. Olive v. Guin, 2 Sid. 145; Gilb. Evid. 17, 19. Exemplifications produced from the proper custody, and purporting to exemplify a commission from the crown, have been held admissible, though the seal has been lost. Mayor of Beverley v. Craven, 2 M. & Rob. 140.

2. Office copies (i.e., copies made by an officer of the court to which the document belongs). Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) s. 1538.]—These are admissible without proof of collation of the copy with the original. See Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 97. Office copies, certificates, and other documents appearing to be sealed with a seal of the central office of the High Court, shall be presumed to be office copies, certificates, or other documents issued from the central office, and if duly stamped may be received in evidence, and no signature or other formality, except the sealing with a seal of the central office, shall be required for the authentication of any such copy, certificate, or other document. R. S. C. [1883], O. 61, r. 7. By the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 61, all writs and documents issued out of or filed in any district registry of the High Court of Justice, and all exemplifications and copies thereof, purporting to be sealed with the seal of any such district registry, shall in all parts of the United Kingdom be received in evidence without further proof thereof.

An office copy has been rejected for contractions and abbreviations. R. v. Christian, C. & Mar. 388.

3. Record office copies.]—In the case of records in the Public Record Office under the custody of the Master of the Rolls, copies certified by the Master of the Rolls, or deputy-keeper of the records, and purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the Record Office, are to be received in evidence in all courts of justice without any further or other proof thereof, in every case where the original record would have been received there as evidence. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, ss. 11, 12, 13. All records of the High Court are kept in the court for twenty years, and then transferred to the Record Office.

4. Examined copies are copies made by any person from the record itself. The person to prove such a copy at the trial must examine the copy while the officer reads the record; but the officer need not also read the copy while the witness examines the record. Reid v. Margison, 1 Camp. 469: Gyles v. Hill, Id. 471 n.: Rolf v. Dart, 2 Taunt. 52; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), p. 97; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1545.

Statutes and Laws.

Public Acts.]—Public general statutes, like the rules of the common law or general customs of the realm, need not be either pleaded or proved, because the courts are bound ex officio to take judicial notice of them. Production at the trial of a public general statute is not for the purpose of putting it in evidence, but merely in aid of the memory of the court and jury. Gilb. Evid. 10; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 21; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 103, 104. In order to assure the correctness of the text of a statute, reference may be made to printed copies purporting to be published by authority, or to the official editions of the statutes; but no statutory provision exists as to proof of the public general statutes of England, Great Britain, or the United Kingdom. In the case of early statutes an exemplification can be obtained of the Act as appearing on the chancery roll, or a certified or examined copy can be made from the parliament roll, or in case of need the original roll can be produced or referred to. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 21: The Prince's case, 8 Co. Rep. 18 a, 20 b; Craies on Statute Law (2nd ed.), pp. 48 et seq. It seems that the preamble of a public general statute is admissible, but not conclusive evidence of the facts therein recited. R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & Sel. 532. The books of common prayer are judicially noticed as Acts of Parliament, being scheduled to the Acts of Uniformity. 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1; 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 4; 1 Eliz. c. 2; 14 Car. 2, c. 4. Acts of the Irish Parliament, printed and published by the King's printer, are to be received as conclusive evidence in any court of Great Britain. 41 G. 3, c. 90, s. 9. There is no statutory provision as to the proof of a Scots Act. Copies of Acts, ordinances, and statutes passed (whether before or after 21 Aug., 1907) by the legislature of any British possession, and of orders, regulations, and other instruments issued or made (whether before or after 21 Aug., 1907) under the authority of any such Act, ordinance, or statute, if purporting to be printed by the "Government Printer," shall be received as evidence by all courts of justice in the United Kingdom without any proof being given that the copies were so printed. 7 Edw. 7, c. 16, s. 1 (1). (a) The Act may be extended by order in council to Cyprus and any British Protectorate; sub-s. (5). The terms "Government printer" and "British possession" are defined by sub-s. (3). Colonial statutes may also be proved in England by the certificate of the proper officer of the colony that the document to which it is attached is a true copy of the statute in question. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 63, s. 6; 7 Edw. 7, c. 16, s. 1 (4). All statutes of the United Kingdom passed since 1850, whether (a) Since the passing of this Act there has been legislation in many colonies in order to bring certain prints of colonial Acts and ordinances within its terms. By s. 1 (2) it is a misdemeanor (punishable by imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding twelve months) to print any copy or pretended copy of any Act, etc., which falsely purports to have been printed by the Government printer, or knowingly tendering in evidence a copy, etc., so falsely printed.

general, local and personal, or private, are public Acts, and to be judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary is expressly provided by the particular statute. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 9. Such Acts therefore do not need proof, though in certain cases it may be expedient to plead them specially. Prior to 1850 it was not uncommon to insert in local and personal or private Acts a clause that they should be deemed and taken to be public Acts, and judicially noticed without being specially pleaded. This rendered a King's printer's copy admissible as in the case of a public general Act. Brett v. Beales, M. & M. 416, 421 : Woodward v. Cotton, 1 Cr. M. & R. 44 : Beaumont v. Mountain, 10 Bing. 404 : Greswolde v. Kemp, C. & Mar. 635. It has been held that such Acts must be specially pleaded to make facts stated therein admissible in evidence against strangers. Brett v. Beales, supra. This decision must be read subject to 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 9, supra, and to the dicta of Cairns, L.C., in Aiton v. Stephen, 1 App. Cas. 456, to the effect that 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21 (of which 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, is on this point a re-enactment), gave the local Acts to which it applied all the effect of public Acts. See Craies on Statute Law (2nd ed.), 485.

Special or private Acts.]—The common-law mode of proving a private statute is by an examined copy of the parliament roll, Gilb. Evid. 12 : R. v. Shaw, 12 East, 479 : or by an exemplification made from the chancery roll (1 Statt. Realm, Introd. xxxv.), or by a certified copy from the clerk of the parliaments or the Public Record Office. See R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 58, 59 n. By the Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), s. 3, as amended by the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 9), s. 2 (post, p. 410), all copies of private and local and personal Acts of Parliament, not public Acts, if purporting to be printed by the King's printers or under the superintendence or authority of his Majesty's Stationery Office, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all courts, judges, justices, and others, without any proof being given that such copies were so printed. As to available texts and indices of private Acts, see Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 104, 105 : Craies on Statute Law (2nd ed.), p. 40 n.

Colonial and foreign laws.]—The law, whether written or unwritten, of a foreign country or of any part of the King's dominions outside England, must be proved in English courts by the oral testimony of witnesses of competent skill, and in the case of written law cannot be proved by the production of the written law itself, or of an authenticated copy. Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. (Consist. Rep.) 54 : Sussex Peerage claim, 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 79; 11 Cl. & F. 85, 114-117; 8 Eng. Rep. 1034 : Baron de Bode v. R., 6 St. Tr. (N. S.) 237; 8 Q. B. 208, 250-267 : Castrique v. Imrie, L. R. 4 H. L. 414; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1423, 1424; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 120. The witness to prove a foreign law must be a person peritus virtute officii, or virtute professionis. Sussex Peerage claim, supra. A Roman Catholic bishop, who held in this country the office of a coadjutor to a vicar apostolic, and as such was authorized to decide on cases affected by the law of Rome, was therein held, in virtue of his office, to be a witness admissible to prove the law of Rome as to marriage. Id. But a witness whose knowledge of the law of a foreign country is derived solely from his having studied it at a university in another country, is not a good witness to prove it. Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Ex. 275; 19 L. J. (Ex.) 289: In the goods of Bonelli, 1 P. D. 69; 45 L. J. (P. D. & A.) 42; and see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2137; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1425. A witness competent to give evidence on a point of foreign law may refer to foreign law-books to refresh his memory, or to correct or confirm his opinion, but the law itself must be taken from his evidence. Sussex Peerage claim, supra. The law of a foreign country may also be ascertained by the court here by obtaining an opinion on the subject from a superior court of the foreign country whose law is in question, if a convention has been entered into between the British Government and that of the foreign state. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 11. The law of one part of the King's dominions for the purpose of judicial proceedings in another part may be ascertained in a similar manner under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63. Both these Acts have been extended by order in council to many places to which the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 37), applies. The principal orders in force at the end of 1903 are published in the 1904 edition of the Statutory Rules and Orders Revised, vol. v., tit. Foreign Jurisdiction; those since that date in the volume of Statutory Rules and Orders for the year in which they were made See also Encycl. of Laws of England (2nd ed.), Vol. VI., tit. Foreign Jurisdiction.

Proceedings in Parliament.

Entries in the journals of the House of Lords and House of Commons may be proved by examined copies from their minute-books: Jones v. Randall, 1 Cowp. 17: R. v. Lord G. Gordon, 2 Doug. 590, 594; 21 St. Tr. 485: R. v. Lord Melville, 29 St. Tr. 549, 683; or by copies purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown or to either House of Parliament, or under the superintendence or authority of the Stationery Office, without any proof being given that such copies were so printed. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 3; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 9, s. 2. The journals of the House of Lords have been held evidence to prove not only an address of the Lords to the King, but also the King's answer. R. v. Holt, 5 T. R. 436, 445: R. v. Francklin, 17 St. Tr. 625, 637. But the resolutions of either house, with a view to ulterior proceedings, are no evidence of the facts therein stated; as, for instance, when the House of Commons resolved that a plot against the government existed, the resolution was held to be no evidence of the existence of such a plot. Titus Oates' case, 10 St. Tr. 1073, 1165. As a general rule the proceedings in either house are not admissible as an aid to construing a statute. Steele v. Midland Ry. Co., L. R. 1 Ch. App. 275, 282. But see cases collected in Craies on Statute Law (ed. 1907), 122, 123.

Statutory Rules.

Very many statutes authorize the making by the Privy Council or by government departments of "statutory rules," i.e., of subordinate legislation under authority delegated by parliament. By the Rules Publication Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 66), it is enacted that all statutory rules made after December 31, 1893, shall forthwith be sent to the King's printer of Acts of Parliament, and subject to regulations made by the Treasury with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and Speaker of the House of Commons be numbered, and save as provided by the regulations, be printed and sold by him, and in cases where such rules are required by any Act to be published or notified in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, a notice in the Gazette of the rules having been made, and of the place where copies can be purchased, is now sufficient compliance with such requirement. 56 & 57 Vict. c. 66, s. 3 (3). The regulations issued in 1894 (Stat. Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 11, tit. Statutory Rule) restrict the operation of the Act of 1893 to rules which are of a legislative, and not merely of an executive, character, and to rules made, and not merely confirmed, by a government department : and rules of the latter class, which are of a merely local character, are for the most part not printed under the regulations. Proof of statutory rules may be given by production of the annual volume of Statutory Rules and Orders published by authority, containing them, or by a copy issued by the King's printer. See R. v. Vos [1895] 6 Queensland L. J. 215, an indictment under the Pacific Islanders Protection Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 19).

31 & 32 Vict. c. 37 (Documentary Evidence Act, 1868), s. 2 : " Primâ facie evidence of any proclamation, order, or regulation, issued before or after the passing of this Act by his Majesty, or by the Privy Council, also of any proclamation, order or regulation issued before or after the passing of this Act by or under the authority of any such department of the government or officer, as is mentioned in the first column of the schedule hereto, may be given in all courts of justice and in all legal proceedings whatsoever, in all or any of the modes hereinafter mentioned : that is to say :—

" 1. By the production of a copy of the Gazette purporting to contain such proclamation, order, or regulation.

" 2. By the production of a copy of such proclamation, order, or regulation purporting to be printed by the government printer, (a) or, where the question arises in a court in any British colony or possession, (b) of a copy purporting to be printed under the authority of the legislature of such British colony or possession.

" 3. By the production, in the case of any proclamation, order or regulation issued by his Majesty or by the Privy Council, of a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the clerk of the Privy Council, or by any one of the lords or others of the Privy Council, and, in the case of any proclamation, order, or regulation issued by or under the authority of any of the said departments or officers, by the production of a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the person or persons specified in the second column of the said schedule, in connection with such department or office. Any copy or extract made in pursuance of this Act may be in print or in writing, or partly in print and partly in writing. No proof shall be required of the handwriting or official position of any person certifying, in pursuance of this Act, to the truth of any copy of or extract from any proclamation, order or regulation." Executive Acts.

Of British Government.]—The London Gazette, printed and published by the King's printer, is evidence of all Acts of State, or public matters therein notified. Att.-Gen. v. Theakston, 8 Price, 89: R. v. Holt, 5 T. R. 436. Thus, a Gazette, which stated that addresses had been presented to the King from several bodies of his subjects, expressive of their loyalty, was held to be evidence of that fact. Id. But in R. v. Gardner, 2 Camp. 513, it was held not to be evidence of military appointments notified therein. And it is not evidence of a private matter contained therein, unless it be shown that the party to be affected has read the article. Harratt v. Wise, 7 L. J. (K. B.) 309; 9 B. & C. 712. The mere production of the Gazette would seem to be sufficient, without proof that it was bought at the Gazette office, or from whence it came. R. v. Forsyth, R. & R. 277. And where a statute (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 240 (rep.)) enacted that " a copy of the London Gazette " should be evidence, it was held to be sufficient merely to produce a paper purporting to be the London Gazette, and to be printed by authority, although it did not purport to be printed by the Queen's printer. R. v. Raudnitz, 11 Cox, 360 (C. C. R.). But where a statute (11 Vict. c. 2, s. 21 (rep.)) enacted that "the production of the Dublin Gazette, purporting to be printed by the Queen's printer," should be evidence, it was held not sufficient to produce a paper purporting to be the Dublin Gazette and to be printed by authority by A. B., but not giving his style as Queen's printer. R. v. Wallace, 10 Cox, 500; 17 Ir. C. L. Rep. 207. Where the production of the Gazette is made evidence of any matter, it is not sufficient to produce a whole leaf cut from the Gazette containing the matter sought to be proved, but not bearing the imprint of any printer or purporting to be published by authority. R. v. Lowe, 52 L. J. (M. C.) 122; 15 Cox, 286.

Articles of war.]—The articles of war for the better government of officers and soldiers of the army and the rules of procedure relating to courts-martial, etc., are to be judicially noticed by all judges and in all courts whatsoever, and therefore require no proof. 44 & 45 Vict. c. 58, ss. 69, 70: see the Manual of Military Law, printed by authority.

Letters patent.]—Letters patent may be given in evidence without further proof; or they may be proved by exemplifications under the great seal (see 1 Saund. 119 n.), or the wafer great seal. 47 & 48 Vict. c. 30. And see Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1603; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), p. 107.

Proclamations.]—Where a proclamation recited that it had been represented that certain outrages had been committed in different parts of certain counties, and offered a reward for the discovery and apprehension of the offenders, it was held to be admissible evidence to prove an introductory averment in an information for a libel, that divers acts of outrage had been committed in those places. R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & Sel. 532. It seems doubtful whether the courts will take judicial notice of royal proclamations without proof. Dupays v. Shepherd, 12 Mod. 216: Van Omeron v. Dowick, 2 Camp. 42. Such proclamations may be proved by the London Gazette (ante, p. 410), or by copies purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown, or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them [or purporting to be printed under the superintendence or authority of his Majesty's Stationery Office, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 9, s. 2 (ante, p. 410)], without proof being given that such copies were so printed. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113. s. 3: and also under 31 and 32 Vict. c. 37 (ante, p. 407; and see Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 105, 106; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1527.

Treaties.]—As a treaty has no binding effect until confirmed by statute, Walker v. Baird [1892] A. C. 491, it is rarely needed in evidence. Extradition treaties, however, are brought into operation by order in council, and can be proved by a King's printer's copy of the order, under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 37, s. 2 (ante, p. 407), or by production of a copy of the official publication of statutory rules and orders (ante, p. 406).

Proclamations, etc., of colonial or foreign governments.]—All proclamations, treaties and other Acts of State of any foreign country or British colony . . .

may be proved in any court of justice or before any person having by law or consent authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, either by examined copies or by copies authenticated as hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, if the document sought to be proved is a proclamation, treaty, or other Act of State, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport to be sealed with the seal of the foreign State or British colony to which the original copy belongs . . . but if any of the aforesaid authenticated copies shall purport to be sealed as hereinbefore directed, the same shall be admitted as evidence in every case in which the original could have been received as evidence without any proof of the seal where a seal is necessary. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 7. Examined copies must be examined with the public archives abroad. A copy printed and published abroad, by the authorized printer of the foreign government or colony, will not, it seems, be sufficient. Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Camp. 65 n. As to colonial documents, see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 37, s. 3, (ante, p. 409).

Maps, Surveys, etc.

Ancient terriers, maps, etc.]—Ancient terriers, surveys, and maps of manors etc., when evidence, must be produced at the trial, and such circumstances connected with them stated in evidence as may induce the court and jury to give credit to them. See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 622, 1772; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 102, 103. Modern maps, or plans, even ordnance maps, are not admissible (see R. v. Milton, 1 C. & K. 58, 61), except as part of the evidence of the person who made them, or unless they can be shown to bind in some way the person against whom they are tendered (Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 622: Mercer v. Denne [1905] 2 Ch. 538; 74 L. J. (Ch.) 71), or semble unless their accuracy has been verified by the personal examination of the locus in quo by the witness who produces them. Maps annexed to inclosure awards are not admissible against persons not subject to the jurisdiction of the commissioners who made the award. R. v. Berger [1894] 1 Q. B. 823; 63 L. J. (Q. B.) 529; 17 Cox, 761.

In Caton v. Hamilton, 53 J. P. 504, an ordnance map was received as evidence of boundary at the date when it was made, sed quære. See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1770.

Surveys, inquisitions, etc.]—Inquisitions, taken by virtue of the King's writ, or of a commission under the seal of the Exchequer (if they have been returned and filed), etc., are proved by the production of the writ or commission and inquisition, or by an examined copy. It is questionable whether they can be evidence at all, until returned and filed. Cornish v. Searell, 6 L. J. (K. B.) 255; 8 B. & C. 471; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1582, 1769 a.

Public surveys, taken by officers acting for the Crown, many of which are to be found in the Public Record Office, are proved by the production of them by the proper officer, without further proof, or by examined copies, or copies taken under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, s. 13; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1769A.

Domesday-book, when evidence (see Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1768), must be produced at the trial, if intended to prove the gist of the pleadings; Hob. 188;

but if intended to prove some collateral matter merely, an examined copy (or a Record Office copy) of that part of the book relating to it will be sufficient.

Documents in the Record Office.

All documents in the custody of the Master of the Rolls can be proved either by production of the originals by a clerk from the Record Office or by a Record Office copy made under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, s. 13, or by an examined copy. The documents to which the custody of the Master of the Rolls extends are determined by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, s. 2, and the orders in council made thereunder. See Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 11, tit. Record Office, and list in Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1485. They include the records of the courts merged in the High Court of Justice in 1875 (ss. 1, 3).

Public Registers.

Births, marriages, deaths, etc.]—Baptisms, marriages, and burials may be proved by the parish register in which they are entered, by giving in evidence either the register itself or an examined copy of it (Gilb. Evid. 72; 2 Bac. Abr. Evid. (F.) : Doe v. Barnes, 1 M. & Rob. 386), if the original is in the proper custody, that is, in the church itself, or in the custody of the rector, vicar, curate, or other officiating minister; 52 G. 3, c. 146 : Doe v. Fowler, 14 Q. B. 700 : Walker v. Countess Beauchamp, 6 C. & P. 552; or a copy certified by the incumbent or other person to whose custody the original register is intrusted, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14 (post, p. 443). Before such books or examined copies are received the court must be satisfied that there was a public duty on the person keeping the register to satisfy himself of the truth of the entries made therein. Doe v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 756; 759, Erle, J. Besides the register, some proof must be given of the identity of the parties married, etc. Birt v. Barlow, 1 Doug. 171. See also R. v. Bellis, 6 Cr. App. R. 283 : R. v. Rogers, 10 Cr. App. R. 276. It would seem that a certificate of baptism does not prove the age of the party or the date of birth; Wihen v. Law, 3 Stark. (N. P.) 63; but see R. v. North Petherton, 4 L. J. (K. B.) 213; 5 B. & C. 508. By 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 86, s. 38, certified copies of entries purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the General Register Office established by that Act are to be "received as evidence of the birth, death or marriage to which they relate, without any further or other proof of such entry"; but "no certified copy purporting to be given in the said office" (at Somerset House) "shall be of any force or effect which is not sealed or stamped as aforesaid." A copy of an entry in the register book of births in a registrar's district within a superintendent registrar's larger district, certified to be a true copy under the hand of the deputy superintendent registrar, who also certified under his hand that the register book was in his lawful custody, was held to be admissible evidence, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, of the entry in the register book upon the mere production of such copy. R. v. Weaver, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 85; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 13. Upon an indictment for carnally knowing a girl, being above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years, such a certified copy of an entry showing that the child was of the age of eleven years and eight months, was held sufficient proof of the age, there being independent evidence of the identity of the girl with the child whose name was entered in the book. Id.; and see Re Goodrich [1904] Prob. 138; 73 L. J. P. 33, disapproving Re Wintle, L. R. 9 Eq. 373, in which Romilly, M.R., held that the certificate was only evidence of the fact of birth before registration and not of the date of birth. But evidence of identity is essential. R. v. Rogers, 79 J. P. 16; 24 Cox, 465. In R. v. Cox [1898] 1 Q. B. 179; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 293; 18 Cox, 672, 675, it was held that no statute made production of a birth certificate necessary for proof of the age of a child, and that the age could be proved by persons who had seen the child and by the mistress of an elementary school at which the child attended. As to proof that a person charged as a habitual criminal was over sixteen at the date of previous convictions alleged against him, see R. v. Turner [1910] 1 K. B. 346; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 176; 26 T. L. R. 112. "An entry or certified copy of an entry of a birth or death in a register under the Births and Deaths Registration Acts, 1836 to 1874, or in a certified copy of such a register, shall not be evidence of such birth or death, unless such entry either purports to be signed by some person professing to be the informant and to be such a person as is required by law at the date of such entry to give to the registrar information concerning such birth or death, or purports to be made upon a certificate from a coroner, or in pursuance of the provisions of this Act with respect to the registration of births and deaths at sea. When more than three months have intervened between the day of the birth and the day of the registration of the birth of any child, the entry or certified copy of the entry made after the commencement of this Act of the birth of such child in a register under the 'Births and Deaths Registration Acts, 1836 to 1874,' or in a certified copy of such a register, shall not be evidence of such birth unless such entry purports (a) if it appear that not more than twelve months have so intervened, to be signed by the superintendent registrar as well as by the registrar; or (b) if more than twelve months have so intervened, to have been made with the authority of the registrar-general, and in accordance with the prescribed rules. Where more than twelve months have intervened between the day of a death or the finding of a dead body and the day of the registration of the death or the finding of such body, the entry or certified copy of the entry made after the commencement of this Act, of the death in a register under the Births and Deaths Registration Acts, 1836 to 1874, or in a certified copy of such register, shall not be evidence of such death, unless such entry purports to have been made with the authority of the registrar-general, and in accordance with the prescribed rules," 37 & 38 Vict. c. 88, s. 38. By the Non-Parochial Registers Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 92), s. 6, all registers and records deposited in the General Register Office by virtue of that Act, except the registers and records of baptisms and marriages at the Fleet and King's Bench prisons, at May-fair, at the Mint in Southwark, etc., which were deposited in the registry of the Bishop of London, in the year 1821 (see s. 20), shall be deemed to be in legal custody, and be receivable in evidence in all courts of justice: and provision is made for the production of them by the registrar-general. Section 17 provides, that in all criminal cases the original register or record shall be produced; but see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14 (post, p. 443), 21 & 23 Vict. c. 25, ss. 1, 3. As to proof of births, deaths, and marriages at sea, see 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, ss. 240, 253, and s. 64, infra. As to proof of marriages abroad under British law, see 55 & 56 Vict. c. 23, s. 16. As to proof of births, deaths and marriages out of England, see Lyell v. Kennedy, 14 App. Cas. 437, 448; 59 L. J. (Q. B.) 258 : Brinkley v. Att.-Gen., 15 P. D. 76; 59 L. J. (P. D. & A.) 51.

As to proving a Jewish marriage, see Bigamy, post.

The register of the navy, with the letters Dd. opposite to a name therein registered (it being proved to be the practice of the Navy Office to write these letters opposite to the names of such persons as died), was held admissible evidence of the death of a man opposite to whose name these letters were written. Bull (N. P.) 249 : R. v. Rhodes, 1 Leach. 24.

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 64, sub-s. 2, "the following documents shall be admissible in evidence in manner provided by this Act, namely :—(a) Any register book under this part of this Act (Register of British Ships), on its production from the custody of the registrar, or other person having the lawful custody thereof; (b) A certificate of registry under this Act purporting to be signed by the registrar or other proper officer; (c) An indorsement on a certificate of registry purporting to be signed by the registrar or other proper officer; (d) Every declaration made in pursuance of this part of this Act in respect of a British ship." Sub-section 3 : "A copy or transcript of the register of British ships kept by the Registrar-General of Shipping and Seamen, under the direction of the Board of Trade, shall be admissible in evidence in manner provided by this Act, and have the same effect to all intents as the original register, of which it is a copy or transcript." See also ss. 694, 695, as to proof of documents under the Act Further provision is made by ss. 719, 720, of the Act, as to documents issued by the Board of Trade, as supervisor of British shipping.

As to the admissibility of registers of professional men, see post, p. 416.

By 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60 (Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881), s. 15, "every copy of an entry in or extract from the register of newspaper proprietors, purporting to be certified by the registrar or his deputy for the time being, or under the official seal of the registrar, shall be received as conclusive evidence of the contents of the said register of newspaper proprietors, so far as the same appear in such copy or extract without proof of the signature thereto or of the seal of office affixed thereto, and every such certified copy or extract shall in all proceedings, civil or criminal, be accepted as sufficient primâ facie evidence of all the matters and things thereby appearing, unless and until the contrary thereof be shown."

Certificates given under Public Authority.

The certificates of bishops with respect to marriage, general bastardy, excommunication orders, and other like matters, were received in evidence; Co. Litt. 4 : R. v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619, 637. So is the certificate of the Recorder of London, as to the custom of that city. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 5. And so are the certificates of justices of peace as to a highway being in repair. R. v. Mawbey, supra.

But the certificate of a British consul abroad is not admissible as evidence in the courts of this country; Waldron v. Coombe, 3 Taunt. 162: Ex parte Church, 1 D. & R. 324; except under specific statutory provisions, e.g., 52 & 53 Vict. c. 10, s. 6 (Oaths); 55 & 56 Vict. c. 23 (Foreign Marriage).

Professional qualifications—Barristers.]—The proof that a man is a barrister is by certificate of his call issued by the Inn to which he belongs. The Law List is not, strictly speaking, evidence as to barristers.

Solicitors.]—The certificates authorizing solicitors to practise, granted in pursuance of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, if in the form prescribed by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 25, s. 16, are, it seems, admissible in evidence without further proof. The Law List, published under the authority of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, is primâ facie evidence of the right of solicitors and conveyancers named therein to practise during the current year; and on a prosecution for obtaining money by a false pretence of being a solicitor it was held sufficient to prove that the accused was not qualified by producing the Law List. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 22: R. v. Wenham, 10 Cox, 222. An extract from the roll of solicitors kept by the Incorporated Law Society as registrar of solicitors, certified under the hand of the secretary of the society, is evidence of the facts appearing in such extract. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 22; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 65, s. 5.

Medical practitioners.]—The mere production of a diploma of doctor of physic, under the seal of one of the universities, is not of itself evidence to show that the party therein named is entitled to that degree, Moises v. Thornton, 8 T. R. 303. See Collins v. Carnegie, 3 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 190; 3 Nev. & M. 703; 1 A. & E. 695. A copy of the Medical Register, annually published by the registrar of the General Medical Council, is evidence of the due registration of the persons named therein: and absence of a name from the register is primâ facie evidence that the person is not a registered medical practitioner; but in the case of a person not on the register a certified copy under the hand of the registrar of the General Medical Council, or of any branch council, of the entry of the name of any person on the general or local medical register, is evidence that such person is registered under the Medical Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), s. 27: see Pedgrift v. Chevallier, 29 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 225; 8 C. B. (N. S.) 246. A certificate of the qualification of an apothecary if purporting to be under the common seal of the Society of Apothecaries is sufficient evidence of the qualification of the person therein named to practise as an apothecary without proof of the seal: 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 8. A certificate under the hand of the registrar, and countersigned by the president or two members of the council of the Pharmaceutical Society, is evidence that the person therein specified is registered under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56, or the Pharmacy Act, 1868, as the case may be: 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121, s. 13. A certificate purporting to be a certificate under the hand of the registrar under the Dentists Act, 1921, is primâ facie evidence of the facts stated in the certificate. 11 & 12 G. 5, c. 21, s. 15 (2). A copy of the register of veterinary surgeons, purporting to be printed or published in pursuance of the statute regulating the profession, is primâ facie evidence of registration: and provisions similar to those of s. 27 of the Medical Act, 1858, supra, are made as to proof of the registration of persons not appearing in the register. 44 & 45 Vict. c. 62, s. 9.

A copy of the roll of midwives purporting to be printed by the authority of the Central Midwives Board or to be signed by the secretary of the board is evidence in all courts that the women therein specified are certified as midwives, and the absence of the name of any woman from the copy is primâ facie evidence that she is not certified; but where a woman's name is not on such copy a certificate of the secretary of the board of the entry of her name on the roll is evidence that the woman is certified (2 Edw. 7, c. 17, s. 7).

Companies and societies.]—A certificate of incorporation given by the registrar in respect of any association is conclusive evidence that the association is a company authorized to be registered and duly registered under the Companies Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), s. 17 (1).

Certificates of the incorporation or copies of other documents in the registry are obtainable from the registrar, s. 243 (6), and a copy of or extract from any document kept and registered in the United Kingdom certified to be a true copy under the hand of the registrar or an assistant registrar whose handwriting need not be proved is in all legal proceedings admissible as of equal validity with the original document, s. 243 (7). A certified copy of the return made to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under 7 G. 4, c. 46, s. 7, by the public officer of a joint stock bank is not the only admissible evidence of the making of the return. R. v. Carter, 1 Den. 65; 1 C. & K. 741.

The certificate of registry of a trade union issued by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, unless proved to have been withdrawn or cancelled, is conclusive evidence of compliance with the regulations of the Trade Union Act, 1871, with respect to registry: 34 & 35 Vict. c. 31, s. 13 (5). Like provisions are made as to friendly societies by 59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, ss. 11, 100; as to industrial and provident societies by 56 & 57 Vict. c. 39, ss. 8, 75; and as to building societies by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 42, s. 20.

Elections.]—In criminal proceedings in relation to corrupt practices at parliamentary elections, the certificate of the returning officer is sufficient evidence of the due holding of the election, and of any person therein named having been a candidate thereat. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 29, s. 6. This enactment is extended by s. 53 of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), to prosecutions on indictment for any corrupt practice within the meaning of that Act at a parliamentary election, and by s. 30 of the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, which incorporates 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 53), to prosecutions on indictment for any corrupt practice at a municipal election, and by s. 35 of 47 & 48 Vict. c. 70, to similar prosecutions for corrupt practices at municipal elections in the city of London, and by s. 36 of the last-mentioned statute to similar prosecutions for corrupt practices at certain other elections in the said section specified. It has been further extended to the elections of county councils (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 75) and of urban and rural district councils, and of boards of guardians and parish councils, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 48: and of metropolitan borough councils, 62 & 63 Vict. c. 14, s. 2, sub-s. 5.

Acts, etc., of Public Bodies.

Corporation books, etc.]—Entries in corporation books, and in the books of public companies, relating to things public and general, and entries in other public books, may be proved by examined copies. R. v. Mothersell, 1 Str. 93: R. v. Mayor, etc., of London, Id. 307: Mercers of Shrewsbury v. Hart, 1 C. & P. 113 (and ante, p. 403). Entries in the books of the Custom House, of the Bank of England, or the like, may be proved in the same manner. See Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851: Warriner v. Giles, 2 Str. 954: Crew v. Saunders, Id. 1005: Edwards v. Vesey, Cas. (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 128; and see 2 Doug. 593, n. 3: Marsh v. Collnett, 5 R. R. 763; 2 Esp. 665: Hodgson v. Fullarton, 4 Taunt. 787: Mortimer v. M'Callan, 9 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 73; 6 M. & W. 58. But instruments of a private nature, such as a letter found in the corporation chest, R. v. Gwyn, 1 Str. 401, or the like, must be proved in the ordinary way as any other instrument. Where under any Act "a document or proceeding of any corporation or joint stock or other company is receivable in evidence," it shall be admitted if it purports to bear the seal, or stamp, or signature directed by the Act, without proof of the seal, stamp, or signature, or official character of the person purporting to have signed. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 1 (post, p. 442); and see Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 124.

Inspection of corporation books and other public writings is granted in civil actions, but not in criminal cases where the corporation is defendant, as it would have the effect of making the corporation furnish evidence to criminate itself. R. v. Heydon, 1 W. Bl. 351: R. v. Purnell, Id. 37; 1 Wils. (K. B.) 239; cf. 1 Ld. Raym. 705: 2 Id. 927; 2 Str. 1210; and see Spokes v. Grosvenor Hotel Co. [1897] 2 Q. B. 124; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 572.

As to proof of regulations made by the Dental Board of the United Kingdom, see 11 & 12 Geo. 5. c. 21, s. 15 (1).

Proceedings of local authorities.]—A minute of proceedings at a meeting of the council of a municipal borough, or of a committee of such council, signed at the same or the next ensuing meeting, by the mayor, or by a member of the council, or of the committee, describing himself as, or appearing to be, chairman of the meeting at which the minute is signed, shall be received in evidence without further proof. Until the contrary is proved, every meeting of the council, or of a committee, in respect of the proceedings whereof a minute has been so made, shall be deemed to have been duly convened and held, and all the members of the meeting shall be deemed to have been duly qualified; and where the proceedings are proceedings of a committee, the committee shall be deemed to have been duly constituted, and to have had power to deal with the matters referred to in the minutes, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 22, sub-ss. 5, 6. As to the minutes of a metropolitan borough council, see 18 & 19 Vict c. 120, s. 60; 62 & 63 Vict. c. 14, s. 2, sub-s. 5.

The minutes and proceedings of county councils are proved in the same way as those of town councils. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 22, sub.s. 5 The minutes and proceedings of the London County Council are regulated by a local Act of 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. ccxxi., s. 10). They can be proved either by printed copies under 44 & 45 Vict. c. 48, s. 33, or under 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 22. The minutes and proceedings of urban and rural district councils, and boards of guardians and their committees, may be proved under 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 199, and sched. 1, r. 10; 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 59, and minutes of parish councils and parish meetings may be proved as directed by 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, sched. 1, part 3.

Parish books.]—On the trial of an indictment for non-repair of a highway, entries in an ancient parish book, produced by the churchwarden from the parish chest, were held receivable in evidence to show who were the surveyors of the highways at that time. R. v. Pembridge, C. & Mar. 157.

By-laws.]—8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 1 (post, p. 442), dispenses with proof of the seal or signature or official character of by-laws which purport to be sealed or signed in accordance with any other past or future Act. Under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, the production of a written copy of a by-law made by the council under that Act, or under any former or present or future general or local Act of Parliament, if authenticated by the corporate seal shall, until the contrary is proved, be sufficient evidence of the due making and existence of the by-law, and, if it is so stated in the copy, of the by-law having been approved and confirmed by the authority whose approval or confirmation is required to the making or before the enforcing of the by-law. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 24. This provision is extended by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41, s. 23, to by-laws made by a county council, and by 62 & 63 Vict. c. 14, s. 5, sub-s. 2, and sched. 2, part 2, to by-laws made by a metropolitan borough council.

A copy of by-laws made under the Public Health Act, 1875 (made by a district council not being the council of a borough), if signed and certified by the clerk of the council to be a true copy, and to have been duly confirmed, shall be evidence, until the contrary is proved, in all legal proceedings of the due making, confirmation and existence of such by-laws without further or other proof. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 186. By-laws made under prior statutes but continued in force by s. 326 of the Public Health Act, 1875, must be proved in accordance with the Act under which they were made, or under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 1. Prints of municipal and county council by-laws with a print of the seal or certificate have been held insufficient. Drew v. Harlow, 39 J. P. 420 : Timothy v. Fenn, 74 J. P. 123. The proof of other by-laws depends on the statutes under which they are made, and on 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 1 (post, p. 442). For a list of such statutes, see Taylor. Evid. (11th ed.); Encycl. Local Govt. Law, vol. ii., p. 193.

Judicial Documents.

House of Lords.]—A judgment of the House of Lords is proved by an examined copy from the Journal of the House. Jones v. Randall, 1 Cowp. 17; or by a copy purporting to be printed by authority. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 3 (ante, p. 406).

Supreme Court.]—A record of the Supreme Court, or affidavit filed therein may be proved by production of the original from the central office, by an officer of the court, under order of a judge or master; and see 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 61, (ante, p. 403). A subpœna does not lie to produce it. R. S. C. 1883, Order LXI., r. 28. The order is obtained by obtaining the signature of a master to an official bespeak paper specifying the documents required, and where it is wanted for production elsewhere than at the Royal Courts by depositing a sufficient sum to secure the expenses of the attendance of the producing officer. R. S. C., Order LXI., r. 29. Production of the original record or document or an exemplification appears to be necessary at common law when it is the gist of the indictment or defence, which is seldom the case, except on a plea of autrefois convict or acquit (ante, pp. 155, 160); or on an indictment for an offence after a previous conviction (post, p. 421); or for escaping from prison, or for being at large during sentence, R. v. Shaw, R. & R. 526. Exemplifications are now seldom used for the purposes of proceedings in England. In all other cases an examined copy (ante, p. 403) may be used. Leyfield's case, 10 Co. Rep. 92 b; 2 Rolle Abr. 678, L. 45; Hardr. 119. But the modern form of office copy (ante, p. 403), being under the seal of the Court, is equivalent to an exemplification, and is the simplest mode of proof where the original is not necessary, and a Record Office copy would seem to be admissible. See Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 97, 98. The ancient mode of obtaining an exemplification of a record of the Court of King's Bench for use in an inferior court was by removing the record into Chancery by certiorari issuing from the Petty Bag Office to the Chief Justice of the court of which the record was: on removal an exemplification under the great seal was sent by mittimus to the inferior court. Gilb. Evid. 14, 15. The functions of the Petty Bag Office, which included the preparation of exemplifications, were, by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81, s. 5, transferred partly to officers of the Supreme Court, and partly to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. And the Petty Bag Office was abolished in 1889, and the residue of its business, except as to the roll of solicitors, was transferred to the Crown Office of the High Court. (See Statutory Rules and Orders Revised (ed. 1904), vol. 12, tit. Supreme Court, E, p. 931). With the creation of the High Court the procedure by certiorari is apparently defunct, and application for an exemplification under the great seal apparently should now be made to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at the Lord Chancellor's office.

Proceedings not being records.]—Rules of court as to procedure are proved as statutory rules. (See ante, p. 406.) Rules or orders of court not amounting to judgments are proved by examined or office copies. Selby v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 745: Duncan v. Scott, 1 Camp. 100: Gyles v. Hill, 1 Camp. 471 n: Streeter v. Bartlett, 17 L. J. (N. S.) C. P. 140; 5 C. B. 562. A rule of court is evidence that the court have ordered as is therein stated; but it is not evidence of any matters in it which are the mere suggestions of the party who obtained it. Woodroffe v. Williams, 6 Taunt. 19.

By the Evidence Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 113), s. 2, " all courts, justices, masters in chancery, masters of courts, commissioners judicially acting, and other judicial officers, are thenceforth to take judicial notice of the signature of any of the judges of the Supreme Court, attached or appended to any decree, order, certificate, or other judicial or official document."

Affidavits, being admissions upon oath, are evidence as such against the parties who made them. Gilb. Evid. 51, 56 : Harmer v. Davis, 7 Taunt. 577. When filed in the central office of the High Court, they may be proved by office copies (R. S. C. 1883, Order XXXVII., r. 4), or by examined copies, or by production of the original from the proper custody. Affidavits not filed can be proved only by production of the affidavits themselves, and by parol evidence of their having been sworn; Gilb. Evid. 56. Even if not proved to be sworn, yet perhaps they may be received as admissions of the deponents, upon proof of their handwriting. Gilb. Evid. 56. Upon an indictment for perjury in an affidavit, the affidavit, if in existence, must in all cases be produced, whether filed or not, and must be proved. R. v. James, 1 Show. 397 : Crook v. Dowling, 3 Doug. 75 : Rees v. Bowen, M'Clel. & Y. 383. But upon proof that it has been lost or destroyed, secondary evidence may be given of its contents and of the defendant's signature to it. R. v. Milnes, 2 F. & F. 10. Where an affidavit purported to have been sworn before a commissioner of oaths, but his commission was not proved, Patteson, J., held the affidavit to be admissible, and that proof of the commissioner's acting was sufficient. R. v. Howard, 1 M. & Rob. 187. And on the trial of an indictment for perjury, assigned on an affidavit sworn in the Court of Queen's Bench, proof of the defendant's signature to the affidavit, and that under a jurat, "sworn in open court at Westminster Hall, the 10th day of June, 1846," the words, "by the court" were in the handwriting of one of the masters of the Court of Queen's Bench, was held sufficient evidence of the swearing of the affidavit in that court, without any further proof that the master was in court when the affidavit was sworn. R. v. Turner, 2 C. & K. 732 : see also R. v. Spencer, 1 C. & P. 260; Ry. & M. 97.

Where an affidavit is sworn abroad by a person having authority to administer an oath not derived from the law of a foreign state, judicial or official notice is to be taken of his seal or signature affixed, impressed, or subscribed to the affidavit. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 10, s. 3 (2).

Convictions.]—As to what constitutes a conviction, see ante, p. 230. The proper proof that a prisoner was in lawful custody under a sentence of imprisonment passed at the assizes is by proof of the record of his conviction; and neither the production of the calendar of sentences, signed by the clerk of the assize, and by him delivered to the gaoler, nor the evidence of a person who heard sentence passed, is sufficient for this purpose. R. v. Bourdon, 2 C. & K. 966, Maule, J.

At common law upon an indictment for a subsequent felony, a conviction for a previous felony can be proved by the production of the record itself, if it is a record of the same court, or by an exemplification if it is the record of another court.

By the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), s. 13, "whenever in any proceeding whatever (civil as well as criminal, Richardson v. Willis, L. R. 8

Ex. 69; 42 L. J. Ex. 15), it may be necessary to prove the trial and conviction or acquittal of any person charged with an indictable offence, it shall not be necessary to produce the record of the conviction or acquittal of such person, or a copy thereof; but it shall be sufficient that it be certified, or purport to be certified, under the hand of the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where such conviction or acquittal took place, or by the deputy of such clerk or other officer, that the paper produced is a copy of the record of the indictment, trial, conviction and judgment, or acquittal, as the case may be, omitting the formal parts thereof." It seems that under this enactment the record must be made up, although the formal parts need not be included in the certificate; but the production by the officer of the court (being the same court in which the subsequent proceeding was had) of the caption, the indictment, with the indorsement of the prisoner's plea, the verdict, and the sentence of the court upon it, together with the minutes of the trial, made by the officer in court, was held sufficient evidence of the former trial, without the production either of the record or of a certificate under this section. R. v. Newman, 2 Den. 390; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 75: R. v. Horne Tooke, 25 St. Tr. 447. See R. v. Parry, 7 C. & P. 836. But evidence of a conviction given by a police officer present at the trial is not alone proper proof of the conviction. Mash v. Darley, [1914] 3 K. B. 1226; 30 T. L. R. 585—C.A. Convictions before justices of peace may be proved by examined copies, which the clerk of the peace for the proper county will make out upon an application for that purpose. R. v. Gilkes, 6 L. J. (M. C.) 118; 8 B. & C. 439. A previous conviction, whether summary or on indictment, is now in practice usually proved under the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112), s. 18; which provides that " a previous conviction may be proved in any legal proceeding whatever against any person by producing a record or extract of such conviction, and by giving proof of the identity of the person against whom the conviction is sought to be proved with the person appearing in the record or extract of conviction to have been convicted. (See Martin v. White [1910] 1 K. B. 665; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 553.) A record or extract of a conviction shall, in the case of an indictable offence, consist of a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction, and purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court by which such conviction was made, or purporting to be signed by the deputy of such clerk or officer; and in the case of a summary conviction shall consist of a copy of such conviction, purporting to be signed by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction over the offence in respect of which such conviction was made, or to be signed by the proper officer of the court by which such conviction was made, or by the clerk or other officer of any court to which such conviction has been returned. A record or extract of any conviction made in pursuance of this section shall be admissible in evidence without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same. A previous conviction in any one part of the United Kingdom may be proved against a prisoner in any other part of the United Kingdom; and a conviction before the passing of this Act shall be admissible in the same manner as if it had taken place after the passing thereof. A fee not exceeding five shillings may be charged for a record of a conviction given in pursuance of this section. The mode of proving a previous conviction authorized by this section shall be in addition to and not in exclusion of any other authorized mode of proving such conviction."

By s. 28 (1) of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5. c. 58), "the record or extract by which a conviction may be proved under s. 18 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, may in the case of a summary conviction consist of a copy of the minute or memorandum of the conviction entered in the register required to be kept under s. 22 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court by whom the register is kept." This provision extends to all proceedings the method of proving a summary conviction which formerly was authorized in the same court in which the conviction took place. See Commissioner of Police v. Donovan [1903] 1 K. B. 895; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 545.

Under the Criminal Law Act, 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28), s. 11. upon an indictment for felony, after a previous conviction for felony, proof of the previous conviction may be given by a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment or conviction for the previous felony purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court, or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where the offender was first convicted, or by the deputy of such clerk or officer, which certificate is upon proof of identity sufficient evidence of the first conviction, without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same. A certificate under this section should show that judgment was given: R. v. Ackroyd, 1 C. & K. 158; Cresswell, J.: R. v. Stonnell, 1 Cox, 142, Patteson, J. As to the mode of proving a previous conviction against a person indicted for any offence punishable under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), see s. 116. As to the mode of proving a previous conviction for any offence relating to the coin, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 37. Upon the trial of an indictment for being at large before the expiration of a sentence of transportation, provision is made by 5 G. 4, c. 84, s. 24, for proof of the former conviction and sentence by a certificate of the officer of the court. See also 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 6 (post, p. 475), which regulates the proof of a conviction for the purpose of discrediting a witness.

In all cases not provided for by statute, where a copy of a record is given in evidence, it must be a copy of the whole record; because the omission of part might have the effect of altering the sense and import of the residue. Gilb. Evid. 23; 3 Co. Inst. 173. Records are not complete until delivered into court on parchment; therefore a minute-book, from which an entry of the proceedings at sessions is made, and from which book the roll containing the record of such proceedings is subsequently made up, is not a record. R. v. Bellamy, Ry. & M. 171: R. v. Thring, 5 C. & P. 507; see R. v. Ward, 5 C. & P. 366: R. v. Bourdon, 2 C. & P. 366 (ante, p. 421). Thus, to prove a verdict you must give in evidence an examined copy or office copy of the whole record, including the judgment; Bull. (N. P.) 234: Gilb. Evid. 37, 68; for otherwise it would not appear but that judgment had been arrested, or a new trial granted; Bull. (N. P.) 234: Pitton v. Walter, 1 Str. 162; unless in the case of an issue out of Chancery, where no judgment was entered up. Bull. (N. P.) 234.

There is now no Nisi Prius record, and no postea in a civil case in the High Court. As to the postea in criminal trials in the High Court, see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 165, and Short and Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 126. Under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, O. XXXVI., r. 300, copies of the pleadings are to be deposited on entering the action for trial. The certificate provided by O. XXXVI., r. 42, takes the place of the postea, and judgments and orders need not now be enrolled, whether the judgment is dated before or since the commencement of the Judicature Act, 1873, or November 1, 1875, O. LXI., r. 8. "Office copies of all writs, records, pleadings, and documents filed in the High Court of Justice shall be admissible in evidence in all causes and matters, and between all persons or parties to the same extent as the original would be admissible." R. S. C. 1883, O. XXXVII., r. 4. But this rule does not apply to proceedings on the Crown side of the King's Bench Division. On an indictment for perjury in an action it was held that an allegation that judgment was entered up was proved by production of the book from the judgment office in which the incipitur was entered. R. v. Gordon, C. & Mar. 410. Upon an indictment for perjury, charged as having been committed on the trial of an action in the High Court of Justice, the existence and trial of the action are sufficiently proved by the production, by the officer of the court, of the copy writ filed under O. V., r. 7, and the copy pleadings filed under O. XLI., r. 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1875, and by the production by the solicitor of the defendants in the action, of the original order to dismiss the action. R. v. Scott, 2 Q. B. D. 415; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 259. The Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), s. 14, prescribes the mode of proving the trial of an indictment for felony or misdemeanor upon the trial of an indictment for perjury or subornation of perjury, alleged to have been committed at the former trial. If it is necessary to prove what a witness said upon a former trial it may be proved upon oath from the notes or recollections of any person who was present at the time; Mayor of Doncaster v. Day, 3 Taunt. 262; but in order to let in such evidence, it must be first proved that the former trial took place.

Enrolled deeds.]—To prove a deed which has been enrolled, the indorsement of the enrolment is sufficient evidence, without further proof of the deed; Gilb. Evid. 24, 96; Smartle v. Williams, 1 Salk. 280; and see Kinnersley v. Orpe, 1 Doug. 56; Rowe v. Brenton, 5 L. J. (K. B.) 137; 8 B. & C. 737, 755. But if the deed is lost, it can be proved only by an examined copy of the enrolment. Baikie v. Chandless, 3 Camp. 17, 20. The copy is obtained in the case of deeds enrolled in the High Court from the enrolment department of the central office; see R. S. C., 1883, O. LXI. But enrolled deeds must within two years of enrolment be sent to the Public Record Office; and when this has been done they can be proved by a Record Office copy under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94 (ante, p. 413). All this, however, must be understood of deeds only which need enrolment; for if any other deed be enrolled (as, for instance, a bargain and sale for years, or the like), and be afterwards offered in evidence, it must be proved in the ordinary way. Gilb. Evid. 99; Page's case, 5 Co. Rep. 53: Smartle v. Williams, 1 Salk. 280.

Proceedings in Courts of Equity.]—Prior to the Judicature Acts, the Court of Chancery was not regarded as a Court of Record. 3 Bl. Com. 24 n. Since its fusion with the High Court its records and documents are provable as documents of the High Court (see ante, p. 420). All the records of the old Court of Chancery are now lodged in the Public Record Office, and may be proved by Record Office copies under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, s. 13 (ante, p. 413). Decrees of the old Court of Chancery and judgments of the Chancery Division may still be proved by exemplification under the wafer great seal; but this proceeding is only adopted for the purpose of enforcing them under the Crown Debts Act, 1801 (41 G. 3, c. 90). Independently of this mode of proof, in the case of proceedings prior to November 1, 1875, the bill and answer may be proved by examined copies (ante, p. 403); Gilb. Evid. 56: Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182: Hodgkinson v. Willis, 3 Camp. 401; or by Record Office copies under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94 (ante, p. 413). In order to prove the answer, it was necessary to give in evidence an examined copy of the bill as well as of the answer; Gilb. Evid. 55; but where it was proved by the proper officer that he had searched diligently in the office for the bill and could not find it, the court allowed the answer to be read without it. Id. See Ewer v. Ambrose, 3 L. J. (K. B.) 115; 4 B. & C. 25: Rowe v. Brenton, 5 L. J. (K. B.) 137; 8 B. & C. 737, 765. Where the bill and answer are recited (as formerly they were) in the decree, the production of the latter was sufficient proof of them. Com. Dig. Evid (C. 1): Wharton Peerage case, 12 Cl. & F. 295; 8 Eng. Rep. 1410; see Blower v. Hollis, 1 Cr. & M. 393. Upon an indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed in an answer, the answer itself must be produced, and it must be proved either that the party was sworn to it, or that the name subscribed to it is his handwriting, and that the name subscribed to the jurat is the name and handwriting of a master or other person having authority for that purpose. R. v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189: R. v. Benson, 2 Camp. 508. See R. v. Spencer, 1 C. & P. 260; Ry. & M. 97. And the same is to depositions in equity. As to the admissibility of decrees and orders in equity see Layburn v. Crisp, 8 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 118; 4 M. & W. 320; 7 C. & P. 397; Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 234: Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 C. & P. 242. It would seem that bills, answers, and depositions in equity might also be proved by copies certified by the Clerk of Records and Writs under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 13 (post, p. 443). Reeve v. Hodson, 10 Hare, App. xix., Wood, V.-C.

A decree in equity, if it remained in paper, must be proved by an examined copy (ante, p. 403), together with an examined copy of the bill and answer; but if it has been enrolled, it must be proved by an exemplification under the wafer great seal (ante, p. 403), or by a Record Office copy (see ante, p. 413).

Proceedings in Ecclesiastical Courts.]—The libel, answer, depositions, and sentence in ecclesiastical courts, in matters within their jurisdiction, are provable in the same manner as the bill, anwer, depositions, and decree in equity. See supra, Gilb. Evid. 66, 67; Com. Dig. Evid. (C. 3); Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 116.

The practice of the ecclesiastical courts may be proved in the courts of common law by parol evidence. Beaurain v. Scott, 3 Camp. 388.

Proceedings in the Divorce Court.]—On the transfer of matrimonial causes to the Divorce Court, it was provided that all decrees and orders, and copies of decrees or orders, of the said court, sealed with its seal, should be received in evidence. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 13. And this enactment is not affected by subsequent legislation, though the court is now part of the High Court of Justice. Judgments of a matrimonial court operate as judgments in rem., i.e. if pronounced by a competent court on an issue properly arising in the cause, they are conclusive evidence of the facts they establish, except it is said in suits of jactitation of marriage. Duchess of Kingston's case, 20 St. Tr. 355: Clewes v. Bathurst, 2 Str. 960; Cas. (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 11: Mendez v. Villa Real, Ib. 18. See Dicey, Conflict of Laws (2nd ed.), 425.

Proceedings in Probate Courts.]—By s. 22 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), "all probates, letters of administration, orders, and other instruments and exemplifications and copies thereof respectively purporting to be sealed with any seal of the Court of Probate shall in all parts of the United Kingdom be received in evidence without further proof thereof." This provision is not affected by the amalgamation of the Court of Probate with the High Court of Justice.

Wills affecting real estate proved on or since Jan. 11, 1858, can be proved by the probate or by an office copy under the seal of the court. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 61, 62. But the probate issued from an ecclesiastical court before Jan. 11, 1858, is not admissible to establish a will affecting real estate. See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), 1759. Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 118.

Letters of administration granted since Jan. 11, 1858, are proved under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 22 (supra); letters granted prior to that date can be proved by production of the letters of administration, or by a certificate from the ecclesiastical court, that administration was granted, or by calling a clerk from the Court of Probate to produce the book of acts, containing the direction for the letters to issue, and the surrogate's fiat for the same. Bull. (N. P.) 246: Elden v. Keddell, 8 East, 187; 9 R. R. 404: Davis v. Williams, 13 East. 232.

Proceedings in Admiralty.]—Proceedings in and records of the Admiralty Division of the High Court are proved as stated ante, p. 420. The judgment is conclusive evidence of the facts it establishes, not only against those concerned in interest and persons claiming under them, but also against strangers. Thus, a sentence condemning goods as captured from the enemy is conclusive evidence that they were so captured. Stirling v. Vaughan, 11 East, 619: Castrique v. Imrie, L. R. 4 H. L. 414: 39 L. J. (C. P.) 50: The Minna Craig, [1897] 1 Q. B. 55, 460; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 339 and see Dicey, Conflict of Laws (2nd ed.), 423.

Proceedings in courts of assize or quarter sessions.]—Courts of assize, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, including the Central Criminal Court, are now part of the High Court, and their records are those of that court. R. v. Dudley, 14 Q. B. D. 273, 560; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 32: R. v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 839. Courts of quarter sessions for the trial of indictments are said not to be inferior courts. R. v. Smith, 6 L. J. (M. C.) 99; 8 B. & C. 341, 342, Tenterden, C.J. The record, and not a mere minute or entry, must be produced, except in cases dealt with by statute (ante, pp. 421-423): R. v. Smith, supra; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 107. Proof of previous convictions at quarter sessions or before a court of summary jurisdiction may be made under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 18 (ante, p. 422).

Where the record of a court of quarter sessions is pleaded in a court of oyer and terminer, or the converse, or where the record of one court of oyer and terminer is pleaded in another, the exemplification, in strictness, should in like manner be obtained upon certiorari. In the case of courts of oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, which are now parts of the High Court (see ante, p. 104), certiorari would not now be appropriate. And as to all these courts the general practice is, to apply simply to the clerk of the peace or clerk of assize, who will make it out accordingly, without writ, or will attend with the record itself at the trial. Where the "sessions book" was produced to prove an order of the quarter sessions, but the clerk of the peace said that he would have made up the record if it had been bespoken, Parke, B., refused to receive the book in evidence. R. v. Ward, 6 C. & P. 366: see R. v. Bellamy, Ry. & M. 171. But where the entry of the order in the book had a regular caption, and was in the present tense, and in every other respect like a record, and it was proved that no other record was ever made up, this was held to be legal evidence of the order. R. v. Yeoveley, 8 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 9; 8 A. & E. 806; and see Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 108.

Proceedings in inferior civil courts of record.]—By s. 28 of the County Courts Acts, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), provision is made for the entry of a note by the registrar of all proceedings of a county court in a court book, and it is enacted that "such entries in the said book, or a copy thereof bearing the seal of the court, and purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the registrar of the court, shall at all times be admitted in all courts and places whatsoever, as evidence of such entries, and of the proceeding referred to by such entry, and of the regularity of such proceeding, without any further proof." And this is the only proper evidence of such proceedings. R. v. Rowland, 1 F. & F. 72. If a certificate is asked for, the purpose for which it is wanted must be stated on application and entered by the registrar on the certificate. County Court Rules, 1903, O. XXIII., r. 10. Where the entry, of which a copy was produced, stated that the court had been held before U., deputy-judge of the said court, it was held that this was sufficient evidence of the regularity of U.'s appointment. R. v. Roberts, 14 Cox, 101 (C. C. R.). Where office copies of proceedings in the court are required, they are prepared by the registrar on prepayment of the cost. County Court Rules, 1903, O. II., r. 7.

Judgments in a court baron, a common law county court, or other inferior court, may be proved either by producing the books in which they are entered, or by examined copies. See Gilb. Evid. 74; Com. Dig. Evid. (C. 1); Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 117, 119.

The court rolls of a manor may be proved by examined copies. Gilb. Evid. 75: R. v. Hains, Comb. 337; 12 Mod. 24; or, it seems, by a copy under the steward's hand; Lee v. Boothby, 1 Keb. 720; or the steward or his deputy may produce them at the trial. See Gilb. Evid. 75.

Proceedings in bankruptcy.]—Section 137 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), contains the following provisions as to evidence:—"(1.) A copy of the London Gazette containing any notice inserted therein in pursuance of this Act shall be in evidence of the facts stated in the notice. (2.) The production of a copy of the London Gazette containing any notice of a receiving order, or of an order adjudging a debtor bankrupt, shall be conclusive evidence in all legal proceedings of the order having been duly made, and of its date." A cutting from the London Gazette appearing on the Bankruptcy file is not sufficient; but the entire Gazette containing the notice or order must be produced. R. v. Lowe, 52 L. J. (M. C.) 122; 15 Cox, 286 (C. C. R.). An order of discharge is conclusive evidence of the bankruptcy, and of the validity of the proceedings therein. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59, s. 28, sub-s. 3. By s. 138 of the same Act: "(1) A minute of proceedings at a meeting of creditors under this Act, signed at the same or the next ensuing meeting, by a person describing himself as, or appearing to be, chairman of the meeting at which the minute is signed, shall be received in evidence without further proof. (2) Until the contrary is proved, every meeting of creditors in respect of the proceedings whereof a minute has been so signed shall be deemed to have been duly convened and held, and all resolutions passed or proceedings had thereat to have been duly passed or had." By s. 139: "Any petition or copy of a petition in bankruptcy, any order or certificate or copy of an order or certificate made by any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, any instrument or copy of an instrument, affidavit, or document, made or used in the course of any bankruptcy proceedings, or other proceedings had under this Act, shall, if it appears to be sealed with the seal of any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, or purports to be signed by any judge thereof, or is certified as a true copy by any registrar thereof, be receivable in evidence in all legal proceedings whatever." By s. 141: "In the case of the death of the debtor or his wife, or of a witness whose evidence has been received by any court in any proceeding under this Act the deposition of the person so deceased, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the court, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall be admitted as evidence of the matters therein deposed to." By s. 142: "Every court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this Act shall have a seal describing the court in such manner as may be directed by order of the Lord Chancellor, and judicial notice shall be taken of the seal, and of the signature of the judge, or registrar of any such court, in all legal proceedings." By s. 143: "A certificate of the Board of Trade that a person has been appointed trustee under this Act, shall be conclusive evidence of his appointment." By s. 144 : " (1.) All documents purporting to be orders or certificates made or issued by the Board of Trade, and to be sealed with the seal of the board, or to be signed by a secretary or assistant secretary of the board or any person authorized in that behalf by the president of the board, shall be received in evidence, and deemed to be such orders or certificates without further proof unless the contrary is shown. (2.) A certificate signed by the president of the Board of Trade that any order made, certificate issued, or act done, is the order, certificate, or act of the Board of Trade, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact so certified."

As to proof of statements by a bankrupt in his public examination, see ante, p. 382.

Proceedings before Justices and Coroners.

Convictions.]—Previous convictions before justices may be proved in all legal proceedings under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 18, and 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 28 (1) (ante, pp. 422, 423).

Depositions before magistrates.]—The Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), s. 17 (after directing justices to take in manner therein mentioned the statement on oath or affirmation of the witnesses against any person charged before them with an indictable offence), enacts, that " if upon the trial of the person so accused it shall be proved, by the oath or affirmation of any credible witness, that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, and if also it be proved that such deposition was taken in the presence of the person so accused, and that he or his counsel or attorney had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness, then, if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition as evidence in such prosecution, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that such deposition was not in fact signed by the justice purporting to sign the same." These provisions are extended to depositions taken before justices on behalf of the accused by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 3, which enacts in its concluding words that " upon the trial of such accused person, all the laws now in force relating to the depositions of witnesses for the prosecution shall extend and be applicable to the deposition of witnesses hereby directed to be taken."

Unsworn evidence by children.]—Where in any proceeding against any person for an offence, any child of tender years who is tendered as a witness does not in the opinion of the court understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of that child may be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the court, the child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth; and the evidence of the child, though not given on oath, but otherwise taken and reduced into writing in accordance with the provisions of s. 17 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, or of Part II. of the Children Act, 1908, shall be deemed to be a deposition within the meaning of that section and that part respectively 8 Edw. 7, c. 67 (Children Act, 1908), s. 30 (see post, p. 453), as amended by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58 (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), s. 28 (2). The deposition of an unsworn child taken in the way prescribed above may subsequently be read under s. 17 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (ante, p. 429) if the child dies or becomes so ill as not to be able to travel.

Further provision is made for admitting such unsworn deposition in certain cases by s. 29 of the Children Act, 1908, which enacts that "where, on the trial of any person on indictment for an offence of cruelty, or any of the offences mentioned in the first schedule to this Act, the court is satisfied by the evidence of a duly qualified medical practitioner that the attendance before the court of any child or young person in respect of whom the offence is alleged to have been committed would involve serious danger to the life or health of the child or young person, any deposition of the child or young person taken under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, or Part II. of this Act, shall be admissible in evidence either for or against the accused person without further proof thereof—

(a) if it purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken; and

(b) if it is proved that reasonable notice of the intention to take deposition has been served upon the person against whom it is proposed to use it as evidence, and that that person or his counsel or solicitor had, or might have had if he had chosen to be present, an opportunity of cross-examining the child or young person making the deposition."

The indictable offences to which this enactment applies are—

(1) Cruelty (s. 12).

(2) Offences under ss. 27, 55, 56, of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100).

(3) Offences under the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 34, and 60 & 61 Vict. c. 52).

(4) Offences against a person under 16, under ss. 5, 42, 43, 52, or 62 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), or under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69).

(5) Any other offence involving bodily injury to a person under 16.

The unsworn evidence of a child of tender years must be corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 30 (a).

Illness justifying the reading of a deposition.]—The words, "so ill as not to be able to travel," in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, do not mean that the witness's coming to give evidence on the trial shall actually endanger his life, but that he is not reasonably fit, from illness, to attend. R. v. Riley, 22 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 48; 3 C. & K. 116 : R. v. Cockburn, Dears. & B. 203; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 136; 7 Cox, 265 : cf. R. v. Day, 6 Cox, 55 : R. v. Wilson, 8 Cox, 453, 454 n. A witness came to the assize town and into court, but a short time before the trial came on he left the court and returned to his home by the advice of a medical man, who deposed that in his judgment it would have been highly dangerous for the witness to remain. While the trial was going on the witness was on his way home. Channell, Serj., after consulting with Parke, B., held that the witness was "so ill as not to be able to travel," and that his deposition before the committing magistrate might be read in evidence. R. v. Wicker, 18 Jur. 252. It is for the presiding judge at the trial to decide, in his discretion, whether the evidence that the witness is too ill to travel is sufficient: R. v. Stephenson, L. & C. 165; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 147; and such evidence need not necessarily come from a medical man. Id. Followed in R. v. Noakes, [1917] 1 K. B. 581; 86 L. J. (K. B.) 594; 81 J. P. 140; 25 Cox, C. C. 722; 12 Cr. App. R. 204; 33 T. L. R. 201. Where, however, the only evidence that the person whose deposition it was proposed to put in was so ill as not to be able to travel, was that of a police officer, who said that he had that morning seen him in bed and that he had fever and that he had been confined to his bed for a fortnight, Byles, J., on ascertaining that the constable knew of the confinement to bed for a fortnight by hearsay only, rejected the deposition on the ground that to make it admissible there should be the evidence of a medical man, or other evidence which the court might think of equal value to medical testimony. R. v. Welton, 9 Cox, 296, explained in R. v. Noakes, supra; and see R. v. Ulmer, 4 Cox, 442: R. v. Butcher, post, p. 432. Where it was proposed to put in the deposition of an absent witness on the ground that he was "so ill as not to be able to travel," and the evidence of such inability was that of a medical man, who said that he had last seen the witness on the Monday (the trial taking place on the Wednesday next following), and that he was then recovering from a severe attack of pain in the bowels, and was too feverish then to travel, but that it was possible that he might have sufficiently recovered by the Wednesday to have travelled, but that he (the medical man) would not have advised it, Blackburn, J., refused to admit the deposition on the ground that no one had seen the witness for forty-eight hours, and that he might have sufficiently recovered in that period. R. v. Bull, 12 Cox, 31. Unless there is actual illness, old age causing nervousness and inability to stand cross-examination is not enough foundation for the reading of the deposition of an absent witness: R. v. Farrell, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 116; 43 L. J. (M. C.) 94; even although the bringing such witness into court would be dangerous to his life. R. v. Thompson, 13 Cox, 181, Lush, J.

Pregnancy.]—In R. v. Stephenson, L. & C. 165; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 147, it was held that there might be incidents in regard to the state of pregnancy which might bring the case within s. 17. Bramwell, B., allowed the deposition of a married woman to be read on the evidence of her husband that she was pregnant and unable to attend; although he was unable to state how far advanced she was, and she was about the house attending to her household duties as usual, and had prepared breakfast for him that morning, and had not been confined to bed; but a fortnight before she had suffered in consequence of being driven to the assize town. R. v. Croucher, 3 F. & F. 285. And it is now settled that pregnancy may be a source of such illness as to render the witness unable to travel, and be an illness within the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17. R. v. Wellings, 3 Q. B. D. 426; 47 L. J. (M. C.) 100. In R. v.

Wellings no medical evidence was tendered as to the condition of the witness, whose deposition was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved to have been rightly admitted, and the only evidence as to her condition was given by her husband, who proved that he resided with his wife at a place fifteen miles distant from the place of trial, and that when he left his wife on that morning she was unable to move about without considerable difficulty, that she was then lying down, and had been so during the greater part of the past week, though able to get up for a few minutes at intervals. He further stated that his wife thought her confinement would not take place until the middle of the following week, but might occur at any hour. So where a medical man gave evidence to the effect that he had examined the witness that morning; that she was very near her confinement, and it would have been dangerous to expose her to the excitement of attending a criminal trial; and that two days previously there were symptoms of approaching labour, and her confinement might take place at any moment; but at the same time he could not say that her case differed in any way from any ordinary case of confinement: Bowen, J., after consulting with Lush, J., admitted her deposition. R. v. Goodfellow, 14 Cox, 326. In R. v. Butcher [1900] 64 J. P. 808, Darling, J., refused to accept as sufficient the evidence of a police constable that a witness was about to be confined, and stated that there should either be medical evidence or an application for an adjournment.

The above decision with respect to pregnancy have been applied to illness following childbirth. In R. v. Harney, 4 Cox, 441, the deposition of a woman who had just been confined was admitted, although it was urged that in a very few weeks the woman would almost certainly be able to attend. In R. v. Marsella, 17 T. L. R. 164; 35 L. J. Newsp. 693; 110 L. T. J. 237, Bruce, J., admitted the deposition of a woman who had been confined ten days before the trial, on the oath of the doctor who attended her, that it would be dangerous for her to travel, and held that the decisions to the contrary effect in R. v. Wilton, 1 F. & F. 309: R. v. Walker, Id. 534, were overruled by R. v. Goodfellow, supra, and were no longer law.

Similarity of charges.]—The deposition is receivable only where the indictment is substantially for the same offence as that with which the defendant was charged before the justice. R. v. Ledbetter, 3 C. & K. 108. Where the deposition was taken on a charge of feloniously wounding, it was held receivable on the trial of the defendant for the murder of the person wounded, who had in the meantime died of the wound. R. v. Beeston, Dears. 405; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 5; 6 Cox, 425. And where the deposition was taken on a charge of robbery with violence to the person, it was received on the trial of the prisoner for the murder of the person robbed, he having in the meantime died from the violence. R. v. Lee, 4 F. & F. 63, Pollock, C.B. These decisions were approved and followed in R. v. Edmunds, 25 T. L. R. 658; 2 Cr. App. R. 257 (C. C. A.), where depositions taken on a charge of wounding with intent to murder were held admissible on a charge of murder, the person wounded having died since the depositions were taken. Where the deposition had been taken on a charge of obtaining money by false pretences, it was allowed to be read on a trial of an indictment against the prisoner for uttering a forged promissory note, the charges of false pretence and uttering being substantially the same, both arising out of the same transaction and the same evidence proving both charges. R. v. Williams, 12 Cox, 101, Montague Smith, J. See R. v. Radbourne, 1 Leach, 457 : R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339; Holt (N. P.), 614 : R. v. Dilmore, 6 Cox, 52, Wightman, J. : Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 309. The point is not whether the inquiry before the magistrate was exactly the same as that before the judge, but whether that inquiry was such that a full opportunity of cross-examination has been given to the party accused. Alderson, B., in R. v. Beeston, supra.

Postponement of trial.]—Where a witness is so ill as not to be able to travel, the judge may, if he thinks fit, postpone the trial to the next assizes, instead of permitting the depositions to be read under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17. R. v. Tait, 2 F. & F. 553, Crompton, J. In all cases where there is any doubt as to whether the deposition is admissible in evidence, it would be prudent to apply to the judge for a postponement of the trial.

As to reading before the grand jury depositions taken under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, see ante, p. 75.

Decisions before the Indictable Offences Act.]—Although the former (and repealed) statutes relating to the examination of witnesses against a prisoner before justices and coroners (1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 13; 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 10; 7 G. 4, c. 64, ss. 2-5) did not contain any express enactment like that contained in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, it was recognized as a rule of law, that, where the examinations of witnesses in cases of felony under those statutes were taken in the presence of the accused, and he had the opportunity of cross-examining them, the deposition of any such witness might be read in evidence against the accused on his trial, if the person who made the deposition were dead; 1 Hale, 305; Bull. (N. P.) 242; or insane (though the insanity were of a temporary nature) : R. v. Marshall, C. & Mar. 147 : R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707, 720 (but see R. v. Ferrystone, 2 East, 54); or if it appeared satisfactorily to the court that he was kept out of the way by means of the procurement of the defendant : R. v. Harrison, 12 St. Tr. 833, 852 : R. v. Lord Morley, Kel. (J.) 53, 55; 6 St. Tr. 770, 771 (in which case, however, the deposition is no evidence against other co-defendants : R. v. Scaife, 2 Den. 281; 17 Q. B. 238; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 229); or if he were bedridden, or so ill as to be unable to travel. 1 Hale, 305; 2 Hawk. c. 46, ss. 15-17 : R. v. Wilshaw, C. & Mar. 145. But they could not be thus read, if it merely appeared that the witness was absent (even if he were resident abroad), and that the prosecutor had in vain used his best endeavours to find him. R. v. Lord Morley, Kel. (J.) 55 : R. v. Scaife, supra: R. v. Austin, Dears. 612; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 48. Nor could depositions formerly be read upon an indictment for high treason; 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c 12; Fost. 337; but in R. v. Lynch (K. B. D. Dec. 19, 1902; 72 L. J. (K. B.) 167) the deposition of a witness absent from illness was allowed to be read to the grand jury.

Mode of taking the depositions.]—Depositions before magistrates, to be thus given in evidence, must be taken in conformity with the statute: R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339; Holt (N. P.) 614; 2 Stark. (N. P.) 208, 211 n. (a), and in the presence of the prisoner, so that he may have an opportunity of cross-examining the witness; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17 (ante, p 429): and see R. v. Paine, 1 Salk. 281; 1 Ld. Raym. 729: R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, 500; 1 East, 354, 356: Pyke v. Crouch, 1 Ld. Raym. 730: R. v. Dingler, 2 Leach, 561; Bull. (N. P.) 243: R. v. Forbes, Holt (N. P.) 599 n.: R. v. Harris, 82 J. P. 196. The fact that the prisoner had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness may be negatived by proof that he was insane when the deposition was taken, or was otherwise incapacitated by illness from cross-examining the deponent. R. v. Peacock, 12 Cox, 21, Brett and Mellor, JJ. The depositions must also be taken in the presence of the justice: R. v. Watts, L. & C. 339; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 63; and nothing should be returned as a deposition unless the prisoner had an opportunity of knowing what was said, and of cross-examining the party making it. R. v. Arnold, 8 C. & P. 621, Denman, C.J.; R. v. Johnson, 15 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 7; 2 C. & K. 394. But where a deposition was not wholly taken in the presence of the prisoner, but the witness was afterwards resworn in his presence, and the deposition repeated, and signed, the judges held that it was, under the circumstances, admissible evidence; for the prisoner had then an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339; see R. v. Bates, 2 F. & F. 317. In R. v. Holloway, 65 J. P. 712, Wills, J., admitted the deposition of a deceased witness, proved to have been read over to her and assented to by her, but not signed by her owing to injuries to her hands. As to depositions before coroners, see post, p. 438.

Where several depositions were taken on one sheet of paper, and at the foot of the whole was written "sworn before me," with the signature of the magistrate, the depositions previous to the last were held to be receivable in evidence. R. v. Osborne, 8 C. & P. 113, Coleridge, J. And it is now settled that although all the depositions are not taken on one sheet of paper, it is not necessary that each deposition should be signed by the magistrate taking it; and, therefore, where a number of depositions taken at the same hearing on several sheets of paper are fastened together and signed by the magistrate taking them once only at the end of all the depositions, in the form given in the Schedule (M.) to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, one of these depositions is admissible in evidence, after the death of the witness making it, although no part of it is on the sheet signed by the magistrate. R. v. Parker, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 225; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 60, which is in accordance with R. v. Young, 3 C. & K. 106, and R. v. Lee, 4 F. & F. 63, and overrules R. v. Richards, 4 F. & F. 860. In R. v. Parker, supra, the case stated by the learned judge stated that "the deposition in question was the second of four depositions made at the same hearing, all of which were pinned together." It does not state, however, whether any proof was given at the trial, whether the depositions were pinned together at the time of the signature by the magistrate, although Byles, J., in his judgment, as reported 39 L. J. (M. C.) at p. 62, says, "the different sheets appear to have been attached together at the time of the signature." In an earlier case, however, it was held to be clear, that if the depositions are on separate sheets, and no distinct proof be given of their having been fastened together at the time when the last was signed, those bearing no signature will be rejected. R. v. France, 2 M. & Rob. 207, Alderson, B. But where the depositions were on separate sheets, and were signed only at the end by the magistrate, the deposition of one of the witnesses who was dead was admitted in evidence, although it seems that the sheets were not fastened together at the time of the signature by the magistrate, but had been afterwards attached together by the magistrate's clerk. R. v. Lee, 4 F. & F. 63, Pollock, C.B. In R. v. France, supra, it was held that depositions taken in cross-examination, at a subsequent time to those in chief, and not signed by the magistrate, were held to be so irregular as to prevent the whole depositions from being read against the prisoner; although both were sworn by the magistrate to have been accurately taken. But this seems to be no longer law. The depositions may also be given in evidence by the defendant, in cases where the witnesses appear, in order to show some material variance between their evidence at the trial and before the magistrate; and may be read by the prosecutor, as it would seem, and certainly by the judge, to impeach the credit of a witness who gives evidence contradicting statements contained in the deposition made by such witness in a former proceeding in the same case. R. v. Oldroyd, R. & R. 88. It is not necessary, to make the depositions evidence, that each should have a separate caption or heading; a general caption or heading at the head of the body of depositions sufficiently shows that they were all taken under the statute. R. v. Johnson, 2 C. & K. 354. Indeed, a deposition is admissible in evidence though it has no caption, if it be described as the examination of the witness, and the evidence contained in it be relevant to the charge. R. v. Langbridge, 1 Den. 448; 2 C. & K. 975; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 198. (a)

Taking out of court depositions of persons dangerously ill.]—The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, known as "Russell Gurney's Act"), after reciting that by s. 17 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, it is permitted, under certain circumstances, to read in evidence on the trial of an accused person the deposition, taken in accordance with the said Act, of a witness who is dead, or so ill as to be unable to travel, and that it may happen that a person dangerously ill, and unable to travel, may be able to give material and important information relating to an indictable offence, or to a person accused thereof, and it may not be practicable or permissible to take, in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, the examination or deposition of the person so being ill, so as to make the same available as evidence in the event of his or her death before the trial of the accused person, and that it is desirable in the interests of truth and justice that means should be provided for perpetuating such testimony, and for rendering the same available in the event of the death of the person giving the same,—enacts (s. 6) that, "whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any justice of the peace that any person dangerously ill, and, in the opinion of some registered medical practitioner, not likely to recover from such illness, is able and willing to give material information relating to any indictable offence, or relating to any person accused of any such offence, and it shall not be practicable for any justice or justices of the peace to take an examination or deposition in accordance with the provisions of the said Act of the person so being ill, it shall be lawful for the said justice to take in writing the statement on oath or affirmation of such person so being ill, and such justice shall thereupon subscribe the same, and shall add thereto by way of caption a statement of his reason for taking the same, and of the day and place when and where the same was taken, and of the names of the persons (if any) present at the taking thereof; and, if the same shall relate to any indictable offence for which any accused person is already committed, or bailed to appear for trial, shall transmit the same with the said addition, to the proper officer of the court for trial at which such accused person shall have been so committed or bailed; and in all other cases he shall transmit the same to the clerk of the peace of the county, division, city, or borough in which he shall have taken the same, who is hereby required to preserve the same and file it of record; and if afterwards upon the trial of any offender or offence to which the same may relate, the person who made the same statement shall be proved to be dead, or if it shall be proved that there is no reasonable probability that such person will be ever able to travel, or to give evidence, it shall be lawful to read such statement in evidence, either for or against the accused, without further proof thereof, if the same purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken, and provided it be proved to the satisfaction of the court that reasonable notice of the intention to take such statement has been served upon the person (whether prosecutor or accused) against whom it is proposed to be read in evidence, and that such person, or his counsel or attorney, had or might have had, if he had chosen to be present, full opportunity of cross-examining the deceased person who made the same " : see R. v. Peacock, 12 Cox, 21, Brett, J. It is to be observed that the proviso at the close of this section overrides the whole section, and no statement, professedly taken under it, can be available as such at the trial unless notice has been given before taking it of the intention to take it. R. v. Quigley, 18 L. T. (N. S.) 211, Mellor and Lush, JJ. Section 7 points out the mode in which a prisoner in actual custody, who shall have served, or shall have received notice of an intention to take such statement, may have an opportunity of being present when it is taken; and such notice must be in writing, otherwise the statement cannot be read against the prisoner on the trial, although he may have been present when it was taken, and had a full opportunity of cross-examination. R. v. Shurmer, 17 Q. B. D. 323; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 153; 16 Cox, 94 : R. v. Harris, 82 J. P. 196. In R. v. Prestridge (C. C. C.) Nov. 1881, 72 L. T. Journ. 93, after the deposition of a dying person had been taken under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 6, and she had been cross-examined, further questions were put to her by the justice, and her answers were added to the deposition. The caption was added afterwards and returned with the deposition. Hawkins, J., refused to allow the answers to the justice's questions to be given in evidence, and further expressed a very strong opinion that the caption was an integral part of the deposition, and must be added at the time to render the deposition admissible; he stated that he should admit the deposition and reserve the point, but its admission was not pressed. In R. v. Curtis, 21 Times L. R. 87, Bigham, J., refused to admit a deposition taken under the same enactment because the caption did not state where it was taken. A deposition of a dying person purporting to have been taken under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, but to which there was no caption and which had not been taken by the committing justice, was held inadmissible. R. v. Rees, Glamorgan Assizes, Times Newsp. (20 Dec. 1888), Charles, J. But where the deposition of a dying person was taken by a justice at a hospital in the presence of the accused and all the requirements of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, were complied with, it was held that the deposition was admissible in evidence, although the requirements of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 6, had not been complied with. R. v. Katz, 64 J. P. 807; 16 T. L. R. 67, Darling, J.; in which case counsel was authorized by Wills, J., to state that he had altered the opinion to the contrary expressed by him in R. v. Simpson, 62 J. P. 825; and see R. v. Harris, 82 J. P. 196.

As to the duty of a magistrate to take the evidence of a witness who is dangerously ill at the residence of the witness, see R. v. Bros. Ex parte Hardy [1911] 1 K. B. 159; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 147; 22 Cox, 352.

As to when statements made in the presence of the prisoner are evidence, see ante, p. 393.

Special provision is made by s. 28 of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), for taking out of court the sworn depositions of persons under sixteen in respect of whom an offence against Part II. of that Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the first schedule to the Act (ante, p. 430), is alleged to have been committed if attendance at court would involve serious danger to the life or health of the deponent: see those sections, post.

Right of accused to inspection and copies of depositions.]—6 & 7 W. 4, c. 114, enacts (s. 4), that, "all persons under trial shall be entitled, at the time of their trial, to inspect, without fee or reward, all depositions (or copies thereof) which have been taken against them, and returned into the court before which such trial shall be had." By s. 27 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (which replaces 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 114, s. 3), "at any time after all the examinations aforesaid shall have been completed, and before the first day of the assizes or sessions, or other first sitting of the court at which any person so committed to prison or admitted to bail as aforesaid, is to be tried, such person may require, and shall be entitled to have, of and from the officer or person having the custody of the same, copies of the depositions on which he shall have been committed or bailed, on payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding at the rate of 1½*d.* for each folio of ninety words." The enactment does not apply in case of committal on remand, but only after committal for trial: see R. v. Lord Mayor of London, 5 Q. B. 555; Dav. & M. 484; Ex parte Fletcher, 13 L. J. (M. C.) 67. Where a prisoner has obtained a certificate for legal aid under the Poor Prisoners Defence Act, 1903 (ante, p. 175), the cost of a copy of the depositions for his use is allowed as part of the costs of the prosecution; 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (3), (ante, p. 268). Where the depositions have been transmitted to the director of public prosecutions in pursuance of 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22 (Prosecution of Offences Act, 1879), s. 5, he is by that section put under the same obligation, and upon the same payment, to deliver to an applicant copies thereof.

Under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, depositions were taken only of witnesses for the Crown. But the accused is now entitled to copies of the examinations of witnesses examined before the justices on his behalf, under s. 3 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, as it is enacted by s. 4 of that Act, that all the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, for giving the accused copies of the examinations shall be read and shall have operation as part of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35.

By 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 5 (as extended by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22, s. 5), justices who fail to deliver to the court of trial or to the director of public prosecutions any examination, information, evidence, bailment, or recognizance, may, on examination and proof of the offence in a summary manner before the court of trial, be fined as the court shall think meet. This enactment seems to apply to magistrates neglecting their duty under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 20, and the continuance of the liability to fine is clearly indicated by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 22, s. 5. As to coroners, see infra.

Prior to the passing of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, the judges intimated that justices should return to the court of trial all depositions taken against the accused, whether the deponents had or had not been bound over by recognizance to attend the trial, and also that they should return a full statement of all that the witnesses said, not merely of so much thereof as they deem material, much time having been occupied in endeavouring to establish contradictions between the testimony of the witnesses and their depositions, in the omission of minute circumstances in their statements before the magistrate. See R. v. Simons, 6 C. & P. 540 : R. v. Fuller, 7 C. & P. 269 : R v. Grady, Id. 650 : R. v. Coveney, Id. 667 : R. v. Thomas, Id. 817. The opinions thus expressed are equally applicable to depositions taken under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. That statute obviously applies only to the case of a person bailed or committed to prison for some offence for which he is to be tried, and with a view of enabling him to prepare for trial, and does not extend to the case of a person committed to prison for default of sureties to keep the peace, and who has been discharged by the sessions. Ex parte Humphrys, 19 L. J. (M. C.) 189. A prisoner was not entitled, under 6 & 7 W. 4, c. 114, s. 2 (rep.), to a copy of his own statement returned by the magistrates, but only to a copy of the depositions of the witnesses. R. v. Aylett, 8 C. & P. 669, Parke, B. But it is submitted that under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, the statement is a part of the depositions in the case. The reading, on the part of the prosecution, of the prisoner's statement, returned with the depositions, does not give the prisoner the right to consider the depositions as in evidence on the part of the prosecution, though it appear that they were all taken before such statement was made; but if the prisoner wishes to have the whole or any particular part of the depositions read, he must read it as his evidence. R. v. Pearson, 7 C. & P. 671.

Depositions before coroners.]—The provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, do not in terms apply to the depositions taken before coroners : and it is submitted that the ruling to the contrary by Darling, J., in R. v. Butcher, 64 J. P. 808, was given per incuriam. But it is stated in Bull. (N. P.) 242 that depositions taken before a coroner may be read if the witness is dead or beyond the sea. In R. v. Cowle, 71 J. P. 52, Grantham, J., admitted the deposition of a witness before a coroner on proof of the death of the witness, and that the deposition was taken in the presence of the accused, who by her solicitor had full opportunity of cross-examining. And the same learned judge in a similar case admitted the deposition where the accused was not represented by a solicitor, but had full opportunity of cross-examining personally: R. v. Black, 74 J. P. 71. By the Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, sub-s. 5, a person charged upon an inquisition with murder or manslaughter is entitled to have from the person having for the time being the custody of the inquisition or of the depositions of the witnesses at the inquest, copies thereof, on payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding the rate of 1½*d.* for every folio of ninety words. In the case of poor prisoners who have obtained a certificate for legal aid, this charge is included in the costs payable out of the local rate; 8 Edw. 7, c. 15, s. 1 (3). The depositions in such cases are returned to the clerk of the court of trial (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 5), or to the Director of Public Prosecutions if he takes up the case. The judges had power, by their general authority as a court of justice, to order a copy of depositions taken before a coroner to be given to a prisoner indicted for the murder of the party concerning whose death the inquiry took place before the coroner, although in a case where the coroner could not have been compelled to return them under 7 G. 4, c. 64, s. 4. That section is repealed by 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, but the repeal does not seem to affect the powers of the judges. Ex parte Greenacre, 8 C. & P. 32: R. v. Walford, 8 C. & P. 767. There was formerly supposed to be a difference between depositions taken before a magistrate and before a coroner; for the latter were said to be evidence, even though the party accused was not present when they were taken. Bull. (N. P.) 242: R. v. Eriswell, 3 T. R. 707, 713, Buller, J. The reason given for this exception was, that the coroner is an elective officer, appointed on behalf of the public, to make inquiry of matters within his jurisdiction, who therefore is presumed to take the depositions fairly and impartially. Bull. (N. P.) 242. Although the propriety of this distinction had been questioned (see 2 Stark. Evid. 384), the practice nevertheless formerly was to admit such depositions without inquiry whether the party accused was or was not present: and in R. v. Purefoy, Peake, Evid. 64; 2 Phill. Evid. (7th ed.) 373, Hotham, B., received depositions taken before a coroner, although it appeared that the defendant was not present. But in R. v. Rigg, Leeds Summer Assizes, 1866, MS., 4 F. & F. 1085, Montague Smith, J., refused to admit in evidence the deposition of a witness taken before the coroner, where the prisoner was not present at the inquest when the witness was examined. The dicta and expressions of opinion in favour of a contrary practice, cited above, were brought on that occasion under his lordship's notice; but he said that he had no doubt upon the subject, and had no hesitation in rejecting the deposition. This ruling is in accord with the opinions expressed by the ablest text-writers on the subject. Taylor, Evid.

(11th ed.), s. 493; Roscoe, Cr. Evid. (13th ed.), 67; Stark. Evid. (4th ed.), 38: Jervis on Coroners (6th ed.), 51, 52; and see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2245. Depositions taken before the coroner, in order to be admissible, must appear to have been taken before the coroner quâ coroner, and must be signed by him. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 2: R. v. England, 2 Leach, 767, 771. The depositions must appear also to have been upon oath; 2 Hale, 284; Bull. (N. P.) 242.

50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 2, enacts, that the deposition shall be signed by the witness as well as by the coroner, which the old statutes did not. This gets rid of the ruling in R. v. Flemming, 2 Leach, 854; 1 East, P. C. 440. A deposition taken before a coroner may be proved by the coroner, or by any person who can prove the coroner's and the witness's signature, and that the witness was sworn, and that the prisoner was present and had an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, s. 4, sub-s. 2; Taylor Evid. (11th ed.), s. 493: R. v. Wilshaw, C. & Mar. 145: Sills v. Brown, 9 C. & P. 601: R. v. Marriott, 75 J. P. 284.

Depositions taken abroad.]—A deposition taken out of England is not admissible in England in substitution for the oral statement of the deponent, except under statutory provision, although it may be put in against the deponent if made by him and containing confessions or admissions.

Depositions may be taken abroad in certain criminal cases, under the following statutes, 13 G. 3, c. 63; 24 G. 3, sess. 2, c. 25; 26 G. 3, c. 57, as to offences in India (see Ilbert, Government of India (2nd ed.), pp. 255 et seq.); and under 42 G. 3, c. 85, as to offences by public officers outside Great Britain. Such depositions are admissible in England. The Evidence on Commission Act, 1831 (1 W. 4, c. 22), does not relate to criminal proceedings (R. v. Upton St. Leonards, 10 Q. B. 827; 16 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 84), and commissions are, it is believed, never issued in criminal cases under the Evidence by Commission Act, 1859 (22 Vict. c. 20). If the witness has been examined abroad, under 13 G. 3, c. 63, and has there proved original documents, those documents themselves must be transmitted and given in evidence in this country; copies are not admissible. R. v. Douglas, 1 C. & K. 670.

Provision is made in Extradition Treaties for the execution of commissions to take evidence for the purposes of proceedings in the King's dominions against a fugitive criminal; but there is no statutory provision rendering the evidence so taken admissible in proceedings in England.

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 691, sub-s. 1, "Whenever in the course of any legal proceedings instituted in any part of his Majesty's dominions before any judge or magistrate, or before any person authorized by law or by consent of parties to receive evidence, the testimony of any witness is required in relation to the subject-matter of such proceeding, then, upon due proof, if such proceeding is instituted in the United Kingdom, that such witness cannot be found in that kingdom, or, if in any British possession, that he cannot be found in the same possession, any deposition that such witness may have previously made on oath in relation to the same subject-matter before any justice or magistrate in his Majesty's dominions, or any British consular officer elsewhere, shall be admissible in evidence, provided that :—(a) If the deposition was made in the United Kingdom, it shall not be admissible in any proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom. (b) If the deposition was made in any British possession, it shall not be admissible in any proceeding instituted in that British possession. (c) If the proceeding is criminal, it shall not be admissible unless it was made in the presence of the person accused. (Sub-s. 2.) Every deposition so made shall be authenticated by the signature of the judge, magistrate, or consular officer before whom it is made; and the judge, magistrate, or consular officer shall certify, if the fact is so, that the accused was present at the taking thereof. (Sub-s. 3.) It shall not be necessary in any case to prove the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed any such deposition; and in any criminal proceeding a certificate under this section shall, unless the contrary is proved, be sufficient evidence of the accused having been present in manner thereby certified. (Sub-s. 4.) Nothing herein contained shall affect any case in which depositions taken in any proceeding are rendered admissible in evidence by any Act of Parliament, or by any Act or ordinance of the legislature of any colony, so far as regards such colony, or to interfere with the power of any colonial legislature to make such depositions admissible in evidence, or to interfere with the practice of any court in which depositions not authenticated as hereinbefore mentioned are admissible." This section applies also to proceedings within the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 48). Where witnesses whose evidence had been taken abroad by a British vice-consul under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 270 (of which this section is a re-enactment), were the officers of a British sailing vessel, which was stated by a clerk in the office of the registrar-general for seamen, from his examination of official records, never to have been in this country, this was held to be sufficient evidence that the witnesses could not be found in the United Kingdom, and as the depositions purported to be taken in the presence of the prisoner and of the British vice-consul, and also to be signed by the latter, they were admitted in evidence. R. v. Conning, 11 Cox, 134 : see also R. v. Anderson, 11 Cox, 154 : R. v. Stewart, 13 Cox, 296.

Proceedings in Colonial and Foreign Courts, etc.]—By s. 7 of the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), "all judgments, decrees, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice in any foreign state, or in any British Colony, and all affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents, filed or deposited in any such court, may be proved in any court of justice, or before any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, either by examined copies or by copies authenticated as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say . . . if the document sought to be proved be a judgment decree order or other judicial proceeding of any foreign or colonial court or an affidavit pleading or other legal document filed or deposited in any such court, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport either to be sealed with the seal of the foreign or colonial court to which the original document belongs, or, in the event of such court having no seal, to be signed by the judge, or, if there be more than one judge, by any one of the judges of the said court; and such judge shall attach to his signature a statement in writing on the said copy that the court whereof he is a judge has no seal: but if any of the aforesaid authenticated copies shall purport to be signed or sealed as hereinbefore respectively directed the same shall respectively be admitted as evidence in every case in which the original document could have been admitted in evidence, without any proof of the seal where a seal is necessary or of the signature or of the truth of the statement attached thereto, where such signature and statement are necessary, or of the judicial character of the person appearing to have made such signature and statement." See R. v. Newman, 22 L. J. (N. S.) Q. B. 156; Dears. 85. This enactment does not apply to the proceedings of the courts of Scotland or Ireland, nor it would seem to those of the Isle of Man or Channel Islands, and judgments of these courts must in criminal cases ordinarily be proved as those of foreign courts were at common law, i.e., by exemplifications under the seal of the court, if the court has a seal, and evidence must also be given that the seal affixed to the exemplification is in fact the seal of the court. Henry v. Adey, 3 East, 221: Alves v. Bunbury, 4 Camp. 28: Cavan v. Stewart, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 525: Appleton v. Lord Braybrook, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 6; 6 M. & Sel. 34: Flindt v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 215 n.: Alivon v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R. 277.

Records of Irish Courts.]—Records of the courts in Ireland might, it is said, be proved in England by examined copies, etc., in the same manner as English records; but see Harris v. Saunders, 3 L. J. (K. B.) 239; 4 B. & C. 411. It was necessary, however, that the court should be satisfied that the copy was examined with a record; and, therefore, where the witness produced to prove the copy stated that he examined it with a parchment roll shown to him in a room over the Four Courts at Dublin, without seeing from whence it was taken, or knowing the person who produced it to be an officer of the court, Lord Ellenborough refused to receive it in evidence. Adamthwaite v. Synge, 4 Camp. 372: see Slane Peerage case, 5 Cl. & F. 23; 7 E. R. 311; and Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1544.

Statutory modes of proving public documents.]—The production in evidence of most of the documents above mentioned has been facilitated by the following statutes. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113 (Evidence Act, 1845), s. 1: "Whenever by any Act now in force, or hereafter to be in force, any certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation or joint-stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, by-law, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any court of justice, or before any legal tribunal, or either house of parliament, or any committee of either house, or in any judicial proceeding, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence, provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective Acts made or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp, where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, and without any further proof thereof, in every case in which the original record could have been received in evidence." See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 7, 1602-7.

14 & 15 Vict. c. 99 (Evidence Act, 1851), s. 14: "Whenever any book or other document (see Reeve v. Hodson, 10 Hare, App. xix.) is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in evidence in any court of justice, or before any person now or hereafter having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted, and which officer is hereby required to furnish such certified copy or extract to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same, upon payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding fourpence for every folio of ninety words."

2. Private Documents.

Inscriptions and entries.]—In pedigree cases an entry in a family Bible, an examined copy of an inscription on a tombstone, a pedigree hung up in a family mansion, and the like, are admissible in evidence. Goodright v. Moss, 2 Cowp. 591: Berkeley Peerage Claim, 4 Camp. 401; Roscoe, Nisi Prius (18th ed.), 44; Taylor's Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 650-653.

Deeds and other instruments in writing.]—When a deed is to be given in evidence, the deed itself must be produced at the trial. Leyfield's case, 10 Co. Rep. 92 b, 93, except in the following cases, (1) where the deed is in the hands of the opposite party:—Read v. Brookman, 3 T. R. 151: Wymark's case, 5 Co. Rep. 73 a; (2) where it has been lost by time or accident, or by any other casualty, as by fire, etc., Read v. Brookman, 3 T. R. 153 n. (see Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East, 273: Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & Ald. 296: Freeman v. Arkell, 2 B. & C. 494, as to proof of the loss, etc.). In such cases its contents may be proved by a copy or other secondary evidence. Leyfield's case, 10 Co. Rep. 92 b: Medlicott v. Joyner, 1 Mod. 4. In R. v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591; 4 C. & P. 128, where it appeared that the deed alleged to be forged was in the custody of the defendant, who, after notice, refused to produce it, secondary evidence of the deed was received. In R. v. Hall, 12 Cox, 159, Cleasby, B., after consulting Byles, J., refused to admit secondary evidence of the document alleged to be forged in that case, on the ground merely that no foundation had been laid for the admission of such evidence by proof of the loss or destruction of the document. But in both cases the court declined to recognize a rule once supposed to assert that a person could not be convicted of forgery without the actual production of the forged document.

If there was no subscribing witness proof of the handwriting of the parties is sufficient, the law in such a case presuming a delivery. The Evidence Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 7, which applies to all courts of criminal judicature (see s. 1), enacts that it shall not be necessary to prove by the attesting witness any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite, and such instrument may be proved as if there had been no attesting witness thereto. This enactment got rid of the old rule requiring the calling of an attesting witness to any document purporting to be attested. Gilb. Evid. 99 : Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 266 : Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665 : Manners v. Postan, 4 Esp. 239; 3 B. & P. 343 : and see England v. Roper, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 304. A list of instruments to the validity of which attestation is requisite, and which therefore must still, subject to the exceptions to be presently mentioned, be proved by the attesting witness, will be found in Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1110 et seq. It does not appear necessary that the attesting witness when called should swear that the deed was actually executed in his presence. If he were afterwards desired to attest it by the party who executed it (Grellier v. Neale, 1 Peake (3rd ed.), 198 : Powell v. Blackett, 1 Esp. 97), or in the presence of the party (Park v. Mears, 3 Esp. 171; 2 B. & P. 217), and attested it accordingly, this will be sufficient, provided that the attestation and execution be done so nearly at the same time, as fairly to be deemed parts of the same transaction. MS., E. 1814. On the other hand, a party who sees an instrument executed, but who is not desired by the parties to attest it, cannot, by afterwards putting his name to it, prove it as an attesting witness. M'Craw v. Gentry, 3 Camp. 232.

The rule as to proof of execution by an attesting witness besides the limitations above stated is also subject to the following exceptions.

1. Where the execution forms one of the admissions in the cause; but this exception is applicable to civil cases only.

2. Where the deed (and the same as to a will, although it is less than thirty years since the testator's death, Doe d. Oldham v. Woolley, 6 L. J. (K. B.) 286; 8 B. & C. 22) is thirty years old or upwards, the court will presume that it has been duly executed, and will not require it to be proved, Bull. (N. P.) 255 : Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Cowper, 1 Esp. 275, 278, provided possession has followed the deed, or some satisfactory account is given of it, and provided there is no erasure or interlineation in it, and that it does not import fraud; otherwise it must be proved as in ordinary cases, either by the attesting witness, or by evidence of his and the party's handwriting. 2 Bac. Abr. Ev. (F.); Bull. (N. P.) 255 : and see Swinnerton v. Marquis of Stafford [1810] 3 Taunt. 91. It may be necessary here to remark, that when you give an ancient obligation for the payment of money in evidence, you should be prepared to prove the payment of interest within the last twenty years, or other circumstances sufficient to rebut the presumption which the law will otherwise raise of such obligation having been satisfied. See Forbes v. Wale, 1 W. Bl. 532.

3. Where a deed enrolled (and to which enrolment was necessary) is given in evidence, it is not necessary to prove the execution of it by the subscribing witness; but it may be proved by enrolment indorsed on it, or if the deed is lost, by an examined copy of the enrolment, as already mentioned, ante, p. 424.

4. Where one deed is recited in another, proof of the second deed is deemed proof of the one recited, as against the parties to the second deed and those claiming under them. 2 Bac. Abr. Ev. (F.).

5. Secondary evidence of the execution may be given by proving the handwriting of the witness and the party, upon proof of any of the following circumstances: that the subscribing witness is dead, Nelson v. Whittall, 1 B. & Ald. 19, or has become insane, 12 Vin. Abr. 224: Currie v. Child, 3 Camp. 283, or is abroad out of reach of the process of the court, Holmes v. Pontin, Peake (3rd ed.), 135: Cooper v. Marsden, 1 Esp. 1: Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266 n.; 12 Vin. Abr. 224: and see Hodnett v. Forman, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 90, whether domiciled abroad or not; Prince v. Blackburn, 2 East, 250, or has set out for the purpose of leaving the kingdom, Ward v. Wells, 1 Taunt. 461; or that from circumstances it may fairly be presumed that he has left the kingdom, Wardell v. Fermor, 2 Camp. 282: Wyatt v. Bateman, 7 C. & P. 586; or that he is serving in the navy, Parker v. Hoskins, 2 Taunt. 223, or the like; or that after a bonâ fide serious and diligent inquiry he cannot be found, Cochlan v. Williamson, 1 Doug. 93: Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East, 183: Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 266: Crosby v. Percy, 1 Camp. 303; 1 Taunt. 364: Wardell v. Fermor, 2 Camp. 282: Willman v. Worrall, 8 C. & P. 380: Earl of Falmouth v. Roberts, 11 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 180; 9 M. & W. 469: or that he is or has become incompetent as a witness from any cause, Jones v. Mason, 2 Str. 833. The rule on this subject is not affected by the power to examine witnesses abroad on interrogatories, under s. 4 of the Evidence on Commission Act, 1831 (1 W. 4, c. 22), Glubb v. Edwards, 2 M. & Rob. 300. But the declarations of the witness himself as to the place of his residence, or hearsay statements of others on the subject, are not admitted to prove that he is abroad. Doe d. Beard v. Powell, 7 C. & P. 617.

In cases in which attestation is necessary to the validity of a document if the subscribing witness has become blind, the instrument cannot be read without calling him. Cronk v. Frith, 9 C. & P. 197; 2 M. & Rob. 262. But see Wood v. Drury, 1 Ld. Raym. 734: Pedler v. Paige, 1 M. & Rob. 258, contrà. In Page v. Mann, M. & M. 79, Lord Tenterden held, that proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness, who was dead, was sufficient, without any further proof of the identity of the parties than the identity of the name and description. See also Kay v. Brookman, Id. 286: Mitchell v. Johnson, Id. 176. But see Whitelocke v. Musgrave, 1 Cr. & M. 511: Jones v. Jones, 11 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 265; 9 M. & W. 75. If there are two witnesses to a deed, and any of the circumstances last above mentioned apply only to one of them, the deed must of course be proved by the other. By 26 G. 3, c. 57, s. 38, bonds or other deeds or writings executed in the East Indies, and attested by any person or persons resident there, may be given in evidence in Great Britain, upon proof by one or more credible witnesses of the handwriting of the parties and of the witnesses. Where the subscribing witness is unable, or refuses to disclose the truth at the trial, the deed may be proved by other witnesses. Goodtitle v. Clayton, 4 Burr. 2224: Talbot v. Hodson, 7 Taunt. 251.

Upon an indictment for forging a deed or other written instrument, all that it is incumbent upon the prosecutor to prove is, that the name subscribed to the deed is not the handwriting of the party whose signature it purports to be.

which may be proved by the party whose name is forged, or by others. 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1660.

Wills.]—Wills of lands over thirty years old require no proof; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 87, 1845; and the ordinary mode of proving wills, whether of lands or of personal estate, is by production of the probate, if granted since January 11, 1858 (see ante, p. 426). (a).

Writings not under seal.]—All other writings, not under seal, are proved in the same manner as deeds; that is, by the subscribing witness, if there is one (see ante, p. 443): Wetherston v. Edgington, 2 Camp. 94: and see Stone v. Metcalf, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 53: Higgs v. Dixon, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 180; and if the instrument is one to the validity of which attestation is requisite, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 7 (ante, p. 443); if not, then either by the subscribing witness or by proof of the party's handwriting. It is said also that a writing of this kind, if ancient, may be received in evidence without proof, in the same manner as an ancient deed. Tr. per Pais, 370; but see Fortesc. 43. If the original has been lost or destroyed, copies or other secondary evidence of the contents will be received; but evidence must be given at the same time of the genuineness of the original instrument. See Goodier v. Lake [1737] 1 Atk. 446: R. v. Pembridge, C. & Mar. 157.

Handwriting.]—The handwriting of a witness or party may be proved either by some person who has a knowledge of it from having seen him write, see Burr v. Harper, Holt (N. P.) 420; even once only, Willman v. Worrall, 8 C. & P. 380: Warren v. Anderson, 8 Scott, 384; or his surname only, Lewis v. Sapio, M. & M. 39; (dissenting from Powell v. Ford, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 164), or from having been in the habit of corresponding with him, Gould v. Jones, 1 W. Bl. 384: Harrington v. Fry, Ry. & M. 90; or of acting upon his correspondence with others, R. v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213: see Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 703; 2 Nev. & P. 16; or the handwriting of a party may be proved by his own admission. Waldridge v. Kennison, 1 Esp. 143. But the witness must at least be prepared to swear that he believes the writing to be that of the witness or party. Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 438, 475, Eldon, L.C.; see hereon 58 J. P. 813.

By s. 8 of Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, which by s. 1 applies to all courts of criminal judicature), "comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute." (b) It seems that under this section the disputed writing and the writing whose genuineness is proved ought not as a rule to be submitted to the jury in order that they may draw their own unaided conclusion from a comparison, but that they should be assisted by the evidence of an expert: R. v. Harvey, 11 Cox, 546, Blackburn, J.; or of a person who in the ordinary course of business has come to know the handwriting in question. Fitzwalter Peerage Claim, 10 Cl. & F. 193; and see R. v. Rickard, 88 L. J. K. B. 720; 82 J. P. 256; 26 Cox, 318; 13 Cr. App. R. 140; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1863 et seq.; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2150. In R. v. Smith, 74 J. P. 54; 3 Cr. App. R. 87, and in R. v. Rickard, supra, the Court of Criminal Appeal formed its own opinion as to handwriting alleged to be that of the appellant after confirming it with a letter written by her after conviction, and without resort to any expert evidence.

(b) Until this enactment, handwriting could not be proved by comparing it with other writings, although confessedly written by the person whose handwriting was in question. Garrels v. Alexander, 4 Esp. 37: R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 117: Macferson v. Thoytes, Peake (3rd ed.), 29: Stranger v. Searle, 1 Esp. 14: see Griffits v. Ivery, 11 A. & E. 322: Hughes

A man is an expert in handwriting who has an adequate knowledge and skill as to handwriting whether acquired in the way of his business or not. R. v. Silverlock [1894] 2 Q. B. 766; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 233. In R. v. Wilbain, 9 Cox, 448 (Ir.), and R. v. Harvey, supra, a police officer was held not to be qualified as an expert. Particularly is this so when his only knowledge on the subject has been acquired in the course of the particular case. R. v. Crouch, 4 Cox, 163.

It has long been established practice to admit the evidence of persons skilled in detecting forgeries to prove that a writing is in a feigned hand, though they never saw the party write. R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 177: Goodtitle v. Braham, 4 T. R. 497; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2261. There are decisions to the contrary: see Carey v. Pitt, Peake (Add. Cas.), 130: Batchelor v. Honeywood, 2 Esp. 714: Gurney v. Langlands, 5 B. & Ald. 330: R v. Backler, 5 C. & P. 118. In Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 703, the court was equally divided: see 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2149.

Stamps.]—The Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 14, sub-s. 4, enacts, that "save as aforesaid, an instrument executed in any part of the United Kingdom, or relating, wheresoever executed, to any property situate, or to any matter or thing done or to be done, in any part of the United Kingdom, shall not, except in criminal proceedings, be given in evidence, or be available for any purpose whatever, unless it is duly stamped in accordance with the law in force at the time when it was first executed." This enactment replaces

v. Rogers, 10 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 238; 8 M. & W. 123: Younger v. Honner, 2 M. & Rob. 536; 1 C. & K. 51. But on a question as to the genuineness of handwriting, the jury might compare the document with authentic writings of the party to whom it was ascribed, if such writings were in evidence for other purposes of the cause. Solita v. Yarrow, 1 M. & Rob. 133: R. v. Morgan, Id. 134 n.: Griffith v. Williams, 1 Cr. & J. 47: Waddington v. Cousins, 7 C. & P. 595: Doe v. Newton, 5 A. & E. 514; 1 Nev. & P. 1. In an action for a libel, which charged the plaintiff with having published a libel on the defendant, where the defendant justified on the ground that the plaintiff had published such libel, letters written by the plaintiff, not otherwise evidence in the cause, in which the defendant's name was spelt in a peculiar manner, were held to be admissible to show that the libel in question, which contained the defendant's name spelt with the same peculiarity, was also written by the plaintiff. Brookes v. Tichborne, 5 Ex. 929; 20 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 69.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, s. 27 (rep.), which got rid of the difficulties of proof in criminal cases caused by prior Stamp Acts.

Bankers' books.]—The Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 11), was passed in order to obviate the inconvenience occasioned to bankers and their customers, by the removal of ledgers and other account books from banks for the purpose of production in legal proceedings, and in order to facilitate proof of transactions recorded in such ledgers and account books. The materials parts of the Act are as follows :—S. 3 : " Subject to the provisions of this Act, a copy of any entry in a banker's book shall in all legal proceedings be received as primâ facie evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded." S. 4 : " A copy of an entry in a banker's book shall not be received in evidence under this Act unless it be first proved that the book was at the time of the making of the entry one of the ordinary books of the bank, and that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that the book is in the custody or control of the bank. Such proof may be given by a partner or officer of the bank, and may be given orally or by an affidavit sworn before any commissioner or person authorized to take affidavits." S. 5 : " A copy of an entry in a banker's book shall not be received in evidence under this Act unless it be further proved that the copy has been examined with the original entry, and is correct. Such proof shall be given by some person who has examined the copy with the original entry, and may be given either orally or by an affidavit sworn before any commissioner or person authorized to take affidavits." (The expression " some person " in this section is not limited to an officer of the bank : R. v. Albutt and Screen, 75 J. P. 112; 6 Cr. App. R. 55). S. 6 : " A banker or officer of a bank shall not, in any legal proceeding to which the bank is not a party, be compellable to produce any banker's book the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions, and accounts, therein recorded, unless by order of a judge made for special cause." S. 7 : " On the application of any party to a legal proceeding a court or judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceedings. An order under this section may be made either with or without summoning the bank or any other party, and shall be served on the bank three clear days before the same is to be obeyed, unless the court or judge otherwise directs." (See R. v. Bono, 29 T. L. R. 635.) S. 8 : " The costs of any application to a court or judge under or for the purposes of this Act, and the costs of anything done or to be done under an order of a court or judge made under or for the purposes of this Act, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge, who may order the same or any part thereof to be paid to any party by the bank, where the same have been occasioned by any default or delay on the part of the bank. Any such order against a bank may be enforced as if the bank was a party to the proceeding." S. 9 : " In this Act the expressions ' bank ' and ' banker ' mean any person, persons, partnership, or company carrying on the business of bankers, and having duly made a return to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and also any savings bank certified under the Acts relating to savings banks, and also any post office savings bank.

"The fact of any such bank having duly made a return to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may be proved in any legal proceeding by production of a copy of its return verified by the affidavit of a partner or officer of the bank, or by the production of a copy of a newspaper purporting to contain a copy of such return published by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; the fact that any such savings bank is certified under the Acts relating to savings banks may be proved by an office or examined copy of its certificate; the fact that any such bank is a post office savings bank may be proved by a certificate purporting to be under the hand of her Majesty's Postmaster-General, or one of the secretaries of the Post Office."

"Expressions in this Act relating to 'bankers' books' include ledgers, day books, cash books, account books, and all other books used in the ordinary business of the bank." S. 10: "In this Act the expression 'legal proceeding' means any civil or criminal proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is or may be given, and includes an arbitration; the expression 'the court' means the court, judge, arbitrator, persons, or person, before whom a legal proceeding is held or taken; the expression 'a judge' means with respect to England a judge of the High Court of Justice, and with respect to Scotland a lord ordinary of the outer house of the Court of Session, and with respect to Ireland a judge of the High Court of Justice in Ireland." S. 11: "Sunday, Christmas Day, Good Friday, and any bank holiday, shall be excluded from the computation of time under this Act."

"The expressions 'bank' and 'bankers' in the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (supra), shall include any company carrying on the business of bankers to which the provisions of the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880 (see 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, s. 1), are applicable, and having duly furnished to the registrar of joint stock companies a list and summary with the addition specified by this Act, and the fact of such list and summary having been duly furnished may be proved in any legal proceedings by the certificate of the registrar or any assistant registrar for the time being of joint stock companies." 45 & 46 Vict. s. 72 (Revenue, etc., Act, 1882), s. 11, sub-s. 2.

Most of the decisions on these Acts are collected in the Annual Practice and the Yearly Practice in the notes to O. XXXVII., r. 7. Justices before whom a preliminary inquiry is proceeding are a court within s. 10, and can make an order under the Act. R. v. Kinghorn [1908] 2 K. B. 949; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 33, dissenting from the contrary dictum of Coleridge, C.J., in R. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox, 222 n. In criminal proceedings applications in the High Court are made on the crown side, and the order is drawn up in the Crown Office. They may be made ex parte.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

1. In what Cases receivable.

PAROL evidence is admissible, (1) When it is the best evidence of the facts to be proved, e.g., where it is the evidence of a person who saw or heard them; (2) As secondary evidence of the contents of writings, in which case it is inferior to the evidence of the documents themselves. As a general rule, the contents of a written document which is capable of being produced, must be proved by the document itself, and not by parol evidence: Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 289; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348; subject to the exception, that what a party to the record says is primary evidence against him as an admission, though it relates to the contents of a written instrument, and though the contents are directly in issue in the cause. Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; 10 L. J. (Ex.) 8; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 410 et seq. Where a parol contract is made subsequently to, and in substitution for, a former written contract, parol evidence may be given of the latter contract. White v. Parkin, 12 East, 578. As to the cases in which parol evidence may be received as secondary evidence of a written instrument, where the written instrument is proved to have been burnt, destroyed, or lost, or in the possession of the opposite party, see ante, p. 367.

There are no degrees of secondary evidence: and therefore a party who has laid the foundation for such evidence, may prove the contents of a deed by parol, though it appears that there is an attested copy in existence. Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102: Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P. 206: Hall v. Ball, 3 Scott (N. R.) 577. But it has been held, that where there exists a copy of the original document, the document cannot be proved by a copy of that copy. Liebman v. Pooley, 1 Stark. (N. P.) 167: Everingham v. Roundell, 2 M. & Rob. 138. It must not, however, be understood that parol evidence can never be received where written evidence of the same fact is attainable. For although parol evidence cannot be substituted for any instrument which the law requires to be in writing; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 396; nor for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put in writing; Id. s. 401: nor for any writing, the existence or contents of which are disputed, and which is material to the issue between the parties, and is not merely the memorandum of some other fact, Id. s. 409, yet where the writing does not fall within either of these three classes, no reason exists for excluding parol evidence of its existence and contents. Id. s. 415. Thus, although a written receipt may have been given for the payment of money, proof of the fact of payment may be made by any person who witnessed it. Rambert v. Cohen, 4 Esp. 213. So the fact of marriage may be proved by the evidence of a person who was present at it, although the marriage may have been registered. R. v. Manwaring, Dears. & B. 132; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 10. And where three witnesses stated that a vessel was a British ship of Shields, and that she was sailing under the British flag, but no proof was given of the register of the vessel or of the ownership, it was held, that this was sufficient proof that the vessel was British. R. v. Seberg, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 264; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 133. And on an indictment for unlawful assembly, parol evidence of proclamations and inscriptions has been admitted without producing copies. R. v. Hunt, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 171: R. v. Fursey, 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 543, 561: O'Connell v. R. 5 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, 278.

As a general rule, parol evidence is not admissible as to anything not immediately within the knowledge of the witness; he must speak of facts which happened in his presence, or within his hearing. This rule excludes hearsay evidence, save in the cases mentioned, ante, pp. 370 et seq. It also, as a general rule, excludes the expression of opinion or belief. But to this rule there is a necessary exception on questions of the identity of things or persons, or the genuineness of handwriting, where the witness is qualified to express a credible opinion or belief on the subject. R. v. Silverlock [1894] 2 Q. B. 766; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 233; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1414 et seq., ante, p. 446. And in matters of science or trade, an expert, or person intimately acquainted with it, may be called upon to give his opinion as to the probable result or consequence from certain facts already proved. For instance, if it were required to determine whether a man died of any particular disease, symptoms being proved, a physician may be called upon to give in evidence his opinion as to the disease of which the party died, as founded upon the symptoms so proved, although he have never seen the deceased. So, upon an indictment for murder, the deceased's wounds, etc., being described, a surgeon may be called upon to give in evidence his opinion whether the deceased died in consequence of his wounds, or from natural causes, or whether the wounds were self-inflicted. R. v. Mason, 76 J. P. 184; 28 T. L. R. 120. Upon a question of insanity, a witness of medical skill may be asked whether such and such appearances, proved by other witnesses, are, in his judgment, symptoms of insanity; but he cannot be asked, if, from the testimony given, the act with which the prisoner is charged is, in his opinion, an act of insanity; which is the very point to be decided by the jury. R. v. Wright, R. & R. 456; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1421; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2260; and see ante, p. 17. On an indictment for uttering a forged will, which it was suggested had been written over pencil-marks that had been rubbed out, it was held that the evidence of an engraver, who had examined the paper with a mirror and traced the pencil-marks, was admissible on the part of the prosecution. R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 434.

2. Competency of Witnesses.

Mode of ascertaining.]—It is the business of the judge to decide as to the competency of a witness. R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 33; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 186; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 2, 23 A: which may be done by examining him on the voire dire, or by evidence aliunde. R. v. Wakefield, 2 Lew. 279; M. & M. 197 n., Murray's Report; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2262. It was at one time held that the objection for incompetency must be made before the witness was sworn in chief; but it has been generally allowed to be made at any time during the trial. Stone v. Blackburn, 1 Esp. 37: Turner v. Pearte, 1 T. R. 717. It is, however, always advisable to make the objection before the witness has been examined in chief, and if he can be examined as to it, to examine him on the voire dire; and more recent cases appear to decide that the objection should, in strictness, be taken at that time; see Hartshorne v. Watson, 5 Bing. (N. C.) 477: Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 Scott (N. R.), 593; unless the incompetency appears only in the course of his examination in chief. Yardley v. Arnold, 10 M. & W. 141: Jacobs v. Layhorn, 12 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 427; 11 M. & W. 685. The opposite party cannot, after the witness has been sworn and examined, adduce other evidence to show his incompetency. Dewdney v. Palmer, 4 M. & W. 664. If the judge has admitted a witness as competent to give evidence, but upon proof of subsequent facts affecting the capacity of the witness, and upon observation of his subsequent demeanour, the judge changes his opinion as to his competency, he may stop the examination of the witness, strike his evidence out of his notes, and direct the jury to consider the case exclusively upon the evidence of the other witnesses. R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 33; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 186.

What witnesses competent.]—Persons who by the common law were deemed incompetent as witnesses, and not allowed to give evidence upon a criminal prosecution, may be classed as follows: (1) those who do not appear to have sufficient discretion; (2) those who do not appear to have a right sense of the sanctity and moral obligation of an oath; (3) those whose crimes render them infamous; (4) those who are interested in the event of the suit. The 3rd and 4th disqualifications were removed by Lord Denman's Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85 (post, p. 454). The competency of husband and wife and of counsel and solicitors is considered, post, pp. 467 et seq., tit. Privilege.

1. Want of discretion.]—An idiot is not allowed to give evidence; Co. Litt. 6 b; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1375; a lunatic during a lucid interval may. Id.: Com. Dig. Testm. (A.). When a lunatic is tendered as a witness, it is for the judge to ascertain whether he is of competent understanding to give evidence, and is aware of the nature and obligation of an oath; if satisfied that he is, the judge should allow him to be sworn and examined, leaving the jury to decide the worth of his testimony. R. v. Hill, 2 Den. 254; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 222. A person who is deaf and dumb is not incompetent if he can be made to understand the nature of an oath, and if intelligence can be conveyed to and received from him by means of signs: R. v. Ruston, 1 Leach, 408: R. v. O'Brien, 1 Cox, 185 (Ir.), and may be examined through the medium of a sworn interpreter, who understands his signs (Id.). A dumb man, not deaf, is sworn in the way usual before the Oaths Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 39), and then the interpreter is sworn to interpret his signs. If a dumb witness can write he will be allowed to write down his evidence. See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1376.

An infant of any age may be sworn as a witness in any criminal case, provided that such infant appears sufficiently to understand the nature and moral obligation of an oath; for its competency depends not upon its age, but upon its understanding. R. v. Powell, 1 Leach, 110: R. v. Brasier, Id. 199 (1 East, P. C. 443): R. v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 320. See 2 Hale, 278, 284; Com. Dig. Testm. (A. 1): R. v. Travers, 2 Str. 700; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.) s. 1377. The court has refused to postpone the trial of an indictment, in order that a child of six, who was a necessary witness for the prosecution, and who could not be examined from want of knowledge of the nature and obligation of an oath, might in the meantime be instructed therein. R. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246; 2 Cox, 136, Pollock, C.B. But where an indictment for rape on a girl of ten was ignored because the girl did not understand the nature of an oath, an order was made to detain the accused in custody until the girl could be instructed. R. v. Baylis, 4 Cox, 23, Erle, J.: and the same course was followed in R. v. Cox, 62 J. P. 89. It is submitted (Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1377), that the matter is for the discretion of the judge in each case.

By The Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7. c. 67), s. 30, as amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 28 (2), "Where in any proceeding against any person for an offence any child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not, in the opinion of the court, understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of that child may be received though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the Court, the child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth . . . provided that a person shall not be liable to be convicted of the offence, unless the testimony admitted by virtue of this section, and given on behalf of the prosecution, is corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused." See post, p. 455.

2. Want of religion.]—At common law, it is not necessary that a witness should be a Christian, or even believe in the Old Testament (as laid down in some of the older authorities; see Co. Litt. 6 b; Gilb. Evid. 142, 143). In order to render him competent to take an oath as a witness, it is sufficient if he believes in a God, in a future state of rewards and punishments, and in the moral obligation of the oath he is about to take. Omichund v. Barker, Willes, 538; 1 Atk. 21; 1 Wils. 84; Bull. (N. P.) 292: R. v. Taylor, Peake (3rd ed.), 14. Consequently it is permissible to accept the sworn evidence of Christians of all sects and denominations (R. v. Mildrone, 1 Leach, 412: Mee v. Reid, Peake (3rd ed.), 33: R. v. McCarther, Peake (3rd ed.), 211: R. v. Serva, 2 C. & K. 53); Jews (Gilb. Evid. 143: Gomez Serra v. Nunez, 2 Str. 821); Turks, Moors, and other Mussulmans (R. v Morgan, 1 Leach, 54: see 2 Str. 1104); Hindoos or Gentoos (Omichund v. Barker, supra); Chinese (R. v. Entrehman, C. & Mar. 248); and the like. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2295: Stringer on Oaths (3rd ed.), 135 et seq.

Until the passing of the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 4), a man wholly without religion was not a competent witness. Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360; 31 L. J. (Ex.) 118. Section 4 was repealed by the Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), and s. 1 of that Act (post, p. 479) was substituted. By s. 3 of the Act of 1888 (post, p. 477), where an oath has been duly administered and taken, the fact that the person taking it had no religious belief does not affect the validity or obligation of the oath. Section 1 (post, p. 479) does not provide for the case of a person called as a witness who does not object to be sworn, but who, although an adult and of sufficient intellect, has no belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, and no belief in a God, and it would seem that such a person might still be successfully objected to as a witness by the opposite party, although if he was actually sworn without objection, the oath would be valid under s. 3 (post, p. 477). The repealed s. 4 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, provided not merely for the case of the person called as a witness objecting to take the oath, but also for the case of his being objected to as incompetent to take an oath.

It was held under the law as it stood before these statutes that the circumstance that a principal witness, although an adult and of sufficient intellect, had no idea of a future state of rewards and punishments, was not a sufficient ground for discharging the jury, though it appeared as soon as the jury was charged, and before any evidence was given. R. v. Wade, 1 Mood. 86. But if an application for that purpose is made before the jury are sworn, the judges have power to postpone the trial, if they have reason to believe that an adult, who is a necessary witness for the prosecution, can, within a reasonable time, be rendered competent to testify. R. v. White, 1 Leach, 430 n. (a).

3. Infamy.]—Formerly persons who had been convicted of certain crimes which were regarded as infamous were incompetent as witnesses, unless they had been pardoned or had endured their punishment. This rule excluded the evidence of convicted accomplices. 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 101. It has been abolished by the Evidence Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), which enacts (s. 1) that "no person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest from giving evidence, either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the Court, on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in any court, or before any judge, jury, sheriff, coroner, magistrate, officer, or person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence; but every person so offered may and shall be admitted to give evidence on oath, or solemn affirmation in those cases wherein affirmation is by law receivable, notwithstanding that such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or inquiry, or of the suit, action, or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness, and notwithstanding that such person offered as a witness may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence." Notwithstanding this enactment, it has been held that a person actually under sentence of death is civilly dead, and is therefore incapable of being a witness. R. v. Webb, 11 Cox, 133, Lush. J. But this decision was prior to the passing of the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), and seems to be inconsistent with the provisions of that Act. See Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1347. The witness is liable to be questioned as to the fact of such conviction and to have it proved against him. (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, ss. 1, 6, post, p. 475).

4. Interest.]—Until the Evidence Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, supra), removed the incapacity, it was a general rule of evidence not to admit the testimony of a witness who was necessarily to be a gainer or loser by the event of a cause, whether such advantage were direct and immediate, or consequential only.

Accomplices.]—Notwithstanding this general rule, an accomplice was always a competent witness before the grand jury and the petty jury, 2 Hawk. c. 46, ss. 94—100 : R. v. Dodd, 1 Leach, 155; 2 East, P. C. 1003, and whether included in the indictment or not, R. v. Tinckler, 1 East, P. C. 354, 356, although his expectation of pardon depended upon the defendant's conviction. 1 Hale, 303; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 94. This expectation of pardon does not amount to a right, either as to the particular offence in question, or other offences committed. R. v. Rudd, 1 Leach, 115; 1 Cowp. 331 : R. v. Lee, R. & R. 361 : R. v. Brunton, R. & R. 454 : R. v. Garside, 4 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 1; 2 A. & E. 266. As to the circumstances under which an accomplice should be admitted as an approver, see R. v. Dunne, 5 Cox, 507 (Ir.) : R. v. Gallagher, 15 Cox, 291. A police spy is not an accomplice. R. v. Mullins, 3 Cox, 526; 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1110 : R. v. Bickley, 73 J. P. 239 (C. C. A.). If the accomplice is dead his depositions, if properly taken, may be read against the defendant. R. v. Westbeer, 1 Leach, 12. An accessory is a competent witness against his principal, and the principal against the accessory. R. v. Patram, 2 East, P. C. 782 : R. v. Haslam, 1 Leach, 418.

Corroboration.]—The fact of the witness being an accomplice, accessory, or principal detracts very materially from his credit. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 967.

The uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law : R. v. Atwood, 1 Leach, 464; but it has long been the practice at common law for the judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on such uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice or accomplices, and, in the discretion of the judge, to advise them not to convict on such evidence, though at the same time pointing out that it is within their legal province to convict upon it if they choose. R. v. Stubbs, Dears. 555 : In re Meunier [1894] 2 Q. B. 415. This rule of practice has become virtually a rule of law : R. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 107 : R. v. Tate [1908] 2 K. B. 680; and in the absence of such a warning by the judge the conviction will on appeal be quashed by the Court of Criminal Appeal. R. v. Tate, supra. Where there is a proper caution, in considering whether the conviction should be allowed to stand, the Court of Criminal Appeal will, on appeal, review all the facts of the case, bearing in mind that the jury had the opportunity of hearing and seeing the witnesses, and will quash the conviction if it thinks the verdict unreasonable or one that cannot be supported by the evidence. R. v. Baskerville [1916] 2 K. B. 658; 86 L. J. (K. B.) 28; 25 Cox, C. C. 524; 12 Cr. App. R. 81; R. v. Bryant, 13 Cr. App. R. 49. Where there is insufficient warning and no corroborative evidence the Court of Criminal Appeal will on appeal quash the conviction. R. v. Norris, 12 Cr. App. R. 156.

The kind of corroboration required is not confirmation by independent evidence of everything the accomplice relates, as his evidence would be unnecessary if that were so. R. v. Mullins, 3 Cox, 526, 531. What is required is some independent testimony which affects the accused by tending to connect him with the crime; that is, evidence, direct or circumstantial, which implicates the accused, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence given by the accomplice that the crime has been committed, but also the evidence that the accused committed it. R. v. Baskerville, supra.

Where a specific charge is made and details given silence may, in a proper case, amount to corroboration. R. v. Feigenbaum [1919] 1 K. B. 431; 83 J. P. 123; 14 Cr. App. R. 1.

The evidence of one accomplice cannot be corroborated by the evidence of another. R. v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326; approved in R. v. Baskerville, supra.

The wife of an accomplice is not necessarily an accomplice, and her evidence may therefore be good corroboration. R. v. Willis [1916] 1 K. B. 933; 85 L. J. (K. B.) 1129; 114 L. T. 1047; 32 T. L. R. 452; 12 Cr. App. R. 44. But semble, where the wife of an accomplice is called to confirm the accomplice's evidence the jury should be warned as to her evidence. R. v. Neal, 7 C. & P. 168: R. v. Payne, 8 Cr. App. R. 171: R. v. Willis, supra.

Where two persons are indicted together corroboration implicating one only is not corroboration as to the other. R. v. Jenkins, 1 Cox, 177; approved in R. v. Baskerville, supra.

In cases of incest mere submission on the part of the woman may not be sufficient in the absence of permission to constitute her an accomplice. R. v. Dimes, 76 J. P. 47. In cases of sodomy or similar offences a boy between seven and fourteen may be held to be an accomplice where there is evidence to show that he had a guilty knowledge. R. v. Cratchley, 9 Cr. App. R. 232.

Where a woman was accused of administering a noxious drug with a view to cause miscarriage, evidence of the father of the woman to whom it was administered, that he had accused the prisoner of administering it, and that she did not deny it, was held corroboration. R. v. Cramp, 14 Cox, 390, Denman, J. Such cases should now be considered in the light of R. v Christie, cited, ante, p. 393.

On the hearing of a complaint under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, s. 4, evidence of the conduct of the alleged father at his trial on indictment for carnal knowledge of the complainant in having given evidence before the committing magistrates that the complainant was a fast girl, but having made no such suggestion at the trial, has been held to be corroboration of the complainant that he was the father of her child. Mash v. Darley [1914] 3 K. B. 1226. But evidence of opportunity for or of the possibility of sexual intercourse between the parties is not corroborative evidence within the section. Burbury v. Jackson, 25 Cox, 515; nor is attention to the woman before and after the birth of the child necessarily corroboration. Thomas v. Jones [1921] 1 K. B. 22.

Where it is proposed to call an accomplice for the Crown, it is the practice: (A) not to include him in the indictment; or (B) to take his plea of guilty on arraignment: Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 390; or during the trial, if he withdraws his plea of not guilty: R. v. Tomey, 2 Cr. App. R. 329: or before calling him either (C) to offer no evidence and permit his acquittal: R. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83: or (D) to enter a nolle prosequi: R. v. Feargus O'Connor, 4 St. Tr. (N. S.) 935. As we have already seen, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1 (ante, p. 454), renders persons competent as witnesses, notwithstanding that they may have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or inquiry, or of the suit, action, or proceeding, whether civil or criminal, in which they may be offered as witnesses; subject, however, to certain exceptions, which will be presently stated.

Parties to the suit.]—In civil actions, until the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), neither party to a suit was allowed to give evidence for or obliged to give evidence against himself. The rule as to the competence of parties to give evidence was never properly applicable to criminal proceedings.

Prosecutor.]—The indictment being at the suit of the Crown, the private prosecutor was always considered a competent witness.

Defendant.]—The defendant at common law was not a competent or compellable witness at any stage of the proceedings, on the ground of the maxim Nemo tenetur seipsum prodere, which protected both the defendant and all witnesses in the case from liability to answer incriminating questions (see post, p. 469), and if the defendant were examined on oath any conviction would be bad. R. v. Sullivan, Ir. Rep., 8 C. L. 404. Nor was he bound to answer questions put to him at the preliminary inquiry or even when articles of the peace were sworn against him. Lort v. Hutton, 45 L. J. (M. C.) 95. On this last point the law has been altered as to summary proceedings by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 25.

The position of the defendant has been gradually changed by a series of statutory provisions culminating in and superseded by the Evidence Act, 1877, and the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898.

40 & 41 Vict. c. 14 (Evidence Act, 1877), s. 1.]—"On the trial of any indictment or other proceeding for the non-repair of any public highway or bridge, or for a nuisance to any public highway, river, or bridge, and of any other indictment or proceeding instituted for the purpose of trying or enforcing a civil right only, every defendant to such indictment or proceeding, and the wife or husband of any such defendant, shall be admissible witnesses and compellable to give evidence." [These proceedings, even before the passing of this Act, had been regarded as in substance of a civil nature. R. v. Stephens, L. R. 1 Q. B. 702; 35 L. J. (Q. B.) 251.]

47 & 48 Vict. c. 14 (Married Women's Property Act, 1884), s. 1.]—In any such criminal proceeding against a husband or a wife as is authorised by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the husband and wife respectively shall be competent and admissible witnesses, and, except when defendant, compellable to give evidence. [See ss. 12 and 16 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), and s. 36 of the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, post, p. 500.]

61 & 62 Vict. c. 36 (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898), s. 1. Defendant and husband or wife of defendant competent witnesses for the defence.]—"Every person charged with an offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person. Provided as follows :—

(a.) A person so charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon his own application :

(b.) The failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution :

(c.) The wife or husband of the person charged shall not, save as in this Act mentioned, be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon the application of the person so charged :

(d.) Nothing in this Act shall make a husband compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, or a wife compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage :

(e.) A person charged and being a witness in pursuance of this Act may be asked any question in cross-examination notwithstanding that it would tend to criminate him as to the offence charged :

(f.) A person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall not be asked, and if asked shall not be required to answer, any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or been charged with any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, or is of bad character, unless—

(i) the proof that he has committed or been convicted of such other offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence wherewith he is then charged; or

(ii) he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution; or

(iii) he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence.

(g.) Every person called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court, give his evidence from the witness box or other place from which the other witnesses give their evidence :

(h.) Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of section eighteen of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), or any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn."

Competent witness.]—This provision appears to supersede all prior enactments, which rendered the defendant a competent witness, except the Evidence Act, 1877 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 14, supra). See Charnock v. Merchant [1900] 1 Q. B. 474; 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 221; 19 Cox, 443; and s. 6 of the Act, post, p. 466.

Charged jointly.]—In the case of an indictment against two or more defendants, one defendant may give evidence for the Crown against a co-defendant in the following cases :—

1. Where a nolle prosequi has been entered. R. v. Sherman, Case (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 303.

2. Where a verdict of acquittal has been given. R. v. Rowland, Ry. & M. 401.

3. Where the defendant in question has pleaded guilty on arraignment or during trial (ante, p. 168). R. v. Tomey, 2 Cr. App. R. 329 : R. v. George, C. & Mar. 111 : R. v. Hinks, 1 Den. 84; 2 C. & K. 462 : R. v. Drury, 3 C. & K. 190, Rolfe, B. : R. v. King, 1 Cox, 232, Platt, B. : R. v. Williams, 1 Cox. 289 : R. v. Arundel, 4 Cox, 260 : R. v. Gallagher, 13 Cox, 61 (C. C. R.); 1 Chit. Cr. L. 428.

4. Where, though jointly indicted, he is not being tried with the defendant against whom he gives evidence. Winsor v. R., L. R. 1 Q. B. 390; 35 L. J. (M.) 161.

In all these cases a defendant is also a competent witness for a co-defendant. It has been said that a defendant who has pleaded guilty should be sentenced before being called in favour of a co-defendant. R. v. Jackson, 6 Cox, 525, Erle, J. If he is called for the Crown, his evidence needs corroboration. R. v. Sparks, 1 F. & F. 388; and see ante, p. 455.

Wife or husband.]—As to its effect on enactments making the defendant's husband or wife a competent witness, see ss. 4, 6, post, pp. 465, 466.

For the defence.]—The prisoner ought to be distinctly told by the Court of trial that he has a right to give evidence on his own behalf. R. v. Warren, 73 J. P. 359, C. C. A.; but failure to so inform him does not of itself necessarily invalidate the trial. R. v. Saunders, 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 296; 63 J. P. 24. The words " for the defence " allow a defendant to give evidence for a co-defendant who is indicted and tried " jointly " with him. R. v. Macdonell or Macdonald, 2 Cr. App. R. 322; 73 J. P. 490. For case of joint trial of husband and wife who each gave evidence incriminating the other, see R. v. Martin [1905] 9 Canada Cr. Cas. 371 (Ont.). If the jury disagree on a trial in which the defendant has been sworn as a witness, and the indictment is tried again, it would seem that his evidence on the former trial may be put in against him. R. v. Sharpe [1903] 5 West. Austr. Rep. 125.

Every stage of the proceedings.]—These words do not include proceedings before the grand jury, but apply to proceedings at the preliminary inquiry and before the petty jury. R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 83; 19 Cox, 182: R. v. Saunders, 63 J. P. 24. They include evidence given after a plea of guilty but before sentence in mitigation of punishment. R. v. Wheeler, 86 L. J. (K. B.) 40; 81 J. P. 75; 12 Cr. App. R. 159; 33 T. L. R. 21. Evidence given by the defendant at the preliminary inquiry is admissible against him at the trial, even if he is not there called as a witness. R. v. Bird, 19 Cox, 180; 62 J. P. 760 (C. C. R.). In R. v. Humphries, 67 J. P. 396, Wills, J., intimated that if the defendant did not exercise at the preliminary inquiry his right to give evidence, and was content to reserve his defence, the value of his evidence at the trial was thereby lessened. This view has been adopted by many judges. See R. v. Winkworth, 1 Cr. App. R. 129, 130; and see charge of Lord Alverstone to grand jury, ante, p. 175.

Where a defendant does not give evidence in his own behalf at the trial he will not be allowed to give evidence on appeal against his conviction save in exceptional cases, and if then called he will be called as the first witness in support of the appeal. R. v. Malvisi, 73 J. P. 392; 2 Cr. App. R. 251.

Solely or jointly.]—In 1871 it was decided that where two persons were indicted and tried together, one could not be called as a witness for the other. R. v. Payne, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 349; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 65. The common law rule laid down in this case is not directly affected by the Act of 1898. See R. v. Sheriff, Lewes Assizes, November, 1900; 35 L. J. Newsp. 664, Bruce, J. But as each defendant is entitled to be called "for the defence," and not merely "on his own behalf," he seems to be free to give evidence which may exculpate or inculpate a co-defendant. R. v. Hadwen [1902] 1 K. B. 882; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 581; 20 Cox, 206; 66 J. P. 456: R. v. Macdonell or Macdonald [1909] 2 Cr. App. R. 322; 73 J. P. 490. If called for a co-defendant he may be cross-examined to show his own guilt. R. v. Rowland [1910] 1 K. B. 458; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 327. And if he goes into the witness-box to give evidence for the defence and is sworn, even though the only evidence he gives is a confession of his own guilt, he may be cross-examined by counsel for the prosecution, and the questions may be directed to incriminating a co-prisoner. He is then in the same position as an ordinary witness. R. v. Paul and R. v. McFarlane [1920] 2 K. B. 183; 14 Cr. App. R. 155.

Where it appears to the Court that the prosecutor has included one of the defendants in the indictment simply to shut him out from giving evidence for a co-defendant, and that there is no evidence affecting the defendant so unjustly joined, the Court may direct his immediate acquittal. Davis v. Living, Holt (N. P.) 275; and see Gilb. Ev. 132, 134; Buller (N. P.) 285: R. v. Frazer

(1797), McNally, Ev. 56 (Ir.): R. v. O'Donnell, 7 Cox, 337 (C. C. R. Ir.): R. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83. An alternative course in such a case is to direct that the defendants be separately tried: in which case the defendant not under trial is a competent witness for the defendant who is under trial. R. v. Payne (supra). Such an order was made in R. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox, 217: and see R. v. Archer, 3 Cox, 228, Maule, J.]

Proviso:—

(a) Defendant not compellable witness.]—"A person so charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon his own application."

His own application.]—This appears to mean on the application of the defendant himself or by his counsel with his consent.

(b) Comment on failure to give evidence.]—"The failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence, shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution."

By the prosecution.]—Though counsel may not comment on failure by the defendant to give evidence, the judge may comment if in his discretion he thinks it proper to do so. R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, 83; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 83; and cf. Kops v. R. [1894] A. C. 650; 64 L. J. (P. C.) 34. As to the effect of comment by counsel for the prosecution that the accused's wife had not been called by him, see R. v. Dickman, 74 J. P. 449. See also Ross v. Boyd, 5 Fraser, Just. Sc. 64. The fact that the defendant did not give evidence before the justices may be matter for unfavourable comment. R. v. Humphries, ante, p. 460. And the jury are entitled to draw inferences unfavourable to the defendant where he is not called to establish an innocent explanation of facts proved by the prosecution, which without such explanation tell for his guilt. R. v. Corrie [1904] 68 J. P. 294 (C. C. R.): R. v. Bernard, 1 Cr. App. R. 218.

(c) Evidence of wife or husband of accused.]—"The wife or husband of the person charged shall not, save as in this Act mentioned, be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon the application of the person so charged." See post, pp. 465, 466.

(d) Communication between spouses privileged.]—"Nothing in this Act shall make a husband compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, or a wife compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage." See post, p. 467.

(e) Incriminating questions.]—"A person charged and being a witness in pursuance of this Act may be asked any question in cross-examination, notwithstanding that it would tend to criminate him as to the offence charged." See post, p. 469.

(f) Questions as to other offences or character.]—"A person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall not be asked, and if asked shall not be required to answer, any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or been charged with any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, or is of bad character."

Shall not be asked . . . question tending to show.]—Any question or series of questions which would reasonably lead a jury to believe that it was being imputed to the accused that he had committed another offence comes within the words "tending to show" in this section. The expression includes more questions than the simple one whether the accused has committed a particular offence. The point cannot always be decided by looking merely at a single question, but each question must be judged in the light of others asked before and after. R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K. B. 746; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 841; 22 Cox, 330; and see R. v. Beecham [1921] 3 K. B. 464; 85 J. P. 276; 37 T. L. R. 932; 16 Cr. App. R. 26. The statute forbids such questions to be put. Id.: Barker v. Arnold [1911] 2 K. B. 120; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 820; 22 Cox, 533; 75 J. P. 364.

Questions put in such a way as to make the accused either admit he was in prison at the time referred to by counsel or commit perjury are in direct opposition to the Act. R. v. Haslam, 85 L. J. (K. B.) 1511; 114 L. T. 617; 12 Cr. App. R. 10. See also R. v. Ratcliffe, 89 L. J. (K. B.) 135; 84 J. P. 15; 14 Cr. App. R. 95 (examination by judge). So also questions put for the purpose of establishing that the accused was swindling other people by other means than those charged in the indictment are questions put to show that he is a person of bad character, and are therefore improper. R. v. Wilson, 11 Cr. App. R. 251.

Any offence.]—Where such questions are admissible under the exceptions infra they may relate to convictions or offences subsequent to the offence for which the accused then stands charged, as well as to prior convictions or offences. R. v. Wood [1920] 2 K. B. 179; 84 J. P. 92; 14 Cr. App. R. 149.

Exception 1.]—"Unless (i) the proof that he has committed or been convicted of such offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence wherewith he is then charged; or"

Admissible evidence.]—As to cases in which evidence of other offences is admissible to show guilt of the offence charged, see ante, pp. 355 et seq., and sub tit. "Receiving," post, p. 722; and as to giving evidence of other convictions where evidence of good character has been given, see ante, p. 365.

Exception 2.]—"(ii) he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution; or"

Imputations on the character of the prosecutor, etc.]—Where the defence set up is that one or more of the witnesses for the prosecution committed the offence charged against the accused and questions are asked of them with a view to showing this, the nature and conduct of the defence involve imputations on the character of witnesses for the prosecution. The words of the statute must receive their ordinary and natural interpretation, and are not to be qualified by adding words such as "unnecessarily" or "unjustifiably" or "for purposes other than that of developing the defence," or similar words. R. v. Hudson [1912] 2 K. B. 465; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 861; 23 Cox, 61. So in a charge of larceny, where witnesses for the prosecution were asked questions by counsel for the accused with a view to showing they had committed the theft, it was held that cross-examination of the accused as to a previous conviction was justified. Id. So also on an indictment for murder, a suggestion on behalf of the defence that a witness for the crown had committed the offence was held to be an imputation within this part of the section. R. v. Marshall, 63 J. P. 36, Darling, J.

In cases not falling within this class, where the matters suggested as involving imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution are isolated and do not form any substantial part of the defence, the test is whether these matters involve the proposition on the part of the defence that the jury ought not to believe the prosecutor or one of his witnesses, on the ground that his conduct (not his evidence in the case, but his conduct outside the evidence given by him) makes him an unreliable witness. If that is so, the jury then ought also to know the character of the accused who either gives such evidence or makes such charge. R. v. Preston [1909] 1 K. B. 568; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 335. See also R. v. Bridgwater [1905] 1 K. B. 131; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 35 : 20 Cox, 737 : R. v. Westfall, 76 J. P. 335; 107 L. T. 463; 23 Cox. 185. In one case Day, J., ruled that cross-examination of the prosecutrix in a charge of rape, with a view to prove consent, involves an imputation on her character. R. v. Fisher, 34 L. J. (Newsp.) 100; Jelf on Criminal Evidence, 70. In R. v. Sheean. 72 J. P. 232; 24 T. L. R. 459; 21 Cox, 561, Jelf, J., ruled to the contrary; the question as to which of these two rulings is correct, was reserved for future consideration in R. v. Preston, supra. So questions put to a witness for the prosecution in cross-examination, as to whether she did not keep a disorderly house, with a view to discredit her evidence, come within the terms of the section. R. v. Morrison, 6 Cr. App. R. 159; and so may questions put with a view to showing that a witness whom the prosecution admit is an accomplice has been guilty of other criminal acts. R. v. Watson, 23 Cox, 543; 29 T. L. R. 450, followed in R. v. Cohen, 10 Cr. App. R. 91. So also may evidence that the prosecution is entirely without foundation, and has been started by way of revenge for some other matter outside the case. R. v. Roberts otherwise Spalding, 15 Cr. App. R. 65; 37 T. L. R. 69. A defence which involves a bonâ fide dispute as to accounts is clearly not an attack upon a witness for the prosecution. R. v. Morgan, 5 Cr. App. R. 157; and merely to deny in strong terms a statement made by the prosecutor is not necessarily an imputation on his character or that of his witnesses. R. v. Rouse [1904] 1 K. B. 184; 73 L. J. (K. B.) 60; 20 Cox, 592; 68 J. P. 14. Comments by the defendant on the course adopted by a police officer in conducting his identification proceedings were held not to involve imputations within the meaning of this section. R. v. Preston, supra; but evidence that a police officer has bribed the accused in order to induce him to make a confession has been held to come within the section, though given in answer to questions in cross-examination. R. v. Wright, 5 Cr. App. R. 131. So also evidence given by answers in cross-examination that a witness for the crown is such a "horrible liar" that his brother will not speak to him may be sufficient. R. v. Rappolt, 6 Cr. App. R. 156; but an accusation of habitual drunkenness made against the prosecutor and of undue violence on arrest made against a police officer have been held not to amount to such an attack as to let in cross-examination as to the accused's own character. R. v. Westfall, 107 L. T. 463; 76 J. P. 335. Primâ facie answers given by a defendant to questions put in cross-examination are not a part of the "nature or conduct of the defence," but are part of the case for the prosecution. R. v. Jones, 74 J. P. 30; 3 Cr. App. R. 67. If such questions are in the nature of a trap an involuntary imputation on the character of a witness for the crown made in the answer will not justify putting in evidence of the bad character of the accused. R. v. Jones, supra; R. v. Seigley, 6 Cr. App. R. 106. The imputations must be against a witness for the prosecution and not against persons not called as witnesses. R. v. Westfall, 76 J. P. 335. In R. v. ——, Swansea Summer Assizes, 1898, 33 L. J. (Newsp.) 563, Day, J., under this sub-section allowed cross-examination as to previous acquittals, presumably as falling within the word "charged." In R. v. Benson, 3 Cr. App. R. 70, the appellant, who conducted his own case at the trial, had cross-examined a witness for the prosecution in a manner which brought him within the peril of s. 1 (f), ii., supra. He received no warning at the time, but upon going into the witness-box himself he was warned by counsel for the prosecution that if he gave evidence of his own good character (as he was proceeding to do), the prosecution "would have a word to say about it." Thereupon he desisted from giving such favourable evidence, but, notwithstanding this, counsel for the prosecution asked, and obtained, leave to cross-examine him as to character, by reason of his conduct at an earlier stage of the case in cross-examining a witness for the prosecution. The Court of Criminal Appeal held that such cross-examination of the defendant to credit was justified, and dismissed the appeal.

In an indictment for murder the defence was that the act was done in self-defence, the man who was killed having made improper overtures to the defendant and on their being rejected having violently assaulted him. Questions were addressed to the defendant in cross-examination which had no reference to the charge of murder but which tended to show that he had been guilty of obtaining money by false pretences, upon the ground that the defence involved an imputation on the character of the prosecutor. It was held that the deceased man was not "the prosecutor" within the meaning of this sub-section. R. v. Biggin [1920] 1 K. B. 213; 89 L. J. (K. B.) 90; 83 J. P. 293; 14 Cr. App. R. 87.

Exception 3.]—"(iii) he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence."

Evidence against any other person charged, etc.]—Where one of the defendants jointly indicted gives evidence on his own behalf, and in so doing incriminates the other defendant, counsel for the latter is entitled to cross-examine. R. v. Hadwen [1902] 1 K. B. 882: 71 L. J. (K. B.) 581: 20 Cox, 206; 66 J. P. 456. See also R. v. Seigley, 6 Cr. App. R. 106.

(g) Evidence from witness box.]—" Every person called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall, unless otherwise ordered by the Court, give his evidence from the witness box or other place from which the other witnesses gave their evidence."

[The defendant is ordered to give evidence from the dock where there is reason to believe that he is likely to be violent.]

(h) Unsworn statements before justices and court of trial.]—" Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of section 18 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 42), or any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn."

[As to the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18, see ante p. 380; as to the right to make unsworn statements at the trial, see ante, p. 203.]

Sect. 2.—Time for calling defendant.]—" Where the only witness to the facts of the case called by the defence is the person charged, he shall be called as a witness immediately after the close of the evidence for the prosecution."

After the close of the evidence.]—This means before counsel for the prosecution sums up his case, and without prejudicing his right to do so. R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q. B. 77, 83; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 83. The section does not affect the right of the defendant to call witnesses to character, but seems to require that the defendant be first called. Where the defendant also calls witnesses to fact, the order in which he and these witnesses should be called appears to be in the discretion of his counsel. But see R. v. Morrison, 6 Cr. App. R. 159, at p. 165, per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J. Counsel has the right to open his case to the jury when he is calling evidence. See R. v. Hill, 7 Cr. App. R. 1, at p. 3.

Sect. 3.—Right of reply.]—" In cases where the right of reply depends upon the question whether evidence has been called for the defence, the fact that the person charged has been called as a witness shall not of itself confer on the prosecution the right of reply."

Evidence . . . for the defence.]—See R. v. Gardner [1899] 1 Q. B. 150; 68 L. J. (Q. B.) 42; and ante, pp. 205 et seq. In R. v. Paget, 64 J. P. 281, Fulton, Recorder, held that where one defendant gave evidence hostile to a co-defendant, cross-examination on behalf of the latter did not give the prosecution a right to reply.

Sect. 4.—Calling of wife or husband in certain cases.]—" (1) The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under any enactment mentioned in the schedule of this Act may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

" (2) Nothing in this Act shall affect a case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence may at common law be called as a witness without the consent of that person."

[As to the effect of this section, see post, p. 467.]

Sect. 5.—Application of the Act to Scotland.]

Sect. 6. Provision as to previous Acts.]—" (1) This Act shall apply to all criminal proceedings, notwithstanding any enactment in force at the commencement of this Act, except that nothing in this Act shall affect the Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 14, ante, p. 457).

" (2) But this Act shall not apply to proceedings in courts martial unless so applied—

" (a) As to courts martial under the Naval Discipline Act (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), by general orders made in pursuance of section 65 of that Act; and

" (b) As to courts martial under the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), by rules made in pursuance of section 70 of that Act."

[The Act has been applied to courts martial in the navy and army.]

Sect. 7.—Extent, commencement, and short title.]—" (1) This Act shall not extend to Ireland.

" (2) This Act shall come into operation on the expiration of two months from the passing thereof (Aug. 12, 1898).

" (3) This Act may be cited as the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898."

3. Privilege.

Doctor and patient.]—There is no privilege entitling a medical practitioner to refuse to give in evidence statements made to him by a patient, however confidential the communication may be. Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 753: Duchess of Kingston's case, 20 St. Tr. 355, 572; 2 Smith, L.C. (11th ed.) 731.

Husband and wife.]—Communications between husband and wife during the marriage are privileged from disclosure in evidence. This right is preserved as to criminal cases by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (d) (ante, p. 461).

That statute has to a considerable extent altered the law as to evidence by the husband or wife of an accused person. The present law appears to be as follows:—

1. The husband or wife of the prosecutor has always been a competent witness either for the Crown or for the defence. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1364.

2. The husband or wife of a defendant to an indictment within the Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 14), is a competent and compellable witness for the Crown or the defence (see ante, p. 457).

3. The husband or wife of a defendant is a competent witness for the defence in all criminal cases whether the defendant is charged solely or jointly. The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1, ante, p. 458. Except in the cases referred to in s. 6 (1), and in s. 4 and the schedule to that Act (ante, pp. 465, 466), as extended in 1908 (ante, p. 466), the husband or wife can be called only on the application of such defendant (s. 1 (c), ante, p. 458).

4. At common law, as a general rule, the husband or wife of a defendant is not a competent witness for the Crown against such defendant: 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 70: R. v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 263: Davis v. Dinwoody, 4 T. R. 678. This rule is subject to the following exceptions:—

(a) In cases of high treason. But this is very doubtful. R. v. Griggs, Sir T. Raym. 1; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 82; 1 Hale, 48, 301; 1 Co. Litt. 6 b.

(b) When the husband is indicted for personal injury to the wife, or vice versâ: 2 Hawk. c. 46, ss. 77, 80, 81; 1 Hale, 301: R. v. Azire, 1 Str. 633: R. v. Jagger, 1 East, P. C. 455; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2281: R. v. Pearce, 9 C. & P. 667: R. v. Serjeant, Ry. & M. 352: R. v. Jellyman, 8 C. & P. 604. In Lord Audley's case, 3 St. Tr. 401, a wife was held a competent witness to prove that her husband was present and aided and abetted another in committing a rape on her. And on an indictment of a husband for the murder of his wife, the dying declarations of the wife have been admitted. R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, 500: 1 East, P. C. 354, 356: R. v. Johns, 1 East, P. C. 357; 1 Leach, 504, n.

(c) On an indictment for forcible abduction and marriage the wife is a competent witness against the husband even though the marriage is valid, or if voidable has not been annulled. 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 78: R. v. Wakefield, 2 Lew. 279; Murray's Report, 257; M. & M. 197 n.: R. v. Perry, 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2278. This rule is based by some on the view that the marriage, being under coercion, is null. 1 Hale, 301; Buller (N. P.), 286; and see Scott v. Sebright, 12 P. D. 21: Cooper v.

Crane [1891] Prob. 369; by others on the view that the force used is a personal wrong to the wife. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1370.

(d) On an indictment for bigamy the second wife is a competent witness on the first marriage being proved. 1 Hale, 693: R. v. Peat, 2 Lew. 288; 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.). But this is only an apparent exception, and depends on the fact that the second marriage is void: for the common law rule only applies where there is a valid marriage. R. v. Young, 2 Cox, 291, Erle, J.; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1365; and see R. v. Fuzil Deen, 6 Queensland L. J. 302.

All these common law exceptions are preserved by s. 4 (2) of the Act of 1898, ante, p. 465.

Statutory Exceptions.]—By s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1898 (ante, p. 465), the husband or wife of a defendant is entitled to give evidence either for the Crown or for the defence, without the consent of such defendant, in the case of proceedings under any of the enactments originally inserted in, or subsequently added to, the schedule (see ante, p. 466).

As to the questions to be asked of such a witness upon being called into the witness-box for the purpose of ascertaining whether he or she consents to give evidence, see R. v. Acaster (No. 2), 76 J. P. 263; 106 L. T. 384; 22 Cox, 743.

The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under the Vagrancy Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 39), may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged. 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912), s. 7 (6). This enactment gets rid of the decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Blady [1912] 2 K. B. 89; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 613; 22 Cox, 715.

By the Children (Employment Abroad) Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 7), s. 3 (4), the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under that Act may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

By the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 28 (3), the wife or husband of a person charged with bigamy may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

Under these statutes the husband or wife, though a competent, is not a compellable witness. R. v. Leach [1912] A. C. 305; 76 J. P. 203; 22 Cox, 721; 81 L. J. (K. B.) 616.

5. Where two or more persons are indicted and tried jointly, the wives or husbands of such persons were at common law not competent witnesses either for or against their own spouses or their co-defendants. R. v. Thompson, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 377; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 112. That case is not directly overruled by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. The husband or wife cannot be called for the Crown against any of the co-defendants except in cases within the schedule to the Act of 1898 (ante, p. 466), and the common law exceptions above stated. And one spouse cannot be called for the defence save as in the statute provided, except on the application of the accused spouse. But if called it is submitted that the witness is free to give evidence for or against any of the defendants subject to cross-examination by the Crown or the defendant inculpated. R. v. Hadwen (ante, p. 464).

The rules on this subject are substantially the same as in the case of evidence by co-defendants for or against each other. Thus a wife may give evidence for or against the co-defendants if her husband has been convicted (R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 284) or has pleaded guilty (R. v. Thompson, 3 F. & F. 824) or is not being tried with the persons indicted jointly with him. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1357; and see ante, p. 459.

Incriminating questions.]—A witness other than the defendant is privileged to refuse to answer any question which might tend to criminate him, i.e., to expose him to any punishment, penalty, or forfeiture. After some former difference of opinion among the judges it is now settled that for the purpose of impeaching the credit of a witness he may always be asked on cross-examination questions with regard to alleged crimes or other improper conduct on his part. (Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1453; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2348, and the cases there cited.) But the witness cannot be compelled to answer such questions where the answers would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture of any nature. R. v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213: R. v. Garbett, 1 Den. 236; 2 C. & K. 474: Mexborough (Earl) v. Whitwood [1897] 2 Q. B. 111; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 637: Allhusen v. Labouchere, 3 Q. B. D. 654; 48 L. J. (Q. B.) 34; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1453, and cases there cited; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2348. And the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), expressly provides (s. 3) that nothing in that Act contained shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself or herself. The objection is for the witness to take, and he is presumed to know the law sufficiently to enable him to take it. R. v. Coote, L. R. 4 P. C. 599; 42 L. J. (P. C.) 45. Counsel for the opposite side cannot argue the question: R. v. Adey, 1 M. & Rob. 94: Thomas v. Newton, M. & M. 48, n.; and if the witness answers without objection, his answer is admissible on a charge as to the offence admitted. R. v. Sloggett, Dears. 656; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 93. But the witness may claim the protection of the Court at any stage of the inquiry; although he may already have answered without objection some questions tending to criminate him. R. v. Garbett, 2 C. & K. 474. The witness is not himself the sole judge whether his evidence will bring him into danger; the Court must be satisfied, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give, whether there really is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to him from his being compelled to answer. Ex parte Reynolds, 20 Ch. D. 294 (C. A.); 51 L. J. (Ch.) 756: Osborn v. London Docks Co., 10 Ex. 698; 24 L. J. (Ex.) 140: Sidebottom v. Adkins, 27 L. J. (Ch.) 152: R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311; 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 301: Ex parte Fernandez, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 3, 39, 40; 30 L. J. (C. P.) 231: Spokes v. Grosvenor Hotel Co. [1897] 2 Q. B. 124; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 598. But if it is once made to appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. Subject, however, to that reservation, the judge is bound to insist on the witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place him in peril. Ex parte Reynolds, supra. The privilege of refusing to answer questions on the ground that the answers may tend to criminate him is that of the witness alone, and neither party to the suit can take any advantage therefrom. Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; 24 L. J. (Ex.) 160: R. v. Kinglake, 11 Cox. 499; 18 W. R. 805. Therefore, where a witness, called on the part of the Crown to prove bribery against the defendant, refused to give evidence on the ground that his evidence would tend to criminate himself, but on the objection being overruled by the judge, gave his evidence, the Court of Queen's Bench held, that the defendant could not object that such evidence had been improperly received. R. v. Kinglake, supra.

Where a witness, being interrogated as to his conduct on a particular occasion, refuses to answer on the ground that his evidence may render him liable to prosecution, the production to him of a pardon under the great seal for all offences committed by him on the occasion referred to takes away his privilege, and makes him compellable to answer. Thus, on the trial of an information filed by the attorney-general, by direction of the House of Commons, against A. for bribery at a parliamentary election, B., a witness for the Crown, on being asked whether he had not received money for his vote, refused to answer the question. Counsel for the Crown then produced and tendered to him a pardon under the great seal for all offences which he might have committed at or in relation to such election. The Court held that after tender of the pardon the witness was bound to answer all questions relating to what he did at the election; and overruled a further objection on his part that he was still liable to impeachment by parliament, from which the pardon would have been no protection (see 12 & 13 W. 3, c. 2, s. 3), holding that this possibility was too remote and improbable a contingency to affect the case, or to give the witness any privilege. R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311; 30 L. J. (Q. B.) 301; 2 F. & F. 157. See R. v. Reading, 7 St. Tr. 259, 296: R. v. Kinglake, supra.

The rule against incriminating questions does not apply to a defendant who is called as a witness on his own behalf under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, so far as relates to the offence then charged against him; see s. 1 (e), ante, p. 458. But a defendant when so called may not be asked and shall not be required to answer as to having committed or having been charged with or convicted of any offence not charged in the indictment, except in the cases provided by s. 1 (f) of the Act (ante, p. 458).

Judges and jurors.]—Hawkins (bk. 2, c. 46, s. 83) says that it is no exception against a person as a witness that he is one of the judges or jurors who are to try the case. But the functions of judge and juror would now be regarded as wholly incompatible with that of a witness (see Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 938; 2 Russ. Evid. (7th ed.) 2348). A grand juror is debarred by his oath, and privileged, from giving evidence on matters which occurred in proceedings before the grand jury (see ante, p. 73), and Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 942; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2346). The same rule appears to apply to petty jurors, Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 945.

Lawyer and client.]—" For the perfect administration of justice, and for the protection of the confidence which exists between a solicitor and his client, it has been established as a principle of public policy that those confidential communications shall not be subject to production. But to that of course this limitation has been put, and justly put, that no court can be called upon to protect communications which are in themselves part of a criminal or unlawful proceeding." Bullivant v. Att.-Gen. for Victoria [1901] A. C. 196, 200; 70 L. J. (K. B.) 645, Halsbury, L.C. This privilege, therefore, does not extend to communications made to a solicitor by his client before the crime for the purpose of being guided or helped in the commission of it. R. v. Cox and Railton, 14 Q. B. D. 153; 54 L. J. (M. C.) 41: R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 166: R. v. Farley, Id. 197; 2 C. & K. 313; 2 Cox, 82: R. v. Hayward, 2 C. & K. 234; 2 Cox, 23: R. v. Smith, 114 L. T. 239; 80 J. P. 31; 31 T. L. R. 617; 11 C. R. App. R. 229; and cf. Williams v. Quebrada Rail., etc., Co. [1895]2 Ch. 751; 65 L. J. (Ch.) 68. In R. v. Haydn [1825] 2 Fox & Sm. 379 (Ir.), on an indictment for libel, a witness for the Crown testified that the defendant consulted him about certain MS., and asked whether it was safe to publish it. Bushe, C.J., ruled that the communication was privileged, and that the person asking advice must be considered as seeking how to avoid and not how to commit a crime. In Bullivant v. Att-Gen. for Victoria, supra, it was held that there must be some proof, or at least definite allegation, of fraud or illegality to take away the privilege. The privilege is strictly confined to counsel, and to solicitors and their clerks and agents, including interpreters between them and their clients. Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 239: Taylor v. Forster, 2 C. & P. 195: Foote v. Hayne, Ry. & M. 165: du Barre v. Livette, Peake (3rd ed.) 108. It does not extend to stewards or other agents of the party; Vaillant v. Dodemead, 2 Atk. 524: Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 753. The privilege depends on the existence of the relation of lawyer and client at the time when the lawyer acquired the information, not on its existence at the time when the lawyer is called on to give evidence. Minet v. Morgan, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 361; 42 L. J. (N. S.) 627: R. v. Brewer, 6 C. & P. 363: R. v. Farley, 1 Den. 197; 2 C. & K. 313; 2 Cox, 82: R. v. Hankins, 2 C. & K. 823; 3 Cox, 434. And information acquired by a solicitor to a bank has been held not to be rendered privileged by his subsequent retainer by directors of the bank for their defence. R. v. Brown, 7 Cox, 442; S. C., sub nom., R. v. Esdaile, 1 F. & F. 213. And where on a trial for forgery, a witness who had been served with a subpœna duces tecum objected that the documents came into his possession as the solicitor of the prisoner in a previous prosecution instituted by him, it was held that the documents must be produced. R. v. Brown, 9 Cox, 281, Willes, J. Cf. R. v. Tylney, 1 Den. 319; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 36: R. v. Avery, 8 C. & P. 596. And where an attorney refuses, and is justified in refusing, to produce documents, secondary evidence may be given of the contents. Coates v. Birch, 2 Q. B. 252. If, being solicitor for the defendant, he holds papers in another capacity, he must produce them; as, for instance, a solicitor and steward of a lord of a borough is bound to produce public documents relating to the borough, but he is not bound to produce documents relating to the lord's interest in the borough. R. v. Woodley, 1 M. & Rob. 390. The privilege has been held not to apply to the contents of a notice served upon him by the solicitor on the other side, requiring him to produce at the trial a certain paper belonging to his client in his hands, Spenceley v. Schulenburgh, 7 East, 357, or the like. See Kennedy v. Lyell, 23 Ch. D. 387, 405; 9 A. C. 81; 53 L. J. (Ch.) 449 : Foakes v. Webb, 28 Ch. D. 287, 289; 54 L. J. (Ch.) 262. And where a solicitor was present at the time his client swore to an answer in Chancery, it was held that he could be compelled to give evidence of that fact, on an indictment against his client for perjury. Bull. (N. P.) 284 : sed contrà, R. v. Watkinson, 2 Str. 1122. So he may be called to prove his client's handwriting, though the knowledge was obtained from witnessing his execution of a bail-bond in the action; Hurd v. Moring, 1 C. & P. 372; and he may be called to prove his client's identity. Studdy v. Sanders, 2 D. & R. 347; contrà Parkins v. Hawkshaw, supra. And if he is a subscribing witness to a deed of his client, he may be examined as to his execution of it. Doe v. Andrews, 2 Cowp. 845 : Robson v. Kemp, 4 Esp. 233; 5 Esp. 52 : Doe v. Roe, 6 Dowl. 518. A letter written by a solicitor for a client is not inadmissible on the ground of privilege as evidence against the client in a prosecution against the latter, but to make it evidence against the client, it must be shown that the letter was written in pursuance of the client's instructions, and it is not sufficient to prove merely that it was written by the solicitor in consequence of an interview with his client. R. v. Downer, 14 Cox, 486 (C. C. R.).

Master and servant.]—A servant may be a witness for or against the master or mistress; Gilb. Evid. 135; a master or mistress for or against the servant.

Parent and child.]—A father or mother may be a witness for or against their child. R. v. Oakhampton (Mayor of), 1 Wils. (K. B.) 332; and see R. v. Bramley [1795] 6 T. R. 330 : Stapleton v. Stapleton [1736] Cas. (K. Priest and penitent.]—The question whether ministers of religion, and in particular Roman Catholic priests, have any privilege from giving evidence of confessions has not been authoritatively decided. Steph. Dig. Evidence (5th ed.) 204. The canons of the English Church contemplate that confessions should be under the seal of secrecy. The tendency of judicial dicta is that while in strict law the privilege does not exist, the minister should not be required to give evidence as to a confession made to him. Butler v. Moore, McNally, Evid. 253 (Ir.) : R. v. Sparkes, Peake (3rd ed.) 109, cit. : Broad v. Pitt, 3 C. & P. 518, Best, C.J.; 2 Russ. State privilege or public policy.]—Where the disclosure of a particular fact, not bearing directly upon the matter in question, may be of detriment to the public service, the Court will not compel a witness to disclose it. Documents or information received officially are privileged if the officer declares it to be injurious in the public interest to produce or disclose them. Home v. Bentinck, (11th ed.), ss. 608 et seq. ; Roscoe, Nisi Prius, Evidence (18th ed.), p. 174. In R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116, 136 ; 32 St. Tr. 1, 98, a witness for the Crown was held entitled to refuse to say through whom he made a disclosure to the Government. In R. v. Smith O'Brien, 7 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1, an informer was held entitled to refuse to disclose the source of his information when its disclosure would expose his informant to the risk of assassination ; and in R. v. Hardy, 24 St. Tr. 199, 753, a witness who was employed to obtain information of the proceedings at a meeting of one of the corresponding societies was not allowed to disclose the name of his employer. It is the usual practice not to press a police witness for the names of persons on whose information he has acted in the detection of crime, unless the evidence is directly material or necessary in the interests of the prisoner. R. v. Richardson, 3 F. & F. 693 ; and cf. Marks v. Beyfus, 25 Q. B. D. 494 ; 59 L. J. (Q. B.) 579, where the Director of Public Prosecutions was held to be entitled to refuse to disclose the names of persons on whose information he instituted a prosecution.

4. Credit of Witnesses.

The credibility of a witness depends upon (1) his knowledge of the facts he testifies ; (2) his disinterestedness ; (3) his integrity ; (4) his veracity ; and (5) his being bound to speak the truth by such an oath as he deems obligatory, or by such affirmation or declaration as may by law be substituted for an oath (post, p. 478). Proportioned to these is the degree of credit his testimony deserves from the Court and jury.

Knowledge.]—Although a witness is perfectly disinterested, although he is a man of integrity and veracity, and has a just sense of the moral obligation of the oath he has taken, still the degree of credit to be given to his testimony depends upon his real knowledge of the facts he testifies. A man may be deceived in a fact, from deriving his knowledge of it through a false medium : from defects in his power of observation : from his attention being occupied more by the circumstances accompanying it than by the fact itself at the time of its occurrence ; or from a thousand other circumstances, which, if candidly stated, might be satisfactorily answered and accounted for by the other party, so as to convince the witness himself that he laboured under a mistake (see Munsterberg, Psychology and Crime). Where there is a doubt, therefore, whether the evidence given by a witness is not founded on some misconception, it is the duty of the counsel who cross-examine him to question him as to the sources of his knowledge ; his reasons for believing the fact to be as he has stated ; his reasons for recollecting it : the circumstances attending its occurrence ; whether it was light or dark ; and whether he was near or distant at the time it occurred, and the like : so that the jury may be able to judge of the degree of confidence they should place in the witness's testimony. If a witness refuses to answer such questions, or does not answer them satisfactorily, it should have the effect of detracting considerably from his credit in the estimation of the jury.

Disinterestedness.]—A witness, to be perfectly credible, must not be in the slightest degree biassed or partial to one party or the other. Therefore, if it appears that the witness is prejudiced against the party against whom he appears, or has before expressed sentiments indicative of such prejudice, or if it appears that a prosecution is pending against him for the same or a similar offence, and he comes to disprove some of the facts charged in the indictment against the defendant—all these are circumstances which detract proportionably from his credit. That the prosecutor will derive an advantage from a conviction of the defendant is no objection to his competency, as we have seen, ante, p. 457; it goes to his credit merely. A father is a competent witness for his son, and a son for his father; and husband and wife for each other (see ante, pp. 457, 472); but the interest arising from the relationship detracts proportionately from the credit of the witness. See 2 Hale. 276; Gilb. Evid. 149, 155.

Integrity.]—Since the Evidence Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1 (ante, p. 455)), the fact that a witness has been convicted of crime affects only his credit, and not his competency. As to prior law, see R. v. Teal, 11 East, 307. Whether a witness has or has not been convicted, witnesses may be called to speak as to his general character, although not as to any particular offence of which he may be guilty. 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 207; R. v. Rookwood, 13 St. Tr. 139, 211: R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116, 149; 32 St. Tr. 1. In order to impeach the credit of a witness for veracity, witnesses may be called by the other side to prove that his general reputation is such that they would not believe him upon his oath. R. v. Brown, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 70; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 59. They need not have heard him on oath. R. v. Bispham, 4 C. & P. 392. As to cross-examination, see post, p. 491.

All other questions (not being questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture, as to which see ante, p. 469) for the purpose of impeaching a witness's character not only may be put, but must be answered, although the answer may degrade the witness's character. Cundell v. Pratt, M. & M. 108. And a witness may not refuse to produce a document kept by him under the authority of an Act of parliament, on the ground that it may criminate himself. Bradshaw v. Murphy, 7 C. & P. 612. If the witness be examined as to the offence or improper conduct imputed to him, and deny it, his denial is conclusive, if the question is merely collateral to the point in issue, and it is not permissible to call witnesses or offer other evidence to contradict him. R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116, 149; 32 St. Tr. 1: Harris v. Tippett, 2 Camp. 637: R. v. Burke, 8 Cox, 44 (Ir.): R. v. Cracknell, 10 Cox, 408, Willes, J.; and see R. v. Cargill [1913] 2 K. B. 271; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 655; 23 Cox, 382; 77 J. P. 347; 108 L. T. 816; 29 T. L. R. 382. But if the question is relevant to the point at issue, and the witness denies the thing imputed, he may be contradicted. Yewin's case, 2 Camp. 638. In that case the witness was asked whether he had not said that he would be avenged on his master, and would fix him in gaol. This he denied, but he was allowed to be contradicted. So where a witness for the prosecution denied on cross-examination that he had had a quarrel with the prisoner and had threatened to be revenged on him, evidence was allowed to be given to contradict him. R. v. Shaw, 16 Cox, 503, Cave, J. By s. 6 of Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, which by s. 1 extends to all courts of criminal judicature), "a witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanor, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies or does not admit the fact, or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the cross-examining party to prove such conviction; and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for such offence, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the Court, or other officer having the custody of the records of the Court where the offender was convicted, or by the deputy of such clerk or officer (for which certificate a fee of 5*s*. and no more shall be demanded or taken), shall, upon proof of the identity of the person, be sufficient evidence of the said conviction, without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same." This enactment seems to apply where a defendant, giving evidence on his own behalf, denies previous convictions lawfully put to him under s. 1 (f) (iii.) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (ante, pp. 459, 464).

Where general evidence is given of the bad character of a witness, the opposite party may cross-examine the witnesses as to the grounds of their opinion, if he think it prudent to do so; or he may call witnesses who can speak to the general good conduct of the witness, or contradict any particular facts the other witnesses may have disclosed in their cross-examination. It has been held that where a witness refuses to answer a question his not answering ought not, legally, to have any effect with the jury. R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116, 157; 32 St. Tr. 1: Rose v. Blakemore, Ry. & M. 382: Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. 59; but the soundness of this rule is very questionable: see Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1467.

In Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 311; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348, it was held that where a witness for the prosecution had been examined in chief, the defendant could not afterwards give evidence of any declaration by such witness, or of acts done by him to procure persons corruptly to give evidence in support of the prosecution, unless he had previously cross-examined such witness as to such declarations or acts.

Veracity.]—The character of a witness for habitual veracity is an essential ingredient in his credibility: for a man who is capable of uttering a deliberate falsehood is in most cases capable of doing so under the solemn sanction of an oath. If, therefore, it appears that he has formerly said or written the contrary of that which he has now sworn (unless the reason of his having done so is satisfactorily accounted for), his evidence should not have much weight with a jury; and if he has formerly sworn the contrary, the fact (although no objection to his competency, R. v. Teal, 11 East, 309) is almost conclusive against his credibility. As to the modes of testing veracity, see post, p. 491, Cross-examination.

A consideration of the probability of a fact also may aid in forming a judgment of the credit that should be given to a witness for veracity. If he tells of a fact having occurred which is contrary to common experience and observation, it will require that his integrity, veracity, and means of knowledge should be indisputable to induce any one to believe it : but if, on the contrary, the fact stated by him is very likely to have happened, persons may be induced to believe it, without very scrupulously inquiring into his character for integrity, veracity, etc. The strength of the evidence should always be great in proportion to the improbability of the fact to be established by it.

Oath.]—The general common law rule is that the testimony of a witness to be examined vivâ voce in a criminal trial is not admissible unless he has previously been sworn to speak the truth. Counsel has no privilege from being sworn, even if he acts only as interpreter. R. v. Kelly [1848] 3 Cox, 75, Patteson, J. Even a peer, who in a court of equity was allowed to give in his answer to a bill without oath, merely pledging his honour for the truth of it, must be sworn if examined as a witness on a criminal trial or in a court of common law. Earl of Lincoln's case, Sir W. Jones, 152, 154; Cro. Car. 64 : Meers v. Lord Stourton [1711] 2 Salk. 513; 1 P. Wms. 146; 24 Eng. Rep. 332; and see 2 Mod. 99. It will be seen (post, pp. 478, 479) that this general common law rule is subject to important statutory exceptions. The witness must be sworn in open court by the judge, or, as is the usual course, by the clerk of the Court or the crier or some other officer, often the judge's clerk. R. v. Tew, Dears. 429; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62. By whatever officer or person the witness is so sworn in court by authority of the law of the land the oath is taken before the Court. R. v. Tew, supra; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 2296; and see R. v. Shuttleworth [1909] Victoria L. R. 431.

Form of oath.]—The standard form of oath is now that prescribed by the Oaths Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 39).

By s. 2, " (1) Any oath may be administered and taken in the form and manner following :—

" The person taking the oath shall hold the New Testament, or, in the case of a Jew, the Old Testament, in his uplifted hand, and shall say or repeat after the officer administering the oath the words 'I swear by Almighty God that . . .', followed by the words of the oath prescribed by law.

" (2) The officer shall (unless the person about to take the oath voluntarily objects thereto or is physically incapable of so taking the oath) administer the oath in the form and manner aforesaid without question :

" Provided that, in the case of a person who is neither a Christian nor a Jew, the oath shall be administered in any manner which is now lawful."

By s. 3, " In this Act the word 'officer' shall mean and include any and every person duly authorized to administer oaths."

Under this Act it is not for the officer to inquire what form of oath the witness desires, but it is for the witness to say whether he desires to adopt any other than the statutory form of oath. The witness may still be sworn in the old way if he wishes. R. v. Palm, 4 Cr. App. R. 201.

Where the witness voluntarily objects to take an oath in the above form, the form which he may lawfully take varies according to his religion or nationality or his personal inclination. See R. v. Mildrone, 1 Leach, 412. Christians are usually sworn on the New Testament; Jews, on the Old Testament; Mahometans, on the Koran; and persons of other religions according to the form prescribed for that purpose by the religion they profess. Bull. (N. P.) 292. Christians are sworn with their hats off; Jews, with their hats on. As to swearing in Christian form a man born a Jew and married according to Jewish rites and unbaptized, but professing to be a member of the Established Church, see R. v. Gilham [1775] 1 Esp. 285. As to the mode of swearing Chinamen, see R. v. Entrehman, C. & Mar. 248; Stringer on Oaths (2nd ed.) 86, 124. Even among the different sects of Christians there may be different modes of taking the oath. R. v. Mildrone, 1 Leach, 412; and see R. v. M'Carther, 1 Peake (3rd ed.) 211 Each witness, in short, may claim to take the oath in the particular form accepted or prescribed by his religion or his national law. The only general rule that can be laid down upon the subject is, that the oath must be such as the witness deems obligatory upon his conscience. See R. v. Taylor, 1 Peake (3rd ed.) 14. Sect. 5 of the Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), which enacts that "if any person to whom an oath is administered desires to swear with uplifted hand, in the form and manner in which an oath is usually administered in Scotland (a), he shall be permitted so to do, and the oath shall be administered to him in such form and manner without further question," appears only to be declaratory of the common law. The right to be sworn in this manner is not affected by the Oaths Act, 1909, supra. R. v. Mildrone, supra. By the Oaths Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 105), it is expressly declared that, in all cases in which an oath may lawfully be administered, the party is bound by the oath administered, provided it have been administered in such form and with such ceremonies as he may declare to be binding. By the Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), part of s. 1 of the Oaths Act, 1838, is repealed, and by s. 15 (1) it is enacted that for the purposes of this Act the forms and ceremonies used in administering an oath are immaterial, if the court or person before whom the oath is taken has power to administer an oath for the purpose of verifying the statement in question, and if the oath has been administered in a form and with ceremonies which the person taking the oath has accepted without objection or has declared to be binding on him. And by the Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46),

(a) The oath administered in court in Scotland is in the following terms:—"I swear by Almighty God, and as I shall answer to God at the great day of judgment, that I will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." It is administered by the judge, the witness repeating the words after the judge, and the judge and witness each standing and holding up the right hand. As the oath is rather long to be followed by a witness if administered in one sentence, it is in practice divided into parts, thus: "I swear by Almighty God" (these words repeated by witness), "and as I shall answer to God" (these words repeated by witness), "at the great day of judgment" (these words repeated by witness), "that I will tell the truth" (these words repeated by witness), "the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" (these words repeated by witness).

s. 3, "where an oath has been duly administered and taken, the fact that the person to whom the same was administered had, at the time of taking such oath, no religious belief, shall not for any purpose affect the validity of such oath." The cases immediately following were decided before the passing of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46 (Oaths Act, 1888). A witness may be asked, after he is sworn, whether he considers the oath he has taken obligatory upon his conscience; but if he answers in the affirmative his answer is conclusive, and he cannot further be asked whether there is any other mode of swearing more binding upon his conscience than that which has been used. Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348. The more correct and proper way in case of doubt is to ask the witness, before he is sworn, whether he considers the oath he is about to take obligatory upon his conscience. Id. A witness, however, may, either before he is sworn, or after he has been sworn upon the voire dire (Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360; 21 L. J. (Ex.) 118), or, semble, even after he has been sworn in the cause (Queen Caroline's case, supra), be asked whether he believes in the being of a Deity, and in a future state of rewards and punishments: Maden v. Catanach, supra: but he cannot be questioned as to the particular tenets of his religion. See R. v. Taylor, 1 Peake (3rd ed.) 14: R. v. White, 1 Leach, 430: R. v. Serva, 2 C. & K. 53, as to whether when the witness does not object to be sworn on the ground of his having no religious belief, an objection to him on that ground may successfully be made by the opposite party, notwithstanding 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46. s. 1 (infra).

Affirmation in lieu of oath.—1. Quakers and Moravians.]—By 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 49, a Quaker or Moravian, required to give evidence in any legal proceeding whatsoever, instead of taking an oath in the usual form, is permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration (instead of taking an oath), which has the same force and effect in all courts of justice and other places where by law an oath is required, as if such Quaker or Moravian had taken an oath in the usual form. The same rule is, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 77, extended to any person who shall have been a Quaker or Moravian; it having been held that a person formerly a Quaker, who had seceded from that sect on some points of doctrine, retaining their opinions on the unlawfulness of swearing, but refusing to affirm under the form given in 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 49, was not admissible as a witness in a criminal case on making the affirmation under 9 G. 4, c. 32 (rep.). R. v. Doran, 2 Mood. 37. 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 49, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 77, are not repealed: but their effect is equally attained by s. 1 of the Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46), infra. Perjury and kindred offences are now dealt with in the Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), s. 15 (2).

The form of the affirmation of a Quaker or Moravian is as follows:—

"I, A. B., being one of the people called Quakers [or, one of the persuasion of the people called Quakers, or of the United Brethren, called Moravians], do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that," etc. (3 & 4 W. 4, c. 49, s. 1).

The affirmation of a person formerly a Quaker or Moravian is as follows:—

"I, A. B., having been one of the people called Quakers [or, one of the persuasion of the people called Quakers, or of the United Brethren, called Moravians], and entertaining conscientious objections to the taking of an oath, do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that," etc. (1 & 2 Vict. c. 77).

2. Affirmation in lieu of oath where witness objects to be sworn on religious or other grounds.]—" Every person upon objecting to being sworn, and stating, as the ground of such objection, either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation instead of taking an oath in all places and for all purposes where an oath is or shall be required by law, which affirmation shall be of the same force and effect as if he had taken the oath." 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46 (Oaths Act, 1888), s. 1.

The form of affirmation to be taken under this section instead of an oath is as follows :—

"I, A. B., do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm," then proceeding with the words of the oath prescribed by law, omitting any words of imprecation or calling to witness (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46, s. 2).

Unsworn evidence of a child of tender years.]—A child of tender years can be examined without being sworn in any criminal proceedings (ante, p. 453), and may be liable to be punished summarily for perjury. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, s. 30; 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 28 (2).

Witness under subpœna duces tecum.]—A witness producing documents under a subpœna duces tecum need not be sworn, if the party who calls him does not wish to examine him. Perry v. Gibson, 3 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 158; 1 A. & E. 48 : Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cr. & M. 477 : Daris v. Dale, M. & M. 514.

5. The Number of Witnesses requisite.

General rule—One witness sufficient.]—At common law, one witness is sufficient in all cases (with the exception of perjury), at the trial. 2 Hawk. c. 46, ss. 2, 10; Fost. 233. As to evidence by accomplices, see ante, p. 455. As to witnesses before the grand jury, see ante, p. 74.

Exceptions—1. Treason.]—In high treason or misprision of treason two witnesses are in general required, both before the grand jury and at the trial: both of the witnesses to the same overt act, or one of them to one overt act, and another of them to another overt act of the same species of treason; unless the defendant willingly, and without violence, confesses the same. 7 & 8 W. 3, c. 3, ss. 2, 4; 2 Hawk. c. 46, ss. 3-9. And if the jury do not give credit to both of the witnesses, the defendant must be acquitted. R. v. Palmer, 7 St. Tr. 1067, Scroggs, C.J. But where the overt act is composite, made up of several circumstances and passing through several stages, it is not necessary that there should be two witnesses to each circumstance and at each stage. It is enough if the joint testimony of two or more witnesses establish the act as a whole.

R. v. M'Cafferty, 10 Cox, 603; Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 363. And one witness is sufficient to prove a collateral fact: Fost. 242; as, for instance, to prove that the defendant is a natural-born subject, R. v. Vaughan, 13 St. Tr. 485, or the like.

But where the overt act alleged is the assassination of the King, or any direct attempt against his life, or person, one witness is sufficient. 39 & 40 G. 3, c. 93; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, s. 1. See post, tit. "Treason."

2. Perjury.]—A person may not be convicted of any offence against the Perjury Act, 1911, or of any offence declared by any other Act to be perjury or subornation of perjury or to be punishable as perjury or subornation of perjury solely upon the evidence of one witness as to the falsity of any statement alleged to be false. 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6, s. 13.

3. Personation.]—Upon a charge of personation at a parliamentary or municipal election it is necessary, in order to justify committal for trial, that not less than two credible witnesses should testify that the accused knowingly personated, and falsely assumed to vote in the name of, another: 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 88; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 33, s. 24; and this provision seems equally applicable to the trial.

4. Blasphemy and offences against religion.]—Two witnesses are necessary on a prosecution for blasphemy under 9 W. 3, c. 35 (see s. 1), or for offences under 1 Eliz. c. 1 (see s. 21; and 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 395).

5. Offences against females.]—The 2nd section of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), which makes it a misdemeanor to procure women or girls for the purpose of prostitution, and the 3rd section of the same statute, which makes it a misdemeanor to procure the defilement of women or girls by threats or fraud, or administering drugs, contain provisoes, that no person shall be convicted of any offence under such sections upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused. In the case of rape corroboration is required in practice, though not as a rule of law. See 1 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 941, 943, and post, tit. Rape.

6. Unsworn evidence of children.]—Sect. 30 of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), which (as amended by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 28 (2)) renders admissible the evidence of a child of tender years, though not given upon oath, in any proceeding for an offence, provides that no person may be convicted on testimony admitted by virtue of the section on behalf of the prosecution unless corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused.

6. Process against Witnesses.

Where there has been a preliminary inquiry under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, followed by a committal for trial, the witnesses are generally, and ought always to be, bound over by recognizance to appear at the trial and give evidence (see 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 20), except where from infancy or other cause they are incompetent to enter into a recognizance. See R. v. Smith, 17 Cox, 601. As to cases where the indictment is removed for trial at the Central Criminal Court, see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, ss. 8, 10. A magistrate has no power to issue a warrant for the apprehension of a person to attend to find bail for his appearance as a witness in a civil or criminal case. Evans v. Rees, 12 A. & E. 55; 9 L. J. (M. C.) 83.

1. Subpœna ad testificandum.]—Where the witnesses have not been so bound over, but are in England, if it is not certain that they will attend voluntarily, their appearance at the trial may be compelled by subpœna. In ordinary cases the common subpœna is sufficient. It may be sued out either at the Crown Office of the High Court, at the Royal Courts of Justice, in London (R. v. Ring, 8 T. R. 585; Short & Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 405); or from the clerk of the peace, or clerk of assize of the Court in which the defendant is to be tried. It is sometimes more advisable to sue it out at the Crown Office, on account of the readiness with which the witness may be subjected to attachment in case of his non-attendance. R. v. Ring, supra. See the forms of Crown Office subpœna, Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Appendix, Forms 151 et seq. Under the old practice the names of four witnesses might be inserted in one writ. 2 Cowp. 846. But in a Crown Office subpœna the names of three witnesses only can be inserted. Short & Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 407. As soon as you have obtained the writ, make out a copy of it for each witness, and serve it upon him personally, at the same time showing him the writ. The service should be personal: for otherwise if the witness disobeys the subpœna, he cannot be proceeded against as for a contempt. Smalt v. Whitmill, 2 Str. 1054. And it should be served a reasonable time before the trial: Hammond v. Stewart, 1 Str. 510; but if the witness is in court at the time of the trial, a service of the subpœna ticket upon him there would perhaps be deemed sufficient if he were subpœnaed on the part of the defendant (see 2 Cowp. 845; 1 W. Bl. 36), and would certainly be sufficient if he were subpœnaed on the part of the prosecution. Indeed, in a criminal case, a person who is present in court when called as a witness is bound to give his evidence, although he has not been subpœnaed. R. v. Sadler, 4 C. & P. 218: Blackburn v. Hargreave, 2 Lew. 259. A subpœna vexatiously issued from the Crown Office may be set aside on motion. R. v. Baines, Ex Parte Asquith [1909] 1 K. B. 258; 78 L. J. (K. B.) 119.

By the Writ of Subpœna Act, 1805 (45 G. 3, c. 92), ss. 3, 4, the service of a writ of subpœna in any one part of the United Kingdom is as effectual to compel the appearance of a witness in any other part of the same, as if the subpœna were served in that part of the kingdom in which the defendant is required to appear; and in case of non-attendance the Court from which the subpœna issued may transmit a certificate thereof in the manner pointed out in the statute; i.e., in the case of an English court to the High Court of Justiciary in Scotland, or the King's Bench Division of the Supreme Court of Ireland; and the Court to which it is so transmitted may punish the party for his default, in like manner as if he had refused to appear to a subpœna issuing out of that court, provided it appear that a reasonable and sufficient sum of money to defray the witness's expenses of coming, attending to give evidence, and returning, were tendered to him at the time he was served with the subpœna. "Part of the United Kingdom" means "England," "Scotland," or "Ireland," not "county." R. v. Brownell, 3 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 118; 1 A. & E. 598.

Where a subpœna is served in England, a tender of expenses does not seem to be necessary either on the part of the Crown or of the prisoner: 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 173: R. v. Cooke, 1 C. & P. 321; Short & Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 407; yet if the witness is so poor as not to be able to go to the assizes or sessions at his own cost, the fact of the expenses not having been tendered would probably be deemed by the Court a sufficient excuse for his non-attendance.

Provision is made by 13 G. 3, c. 63, ss. 40, 44, as to witnesses resident in India, and by 42 G. 3, c. 85, as to witnesses outside Great Britain, in prosecutions of public officers for offences. Sect. 689 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), provides for the taking of evidence abroad in cases of offences at sea, or by British seamen; and s. 691 appears to give power to take depositions abroad as to any criminal offence whatever committed outside Great Britain subject to the conditions there stated, including the presence of the accused. See ante, p. 440.

2. Subpœna duces tecum.]—If any person (not being the defendant) have in his possession a document which may be requisite as evidence in the cause, then, instead of the common subpœna, he should be served with a subpœna duces tecum, commanding him to bring it with him, and produce it at the trial. See the form, Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Appendix, forms 151 et seq. "Document" has been held to include a sealed packet deposited with bankers. R. v. Daye [1908] 2 K. B. 333. It is sued out and served in the same manner as the common subpœna. Upon being served with this subpœna the witness must attend at the trial with the document required, and produce it in evidence, unless he has some lawful and reasonable excuse for withholding it, of the validity of which excuse the Court, and not the witness, is to judge. R. v. Daye, supra: Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; 6 Esp. 116; 1 Camp. 14, 180, n.; and see 5 Esp. 90. It is no excuse that the legal custody of the instrument belongs to another, if it is in the actual possession of the witness: R. v. Daye, supra: Amey v. Long, supra: Corsen v. Dubois, Holt (N. P.), 239. But the Court will not compel him to produce it, if it tends to criminate himself (see 1 Esp. 105, and ante, p. 469), or his client (if the witness is a solicitor), R. v. Dixon, 3 Burr. 1687); or if it is his title-deeds: Pickering v. Noyes, 1 B. & C. 262; 2 D. & R. 386: R. v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591. If the witness, instead of bringing the paper, etc., required, delivers them to the opposite party, by whom they are withheld, the Court will allow secondary evidence of the contents of them to be given, without a notice to produce the originals. Leeds v. Cook, 4 Esp. 256. A witness producing documents on subpœna duces need not be sworn. See ante, p. 479.

A subpœna duces tecum may not be served on a defendant in a criminal case. Notice to produce the document must be given instead (vide ante, p. 368).

3. Habeas corpus ad testificandum.]—If the witness at the time of the trial be in civil custody or under process in a civil action, suit, or proceeding, he may be brought into court to give evidence. The application for habeas corpus must be made on affidavit to a judge at Chambers : Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 228. For forms of affidavit, see Appendix to Crown Office Rules, 1906, Nos. 181, 182. and for form of writ, Id., No. 183, and as to the preparation and indorsement of the writ, see Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 210. It is not necessary, where the evidence of the witness is required on a criminal trial, that the affidavit should state that he is willing to attend. Short & Mellor, Cr. Pr. (2nd ed.) 335. Engross the writ; see the forms supra. It must be directed to the person in whose custody the witness is. As soon as you get the writ signed, etc., leave it with the officer to whom it is directed; pay or tender to him his reasonable charges for bringing up the witness, and he will bring him into court on the day of trial, according to the exigency of the writ. A prisoner in execution may be brought up in this manner to give evidence : Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851 : R. v. Burbage, 3 Burr. 1440, although it was formerly held otherwise. Barnes, 222 : Comb. 17, 48. So, a sailor on board a king's ship may be brought up by this writ, if he has been previously subpœnaed. R. v. Roddam, 2 Cowp. 672. But the Court will not grant the writ to bring up a prisoner of war; the proper way of proceeding in that case is by application to the Secretary of State. Furly v. Newnham, 2 Doug. 419. So, where the application appeared to be a mere contrivance to remove a prisoner in execution. the Court refused to grant it. R. v. Burbage, 3 Burr. 1440.

4. Judge's order.]—With regard to witnesses in criminal custody at the time of the trial, by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 30), s. 9, any judge of the superior courts has the power, on application by affidavit, to issue a warrant or order under his hand for bringing up any prisoner or person confined in any gaol, prison, or place, under any sentence, or under commitment for trial, or otherwise (except under process in any civil action, suit, or proceeding), before any court, judge, justice, or other judicature, to be examined as a witness in any cause or matter, civil or criminal; to be so brought under the same care and custody, and to be dealt with in the like manner in all respects as a prisoner brought up for the like purpose under a writ of habeas corpus. The application, if made to a judge under this section, may be made on affidavit for an order. Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, r. 229. For forms of affidavit see Appendix to Cr. Off. Rules, 1906, Nos. 181, 182, and for form of order, No. 184.

5. Secretary of State's Order.]—The powers of the Secretary of State under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 9, are repealed and superseded by s. 11 of the Prison Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 41), which appears to apply to prisoners in civil or criminal custody, and to be available in all cases in which a habeas corpus testificandum or a judge's order could be issued. The section provides that " (1) A Secretary of State on proof to his satisfaction that the presence of any prisoner at any place is required in the interest of justice, or for the purposes of any public inquiry, may, by writing under his hand, order that the prisoner be taken to that place. (2) A prisoner taken from a prison in pursuance of an order made under this section, or of a warrant issued under s. 9 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1853 (supra), shall whilst outside the prison be kept in such custody as the Secretary of State may by general rules prescribe, and whilst in that custody shall be deemed to be in legal custody. (3) For the purposes of this section the expression 'prisoner' shall include any person lawfully confined under any sentence, or under commitment for trial or otherwise, and the expression 'prison' shall include any place in which any such prisoner is lawfully confined."

Privilege of witnesses from arrest.]—A person subpœnaed as a witness, or bound over by recognizance, either to prosecute or give evidence, enjoys a privilege from arrest on civil process whilst attending the Court, not only on the day mentioned in the subpœna, etc., but also on every day of the same sittings, assizes, or sessions, until the cause is tried; he is also privileged in like manner during a reasonable time before and after the trial, while coming to or returning from the place where the sittings, assizes, or sessions are held. See Lightfoot v. Cameron, 2 W. Bl. 1113: Arding v. Flower, 8 T. R. 534: Re Freston, 11 Q. B. D. 545; 52 L. J. (Q. B.) 545; Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1330 et seq. And this privilege has also been held to extend to witnesses attending voluntarily, and not subpœnaed. See Meekins v. Smith, 1 H. Bl. 629, 636. If a witness, under these circumstances, is arrested, the Court out of which the subpœna issued, or the judge of the Court in which the cause has been or is to be tried, will, upon application, order him to be discharged. See 3 Stark. (N. P.) 132.

Penalty for non-attendance.]—Where a witness wilfully neglects to attend or to produce documents at the sessions or assizes, etc., in obedience to a Crown Office subpœna ad testificandum or duces tecum, the High Court (K. B. D.) may grant an attachment against him (R. v. Ring, 8 T. R. 585: R. v. Daye [1908] 2 K. B. 333; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 659), if the witness was served personally with the subpœna (Smalt v. Whitmill, 2 Str. 1054: Wakefield's case, Cas. (K. B.) temp. Hardw. 313), and was served a reasonable time before the trial: Hammond v. Stewart, 1 Str. 510: and see 1 Marshall, 410. It is immaterial whether the cause was in fact called on or not, if it satisfactorily appears that the witness would not have been forthcoming when called on to give evidence. Barrow v. Humphreys, 3 B. & Ald. 598: Mullett v. Hunt, 1 Cr. & M. 752: Dixon v. Lee, 1 Cr. M. & R. 646: R. v. Stretch, 3 A. & E. 503: Lamont v. Crook, 9 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 253; 6 M. & W. 615. It is doubtful whether a court of quarter sessions has authority to issue an attachment; the only mode of proceeding against the witness in such a case seems to be by indictment. As to the mode of proceeding where the subpœna has been served in Ireland or Scotland, see 45 G. 3, c. 92, ante, p. 481. Where a witness does not attend at the Court and time specified in his recognizance, the recognizance may be estreated and the penalty levied in the manner stated, ante, p. 95. Failure to attend in obedience to a subpœna issued by a court of quarter sessions does not fall within 45 G. 3, c. 92 (ante, p. 481), and has been held not to be punishable by attachment in the Court of King's Bench, R. v. Brownell, 3 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 118; 1 A. & E. 598.

Improper interference with witnesses.]—Any person preventing a witness duly summoned from attending court is liable to attachment or committal for contempt of court. R. v. Hall, 2 W. Bl. 1110: Commonwealth v. Feely, 2 Virg. Cas. 1. As to other offences which may be committed by interfering with witnesses, see ante, p. 131.

7. Witnesses' Expenses, etc.

At common law, a witness in criminal cases is not entitled to his expenses; 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 173; at least, if he attend on the part of the prosecution. A witness subpœnaed for the defence cannot refuse to give evidence until his expenses are paid. R. v. Cooke, 1 C. & P. 321. The present statutory provisions as to expenses of witnesses in criminal cases are stated, ante, pp. 267 et seq.

8. Examination of Witnesses.

Ordering witnesses out of court.]—When the case is called on, or at any other period during the trial, the Court, at the request of the defendant (R. v. Vaughan, Cas. temp. Holt, 689; 13 St. Tr. 485, 494: Peter Cook's case, 13 St. Tr. 311, 348); or indeed at the request of either party, will order such of the witnesses of the opposite party as have not yet been examined, or are not under examination, to leave the court until they shall be called for in their order, so that each witness may be examined out of the hearing of the other witnesses on the same side who are to be examined after him. Southey v. Nash, 7 C. & P. 632. This rule has been applied when a legal argument arises as to the witnesses' evidence. R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297 (and see post, p. 487 n.). The solicitor for either party is said not to be within this rule. Pomeroy v. Baddeley, Ry. & M. 430. It has been said that if, after such an order, a witness is present during the examination of the other witnesses, he cannot be examined; Att.-Gen. v. Bulpit, 9 Price. 4: R. v. Webb, 1 Stark. Evid. (3rd ed.) 189; but the conduct of the witness seems to be no ground for depriving the Crown, or the defendant, of a witness, and the practice is to allow him to be examined, subject to observation as to his conduct in disobeying the order; R. v. Colley, M. & M. 329: R. v. Brown, 4 C. & P. 588, n. This was formerly held to be a matter for the discretion of the judge. Parker v. M'William, 6 Bing. 683: Beamon v. Ellice, 4 C. & P. 585: R. v. Wylde, 6 C. & P. 380: Cook v. Nethercote, 6 C. & P. 471: 40 R. R. 855: Thomas v. David, 7 C. & P. 351. It seems now, however, to be the better opinion, that the judge has no right to reject the testimony of a witness who has remained in court after an order to withdraw: Chandler v. Horne, 2 M. & Rob. 423: Cobbett v. Hudson, 22 L. J. (N. S.) Q. B. 11; 1 E. & B. 11, 14; except, perhaps, in revenue cases. Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1401.

Witness on back of indictment.]—Although in strictness it is not necessary for the prosecutor to call every witness whose name is on the back of the indictment, it has been usual to do so, that the defendant may cross-examine them: R. v. Simmonds, 1 C. & P. 84: R. v. Beezley, 4 C. & P. 220: R. v. Bull, 9 C. & P. 22: R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 91: R. v. Barley, 2 Cox, 191. If counsel will not call the witness, the judge in his discretion may. R. v. Simmonds, supra: R. v. Bodle, 6 C. & P. 186: R. v. Holden, 8 C. & P. 606: R. v. Stroner, 1 C. & K. 650: R. v. Thompson, 13 Cox, 181, Lush, J.: R. v. Edwards, 3 Cox, 82. In the last-mentioned case, Erle, J., referred to R. v. Belaney, 20 C. C. C. Sess. P. 441, where, the judge refusing to interfere, the prisoner in a trial for murder had to call some of the witnesses on the back of the indictment. Where a witness called before the coroner was not called for the Crown at the trial, the Court has refused to require him to be called. R. v. Wiggins, 10 Cox, 562. However, the prosecutor is not bound to call them all; though he ought, it has been said, to have them in court, that they may be called for the defence, if the prisoner chooses. R. v. Woodhead, 2 C. & K. 520: R. v. Cassidy, 1 F. & F. 79: R. v. Thompson, supra. If counsel for the prosecution, at the instance of the prisoner's counsel, calls a witness, but does not ask him a question, the former is entitled to re-examine the witness after he has been examined by the prisoner's counsel. R. v. Beezley, 4 C. & P. 220: R. v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 581; and see post, p. 497. The defendant is entitled to inspect the indictment to see the names of the witnesses. R. v. Lacy, 3 Cox, 517, Erle, J. But the Court cannot compel the prosecution to give their descriptions or addresses. R. v. Gordon, 12 L. J. (M. C.) 84, Patteson, J.

Witnesses not on depositions.]—Witnesses may be called for the Crown whose depositions were not taken before the committing magistrate, and whose names are not on the back of the indictment. R. v. Ward, 2 C. & K. 759. But notice of intention to call such additional witnesses with a copy of the evidence which it is proposed that they should give, ought to be given to the prisoner and sent to the Court. In R. v. Connor, 1 Cox, 233, Patteson, J., said, that he had no power to interfere in a case in which, after the prisoners were committed, a great body of additional evidence had been obtained, copies of which had been refused to the prisoners. In R. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox, 403, Butt, J., offered the defence an adjournment on a trial of murder to give time to rebut new evidence, of which notice had not been given, and in R. v. ——, Cent. Crim. Ct., Oct., 1893, Charles, J., refused to admit new evidence unless the prosecution could prove service of the proof on the defence. In R. v. Hawkins (Q. B. D., 1896), Russell, C.J., also required proof of notice of new evidence. In R. v. Stiginani, 10 Cox, 552, Willes, J., is said to have ruled that the evidence of a witness, whose deposition had not been taken before the committing magistrate, and in respect of whom the prosecution had given no notice to the prisoner that it was their intention to call him, was not admissible when tendered on the part of the prosecution. The same point, however, having been raised in R. v. Greenslade, 11 Cox, 412, Brett, J., after consulting Willes, J., said that he had the authority of the latter for saying that his ruling in R. v. Stiginani, supra, was incorrectly reported, and that evidence tendered under the circumstances above mentioned, if relevant, ought to be received, although the fact of notice of its intended production not having been given to the prisoner or his solicitor was a subject of strong comment.

Questions by the judge.]—The judge may, of course, question any witness at any stage in the course of the trial; and, even though counsel for the prosecution has closed his case, and counsel for the defendant has taken an objection to the evidence, the judge may make any further inquiries of the witness that he thinks fit, in order to answer the objection. R. v. Remnant, R. & R. 136.

Witness called by the judge.]—Where the judge calls a witness not called by either party (which he is not entitled to do in a civil case if either party objects) (Re Enoch and Zaretzky [1910] 1 K. B. 327, 332, 337; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 363), neither party is entitled to examine or cross-examine as of right. Coulson v. Disborough [1894] 2 Q. B. 316 : R. v. Cliburn, 62 J. P. 232 (Fulton, Recorder); but if the evidence is adverse to either party, such leave should be given. Id.

Reswearing witnesses.]—Where there are two prosecutions against the same party for felony, the judge cannot, even by consent, take the evidence on the first trial as given in the second. Sometimes witnesses have been resworn in the second case, and their evidence read over to them from the judge's notes; R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 495; and a similar course was adopted in a case of misdemeanor. R. v. Lovett, 3 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1177, 1179; 9 C. & P. 462. Where, however, on the trial of a prisoner, the jury, not being able to agree, were discharged, and the prisoner was again tried before another jury, and the judge, at the request of the prisoner and of his counsel, and with the consent of counsel for the Crown, instead of again taking the evidence viva voce, read over to the witnesses the evidence taken by himself at the first trial, asking each witness if he had anything to add or alter in his evidence, and also informing counsel for the prisoner and counsel for the Crown that if either of them wished to ask the witness any question he could do so, this mode of taking the evidence on the second trial was strongly disapproved by the Judicial Committee. R. v. Bertrand, L. R. 1 P. C. 520; L. J. (P. C.) 51 (and see ante, pp. 209, 221). A trial on admissions is not allowed unless they are made in open court by the defendant, or by his advocate with his authority. R. v. Thornhill, 8 C. & P. 575 (ante, p. 379).

Examination in chief.]—After the witness has been sworn or has made the necessary affirmation or declaration (see pp. 476, 478), counsel for the party who calls him proceeds to examine him. In doing this, the questions should be pertinent to the matter immediately in issue (a): and they should not be leading questions.

(a) In the United States it is common practice to send the jury out when objections to the admissibility of evidence are being argued. In R. v. Freeman [1895] 6 Queensland, L. J. 281, it was held by Griffith, C.J., that under the English practice the jury must be present throughout the proceedings. But in R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K. B. 630; 12 Cr. App. R. 261, the Court of Criminal Appeal ruled that whenever the judge, in his

Firstly. The questions must be pertinent to the matter immediately in issue. No question may be asked of a witness upon a direct examination, the probable answer to which cannot have a tendency to prove the offence or defence, or other matter put in issue by the pleadings. In the case of circumstantial evidence the courts of necessity allow of a greater latitude in this respect; but still, in this case, the questions must be such as are likely to elicit evidence of facts from which the jury may reasonably presume the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. Upon an indictment for a conspiracy, general evidence of a conspiracy charged may be received in the first instance, although it cannot affect the defendant, unless afterwards brought home to him or to an agent employed by him. Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 302; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348. (See ante, p. 354.) And the same rule applies where a defendant seeks, by such general evidence, in the first instance, to affect the prosecutor with a conspiracy to suborn witnesses for the destruction of the defence (provided the proposed evidence is previously opened to the Court), as in the case of a prosecution for a conspiracy. Id. So, if A. commits a burglary, and B. stays outside the house for the purpose of preventing an interruption; upon the trial of B., the prosecutor first proves the offence committed by A., and then brings the guilt home to B. by proving his share in it. In these cases, however, the matter to be proved naturally branches itself into two propositions, that a certain conspiracy existed, and that the defendant was engaged in it; that A. committed the burglary, and that B. aided and assisted him in the commission of it.

Secondly. It is a general rule, that, in a direct examination of a witness, he shall not be asked leading questions, or, in other words, questions framed in such a manner as to suggest to the witness the answers required of him. See R. v. Wilson, 9 Cr. App. R. 124. To this rule, however, there are a few exceptions. To identify a person whom the witness has already described the person may be pointed out to him, and he may be asked, in direct terms, if that is the person he meant. R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116; 32 St. Tr. 1: R. v. De Berenger, Stark. Evid. (4th ed.) 167, n. As to the proper questions to be asked to prove identification, see R. v. Blackburn, 6 Cox, 333. Where a witness swears to a certain fact, and another witness is called for the purpose of contradicting him, the latter may be asked, in direct terms, whether that fact ever took place. Courteen v. Touse, 1 Camp. 43.

Questions which are merely introductory to others that are material are in general allowed to be asked in direct terms, without objection. R. v. Robinson, 61 J. P. 520.

If an irrelevant or leading question is put, the counsel on the other side should immediately interpose and object to it. So, if a witness is asked whether a certain representation was made, the opposite counsel may interpose, and ask him whether the representation in question were by parol or discretion, thinks it will unfairly prejudice the defence if the argument should be heard in the presence of the jury, he should direct the jury to retire to their room, and he should hear the argument in open court so that it may appear on the shorthand note.

in writing; for, if the latter, the writing must be produced. Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348.

When a witness is under the examination of a junior counsel, the leading counsel may interpose, take the witness into his own hands, and finish the examination; but after one counsel has brought his examination to a close, no other counsel on the same side can put a question to the witness. Doe v. Roe, 2 Camp. 280.

Hostile witness.]—By s. 3 of Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18) (which, by s. 1, is applied to all courts of criminal judicature), "A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character; but he may, in case the witness shall, in the opinion of the judge, prove adverse, contradict him by other evidence, or, by leave of the judge, prove that he has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony; but before such last-mentioned proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement." As to statements admissible under s. 3 (on cross-examination of a witness) against one prisoner, but not against another, see R. v. Dibble [1908] 72 J. P. 498. To be inconsistent within the meaning of the section the statements need not be directly or absolutely at variance. Jackson v. Thompson, 31 L. J. (Q. B.) 11. The word "adverse" in this section means "hostile," and not merely "unfavourable." Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. B. (N. S.) 786; 28 L. J. (C. P.) 160, decided on s. 22 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125 (rep.)). The discretion of the judge is absolute to give or refuse leave to cross-examine the party's own witness however hostile he may be; Rice v. Howard, 16 Q. B. D. 681: 55 L. J. (Q. B.) 311: Price v. Manning, 42 Ch. D. 372 (C. A.); 58 L. J. (C. L.) 649. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 3, appears to get rid of what was supposed to be the former rule that a party could not show that his own witness had at any time given a different account of the same transaction. Ewer v. Ambrose, 3 B. & C. 746: R. v. Farr, 8 C. & P. 768: R. v. Ball, 8 C. & P. 745. Before the Act of 1854, if a witness called to prove a fact proved the contrary, his credit could not be impeached by general evidence; Bull. (N. P.) 297: Ewer v. Ambrose, 3 B. & C. 746, 751; but the party was at liberty to make out his case by other and contradictory evidence, for the other witnesses were not called directly to impeach the credit of the first. Id.: R. v. Ball, supra. If the witness appears evidently to be hostile to the party who has called him, counsel may put leading questions to him, having first obtained permission of the Court to do so. Price v. Manning, supra, overruling on this point Clarke v. Saffery, Ry. & M. 126; and see Bastin v. Carew, Id. 127: R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558: R. v. Ball, supra.

Where on a trial for rape a witness for the prosecution, to whom the prosecutrix had made a communication shortly after the commission of the alleged offence, being asked on cross-examination as to the particulars of such communication, gave an answer different from that which prosecuting counsel was instructed was the truth, it was held by Day, J. (after consulting Cave, J.), that it was competent for prosecuting counsel, on re-examination, to ask the witness, under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 3, whether she had not at another time made a statement inconsistent with her present testimony to a person named, and also to call such person to give evidence of the statement so made to him. R. v. Little, 15 Cox, 319. In that case the prisoner's counsel objected that there was nothing in the demeanor of the witness to show that she was hostile, and the report does not state whether the learned judges considered her to be so. In one case, before 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 3, where a judge called a witness upon the back of the indictment, who gave evidence in form against the defendant, and the judge ordered the deposition of the witness before the coroner to be read, to show its inconsistency with the testimony then given, the twelve judges thought him right in so doing, and Lord Ellenborough and Sir J. Mansfield, C.J., thought that the prosecutor had the same right. R. v. Oldroyd, R. & R. 88. See also R. v. Beardmore, 8 C. & P. 260 : R. v. Williams, 6 Cox, 343 (post, p. 494).

The question as to whether a witness may be treated as hostile or not is one for the exercise of the discretion of the judge at the court of trial, and can only be raised on appeal under very exceptional circumstances. R. v. Williams, 77 J. P. 240.

Refreshing memory.]—We have seen (ante, pp. 451, 473) that a witness can be allowed only to speak of facts within his own knowledge and recollection, except in matters of science, in which case his opinion is admissible. See R. v. Wright, R. & R. 456. He cannot, therefore, be permitted to read his evidence. But he will be allowed to refresh his memory from any book or paper made by himself, or seen and examined by him shortly after the fact occurred to which it relates, if he can afterwards swear to the fact from his recollection. Doe v. Perkins, 3 T. R. 749, explained in R. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 4 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 52; 2 A. & E. 210, 215 : Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East, 273, 289 : Burrough v. Martin, 2 Camp. 112 : Bolton (Lord) v. Tomlin, 5 A. & E. 856. See R. v. Guinea [1841] Ir. Circ. Rep. 167 : R. v. Laidler, 19 Cox, 360 : R. v. Robinson, 61 J. P. 520 : Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), ss. 1406 et seq. If he knew the fact, however, only from seeing it in the book or paper, the original book or paper must be given in evidence, and proved by other means. Doe v. Perkins, supra. In like manner, depositions made by an old witness have been allowed to be read to him, for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to dates, etc. Vaughan v. Martin, 1 Esp. 440. A witness may not refresh his memory with copy of an instrument which might itself be used for refreshing his memory, unless the copy were made by himself, or in his presence, and he knew it to be correct. Burton v. Plummer, 4 L. J. (N. S.) K. B. 53; 2 A. & E. 341; 4 Nev. & M. 315. And where upon an indictment for forgery it was sought to prove the numbers of the notes given in payment for the forged instrument by a witness, whose memory it was proposed to refresh by a written memorandum made by himself of the numbers of the notes, the material for which memorandum had been supplied by an entry made by himself at the time he paid the notes, the original entry itself not being produced, Blackburn, J., refused to allow the witness so to refresh his memory, saying that the original entry must be produced. R. v. Harvey, 11 Cox, 546. The prisoner was a timekeeper, and T. C. was pay-clerk, in the employment of the prosecutor. It was the prisoner's duty every fortnight to give a list of the days worked by the prosecutor's workmen to a clerk, who entered the days and the wages due in respect of them in a time-book. At pay-time it was the prisoner's duty to read from the time-book the number of days worked by each workman to T. C., who paid the wages accordingly. T. C. saw the entries in the time-book while the prisoner was reading them out. Upon the trial of an indictment charging the prisoner with obtaining money by false pretences, it was held that T. C. might refresh his memory by referring to the entries in the time-book, in order to prove the sums paid by him to workmen. R. v. Langton, 2 Q. B. D. 296; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 136; 13 Cox, 345; and see R. v. Mullins, 3 Cox, 526; 7 St. Tr.(N. S.) 1110.

Cross-examination generally.]—When the examination-in-chief is finished, the witness may be cross-examined by counsel for the opposite party. Or, if the party calling a witness does not think proper to examine him after he is called and sworn, the witness may nevertheless be examined by the counsel for the opposite party. R. v. Brooke, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 472. See Morgan v. Brydges, Id. 314: Phillips v. Eamer, 1 Esp. 355. (See ante, pp. 485, 486). Where a witness was called, and had only answered an immaterial question, when he was stopped by the judge, Gurney, B., ruled that the opposite party had no right of cross-examination. Creevy v. Carr, 7 C. & P. 64.

Where two prisoners are jointly indicted and evidence is called on behalf of one prisoner which tends to criminate the other, the latter is entitled to cross-examine the witness. R. v. Woods, 6 Cox, 224. So where A., B., and C. were jointly indicted, and separately defended, and at the close of the case for the prosecution C. was acquitted, and was then called as a witness for A., and gave evidence tending to criminate B., it was held that B.'s counsel had a right to cross-examine C., and to reply. R. v. Burdett, Dears. 431; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 6 Cox, 458. The reason for the rule is that such evidence, though given in defence of one prisoner, becomes in fact evidence for the prosecution against the other.

The rule is equally applicable where one of the prisoners is called in his own defence under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, and gives evidence incriminating or exculpating his fellow-prisoner; R. v. Hadwen [1902] 1 K. B. 882; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 581; and to this extent s. 1 (f) (iii.) of the Act (ante, p. 459) has the effect of abrogating the common law rule expressed in R. v. Payne, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 349; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 170; and Allen v. Allen [1894] Prob. 248, 253; 63 L. J. (P. D. & A.) 120, that the evidence of one defendant on a criminal trial cannot be received for or against another defendant.

When a witness is produced, the first thing that claims the attention of counsel for the opposite party is, whether the witness is competent, and if not, then in what manner the objection to his competency must be made. (See ante, pp. 452 et seq.)

The next thing that claims opposite counsel's attention, in the course of the examination, is, whether parol evidence is the best evidence of the facts to which the witness deposes; and if not, whether grounds have been laid for its admission as secondary evidence; whether the questions are relevant and pertinent to the matter in issue; and whether they are leading questions. If the evidence of the witness is objectionable in any of these respects, counsel should immediately interpose and make his objection.

Supposing, however, the witness and his evidence are not open to these preliminary objections, counsel must then proceed to cross-examine him, if, in his judgment, a cross-examination is necessary or advisable. In giving his evidence a witness tells the truth, wholly or partially, or tells a falsehood. If he tells the whole truth, cross-examination may be dangerous, as it may have the effect of rendering his story more circumstantial, and impressing the jury with a stronger opinion of its truth; and it is better, in such a case, either not to cross-examine him at all, or to confine your questions to his credibility, by impugning his means of knowledge, his disinterestedness, or his integrity. (See ante, pp. 473, 474.)

If the witness tells only part of the truth, then counsel for the opposite party, if the residue is favourable to his client, will immediately proceed to cross-examine him as to it; but, if unfavourable, counsel will either refrain altogether from cross-examining him, or will confine his questions to the witness's credibility, as above mentioned.

If, on the other hand, the evidence of the witness is false, then the whole force of the cross-examination must be directed to his credibility (see ante, p. 475); and the truth may afterwards be proved by other witnesses.

In cross-examining a witness, counsel may ask him leading questions; that is, he may lead the witness, so as to bring him directly to the point in which he requires the answer; and this whether the witness is a willing or an adverse one; see Parkin v. Moon, 7 C. & P. 408; but he will not be allowed to put into the witness's mouth the very words he is to echo back again. R. v. Hardy, 24 St. Tr. 199, 755, Buller, J.; and see Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 1431. Cross-examination of witnesses for the Crown is not permitted as to matters involving state secrets. R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 116; 32 St. Tr. 1. (See ante, p. 472.) As to the mode of suggesting, in cross-examination of a witness, that he is a spy, see R. v. Bernard, 1 F. & F. 240; 8 St. Tr. (N. S.) 887. As to incriminating questions, see ante, p. 469.

Questions put in cross-examination must be either relevant and pertinent to the matter in issue, or calculated to elicit the witness's title to credit. It is not usual to cross-examine witnesses to character, unless counsel has some distinct charge on which to cross-examine them; see R. v. Hodgkiss, 7 C. & P. 298; and it is improper to examine as to mere circumstances of suspicion occurring on the day when the offence is charged. R. v. Rogan, 1 Cox, 291, Erle, J. If the only evidence called on the prisoner's part is evidence as to character, though counsel for the prosecution is in strictness entitled to a reply, it is not usual to exercise it, except in extreme cases. See R. v. Stannard, 7 C. & P. 673: R. v. Whiting, Id. 771, and ante, p. 205.

It is improper for counsel, in cross-examining the accused, to suggest to the jury the contents of documents inadmissible in evidence which he flourishes in his hands, while asking the accused to look at them and then say whether he adheres to his answer. R. v. Jousry, 24 Cox, 523; 31 T. L. R. 27; 11 Cr. App. R. 13.

Cross-examination as to documents.]—The practice as to cross-examination as to documents is now regulated by s. 5 of Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict c. 18), which is in the following terms:—"A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing, or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him: Provided always, that it shall be competent for the judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he may think fit."

Under s. 5 a witness may be cross-examined upon a letter or other statement made by him in writing without reading it or putting it in as evidence. If a witness refreshes his memory from entries in a book, counsel may cross-examine on those entries without making them his evidence, and the jury may see them if they think fit; but, if counsel cross-examines as to other entries in the same book, he makes them his evidence. Gregory v. Tavernor, 6 C. & P. 281. If cross-examining counsel puts a paper into the witness's hands, and puts questions on it, and anything comes of those questions, his opponent has a right to see the paper, and re-examine on it; but if the cross-examination founded on the paper entirely fails and nothing comes of it, opposite counsel cannot demand to see the paper. R. v. Duncombe, 8 C. & P. 369: R. v. Ramsden, 2 C. & P. 603.

Depositions.]—Prior to 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, the judges had laid down the following rules (see 7 C. & P. 676; 6 L. J. (M. C.) 37) as to the mode of cross-examining witnesses for the Crown with respect to what they had previously sworn before the magistrate, and which had been reduced into writing in their depositions:—I. That where a witness for the Crown has made a deposition before a magistrate, he cannot, on his cross-examination by the prisoner's counsel, be asked whether he did or did not, in his deposition, make such or such a statement, until the deposition itself has been read, in order to manifest whether such statement is or is not contained therein; and that such deposition must be read as part of the evidence of the cross-examining counsel. II. That, after such deposition has been read, the prisoner's counsel may proceed in his cross-examination of the witness as to any supposed contradiction or variance between the testimony of the witness in court and his former deposition; after which counsel for the prosecution may re-examine the witness, and after the prisoner's counsel has addressed the jury, will be entitled to reply. And in case counsel for the prisoner comments upon any supposed variance or contradiction, without having read the deposition, the Court may direct it to be read, and counsel for the prosecution will be entitled to reply upon it. III. That the witness cannot, in cross-examination, be compelled to answer whether he did or did not make such or such a statement before the magistrate, until after his deposition has been read, and it appears that it contains no mention of such statement. In that event, counsel for the prisoner may proceed with his cross-examination; and if the witness admits such statement to have been made, he may comment upon such omission or upon the effect of it upon the other part of his testimony; or, if the witness denies that he made such statement, counsel for the prisoner may then, if such statement be material to the matter in issue, call witnesses to prove that he made such statement. But in either event, the reading of the deposition is the prisoner's evidence, and counsel for the prosecution will be entitled to reply.

The first of these rules appears to be superseded by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 5 (ante, p. 493). They were binding on the prisoner's counsel; but the judge who tried the case, might, notwithstanding, if he thought fit, himself look at the depositions, and question a witness as to any discrepancy which appeared between his deposition and his evidence. And, by the judge's permission, the prisoner's counsel might, "as his mouthpiece," do the like. R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 21, Willes, J. Whether, if such examination introduced new facts in evidence, that would give counsel for the prosecution the right of reply, was not settled. See R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26. The witness could not be asked whether he did or did not state a particular fact before the magistrate, without first allowing him to read, or have read to him, his depositions. R. v. Taylor, 8 C. & P. 726. Where an accomplice who could not read gave evidence falling very short of what he had stated before the magistrate, the judge allowed his deposition, signed with his mark, to be shown to him, but would not allow it to be read to him, in order that prosecuting counsel might examine upon it. R. v. Beardmore, 8 C. & P. 260. Where a witness examined for the Crown gave an answer different from what was expected, counsel for the prosecution was allowed to show the witness his deposition to refresh his memory; and on his persisting in the answer was also allowed to put the question in a leading form. R. v. Williams, 6 Cox, 343. Except as above mentioned, the prosecution cannot use or refer to the depositions taken before the magistrate, without putting them in as their evidence. R. v. Muller, 10 Cox, 43. If the witness denies his signature or mark to the deposition, it may be proved by the evidence of any competent person who heard it taken; and it is not necessary to prove it by the magistrate or his clerk, any more than in the case of a confession. R. v. Hallett, 9 C. & P. 748, Coleridge, J.: R. v. Hearn, C. & Mar. 109, Coltman, J.: see ante, p. 394.

Under Rule 1 the prisoner's counsel was not permitted, in cross-examining a witness for the prosecution, to put his deposition into his hand that he might read it, and then to ask him whether, having read it, he still persevered in the statement which he had made in court; the proper course was to read the deposition to him at the time, and to cross-examine him upon it, or to put it in afterwards as evidence for the prisoner. R. v. Ford, 2 Den. 245; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 171: R. v. Brewer, 9 Cox 409, Blackburn, J. In R. v. Ford, Campbell, C.J., said, "the proper course to be pursued is that pointed out in Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 289." R. v. Ford seems not now to be an authority, having regard to the change in practice effected by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 5 (ante, p. 493). Under that section, although a witness may be cross-examined as to what he said before the magistrate, and the deposition may be put into his hand for that purpose, without reading it as a part of the evidence of the cross-examining party, yet the latter is bound by the answer of the witness, unless the deposition is put in to contradict him, and it is not admissible to state that the deposition does contradict him unless it is so put in. R. v. Riley, 4 F. & F. 964 : R. v. Wright, Id. 967, Channell, B.

As to variations between a witness's deposition and his evidence at the trial, Cockburn, C.J., said in R. v. Wainwright, 13 Cox, 171, 173, that he did not attach much importance to the accordance between what a witness said at the trial and what he was reported in his deposition to have said before the magistrate. He knew, from his own experience, how difficult it was to take down a witness's exact words. A witness expressed himself in a long sentence, the magistrate's clerk struck out a particular word, and with that omission it went down on the notes, and was not the whole sentence. The whole meaning of the sentence which the witness had uttered might thereby be entirely altered. Too much importance ought not, therefore, to be attached to such variations, and if there was a substantial agreement between the evidence at the preliminary inquiry and that adduced at the trial, that was sufficient.

Former statements not in writing.]—It is provided by s. 4 of Denman's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, which by s. 1 applies to all courts of criminal judicature), that "if a witness, upon cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding, and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he has made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement."

This enactment is wide enough to cover all statements, but is specially applicable to a statement not in writing. You may cross-examine the witness on such statement; and if he denies it, you may call another witness to prove it. So, if a witness admits that when before the magistrate he was cross-examined for the prisoner, and it appears that such cross-examination is not returned with the depositions, he may be questioned by the prisoner's counsel as to the answers he gave. R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26 : R. v. Curtis, 2 C. & K. 763, Erle, J. So, if it appears that a statement of the witness before the magistrate, although written down by him, was not read over to the witness, nor signed by him or by the magistrate, the witness may be cross-examined as to such statement without producing the writing. R. v. Griffiths, 9 C. & P. 746, Coleridge, J. : see Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 M. & Rob. 486, and the note. Witnesses for the prosecution were duly sworn and examined before the magistrate, and cross-examined by the prisoner; minutes thereof were duly made by the magistrate's clerk, and then sent to his office to be copied as draft depositions. The witnesses attended there also. T., the copying clerk, while copying the minutes, asked the witnesses some questions, for the purpose of making the depositions more correct, clear, and complete, and inserted their answers to such questions in the depositions. The prisoner was not then present. The depositions thus written were sent back to the magistrate; and the witnesses, in the presence of the prisoner, after being resworn, and after hearing the depositions read over to them, and full opportunity for cross-examination being given to the prisoner, signed them. At the trial, a material question was put to one of the witnesses as to something which he had said to T., in answer to one of the questions so put to him by T. It was held that such answer formed no part of the depositions, but was wholly independent of them, and therefore that the question might be asked without putting in the depositions. R. v. Christopher, 1 Den. 536; 2 C. & K. 994, 995; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 103. So a witness may be cross-examined as to his statement before the grand jury in the same case. R. v. Gibson, C. & Mar. 672, Parke, B. But cross-examination as to the state of his recollection when examined before the magistrate has been rejected as inadmissible, and as an attempt by a side-wind to evade putting in the deposition. R. v. Newton, 4 Cox, 262, Patteson, J. If, however, a witness, when examined in chief as to the occurrence of a fact, answers that he does not remember it, counsel on the opposite side cannot give evidence of a former declaration by the witness of the fact having occurred, unless he has in cross-examination questioned the witness as to such a declaration; for the fact may have occurred, and the witness have formerly declared his knowledge of it, and yet he may not recollect it at the time of his examination. Queen Caroline's case, 2. B & B. 284, 292; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348.

Previous convictions.]—As to the cross-examination of a witness as to whether he has been convicted of felony or misdemeanor, and proof of such conviction, see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 6 (ante, p. 475); 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (f) (ante, p. 458).

If, upon the trial of an indictment, it appears on cross-examination of one of the witnesses for the prosecution, that J. S. was employed by the prosecutor for the purpose of procuring and examining evidence and witnesses in support of the indictment, the defendant cannot give evidence of J. S.'s having offered a bribe to a certain person, to induce him to give evidence touching the matter of the indictment, unless such person has been examined as a witness. Queen Caroline's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 302; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348.

Cross-examination of prisoners.]—(See ante, p. 491). Prisoners called as witnesses on their own behalf may be cross-examined like any other witness, subject to the limitations imposed by s. 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. (See that section, ante, p. 458).

Recalled witness.]—If a witness for the Crown is recalled by the judge or by leave of the judge the prisoner's counsel is allowed to cross-examine him on the new evidence given. R. v. Watson, 6 C. & P. 653.

Re-examination.]—If any new fact arises out of the cross-examination, the witness may be examined as to it by the counsel who first examined him. In the same manner he may be re-examined when necessary, in order to explain any part of his cross-examination. In Queen Caroline's case (supra) it was held, that if a witness, upon his cross-examination, admits having used certain expressions in a conversation with a person not a party to the cause, re-examination of the witness is confined to such questions as may elicit the meaning of the expressions, and the motives of the witness for using them. But where a witness deposes to certain expressions being used by a party to the cause, counsel for that party is entitled to re-examine the witness as to the whole of the conversation in which the expressions occurred; because the expressions are given in evidence, in such a case, as an admission of the party, and the whole of his admission should be taken together. 2 B. & B. 284, 294; 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1348. If a witness whose name is on the back of the indictment is called merely to allow the prisoner to cross-examine him, any question put by prosecuting counsel afterwards must be considered as a re-examination, and nothing can be asked which does not arise out of the cross-examination. R. v. Beezley, 4 C. & P. 220, Littledale, J.

In re-examination questions tending to prove the commission by the defendant of an offence other than that charged in the indictment have been allowed where the object was to explain away an apparently contradictory fact elicited by cross-examination. R. v. Chambers, 3 Cox, 92, Rolfe, B.

such taking, permanently to deprive the owner thereof: Provided that a person may be guilty of stealing any such thing notwithstanding that he has lawful possession thereof, if, being a bailee or part owner thereof, he fraudulently converts the same to his own use or the use of any person other than the owner: (2) (i.) the expression "takes" includes obtaining the possession—(a) by any trick; (b) by intimidation; (c) under a mistake on the part of the owner with knowledge on the part of the taker that possession has been so obtained; (d) by finding, where at the time of the finding the finder believes that the owner can be discovered by taking reasonable steps; (ii.) the expression "carries away" includes any removal of anything from the place which it occupies, but in the case of a thing attached, only if it has been completely detached; (iii.) the expression "owner" includes any part owner, or person having possession or control of, or a special property in, anything capable of being stolen: (3) Everything which has value and is the property of any person, and if adhering to the realty then after severance therefrom, shall be capable of being stolen: Provided that—(a) save as hereinafter expressly provided with respect to fixtures, growing things, and ore from mines, anything attached to or forming part of the realty shall not be capable of being stolen by the person who severs the same from the realty, unless after severance he has abandoned possession thereof; and (b) the carcase of a creature wild by nature and not reduced into possession while living shall not be capable of being stolen by the person who has killed such creature, unless after killing it he has abandoned possession of the carcase. [This is the first statutory definition of larceny: see post, p. 511.]

Sect. 2.—Simple larceny.]—Stealing for which no special punishment is provided under this or any other Act for the time being in force shall be simple larceny and a felony punishable with penal servitude for any term not exceeding five years, and the offender, if a male under the age of sixteen years, shall be liable to be once privately whipped in addition to any other punishment to which he may by law be liable. [This section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 4, 26, 27. See post, p. 509.]

Sect. 35.—Accessories and abettors.]—Every person who knowingly and wilfully aids, abets, counsels, procures or commands the commission of an offence punishable under this Act shall be liable to be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished as a principal offender. Sect. 36.—Husband and wife.]—(1) A wife shall have the same remedies and redress under this Act for the protection and security of her own separate property as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole: Provided that no proceedings under this Act shall be taken by any wife against her husband while they are living together as to or concerning any property claimed by her, nor while they are living apart as to or concerning any act done by the husband while they were living together concerning property claimed by the wife, unless such property has been wrongfully taken by the husband when leaving or deserting or about to leave or desert his wife. (2) A wife doing an act with respect to any property of her husband, which, if done by the husband in respect to property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act, shall be in like manner liable to criminal proceedings by her husband. [This section reproduces 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, ss. 12, 16.]

Sect. 37.—Punishments.]—(1) Every person who commits the offence of simple larceny after having been previously convicted of felony shall be liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten years. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 7.] (2) Every person who commits the offence of simple larceny, or any offence made punishable like simple larceny, after having been previously convicted—(a) of an indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act; or (b) twice summarily of any offence punishable under s. 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, or under the Larceny Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, or under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, or under this Act (whether each of the convictions has been in respect of an offence of the same description or not, and whether such convictions, or either of them, have been before or after the passing of this Act); shall be liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss 8, 9.] (3) In every case in this section before mentioned the offender, if a male under the age of sixteen years, shall be liable to be once privately whipped in addition to any other punishment to which he may by law be liable. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 7, 8, 9.] (4) Where a sentence of penal servitude may be imposed on conviction of an offence against this Act, the court may instead thereof impose a sentence of imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not more than two years. [This sub-section reproduces 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (2), ante, p. 239.] (5)—(a) On conviction of a misdemeanor punishable under this Act the court, instead of or in addition to any other punishment which may be lawfully imposed, may fine the offender. (b) On conviction of a felony punishable under this Act the court, in addition to imposing a sentence of penal servitude or imprisonmen, may require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. (c) On conviction of a misdemeanor punishable under this Act the court, instead of or in addition to any other punishment which may lawfully be imposed for the offence, may require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. (d) Provided that a person shall not be imprisoned for more than one year for not finding sureties. [This sub-section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117, the words in italics being new. Cf. 3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27, s. 12 (2) (b), post, p. 827.] (6) Where a sentence of whipping may be imposed under this Act—(a) in the case of an offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years, the number of strokes at such whipping shall not exceed twenty-five and the instrument used shall be a birch-rod; (b) in the case of any other offender, the number of strokes at such whipping shall not exceed fifty; (c) in each case the court in its sentence shall specify the number of strokes to be inflicted and the instrument to be used; (d) such whipping shall not take place after the expiration of six months from the passing of the sentence; (e) such whipping to be inflicted on any person sentenced to penal servitude shall be inflicted on him before he is removed to a convict prison with a view to his undergoing his sentence of penal servitude. [This sub-section is taken from 26 & 27 Vict. c. 44, s. 1, as amended by 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 36 (1), ante, p. 244.]

Sect. 38.—Jurisdiction of quarter sessions.]—(1) A court of quarter sessions —(a) notwithstanding anything in the Quarter Sessions Act, 1842, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, shall in England have jurisdiction to try an indictment for burglary; (b) shall not have jurisdiction to try an indictment for any offence against ss. 20, 21, and 22 of this Act. (2) A justice of the peace in England when committing for trial a person charged with burglary shall commit him for trial before a court of assize unless, owing to the absence of any circumstances which makes the case a grave or difficult one, he thinks it expedient in the interest of justice to commit him for trial before a court of quarter sessions; and the Assizes Relief Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 12, shall apply. [This section reproduces 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 87, and 59 & 60 Vict. c. 57.]

Sect. 39.—Venue.]—(1) A person charged with any offence against this Act may be proceeded against, indicted, tried, and punished in any county or place in which he was apprehended or is in custody as if the offence had been committed in that county or place; and for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the prosecution, trial, or punishment of the offence, it shall be deemed to have been committed in that county or place. [This sub-section is new, and creates a uniform venue for all offences under the Act. Cf. 3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 27, s. 14.] (2) Every person who steals or otherwise feloniously takes any property in any one part of the United Kingdom may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished in any other part of the United Kingdom where he has the property in his possession in the same manner as if he had actually stolen or taken it in that part. (3) Every person who receives in any one part of the United Kingdom any property stolen or otherwise feloniously taken in any other part of the United Kingdom may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished in that part of the United Kingdom where he so receives the property in the same manner as if it had been originally stolen or taken in that part. [This and the preceding sub-section re-enact 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 114.]

Sect. 40.—Procedure.]—(1) On the trial of an indictment for obtaining or attempting to obtain any chattel, money, or valuable security by any false pretence, it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to defaud any particular person, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the person accused did the act charged with intent to defraud. [This sub-section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88.] (2) An allegation in an indictment that money or banknotes have been embezzled or obtained by false pretences can, so far as regards the description of the property, be sustained by proof that the offender embezzled or obtained any piece of coin or any banknote or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or banknote may have been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to any person and such part has been returned accordingly. [This sub-section is taken from 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18.] (3) In an indictment for feloniously receiving any property under this Act any number of persons who have at different times so received such property or any part thereof may be charged and tried together. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 93.] (4) If any person, who is a member of any co-partnership or is one of two or more beneficial owners of any property, steals or embezzles any such property of or belonging to such co-partnership or to such beneficial owners he shall be liable to be dealt with, tried, and punished as if he had not been or was not a member of such co-partnership or one of such beneficial owners. [This sub-section re-enacts 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1.] (5) In Ireland (a) the following provisions shall have effect with respect to indictments :—(a) In an indictment for an offence against this Act with reference to any instrument, it shall be sufficient to describe such instrument by any name or designation by which it is usually known, or by its purport, without setting out any copy or facsimile thereof or otherwise describing it or its value. [This paragraph re-enacts 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 5.] (b) In an indictment for any offence of stealing under this Act, distinct acts of stealing, not exceeding three, which have been committed by the person accused against the same person within the space of six months, may be charged in separate counts of the same indictment and tried together. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 5. It does not authorise the joinder in one indictment of a count for larceny against one defendant alone with a count for another larceny against the same defendant and another defendant jointly. R. v. Edwards [1913] 1 K. B. 287; 88 L. J. (K. B.) 347; 23 Cox, 380; 108 L. T. 815; 77 J. P. 135; 29 T. L. R. 181. Nor does it extend to indictments for receiving only, though under paragraph (j), infra, a count for receiving may be added to each of the three larceny counts.] (c) If on the trial of an indictment for stealing any property it appears that the property alleged in such indictment to have been stolen at one time was taken at different times, such separate takings may be tried together to a number not exceeding three, provided that not more than the space of six months elapsed between the first and the last of such takings. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 6.] (d) In an indictment for any offence of embezzlement or of fraudulent application or disposition against this Act, distinct acts of embezzlement or of fraudulent application or disposition not exceeding three, which have been committed by him against the same person within the space of six months, may be charged in separate counts of the same indictment and tried together; and where such offence relates to any money or valuable security it shall not be necessary to specify any particular coin or valuable security; and such allegation shall be sustained whether the offender is proved to have embezzled or to have fraudulently applied or disposed of any amount, although the particular coin or valuable security of which such amount was composed is not proved, or whether he is proved to have embezzled or to have fraudulently applied or disposed of any valuable security which has been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to any person and such part has been returned accordingly. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 71.] (e) In every case of stealing any chattel or fixture under s. 16 of this Act (relating to tenants and lodgers) it shall be lawful to prefer an indictment in the same form as if the offender were not a tenant or lodger. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 74. See also paragraph (h) infra.] (f) In an indictment for stealing any document of title to lands, it shall be sufficient to allege such document to be or to contain evidence of the title or of part of the title of the person or of some one of the persons having an interest, whether vested or contingent, legal or equitable, in the real estate to which the same relates, and to mention such real estate or some part thereof. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 28.] (g) In an indictment for an offence under this Act with respect to any will, codicil, or other testamentary document, record, or other legal document whatsoever, or anything made of metal fixed in any square or street, or in any place dedicated to public use or ornament, or in any burial-ground, it shall not be necessary to allege the same to be the property of any person. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 29, 30, 31.] (h) In an indictment under s. 16 of this Act it shall be lawful to lay the property alleged to be stolen in the owner or person letting to hire. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 74. See also paragraph (e), supra.] (i) In an indictment for obtaining or attempting to obtain any chattel, money, or valuable security by any false pretence, it shall be sufficient to allege that the person accused did the act with intent to defraud, without alleging an intent to defraud any particular person and without alleging any ownership of the chattel, money, or valuable security. [This paragraph re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88.] (j) Charges of stealing any property and of feloniously receiving the same property or any part thereof may be included in separate counts of the same indictment, and such counts may be tried together. (k) Any person or persons charged in separate counts of the same indictment with stealing any property and with feloniously receiving the same property or any part thereof may severally be found guilty either of stealing or of receiving the said property or any part thereof. [This and the preceding paragraph re-enact 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 92.]

Sect. 41.—Arrest without warrant.]—(1) Any person found committing any offence punishable under this Act except an offence under s. 31 may be immediately apprehended without a warrant by any person and forthwith taken, together with the property, if any, before a justice of the peace to be dealt with according to law. (2) Any person to whom any property is offered to be sold, pawned, or delivered, if he has reasonable cause to suspect that any offence has been committed against this Act with respect to such property, shall, if in his power, apprehend and forthwith take before a justice of the peace the person offering the same, together with such property, to be dealt with according to law. [This and the preceding sub-section are taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 103.] (3) Any constable or peace officer may take into custody without warrant any person whom he finds lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place during the night, and whom he has good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony against this Act, and shall take such person as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace to be dealt with according to law. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 104.]

Sect. 42.—Search warrants.]—(1) If it is made to appear by information on oath before a justice of the peace that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has in his custody or possession or on his premises any property whatsoever, with respect to which any offence against this Act has been committed, the justice may grant a warrant to search for and seize the same. [This sub-section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 103. At common law a justice has the general power to issue a search warrant for stolen goods (see 2 Hale, 113, 149, 150; Entick v. Carrington, 19 St. Tr. 1067; Burn's J. P. (30th ed.), s. 1180), and although the earlier authorities are not clear on the subject, it was expressly decided in Elsee v. Smith, 1 D. & R. 97, that an allegation of the actual commission of a felony is not necessary to justify a magistrate in granting a search warrant. The authorities were reviewed in Jones v. German [1896] 2 Q. B. 418; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 281, in which Elsee v. Smith, supra, was approved, and the Court held that a search warrant may be issued on an allegation of reasonable suspicion of larceny, and, further, that it is not necessary to specify in the information the particular goods for which a search is desired. Lord Russell, C.J., doubted whether 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 103, from which this section is taken, applied to stolen goods, but thought that its object was to apply the practice as regards search warrants for stolen goods to goods in respect of which some offence under the Act (other than larceny) has been committed. Jones v. German [1896] 2 Q. B. 418, at p. 424.] (2)—(a) Any constable or peace officer may, if authorised in writing by a chief officer of police, enter any house, shop, warehouse, yard, or other premises, and search for and seize any property he believes to have been stolen, and, where any property is seized in pursuance of this section, the person on whose premises it was at the time of seizure or the person from whom it was taken shall, unless previously charged with receiving the same knowing it to have been stolen, be summoned before a court of summary jurisdiction to account for his possession of such property, and such court shall make such order respecting the disposal of such property and may award such costs as the justice of the case may require. (b) It shall be lawful for any chief officer of police to give such authority as aforesaid—(i.) when the premises to be searched are or within the preceding twelve months have been in the occupation of any person who has been convicted of receiving stolen property or of harbouring thieves; or (ii.) when the premises to be searched are in the occupation of any person who has been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty and punishable with penal servitude or imprisonment. (c) It shall not be necessary for such chief officer of police on giving such authority to specify any particular property, but he may give such authority if he has reason to believe generally that such premises are being made a receptacle for stolen goods. [This sub-section re-enacts 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 16.]

Sect. 43.—Evidence.]—(1) Whenever any person is being proceeded against for receiving any property, knowing it to have been stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge there may be given in evidence at any stage of the proceedings—(a) the fact that other property stolen within the period of twelve months preceding the date of the offence charged was found or had been in his possession; (b) the fact that within the five years preceding the date of the offence charged he was convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty. This last-mentioned fact may not be proved unless—(i.) seven days' notice in writing has been given to the offender that proof of such previous conviction is intended to be given; (ii.) evidence has been given that the property in respect of which the offender is being tried was found or had been in his possession. [This sub-section re-enacts 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 19, with the addition of the words in italics. See post, p. 730.] (2) No person shall be liable to be convicted of any offence against ss. 6, 7 sub-s. (1), 20, 21, and 22 of this Act upon any evidence whatever in respect of any act done by him, if at any time previously to his being charged with such offence he has first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which has been bonâ fide instituted by any person aggrieved. [This sub-section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 29, 85.] (3) In any proceedings in respect of any offence against ss. 6, 7 sub-s. (1), 20, 21, and 22 of this Act, a statement or admission made by any person in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy shall not be admissible in evidence against that person. [This sub-section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85, as amended by 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27. It alters the law with regard to stealing wills and documents of title to lands. See post, p. 560.]

Sect. 44.—Verdict.]—(1) If on the trial of any indictment for robbery it is proved that the defendant committed an assault with intent to rob, the jury may acquit the defendant of robbery and find him guilty of an assault with intent to rob, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished accordingly. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 41.] (2) If on the trial of any indictment for any offence against s. 17 of this Act (relating to embezzlement) it is proved that the defendant stole the property in question, the jury may find him guilty of stealing, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished accordingly; and on the trial of any indictment for stealing the jury may in like manner find the defendant guilty of embezzlement or of fraudulent application or disposition, as the case may be, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished accordingly. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 72.] (3) If on the trial of any indictment for stealing it is proved that the defendant took any chattel, money, or valuable security in question in any such manner as would amount in law to obtaining it by false pretences with intent to defraud, the jury may acquit the defendant of stealing and find him guilty of obtaining the chattel, money, or valuable security by false pretences, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished accordingly. [This sub-section re-enacts 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 39 (2).] (4) If on the trial of any indictment for obtaining any chattel, money, or valuable security by false pretences it is proved that the defendant stole the property in question, he shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of obtaining such property by false pretences.

[This sub-section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88.] (5) If on the trial of any two or more persons indicted for jointly receiving any property it is proved that one or more of such persons separately received any part of such property, the jury may convict upon such indictment such of the said persons as are proved to have received any part of such property. [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 94.]

Sect. 45.—Restitution.]—(1) If any person guilty of any such felony or misdemeanor as is mentioned in this Act, in stealing, taking, obtaining, extorting, embezzling, converting, or disposing of, or in knowingly receiving, any property, is prosecuted to conviction by or on behalf of the owner of such property, the property shall be restored to the owner or his representative. (2) In every case in this section referred to the court before whom such offender is convicted shall have power to award from time to time writs of restitution for the said property or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner: Provided that where goods as defined in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 71, have been obtained by fraud or other wrongful means not amounting to stealing, the property in such goods shall not re-vest in the person who was the owner of the goods or his personal representative, by reason only of the conviction of the offender: And provided that nothing in this section shall apply to the case of—(a) any valuable security which has been in good faith paid or discharged by some person or body corporate liable to the payment thereof, or, being a negotiable instrument, has been in good faith taken or received by transfer or delivery by some person or body corporate for a just and valuable consideration without any notice or without any reasonable cause to suspect that the same had been stolen; (b) any offence against ss. 20, 21, and 22 of this Act. [This and the preceding sub-section re-enact 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100, as affected by 56 & 57 Vict. c. 71, s. 24. See ante, p. 294.] (3) On the restitution of any stolen property if it appears to the court by the evidence that the offender has sold the stolen property to any person, and that such person has had no knowledge that the same was stolen, and that any moneys have been taken from the offender on his apprehension, the court may, on the application of such purchaser, order that out of such moneys a sum not exceeding the amount of the proceeds of such sale be delivered to the said purchaser. [This sub-section reproduces 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 9.]

Sect. 46.—Interpretation.]—(1) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—The expression "chief officer of police" means—(a) In the city of London, the Commissioner of City Police; (b) In the Metropolitan Police District, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; (c) In any other police district in England, the officer having the chief command of the police in such police district; (d) In the police district of Dublin Metropolis, either of the commissioners of police for the said district; (e) In any other police district in Ireland, the sub-inspector of the Royal Irish Constabulary; and shall include any person authorised by such said chief officer of police to act in his behalf. [This definition is taken from 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 21.] The expression "document of title to goods" includes any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, warrant or order for the delivery or transfer of any goods or valuable thing, bought or sold note, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive any goods thereby represented or therein mentioned or referred to. [This definition re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1.]—The expression "document of title to lands" includes any deed, map, roll, register, paper, or parchment, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, being or containing evidence of the title, or any part of the title, to any real estate or to any interest in or out of any real estate. [This definition re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, with the addition of the words italicised.] The expressions "mail," "mail bag," "officer of the Post Office," "postal packet," "post office," and "in course of transmission by post," shall have the same meanings in this Act as in the Post Office Act, 1908. [See post, p. 585.] The expression "night" means the interval between nine o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the morning of the next succeeding day. [This definition re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1. See post, p. 657.] The expression "property" includes any description of real and personal property, money, debts, and legacies, and all deeds and instruments relating to or evidencing the title or right to any property, or giving a right to recover or receive any money or goods, and also includes not only such property as has been originally in the possession or under the control of any person, but also any property into or for which the same has been converted or exchanged, and anything acquired by such conversion or exchange, whether immediately or otherwise. [This definition re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1.] The expression "trustee" means a trustee on some express trust created by some deed, will, or instrument in writing, and includes the heir or personal representative of any such trustee, and any other person upon or to whom the duty of such trust shall have devolved or come, and also an executor and administrator, and an official receiver, assignee, liquidator, or other like officer acting under any present or future Act relating to joint stock companies or bankruptcy. [This definition re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1. See post, p 635.] The expression "valuable security" includes any writing entitling or evidencing the title of any person to any share or interest in any public stock, annuity, fund, or debt of any part of His Majesty's Dominions, or of any foreign state, or in any stock, annuity, fund, or debt of any body corporate, company, or society, whether within or without His Majesty's Dominions, or to any deposit in any bank, and also includes any scrip, debenture, bill, note, warrant, order, or other security for payment of money, or any accountable receipt, release, or discharge, or any receipt or other instrument evidencing the payment of money, or the delivery of any chattel personal, and any document of title to lands or goods as herein-before defined. [This definition substantially re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, with the additions italicised. "Valuable security" has been held to include a transfer of shares in a limited liability company. R. v. Smith, 62 J. P. 231. It includes currency notes. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 14, s. 1 (5). As to money orders, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s 59 (1), post, p. 582.] (2) The expression "dwelling-house" does not include a building although within the same curtilage with any dwelling-house and occupied therewith unless there is a communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediate or by means of a covered and enclosed passage leading from one to the other. [This definition re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 53. See post, p. 657.] (3) References in this Act to any Act in force at the commencement of this Act shall be held to include a reference to that Act as amended, extended, or applied by any other Act.

Sect. 47.—Savings.]—(1) Where, by virtue of some other Act, an offence against this Act subjects the offender to any forfeiture or disqualification, or to any penalty other than penal servitude or fine, the liability of the offender to punishment under this Act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for his liability under such other Act. (2) Where an offence against this Act is by any other Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, made punishable on summary conviction, proceedings may be taken either under such other Act or under this Act: Provided that where such an offence was at the commencement of this Act punishable only on summary conviction, it shall remain only so punishable.

Sect. 48.—Repeals.]—(1) The enactments specified in the Schedule to this Act are hereby repealed as to England and Ireland to the extent specified in the third column thereof. (2) For the purposes of the First Schedule to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), the first sub-section of the thirty-third section of this Act shall be substituted for the ninety-first and ninety-fifth sections of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Sect. 49.—Extent.]—This Act shall not extend to Scotland, except as hereinbefore otherwise expressly provided.

Sect. 50.—Short title and commencement.]—This Act may be cited as the Larceny Act, 1916, and shall come into operation on the first day of January, nineteen hundred and seventeen.

Indictment for Simple Larceny (a).

THE KING v. A. B.

Surrey Quarter Sessions held at Kingston.

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

A. B. is charged with the following offence:—

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 2 of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of Surrey, stole a bag, the property of C. D.

(a) The forms of indictment throughout this edition are framed in accordance with 5 & 6 Geo. 5. c. 90. For precedents of indictments applicable to Ireland, the reader is referred to the 24th edition of this work.

Upon this indictment the accused may be convicted as accessory before the fact to the larceny: 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 35, ante, p. 500; and see R. v. Goodwin, 3 Cr. App. R. 276.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 239; 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, ss. 2, 37 (4) (ante, pp. 500, 501); and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping; 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 2 (ante, p. 500); the offender if sentenced to whipping, to be once privately whipped with a birch rod, the number of strokes not to exceed twenty-five and to be specified in the sentence. Id. s. 37 (6) (ante, p. 501). The defendant may also be required to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. Id. s. 37 (5) (b) (ante, p. 501). If the defendant has previously been convicted of an indictable misdemeanor under 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, or twice summarily under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 6, or 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 96, 97, he may be sentenced to penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1 (ante, p. 239); 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37, sub-ss. 2, 3, 4 (ante, p. 501). If he has been previously convicted of felony, he may be sentenced to penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, and, if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37, sub-ss. 1, 3, 4 (ante, p. 501). As to the statement and proof of the former convictions, see ante, pp. 53 and 421.

As to the sentence where the defendant is already under sentence for another crime, see 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 10 (ante, p. 232).

Upon this indictment the defendant may be acquitted of larceny, but convicted of embezzlement or of obtaining by false pretences, if the facts so warrant, and he may be punished accordingly. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44, sub-ss. 2, 3 (ante, p. 506). But a general verdict of guilty cannot be sustained upon evidence of embezzlement only. R. v. Gorbutt, Dears. & B. 166; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 47.

Evidence (a).

A. B.]—It is immaterial whether this is the correct name of the defendant or not. (See ante, p. 49.) The prosecutor has only to prove that the defendant is the person who actually committed the offence; which is done either by identifying him as the party who committed it, or by circumstantial evidence. (See ante, p. 396.)

"On the 1st day of June," etc.]—The time here stated need not be proved as laid: it is sufficient if the offence is proved to have been committed at any time before or after the date alleged, provided it be some day before the finding of the indictment (ante, p. 51).

"In the county."]—At common law, where a larceny is committed in one county and the thief, at any distance of time (R. v. Parkin, 1 Mood. 45), carries the goods into another county, he is in contemplation of law guilty not only of a carrying away but also of a taking in every county through or into which he has carried the goods. 1 Hale, 507; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 52; 3 Co. Inst. 113: R. v. Fenley [1903] 20 Cox, 252, Jelf, J. (and see ante, p. 42). If it is proved that the larceny was actually committed by the defendant in another part of the United Kingdom (i.e., in Scotland or Ireland), and that he carried the goods at any distance of time through or into the county or other place within the extent of the Court's jurisdiction, it will be sufficient (ante, p. 42); unless the nature of the property be changed, and the indictment be for stealing the article in its original state. R. v. Edwards, R. & R. 497: R. v. Holloway, 1 C. & P. 127. So it is sufficient if the offence is either begun or completed in the county in which the defendant is indicted; or is committed within five hundred yards of the boundary of such county (ante, p. 37). And where a larceny is committed on a person, or with respect to property in or upon any coach, etc., or vessel, during a journey or voyage, it will be sufficient if the coach or vessel in the progress of the journey or voyage, passed through the county or by the boundary of the county in which the defendant is indicted. By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 39 (1) (ante, p. 502), the thief may be tried in any county or place in which he was apprehended or is in custody, as if the offence had been committed there.

Stole.]—For the purposes of the Larceny Act, 1916, a person steals who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently and without a claim of right made in good faith, takes and carries away anything capable of being stolen with intent, at the time of such taking, permanently to deprive the owner thereof: provided that a person may be guilty of stealing any such thing, notwithstanding that he has lawful possession thereof, if, being a bailee or part owner thereof, he fraudulently converts the same to his own use or the use of any person other than the owner. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 1 (ante, p. 499). This is the first statutory definition of larceny: it makes no change in the law, but merely harmonises the accepted definitions of larceny at common law with certain statutory provisions relating to bailees and part owners, as to which see post, pp. 534, 540. In all cases of larceny, the question whether the defendant took the goods knowingly or by mistake—whether he took them bonâ fide under a claim of right, or otherwise—and whether he took them with an intent to return them to the owner, or fraudulently, with an intent to deprive the owner of them altogether, and to appropriate or convert them to his own use—are questions entirely for the consideration of the jury, to be determined by them upon a view of the particular facts of the case. R. v. Farnborough [1895] 2 Q. B. 484; 64 L. J. (M. C.) 270. Where a man was charged with stealing three hare-wires and a pheasant it was ruled that if he really believed that the wires and pheasant belonged to him he was not guilty of larceny even though he might have committed an offence against the Game Acts. R. v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 409, and cf. R. v. Boden, 1 C. & K. 395, and R. v. Knight, 73 J. P. 15, where the defendant had retaken his fowls from a sheriff's officer, who had seized them in execution as belonging to the defendant's wife (a). Larceny at common law may correctly be defined thus : the wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to the taker's own use, and make them permanently his own property, without the consent of the owner; 2 East, P. C. 553; the word "felonious" being explained to mean that there is no colour of right to excuse the act; and the "intent" being to deprive the owner, not temporarily, but permanently of his property. R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den. 387; 2 C. & K. 831; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 140 : R. v. Guernsey, 1 F. & F. 394, Martin, B. If the sheep of A. stray into the flock of B., and B., not knowing it, drive them home along with his own flock, and shear them, this is no felony; but it would be otherwise if he did any act for the purpose of concealing them, for that would indicate his knowledge of their being the sheep of another. 1 Hale, 507. If, under colour of arrear of rent, although none be actually due, I distrain or seize my tenant's cattle, this may be a trespass, but is no felony. 1 Hale, 509. If I take an estray, upon a claim of right to it as lord of the manor, it is no felony, however groundless my claim may be. Id. 506. So, if a man having done work upon a chattel, returns it to the owner, and, a dispute afterwards arising between him and the owner as to the price to be paid for the work, he seizes and carries off the chattel, against the will of the owner, honestly intending to hold it as a security for the amount which he alleges to be due to him, this is no felony, although, in fact, nothing may be due to him. R. v. Wade, 11 Cox, 549, Blackburn, J. A creditor who violently assaults his debtor, and so forces him then and there to pay him his debt, cannot be convicted of robbery, there being no felonious intent. R. v. Hemmings, 4 F. & F. 50, Erle, C.J. If a servant takes his master's horse without his knowledge, and brings it home again; if a man takes his neighbour's plough that is left in the field, and uses it upon his own land, and then returns it; these may be trespasses, but are not felonies, 1 Hale, 509, because the returning the thing taken sufficiently evinces that the party, when he took it, had no intention to deprive the owner of it, or to convert it to his own use. Returning the goods, however, can be considered merely as evidence of the defendant's intention when he took them; for if it appears that he took them originally with the intent of depriving the owner of them, and of appropriating them to his own use, his afterwards returning them will not purge the offence. See 1 Hawk. c. 34, s. 2; 1 Hale, 533; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1177, 1184. In R. v. Phillips, 2 East, P. C. 662, 663, it was proved that the defendants took two horses out of the prosecutor's stable at night without his leave, and having ridden them about thirty miles, left them at an inn, desiring care to be taken of them, and saying that they should return in three hours; the defendants were taken on the same day at the distance of fourteen miles from the inn, (a) In R. v. Ford [1907] 12 Canada Cr. Cas. 555, it was held not to be larceny or robbery forcibly to retake money won from the defendant at cards in the bonâ fide belief that the winner had cheated.

walking in a direction from it: the jury found the defendants guilty, but at the same time found specially that the defendants meant merely to ride the horses thirty miles, and to leave them there, without an intention to return for them, or otherwise dispose of them: and ten of the judges held that this was no felony, as there was no intention in the prisoners to change the property, or make it their own. And where a person stole certain articles, and also took a horse, not with an intention to steal it, but merely to get off more conveniently with the property, this was held not to be a felonious stealing of the horse. R. v. Crump, 1 C. & P. 658. The Roman law recognised furtum usûs as an offence. See R. v. Fortuin [1883] 1 Buchanan (Cape Colony) 290. So, where the servant of a tanner took out of his master's warehouse dressed skins of leather, with intent to bring them in and charge them as his own work (which they were not), and to get paid by his master for them, this was held to be no larceny. R. v. Holloway, 1 Den. 370; 2 C. & K. 942; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 60: see R. v. Webb, 1 Mood. 431: R. v. Poole, Dears. & B. 345; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 53. Cf. R. v. Richards, 1 C. & K. 532 (post, p. 514). But where the jury found the defendant guilty of larceny in stealing plate, but recommended him to mercy on the ground that they believed he ultimately intended (not saying when he so intended) to return the property, this statement was held not to qualify the verdict, so as to bring the case within the principle of the above decisions. R. v. Trebilcock, Dears. & B. 453; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 103 (a). And where A. took B.'s goods wrongfully, and offered them for sale to B., as the goods of another, he was held guilty of larceny. R. v. Hall, 1 Den. 381; 2 C. & K. 947; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 62; see R. v. Manning, Dears. 21; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 21. Where, upon an indictment for larceny, it appeared that the prisoner had clandestinely taken the goods alleged to have been stolen from a young woman, for the mere purpose of inducing her to call for them, that he might have an opportunity of soliciting her to commit fornication with him, the judges held this not to be a felonious taking. R. v. Dickinson, R. & R. 420. The prisoner's goods having been seized under warrants of execution of a county court, and being in possession of the bailiff, the prisoner, with intent to deprive the bailiff of his authority, and so defeat the execution, forcibly took the warrants from him. On these facts it was held that the prisoner was not guilty of larceny of the warrants, but that he was guilty of taking the warrants for a fraudulent purpose within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30 (post, p. 566). R. v. Bailey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61. Cf. R. v. Jones, 19 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 162; 1 Den. 188; 2 C. & K. 236 (post, p. 515). So where the captain of a ship, taken as a prize, secreted some of the cargo, and clandestinely removed it from the ship, it being doubtful whether he did so for his own benefit of for that of his owners, he was recommended for a free pardon; but the majority of the judges were of opinion that if the goods had been secreted for his own benefit, it would have amounted to larceny. R. v. Van Muyen, R. & R. 118. Where the prosecutor met the prisoner, whom he knew to be a poacher, and seized him, and the prisoner, being rescued, seized the gun of the prosecutor, and ran away with it, and subsequently was heard to say that he would sell it, and the gun was never afterwards heard of, Vaughan, B., upon an indictment for stealing the gun, told the jury that it would not be felony if the prisoner took the gun under the impression at the time that it might be used so as to endanger his life, and not with an intention of disposing of it, although he might afterwards have determined to dispose of it; and the jury, being of opinion that he had no intention of disposing of the gun at the time he took it, acquitted the prisoner. R. v. Holloway, 5 C. & P. 524. Where A., at the instigation of a police officer, concerted with three persons to commit a felony, in order that the officer might apprehend them, and upon their conviction receive the reward, which was to be divided between the officer and A., and A. with the others did commit the felony, it was held by the majority of the judges, that A., although he acted from a bad motive, namely, the reward, had not the felonious intention necessary to make him the principal, because he was present, not to aid and assist in committing the felony, but to detect it, and had no intention that the felony should be successful. R. v. Dannelly, R. & R. 310; 2 Marsh, 571 (Ex. Ch.).

Prior to the Larceny Act, 1916, there were cases which went to establish that it is not necessary that the taking should be lucri causâ, if it is fraudulent, and with intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1204. C., to screen his accomplice, who was indicted for horse stealing, broke into the prosecutor's stable, and took away the horse, which he backed into a coal-pit and killed. C. was indicted for stealing the horse, and at the trial it was objected that the taking was not with an intention to convert the horse to the use of the taker, animo furandi et lucri causâ. Seven of the judges held that it was larceny, and six of that majority were of opinion that, to constitute larceny, it was not essential that the taking should be lucri causâ, if it were fraudulent and with intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property; but some of this majority thought that the object of the prisoner might be deemed a benefit, and the taking lucri causâ. R. v. Cabbage, R. & R. 292. Where the prisoners, servants in husbandry, opened the granary of their master by means of a false key, and took thereout two bushels of beans to give to their master's horses, in addition to the quantity usually allowed, this was held to be larceny by a majority of the judges; but it was considered by some of the judges that the additional quantity of beans would diminish the work of the men who had to look after the horses; and therefore the lucri causâ, to give themselves ease, was an ingredient in the offence. R. v. Morfit, R. & R. 307. See also R. v. Gruncell, 9 C. & P. 365: R. v. Handley, C. & Mar. 547: R. v. Privett, 1 Den. 193; 2 C. & K. 114; which latter cases established that this was larceny, even if the intent of obtaining a private benefit is negatived. The law was altered by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 103, s. 1 (post, p. 602).

Where the defendant was supplied by his master with pig-iron to be put into a furnace to be melted, being paid according to the weight of the metal which ran out of the furnace into bars, and he put in also other iron belonging to his master, whereby, the weight of the melted iron being thus increased, he gained a larger remuneration, it was held that, if he did this with the felonious intent of converting the iron to a purpose for his own profit, it was a larceny. R. v. Richards, 1 C. & K. 532, Tindal, C.J.: cf. R. v. Holloway, 1 Den. 370; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 60 (ante, p. 513). So, the secreting and destroying of a post-letter, in the hope of suppressing inquiries supposed by the defendant to be made in it respecting her character, was held to be larceny. R. v. Jones, 19 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 162; 1 Den. 188; 2 C. & K. 236. Cf. R. v. Bailey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61 (ante, p. 513). Money was given to the prisoner by the prosecutor, his master, for the purpose of paying a turnpike toll on his journey about his master's business. Some days afterwards the prisoner was asked by his master if he had paid the toll. He said that he had not, having gone by another road by which he had evaded the turnpike, and that he had spent the money on beer for himself and his mates. The prisoner was convicted of larceny of the money, but it not appearing, on a case reserved as to whether these facts proved a larceny, that the question of felonious intent had been distinctly left to the jury, the conviction was quashed. R. v. Deering, 11 Cox, 298 (C. C. R.) Cockburn, C.J., Bramwell, B., and Montague Smith, J., seemed to be of opinion that the facts did not disclose any felonious intent. Id. 300, 301. And see R. v. Sturgess, 9 Cr. App. R. 120.

"Takes."]—To constitute stealing there must be a taking of the goods, either actual or constructive, on the ground that larceny involves a trespass. See 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1178. At common law it was not larceny for a wife to carry away and convert to her own use the goods of her husband, for husband and wife were regarded as one person in law, and consequently there could be no taking so as to constitute larceny; 1 Hale, 514; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 32; and the same if the husband were jointly interested with others in the property so taken. R. v. Willis, 1 Mood. 375. Nor at common law could the husband be guilty of larceny of his wife's goods, as her goods became his property on the marriage. 2 Bl. Com. by Kerr, 388. But the common law was very materially modified by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), under which a married woman may hold property in her own name separately from her husband, and he may, under certain circumstances set forth in s. 12 of that statute (ante, p. 48) be indicted for stealing it from his wife. And as the husband may be guilty of stealing from the wife, the wife may also be guilty of stealing from the husband, for "a wife doing an act with respect to any property of her husband, which, if done by the husband with respect to property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act, shall, in like manner, be liable to criminal proceedings by her husband." 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 16. These provisions are reproduced by the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5), c. 50, s. 36. See ante, p. 500.

Constructive taking.]—The expression "takes" is defined by the Larceny Act, 1916, to include constructive taking in obtaining the possession (1) by any trick; (2) by intimidation; (3) under a mistake on the part of the owner with knowledge on the part of the taker that possession has been so obtained; (4) by finding, where at the time of the finding the finder believes that the owner can be discovered by taking reasonable steps. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 1 (2) (i) (ante, p. 500).

As to the cases where, by a delivery of the goods, not only the possession, but the right of property also passes, it is well established that if the owner of his own free will, parts with the property in the goods taken, there can be no felony in the taking, however fraudulent were the means by which the delivery of the goods was procured; R. v. MacGrath, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 205; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 7: R. v. Lovell, 8 Q. B. D. 185; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 90; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1212; 2 East, P. C. 668; see also R. v. Russett, [1892] 2 Q. B. 312; 76 J. P. 743, per Lord Coleridge, L.C.J. (approved by the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Fisher, 74 J. P. 427; 22 Cox, 340), and Whitehorn Brothers v. Davison [1911] 1 K. B. 463, at p. 479, per Buckley, L.J., 80 L. J. (K. B.) 425. The ancient rule of law is respected in the definition of larceny in the Act of 1916, but it must be remembered that these authorities were for practical purposes undermined by s. 39 (2) of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914 (repealed and re-enacted by s. 44 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916 ante, p. 506), which provided that upon an indictment for larceny the defendant may be convicted of obtaining the property by false pretences where that offence is proved. The cases further establish the proposition that no subsequent conversion by the person in whom the property has thus vested can be construed into larceny, whatever the intent of the party may be. Where the defendant bought a horse, at a fair, of the prosecutor, to whom he was known, and having mounted the horse, said to the prosecutor that he would return immediately and pay him, to which the prosecutor answered, "Very well:" the defendant rode the horse away, and never returned; this was held to be no larceny, because the property, as well as the possession, was parted with. R. v. Harvey, 1 Leach, 467; 2 East, P. C. 669. So, where a woman obtained from the prosecutor, in the name of one of his neighbours, half a guinea's worth of silver, and said that she would return presently with the half-guinea, it was held not to be larceny for the same reason. R. v. Coleman, 2 East, P. C. 672. So, where A. allowed B. to take a sovereign away to get change for it, and he never returned, this was held no larceny of the sovereign. R. v. Thomas, 9 C. & P. 741. So, where the defendant sent a letter to the prosecutor in the name of another person, requesting the loan of £3 for a few days, and obtained the money accordingly; eleven of the judges held this to be no felony, because it appeared that the property in the money was intended to pass by the delivery. R. v. Atkinson, 2 East, P. C. 673. So, where the defendant obtained goods of a tradesman by means of a forged order from a customer. R. v. Adams, 1 Den. 38. And where the prosecutor was inveigled by a set of sharpers to bet with them, and, by a preconcerted trick, one of them won from him the money in question, which he paid, imagining it to have been won fairly: the judges held that it was no larceny, the prosecutor having parted with his property in the money under the idea that it had been fairly won. R. v. Nicholson, 2 Leach, 610. And where the goods are obtained not from the owner, but from his servant, who has an authority co-equal with his master, and parts with his master's goods, intending to part with the property in them, such goods cannot be said to be stolen, inasmuch as the servant intends to part with the property in them, and has authority to do so. R. v. Prince, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 150; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 8. If, however, the servant's authority is so limited, then he can only part with the possession and not with the property; if he is tricked out of the possession, the offence so committed will be larceny. In R. v. Longstreeth, 1 Mood. 137 (post, p. 523), the carrier's servant had no authority to part with the goods, except to the consignee. His authority was not to act generally in his master's business, but limited in that way. The offence was in that case held to be larceny on that ground, and this distinguishes it from R. v. Jackson, 1 Mood. 119, which the same judges, or at any rate some of them, had shortly before decided. There, the servant (infra), from whom the goods were obtained had a general authority to act for his master, and the person who obtained the goods was held not to be guilty of larceny. See the judgment of Blackburn, J., in R. v. Prince, L. R. 1 C. C. R. at p. 155; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 11. And therefore where a person obtained money from the cashier of a bank by presenting, knowing it to be forged, a forged order purporting to be drawn by a customer of the bank, this was held not to be larceny, because the cashier, in paying the money, was acting within the scope of his general authority. R. v. Prince, supra. So, where the defendant bought goods and desired them to be sent to him with a bill and a receipt, and the shopman who brought them left them, upon being paid for them by two bills, which, however, afterwards turned out to be mere fabrications; the judges held that this was not larceny, because the prosecutor had parted with the property, as well as the possession, upon receiving what was deemed at the time by his servant to be payment. R. v. Parkes, 2 Leach, 614; 2 East, P. C. 671. Where the servant of a pawnbroker, who had a general authority from his master to act in his business, delivered up a pledge to the pawner upon receiving a parcel, which he supposed to contain diamonds, and under that belief parted with the pledge entirely, but the parcel contained stones of no value, this was held to be no larceny. R. v. Jackson, 1 Mood. 119. And see R. v. Barnes, 2 Den. 59; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 34: R. v. Essex, Dears & B. 371; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 20.

1. Larceny by a trick.]—Where a man, having the animus furandi (see ante, p. 511), obtains, in pursuance thereof, possession of goods by some trick or artifice, the owner not intending to part with his entire right of property, but with the temporary possession only (Cr. L. Com. 4th Rep., p. 50), this is considered such a taking (even although there is a delivery in fact) as to constitute larceny: see 1 Hawk. c. 33, ss. 15-23; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1210 et seq. It is not larceny by a trick to obtain goods on credit without making any false statements. R. v. Jones, 74 J. P. 168; 4 Cr. App. R. 17. But where the defendant offered to give the prosecutor gold for bank-notes, and upon the prosecutor's laying down some bank-notes, for the purpose of having them changed for gold, the defendant took them up, and went away with them, promising to return immediately with the gold, but never in fact returned; Wood, B., said that the property in the notes had never been parted with at all, and left it to the jury to say, whether the defendant had the animus furandi at the time he took the notes, and said, that if they were of that opinion the case clearly amounted to larceny. R. v. Oliver, 4 Taunt. 274 cit.; 2 Leach, 1072; see R. v. Rodway, 9 C. & P. 784. The prisoner at a race-meeting made a bet with the prosecutor, laying odds against a particular horse, and the money for which the prosecutor backed the horse was deposited with the prisoner. The prosecutor admitted that he would have been satisfied although he did not receive back the same coins. The horse won, but while the race was being run the prisoner fraudulently went off with the money. It was held that as it appeared that the prosecutor parted with his money with the intention that in the event of the horse winning it should be repaid, while the prisoner obtained possession of the money fraudulently, never intending to repay it in any event, there was no contract by which the property in the money could pass to the prisoner, and therefore there was evidence of larceny by trick. Manisty, J., said, in giving judgment: "On the authorities it is settled law that if the owner of goods or money parts with the possession, and does not intend to pass the property, and there is at the time an intention to steal in the mind of the person who obtains the possession, that is evidence of larceny." R. v. Buckmaster, 20 Q. B. D. 182; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 25. This definition was adopted by Moulton, L.J., in Oppenheimer v. Frazer [1907] 2 K. B. 50; 76 L. J. (K. B.) 806, at p. 72, and was approved by the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Hilliard, 83 L. J. (K. B.) 439; 23 Cox, 617; 109 L. T. 750. The defendant agreed to discount a bill for the prosecutor, and the bill was given to him for that purpose; he told the prosecutor that if he then sent a person with him to his lodgings, he would give him the amount, deducting the discount and commission; a person was sent accordingly, but upon reaching the lodgings, the defendant left the messenger there, and went out on pretence of getting the money, but never returned: the judge left it to the jury to say whether the defendant obtained possession of the bill with intent to steal it, and whether the prosecutor meant to part with his property in the bill, before he should have received the money for it: the jury being of opinion in the affirmative on the first proposition, and in the negative on the second, convicted the defendant, and the judges afterwards held the conviction to be right. R. v. Aickles, 2 East, P. C. 675; 1 Leach, 294. Where the defendant obtained from a silversmith two cream-ewers, in order that the customer of the silversmith, with whom the defendant said he lived, might select which he liked best, and absconded with them, but the silversmith did not charge for either of the ewers, and did not at the time of the delivery intend to charge for either of them until he had ascertained which would be chosen, this was held by Bayley, J., to be larceny, because the possession only, and not the right of property, had been parted with. R. v. Davenport, M.S., 1 Archbold's Peel's Acts (3rd ed.) 271. So, where the prisoner went to a shop and said that A. wanted some shawls to look at, and the prosecutor gave her five shawls, which she converted to her own use, it was held by Patteson, J., that as the property in the shawls would continue in the prosecutor until the selection was made, it was larceny if A. did not send for them; but there being no evidence that A. did not send for them, the prisoner was acquitted, because it was assumed, in the absence of such evidence, that A. did send her, that she received the shawls properly, and that she only conceived the design of wrongfully converting them to her own use after she had rightfully obtained possession of them. R. v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1211. Where the defendant prevailed upon a tradesman to take goods to a particular place, under pretence that the price would then be paid for them, and afterwards induced him to leave the goods in the care of a third person, from whom the defendant got the goods without paying the price, the tradesman swore that he did not intend to part with the goods until they were paid for, and the jury found that the defendant, ab initio, intended to get the goods without paying for them; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Campbell, 1 Mood. 179. So where the defendant induced a tradesman to send his goods by a servant to a particular place, with change for a crown piece, and on the way met the servant, and giving him a counterfeit crown piece, induced him to part with the goods and change, which he had no authority to do without receiving payment; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Small, 8 C. & P. 46. So, where the prisoners ordered goods of the prosecutor, and the latter sent them to their house by his servant with strict injunctions not to part with them without receiving the price, and the prisoners gave the servant a cheque which they knew to be worthless, upon which he left the goods with them; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Stewart, 1 Cox, 174; followed in R. v. Brereton, 10 Cr. App. R. 201, where the prosecutor sent his son with the thing ordered, with instructions not to leave it without getting the money for it, and the son was induced by a trick to part with the possession. If the owner had himself carried the goods and parted with them as the servant did, no doubt it would have been a case of false pretences; or if the servant had had a general authority to act, it would have been the same as if the master acted. But in this instance he had a limited authority which he chose to exceed. If the prisoners intended to get possession of these goods by giving a piece of waste paper, which they had no reasonable ground to believe would be of use to anybody, and the servant had received positive instructions not to leave the goods without cash payment, the charge of larceny is made out. Per Alderson, B., in R. v. Stewart, supra. See also R. v. Longstreeth, 1 Mood. 137 (post, p. 523). So, where the defendant having bargained for goods, which, by the custom of trade, should have been paid for before they were taken away, took them away without the consent of the owner, and when he bargained for them did not intend to pay for them, but meant to get them into his own possession, and dispose of them for his own benefit; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Gilbert, 1 Mood. 185. And where the defendant, intending ab initio to get goods by fraud, had them put into his cart upon the express condition that they should be paid for before they were taken out of the cart, and then took them out of the cart without paying for them, and converted them; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Pratt, 1 Mood. 250; R. v. Cohen, 2 Den. 249: R. v. Stephens, 4 Cr. App. R. 52. The prosecutor sold goods to the prisoner, who agreed to pay ready money for them, and the goods were then delivered by the prosecutor to the prisoner, who then refused either to pay the money or restore the goods, having never intended to pay for them, and having meditated the fraud from the beginning; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Slowly, 12 Cox, 269 (C. C. R.). The accused went to a tailor and ordered a suit of clothes. A few days later he was fitted, and on a subsequent day he saw the clothes completed, and asked the tailor to send them on to him as he had forgotten his purse, and promised to pay on delivery. He received the clothes, with the bill, but shut the door in the face of the person delivering them, and never paid for them. It was held that this was larceny by a trick. R. v. Edmundson, 8 Cr. App. R. 107. So, obtaining money or goods by the practice of ring dropping (as it is termed) has been held to be larceny. Thus, where the defendant, in the presence of the prosecutor, picked up a purse in the street, containing a receipt for 147*l.* for a "rich brilliant diamond ring," and also the ring itself, it was then proposed that the ring should be given to the prosecutor, upon his depositing his watch and some money, as a security that he would return the ring as soon as his proportion of the value of it should be paid to him by the defendant; the prosecutor accordingly deposited his watch and money, which were taken away by some of the defendant's confederates; but the ring turned out to be of the value of 10*s.* only, and the watch and money were never returned: it was left to the jury to say, whether this was not an artful and preconcerted scheme to get possession of the prosecutor's watch and money; and the jury, being of that opinion, convicted the defendant. R. v. Patch, 1 Leach, 238; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1235. In R. v. Moore, 1 Leach, 314; 2 East, P. C. 679, the defendant being convicted of larceny under the same circumstances, and the case being reserved for the opinion of the judges, nine of them were of opinion that this practice of ring dropping amounted to larceny; and they distinguished it from the case of a loan; for here, although the possession was parted with, the property in the goods was not. See also R. v. Watson, 2 Leach, 640; 2 East, P. C. 680. On the same principle it has been held, that a gipsy who obtains and keeps money or goods by a false pretence of witchcraft, the person from whom she obtains them merely intending to part with the possession and expecting them to be returned, is guilty of larceny. R. v. Bunce, 1 F. & F. 523, Channell, B. Where the defendant, in the presence of the prosecutor, picked up a purse containing a watch chain and two seals, which the defendant and his confederate represented to be gold, and worth 18*l.*, and the prosecutor purchased the defendant's share for 7*l.*, intending to part with the property in the money as well as the possession of it, Coleridge, J., held that this was not larceny. R. v. Wilson, 8 C. & P. 111. So, where the prisoner, by means of what is known as the purse trick, induced the prosecutor to give him a shilling for a purse, by showing the prosecutor three shillings, and then making it appear as if the prisoner had dropped them into the purse whereas he had in fact only dropped three halfpence into the purse, this was held not to be larceny but false pretences. R. v. Solomons, 17 Cox, 93 (C. C. R.). In R. v. Ward, 64 J. P. 776, Fulton, Recorder, suggested that the purse trick should be dealt with under the Vagrancy Acts and not by indictment for larceny. Where the defendants decoyed the prosecutor into a public-house, and then introduced the play of cutting, and one of them prevailed on the prosecutor, who did not play on his own account, to cut the cards for him; and then under the pretence that the prosecutor had cut the cards for himself, and lost, another of them swept his money off the table, and went away with it, it was considered to be a case in which it should be left to the jury to determine quo animo the money was obtained; and that it would be felony should they find that the money was obtained upon a preconcerted plan to steal it. R. v. Horner, 1 Leach, 270; Cald. 295. So, where the prosecutor was induced, by a preconcerted plan, to deposit his money with one of the defendants, as a deposit upon a pretended bet, and the stake-holder afterwards, upon pretence that one of his confederates had won the wager, handed the money over to him; and it was left to the jury to say, whether, at the time the money was taken, there was not a plan that it should be kept, under the false colour of winning the bet, and the jury found that there was: this was held to be larceny; because at the time the defendants obtained the money from the prosecutor he parted with the possession only, and the property was to pass eventually only if the other party won the wager. R. v. Robson, R. & R. 413. See R. v. Buckmaster, 20 Q. B. D. 182; 57 L. J. (M. C.) 25 (ante, p. 518). The prisoner agreed at a fair to sell a horse to the prosecutor for 23*l.*, of which 8*l.* was to be paid to the prisoner at once, and the remainder upon delivery of the horse. Prosecutor handed 8*l.* to the prisoner, who signed a receipt for the money; by the receipt it was stated that the balance was to be paid upon delivery. The prisoner never delivered the horse to the prosecutor, but caused it to be removed from the fair under circumstances from which the jury inferred that he had never intended to deliver it. It was held that the prisoner was rightly convicted of larceny by a trick of the 8*l.*, on the ground that the prosecutor had not intended to part with his property in the 8*l.* until the prisoner had fulfilled his part of the bargain, which he never intended to do. R. v. Russett [1892] 2 Q. B. 312; 17 Cox, 534; 67 L. T. 124; 56 J. P. 743. This is a strong case, for the prosecutor in the course of his evidence said, "I never expected to see the 8*l.* back, but to have the horse." Id. Where two men, J. and W., acting in concert, and intending to defraud the prosecutor, entered his shop, and by means of an artifice induced him to draw a cheque on his banker for 42*l.*, payable in the name of the prisoner J., and then to accompany J. to the bank to see it paid, on the understanding that they were to return to finish the transaction by the payment to the prosecutor of 42 sovereigns, and that the prisoner W. was to remain at the shop till they went to and returned from the bank; at the bank, by the prosecutor's desire, and in his presence, the banker handed four 10*l.* notes and two sovereigns to the prisoner J.; the prosecutor and J. then left the bank together, and while on their way back to the shop J. absconded with the notes and two sovereigns, which he and W., who had in the meantime gone off from the shop, appropriated to their own use; this was held to be a larceny by both prisoners of the notes and the two sovereigns, the prosecutor never having parted with the property in and possession of them, and J. having no more than the bare custody of them until the payment to the prosecutor of the 42 sovereigns. R. v. Johnson, 2 Den. 310; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 32. Where the defendant by false representations induced the prosecutrix to buy from him a dress for 25*s.*, promising that if she would do so he would give her another dress worth 12*s.*; then took a guinea from her hand, gave her a dress worth much less than a guinea, and refused to give her the other dress he had promised: this, it being found by the jury that it was a part of the defendant's scheme to obtain the money by means of a pretended sale, was held to be larceny. R. v. Morgan, Dears. 395;

6 Cox, 408. Where the prisoner went into a shop and asked for change for half a crown, and the shopman gave him two shillings and sixpence, the prisoner held out the half-crown, and the shopman just took hold of it by the edge, but never actually got it into his custody, and the prisoner ran away with the change and the half-crown; upon an indictment for stealing the two shillings and sixpence, Parke, J., held it to be larceny, but doubted whether an indictment would lie for stealing the half-crown. R. v. Williams, 6 C. & P. 390. So also, where A. and B. went into a shop, and A. put down sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper, and asked the prosecutrix to give him one shilling in change, upon which she took one shilling from the till and put it on the counter beside the sixpence in silver and the sixpence in copper; A. then said to the prosecutrix that she might as well give him a florin and take it all; she took a florin from the till and put that on the counter, expecting she was to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money, and the prisoner went away with the florin; the prosecutrix did not discover her mistake till she was putting the change into the till, but at the same moment B. distracted her attention by asking the price of some article: it was held that the prosecutrix never intended to part with her property in the florin till she had received two shillings of the prisoner's money, and that the offence was larceny. R. v. McKale, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 125; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 97, approved in R. v. Buckmaster, ante, p. 518. F., in execution of a design concocted between himself and S., took two bicycles to an auctioneer for sale. At the auction S., by arrangement with F., bid for the bicycles, and they were knocked down to him. F. then took advantage of the practice of the auctioneer to pay the vendor before he received the purchase money, and applied for and received the amount bid by S., who left without paying the auctioneer. It was held that the offence was not larceny by a trick, but false pretences or conspiracy to defraud. R. v. Fisher, 103 L. T. 320; 22 Cox, 340; 74 J. P. 427; 26 T. L. R. 589; 5 Cr. App. R. 102; where R. v. Russett and R. v. McKale, supra, were considered and followed by the Court of Criminal Appeal. F. entered a shop and asked for twopennyworth of tobacco, and gave the shopwoman a half-sovereign, which she put down on the counter. While she was getting change F. took back the half-sovereign and received the change, 9*s*. 10*d*. He then asked her if she could give him a sovereign for ten shillings and half a sovereign. She refused, and missing the half-sovereign, asked F. where it was, and he gave it back to her. Held, that F. had been guilty of larceny of the half-sovereign, and not merely of an attempt to steal. R. v. Greenaway, 72 J. P. 389 (C. C. A.). So where two persons by a series of tricks fraudulently induced a barmaid to pay over money of her master to them without having received from them in return the proper change, the barmaid having no authority to pay over the money without receiving the proper change, and having no intention of, or knowledge that she was so doing, it was held that they were guilty of larceny. R. v. Hollis, 12 Q. B. D. 25; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 38. Where a hosier, by the desire of the defendant, took a parcel of silk stockings to his lodging, out of which the defendant chose six pairs, which were laid on the back of a chair, the defendant then sent the prosecutor back to his shop for some articles, and, while he was absent, absconded with the stockings; the judges held that this amounted to larceny, the defendant having clearly obtained possession of the goods animo furandi. R. v. Sharpless, 1 Leach, 92; 2 East, P. C. 675. So where the prosecutor having told his servant in the defendant's hearing to go to S. and pay him some money, the defendant offered to take it, falsely stating that he lived a few doors from S., which statement induced the prosecutor to deliver the money to the defendant to take to S., instead of which he appropriated it to his own use; and the jury, finding the defendant guilty, stated that their verdict was founded on the belief that the defendant had obtained the money by a trick, intending at the time to appropriate it to his own use; the conviction was held right. R. v. Brown, Dears. 616. Where the prisoner went to an inn, on a fair-day, and desired the ostler to bring out his horse, and, upon the latter saying he did not know which was his horse, went into the stable, and pointing to a mare, said it was his, and the ostler brought out the mare, which the prisoner attempted to mount, but could not, the mare being frightened; upon which he desired the ostler to lead the mare out of the yard, which was done; but, before he could mount, the prisoner was detected and secured: Garrow, B., held this to be larceny. R. v. Pitman, 2 C. & P. 423. If a man, animo furandi, sues out a replevin, and by that means obtains the possession of another man's horse, and rides away with it: or by a fraudulent ejectment gets possession of another's house, and carries away the goods out of it, he is guilty of larceny. 1 Hale, 507; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 12; 3 Co. Inst. 108: and see R. v. Farre, (Kel. J.) 43; 2 Leach, 1064 n. Where the defendant obtained the mail bags from the post-office, pretending that he was the mail guard, and then ran away with them; the jury, being of opinion that he got possession of them with intent to steal them, found him guilty; and the judges held the conviction to be right. R. v. Pearce, 2 East, P. C. 603. In this case the property did not pass, for the postmaster had no property in the mail bags to part with. 2 East, P. C. 673. Where the defendant, animo furandi, obtained goods from the servant of a carrier, by falsely pretending to be the person to whom the goods were directed, it was held to be larceny; because the servant had no authority to part with the goods but to the right person. R. v. Longstreeth, 1 Mood. 137. And where a carrier's servant left goods at the prisoner's house by mistake, but without any inducement from the prisoner, who, afterwards, knowing that they had been left by mistake, and did not belong to him, converted them to his own use; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Little, 10 Cox, 559. So, where the prosecutor, intending to sell his horse, sent his servant with it to a fair, but the servant had no authority to sell or deal with it in any way, and the defendant by fraud induced the servant to part with the possession of the horse, under colour of an exchange for another, intending all the while to steal it; this was held to be larceny. R. v. Sheppard, 9 C. & P. 121, Coleridge, J. T. J., the owner of a watch, sent it to be regulated to A., the person from whom he had bought it, and who had no authority to deliver it to anybody but the owner. The defendant fraudulently induced A. to believe that T. J. desired the watch to be sent by post to the postmaster at B., in a letter; and the watch having been so sent, the defendant personated T. J., and induced the postmaster to deliver it to him as T. J. It was held that, on the receipt of the watch by the postmaster, the special property of A. ceased, and the general property of the owner, being unincumbered, drew to it the possession; that the postmaster had only the custody of the watch for the purpose of delivering it to the owner, and so, his possession being the possession of the owner, the obtaining of it by the defendant was a larceny from T. J. R. v. Kay, Dears. & B. 231; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 119. Where an "automatic box," the property of a company, was placed in a public passage, and was so constructed that upon a penny being placed in it a cigarette was ejected from it, and the prisoner, instead of putting a penny in the box, put into it a metal disc of the size of a penny, and so obtained a cigarette, it was held that he was guilty of larceny. R. v. Hands, 16 Cox, 188 (C. C. R.). Prosecutor was owner of a coal yard, at which coal and slack were sold; the price of slack being about half the price of coal. By the custom of the yard, with which the prisoner was acquainted, the carts were weighed on entering the yard empty, and after being loaded were again taken to the machine and weighed, and the weight of the coal on the cart being thus ascertained, the price was paid before the carts were permitted to leave the yard. The prisoner went to the yard with his cart, and asked for a load of coal, which was loaded on his cart by the prosecutor's servant. After the cart was loaded, the prisoner placed slack over the coal so as to conceal it, and took the cart to the weighing-machine. Being asked by the man at the weighing-machine what he had in his cart, he replied "Slack." The cart was then weighed, and, the contents having been paid for after the rate of slack, was driven away by the prisoner. It was held, that if the prisoner went into the yard with the preconceived plan of obtaining the coal by the above artifice, he might be convicted of stealing the coal. R. v. Bramley, 31 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 11; L. & C. 21; 8 Cox, 468. Where the defendant, by artifice, obtained possession of a request-note at the India-House, by means of which he obtained a permit for a chest of tea belonging to the prosecutor (to whom he was a perfect stranger), and the chest of tea was thereupon delivered to him: the judges held this to be larceny, notwithstanding the possession had been obtained by means of a regular request-note and permit. R. v. Hench, R. & R. 163. A hosier in the Haymarket, having sent his apprentice with a parcel of stockings to Cheapside, the defendant met him on Ludgate Hill, and asked him where he was going; the apprentice answered, "To Mr. Heath's": the defendant replied that he was the person, desired the boy to give him the parcel, and gave him a small parcel in return, to take home to his master: the boy accordingly gave him the parcel; but the parcel he took from him for his master contained nothing but old rags of no value: the judges held this to be larceny. R. v. Wilkins, 1 Leach, 520; 2 East, P. C. 673; and see Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459; 47 L. J. (Q. B.) 481. Where the prosecutor supplied the accused with bread, being told that it could not be paid for till after it had been sold by the accused, and the accused failed to return to the prosecutor with the money after he had sold the bread, it was held that a conviction for larceny by a trick was unsafe, and it was quashed. R. v. Jones, 74 J. P. 168. It is incumbent on the judge to direct the jury as to the legal requisites to constitute the offence, and where this has not been done a conviction may be quashed. R. v. Hilliard, 83 L. J. (K. B.) 439; 23 Cox, 617; 9 Cr. App. R. 171.

Distinction between larceny and obtaining by false pretences.]—The offence of larceny by a trick in some cases so nearly resembles that of obtaining by false pretences as to create some difficulty in distinguishing them upon principle. Between the crime of false pretences and that of larceny the most intelligible distinction seems to be this:—In larceny the owner of the thing stolen has no intention to part with his property therein to the person taking it, although he may intend to part with the possession; in false pretences the owner does intend to part with his property in the money or chattel, but it is obtained from him by fraud. White v. Garden, 20 L. J. (N. S.) C. P. 166; 10 C. B. 919, 927, Talfourd, J.: R. v. Barnes, 2 Den. 59; 20 L. J. (M. C.) 34: R. v. Robins, 6 Cox, 420; Dears. 418: Oppenheimer v. Frazer [1907] 2 K. B. 50; 76 L. J. (K. B.) 806; 97 L. T. 3; 23 T. L. R. 410: Whitehorn Bros. v. Davison [1911] 1 K. B. 463, per Buckley, L.J., at p. 479; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 425; 104 L. T. 234. See also R. v. Russett [1892] 2 Q. B. 312; 56 J. P. 743 (ante, p. 521), approved in R. v. Fisher, 74 J. P. 427; 22 Cox, 340 (ante, p. 522), R. v. Wilks, 10 Cr. App. R. 16. "If," says Parke, B., "a person, through the fraudulent representations of another, delivers to him a chattel, intending to pass the property in it, the latter cannot be indicted for larceny, but only for obtaining the chattel under false pretences." Powell v. Hoyland, 6 Ex. 67, 70: R. v. Adams, R. & R. 225: Cundy v. Lindsay, supra: Bentley v. Vilmont, 12 App. Cas. 471; 57 L. J. (Q. B.) 18. The distinction between larceny and obtaining by false pretences is now little more than academic, because of the provisions of 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44, sub-ss. 3, 4 (ante, p. 506).

2. Larceny by intimidation.]—Where a man, having the animus furandi (see ante, p. 511), obtains possession of goods by frightening the owner, as by threatening him with temporary imprisonment unless he delivers up his goods, and the owner does deliver them under the influence of the fear inspired by this threat, this is considered such a taking (although there is a delivery in fact) as to constitute larceny. R. v. MacGrath, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 205; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 7: R. v. Lovell, 8 Q. B. D. 185; 50 L. J. (M. C.) 90. The prisoner, acting as auctioneer at a mock auction, knocked down a piece of cloth to the prosecutrix for 26*s*., she not having bid, as he knew. The prosecutrix denied that she had bid; the prisoner asserted that she had, and must pay before she could leave the auction room. The prosecutrix tried to go out of the room, when a confederate of the prisoner prevented her doing so. She then in fear paid the 26*s*. and took away the cloth which was given to her. These facts were held to constitute a larceny of the 26*s*. R. v. MacGrath, supra. The learned judges who decided this case expressed a doubt whether upon these facts the prisoner might not have been indicted for robbery, but they all agreed that even if a robbery had in fact been committed, that did not preserve the prisoner from the liability to be convicted of larceny, as a robbery includes a larceny. See the judgment of Blackburn, J., in R. v.

MacGrath, supra. As to whether the facts in that case would have sustained an indictment for robbery, see R. v. Knewland, 2 Leach, 721 : R. v. Wood, 2 East, P. C. 732, from which it would seem that they would not.

3. Larceny under a mistake on the part of the owner.]—The third kind of constructive taking, expressly included in the statutory definition of larceny (ante, p. 500), is the case where the possession is obtained under a mistake on the part of the owner, with knowledge on the part of the taker that possession has been so obtained. A good illustration of this form of larceny is afforded by the case of R. v. Middleton, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 38; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 73. In that case the prisoner was a depositor in a post-office savings bank, in which 11*s.* stood to his credit. He gave notice in the ordinary form to withdraw 10*s.*, and a warrant for that amount was issued to him, and a letter of advice was sent to the post-office at N. to pay him 10*s.* He went to that office and handed his deposit-book and the warrant to the clerk. The clerk, instead of referring to the proper letter of advice for 10*s.*, referred by mistake to another letter of advice for £8 16*s.* 10*d.*, and placed the latter amount upon the counter. The clerk entered the amount paid, £8 16*s.* 10*d.*, in the prisoner's deposit-book and stamped it. The prisoner took up the money and went away, having at the moment of taking it up an animus furandi, and knowing the money to be the money of the Postmaster-General. Upon these facts, it was held by eleven of the judges that the prisoner was guilty of larceny, and by four that he was not. Seven of the eleven held that, even assuming the clerk to have the same authority to part with the possession of and property in the money which the Postmaster-General, the owner, would have had, the mere delivery under a mistake, though with the intention of passing the property, did not pass the property, and that as the property did not actually pass, although it was intended to pass, and as the prisoner took up the money animo furandi, there was both a taking and a stealing within the definition of larceny. Three of the eleven held the prisoner guilty of larceny, on the ground that the clerk had only a limited authority to part with the money to the person named in the letter of advice, and, therefore, no property passed to the prisoner, and the prisoner took up the money animo furandi. One of the eleven held the prisoner guilty on the ground that the mistaken act of the clerk in placing the money on the counter stopped short of placing it completely in the prisoner's possession, and that his subsequently taking it up was larceny. The minority, consisting of four judges, who held that the prisoner was not guilty, based their opinion on the ground that the clerk had a general authority to part with the property in the money, and that he intended, although acting under a mistake, to part with such property to the prisoner at the time he handed over the money to him, and that having such general authority and such intention, and acting upon them, there was no felonious taking by the prisoner without the consent and against the will of the owner. See also R. v. Hollis, 12 Q. B. D. 25; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 38 (ante, p. 522) : R. v. Hehir, 18 Cox, 267 (C. C. R. Ir.). As to the effect on the right to a restitution order of the transfer of property in goods by means not amounting to larceny, see ante, pp. 293, 295.

Whether, when property is given by the owner to a person under a mistake of which the latter was not aware when he received it, and afterwards, on finding out the mistake, he fraudulently converts such property to his own use, such person is guilty of larceny, is a question which, after having been argued before fourteen judges, still remains unsettled, seven of their lordships having answered it in the affirmative, and seven in the negative. R. v. Ashwell, 16 Q. B. D. 190; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 65; and see R. v. Riley, post, p. 535. The facts of R. v. Ashwell were that the prisoner asked the prosecutor for the loan of a shilling. The prosecutor gave the prisoner a sovereign, believing it to be a shilling, and the prisoner took the coin under the same belief. Some time afterwards he discovered that the coin was a sovereign, and then fraudulently appropriated it to his own use. The prisoner having been convicted of larceny of the sovereign, it was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved that the prisoner had not been guilty of larceny as a bailee, but the Court being equally divided as to whether the prisoner had been guilty of larceny at common law, the conviction stood. Id. R. v. Ashwell does not affect the old rule of law that the innocent receipt of a chattel, coupled with its subsequent fraudulent appropriation, does not amount to larceny. R. v. Flowers, 16 Q. B. D. 643; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 179. See Stephen, Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.), p. 261.

4. Larceny of goods found.]—It was at one time considered that if a man lost goods, and another found them, and, not knowing the owner, converted them to his own use, this was not larceny, 3 Co. Inst. 108; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 2, even although he denied the finding of them or secreted them. 1 Hale, 506. But this doctrine was always treated as subject to narrow limitations. Id.: 2 East, P. C. 664: R. v. Kerr, 8 C. & P. 176: R. v. Reed, C. & Mar. 306: R. v. Peters, 1 C. & K. 245: R. v. Mole, Id. 417. And the true rule of law resulting from the authorities on this subject has been pronounced to be, that, "if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take the entire dominion over them, really believing, when he takes them, that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them, with the like intent, though lost, or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny." R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den. 387; 2 C. & K. 831; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 140; 13 J. P. 459: R. v. Wood, 3 Cox, 453: R. v. Dixon, Dears. 580; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 39: R. v. Shea, 7 Cox, 147 (C. C. R. Ir.): R. v. Christopher, Bell, 27; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 35. The rule as stated above was approved by the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Mortimer, 99 L. T. 204; 1 Cr. App. R. 20; 72 J. P. 349. And where property has been left by a passenger in a train or coach it would seem always to have been treated as larceny, if a servant of the railway company or coach owner appropriated it instead of taking it to the lost property office. See R. v. Pierce, 6 Cox, 117. In R. v. Moore, L. & C. 1; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 77, on an indictment for stealing a bank-note, the jury found that the prosecutor had dropped the note in the defendant's shop; that the defendant had found it there; that at the time he picked it up he did not know, nor had he reasonable means of knowing, who the owner was; that he afterwards acquired knowledge who the owner was, and after that converted the note to his own use; that he intended, when he found the note, to take it to his own use, and deprive the owner of it, whoever he was; and that he believed, when he found it, that the owner could be found. It was held that, upon these findings, the defendant was rightly convicted of larceny. It is to be observed, that in the last-mentioned case, although the defendant at the time he found the bank-note did not know, nor had reasonable means of knowing, who the owner was, yet he did believe at the time of the finding that the owner could be found. The case of R. v. Glyde, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 139; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 107, shows that the belief by the prisoner at the time of the finding of the chattel that he could find the owner is a necessary ingredient in the offence, and that it is not sufficient that he intended to appropriate the chattel at the time of finding it, and that he acquired the knowledge of who the owner was before he converted it to his own use. In that case the prisoner found a sovereign on the highway, believing it had been accidentally lost; but, nevertheless, with the knowledge that he was doing wrong, he at once determined to appropriate it, notwithstanding it should become known to him who the owner was. The owner was speedily made known to him, and the prisoner refused to give up the sovereign. There was, however, no evidence that he believed, at the time of finding the sovereign, that he could ascertain who the owner was, and the prisoner was therefore held not to be guilty of larceny. See also R. v. White, 23 Cox, 190; 107 L. T. 528; 76 J. P. 384. In R. v. Deaves, 11 Cox, 227; Ir. Rep. 3 C. L. 306, the facts were that the prisoner's child, having found six sovereigns in the street, brought them to the prisoner, who counted them and told some bystanders that the child had found a sovereign. The prisoner and the child then went down the street to the place where the child had found the money, and found a half-sovereign and a bag. On the same evening, about two hours after the finding, the prisoner was told that a woman had lost money, upon which the prisoner told her informant to mind her own business and gave her half a sovereign. It was held by the majority of the Irish Court of Criminal Appeal, that this case could not be distinguished from R. v. Glyde, supra, that there was nothing to show that at the time the child brought her the money the prisoner knew the property had an owner, or, at all events, to show that she was under the impression that the owner could be found, and that therefore the conviction of the prisoner for larceny must be quashed. The proper question to be put to the jury is not whether they are satisfied that the prisoner could have found the owner, but whether they are satisfied that the prisoner himself believed that he could have found the owner. R. v. Knight, 12 Cox, 102 (C. C. R.). It is clearly larceny, if the defendant at the time he finds and appropriates the lost property knows the owner; and, therefore, where a bureau was given to a carpenter to repair, and he found money secreted in it, which he kept and converted to his own use, it was held to be a larceny. Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. 405; 2 Leach, 952. So if a hackney coachman converts to his own use a parcel left by a passenger in his coach by mistake, it is felony, if he knows the owner, or if he took him or set him down at any particular place where he might have inquired for him. R. v. Wynne, 2 East, P. C. 664; 1 Leach, 413: R. v. Lamb, 2 East, P. C. 664; R. v. Sears, 1 Leach, 415 n. So, in every case where the property is not, properly speaking, lost, but only mislaid, under circumstances which would enable the owner to know where to look for and find it (as where a purchaser at a stall of the defendant in a market left his purse on the stall), the person who fraudulently appropriates property so mislaid is guilty of larceny. R. v. West, Dears. 402; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 4. Where a person purchased at an auction a bureau, in which he afterwards discovered, in a secret drawer, a purse of money, which he appropriated to his own use, it was held, that, if he had express notice that the bureau only, and not its contents, if any, were sold to him, or if he had no reason to believe that anything more than the bureau itself was sold, the abstraction of the money was a felonious taking, and he was guilty of larceny: but that, if he had reasonable ground for believing that he bought the bureau with its contents, if any, he had a colourable right to the property, and it was no larceny. Merry v. Green, 7 M. & W. 623; 10 L. J. (M. C.) 154. And in every case in which there is any mark upon the property by which the owner may be traced, or means of knowing who the owner is, and the finder, instead of restoring the property, converts it to his own use, such conversion will amount to larceny. R. v. Preston, 2 Den. 353; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 41; 15 J. P. 802: R. v. Pope, 6 C. & P. 346: R. v. Mole, 1 C. & K. 417: R. v. Mortimer, 72 J. P. 349. If at the time of the finding the defendant had the means of knowing who the owner was, or reasonably believed that he could be found, his subsequent retention or appropriation of the property, with such means of knowledge, may be evidence of such a conversion even if it be not shown that he meant to steal the property when it got first into his hands. R. v. Mortimer, supra. But see R. v. Preston, supra: R. v. York, 1 Den. 335; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 38; 2 C. & K. 841: R. v. Dixon (ante, p. 527): R. v. Christopher (ante, p. 527): R. v. Matthews, 12 Cox, 489; 29 J. P. 596 (C. C. R.). A boy having found a lost cheque, the prisoner by some pretence got it from him, and kept it in hopes of getting a reward, but not being satisfied with the reward offered by the owner, he refused to deliver it either to the owner or to the boy. Under this state of facts it was held that the prisoner could not be convicted of stealing the cheque either from the owner or the boy. R. v. Gardner, L. & C. 243; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 35; 9 Cox, 253.

Where the finder of a lost purse containing money and documents retained it, not feloniously but in the hope of a reward, and showed it to the prisoner in order to get his opinion as to the amount of the reward likely to be offered, and for this purpose handed the purse and its contents to the prisoner to examine, and the prisoner retained the purse and its contents against the will of the finder, it was held that the prisoner could be convicted of larceny on a count laying the property in the finder. R. v. Swinson, 64 J. P. 72, Bosanquet, Common Serjeant.

Things abandoned.]—Things of which the ownership has been abandoned are not capable of being stolen. 2 East, P. C. 606; Steph. Dig. C. L. (2nd ed.) 253. If there is any ground for supposing that the accused may have believed the article found to have been abandoned by its owner, the jury must be carefully directed with regard to the matter, since, if the jury find that belief as a fact, the accused is not guilty. See R. v. White, 76 J. P. 384; 23 Cox, 190; 107 L. T. 528.

Delivery of physical, without legal, possession.]—If a servant, who has merely the care and oversight of the goods of his master, as the butler of plate, the shepherd of sheep, and the like, embezzle them, this is a larceny, even at common law: 1 Hale, 506; because the goods, at the time they are taken, are deemed in law to be in the possession of the master, the possession of the servant in such a case being the possession of the master. It was the duty of the prisoner, who was in the prosecutor's service as foreman, to enter weekly on a pay-sheet the amount due to each workman for the week's wages, to present this sheet to the cashier, and, the total amount due to the several workmen having been reckoned up, to obtain such total amount from the cashier, and to pay thereout the amounts due to the respective workmen. The prisoner, intending at the time to defraud his master, falsely represented on the pay-sheet that 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* was due to a certain workman, whereas a sum of 1*l.* 8*s.* only was due to him, and having obtained the total amount for the week from the cashier, which included such sum of 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, fraudulently appropriated the difference of 2*s.* 4*d.* to his own use. This was held to be larceny of the 2*s.* 4*d.*, for although it had been obtained by the prisoner from the cashier by a false pretence, it was merely handed to the prisoner as the servant of the master, and continued the property and in the constructive possession of the master. R. v. Cooke, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 295; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 68. Where a person employed to drive cattle, or to take them to a particular place for a special purpose, and bring them back, sells them, it is larceny; for he has the custody merely, and not the right to the possession: R. v. Stock, 1 Mood. 87: R. v. M'Namee, 1 Mood. 368; although the intention to convert them was not conceived until after they were delivered to him: R v. Harvey, 9 C. & P. 353, Alderson, B.: R. v. Jackson, 2 Mood. 32: see R. v. Goode, C. & Mar. 582, Patteson, J.: R. v. Jones, Id. 611, Cresswell, J.: R. v. Smith, 1 C. & K. 423, Coleridge, J. Where the defendant, who was carter to the prosecutor, went away with and disposed of his master's cart, it was held to be felony. R. v. Robinson, 2 East, P. C. 565. Where the defendant, a porter to the prosecutor, was sent by his master to deliver goods to a customer, and, instead of doing so, sold them, the judges held this to be felony. R. v. Bass, 2 East, P. C. 566. The defendant, foreman and shopkeeper to the prosecutor, not residing in the house with him, but merely attending there in the daytime, received from his master a bill of exchange, with directions to send it enclosed in a letter to J. S. in London; the defendant absconded with the bill, and the judges held this to be felony. R. v. Paradise, 2 East, P. C. 565. So, if money or a valuable security (as a cheque drawn by the prosecutor on a banker: R. v. Heath, 2 Mood. 33) is given by a master to his servant to carry to another, or to purchase goods with, and the servant applies it to his own use, it is larceny. R. v. Lavender, 2 East, P. C. 566; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1366: R. v. Beaman, C. & Mar. 595, Patteson, J. So, if a man, having purchased corn on board a vessel, sends his clerk or lighterman with a barge for the purpose of landing it, and the clerk or lighterman misappropriates a part of it, this has been held larceny. R. v. Abrahat, 2 Leach, 824 : R. v. Spears, 2 Leach, 825; 2 East. P. C. 568. So, where the servant of a master carman, employed to cart goods, by collusion with others suffered the goods, and the cart, to be taken away, it was held to be larceny in the servant; and to be immaterial whether the property were laid in the bailee or the original owner. R. v. Harding, R. & R. 125. So, where a servant got ten guineas from her master, in order to get silver for them, and, instead of doing so, ran away with the guineas, it was held to be larceny. R. v. Atkinson, 1 Leach, 302 n. Even where a confidential clerk to a merchant, who had authority to get his master's bills discounted, and had the general management of his cash concerns, took a bill of exchange, unindorsed, got it discounted, and absconded with the proceeds of it, it was held to be felony. R. v. Chipchase, 2 Leach, 699; 2 East, P. C. 567; and see R. v. Murray, 1 Leach, 344. In Farquharson v. King [1902] App. Cas. 325; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 667, a firm of merchants warehoused with a dock company their timber imported by them, and instructed the dock company to accept all transfer or delivery orders signed by a particular clerk, who had a limited authority to make sales to known customers. The clerk under an assumed name fraudulently sold his master's timber to K., who did not know the firm nor the clerk under his real name. Halsbury, L.C., held this to be a clear case of larceny by the clerk. Where the defendant, a clerk and cashier in a banking-house, made false entries in the books to the credit of a customer, then obtained the customer's cheque for the sum thus falsely placed to his credit, and paid the amount of the cheque to himself by certain bank-notes, entering the payment in the books as being made to "a man"; this was held by the judges to be a larceny of the bank-notes. R. v. Hammon, R & R. 221; 2 Leach, 1083; 4 Taunt. 304; 13 R. R. 596. So, if a sheriff's officer clandestinely sell, for his own use, part of the goods which he has seized under a fi. fa., he is guilty of larceny, because he has the custody of the goods merely, like a servant, and has not the legal possession. R. v. Eastall, 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1288, 1360. An unauthorized gift by the servant of his master's goods is as much a felony as if he sold or pawned them. R. v. White, 9 C. & P. 344. And where a third party receives goods from a servant under colour of a pretended sale, knowing that the servant has no authority to sell them, and is in fact defrauding his master, this is larceny in both. R. v. Hornby, 1 C. & K. 305, Coltman, J. This case was approved in R. v. Tideswell [1905] 2 K. B. 273; 74 L. J. (K. B.) 725. The prisoner was in the habit of buying from time to time from a manufacturing company portions of the accumulated ashes of the company's works, at an agreed price per ton. The company's weigher fraudulently and in collusion with the prisoner weighed and delivered to the prisoner 32 tons 13 cwt. of the ashes, and entered the weight in the company's book as being 31 tons 3 cwt. only. Held, that on these facts the prisoner was rightly convicted of larceny of 1 ton 10 cwt. But where goods, of which the master has never been in possession, are delivered to the servant for the master's use, and the servant instead of delivering them to his master, by depositing them in his house, or the like, converts them to his own use, this is held not to be larceny at common law. 2 East,

P. C. 568. Therefore, if a shopman receives money from a customer of his master, and, instead of putting it into the till, secretes it : R. v. Bull, 2 Leach, 841, cit.; or, if a banker's clerk receives money at the counter, and, instead of putting it into the proper drawer, purloins it; R. v. Bazeley, 2 Leach, 835; or receives a bond for the purpose of being deposited in the bank, and, instead of depositing it, converts it to his own use : R. v. Waite, 1 Leach, 28; 2 East, P. C. 570; in these cases it has been held that the clerk or shopman is not guilty of larceny. See post, p. 614, tit. Embezzlement. So, where a servant was sent by his master to get silver for a 5*l.* note, which he did, and absconded with the silver, it was held not to be larceny, because the silver had never been in the possession of his master, except by the hands of the servant. R. v. Sullens, 1 Mood. 129. And where the prosecutor, having employed the defendant to purchase Exchequer bills for him, gave him a cheque upon his bankers for the amount, and the defendant received the amount of the cheque in bank-notes, and absconded, it was held not to amount to a larceny of the notes, because the prosecutor never had possession of them except by the hands of the defendant. R. v. Walsh, R. & R. 215; 2 Leach, 1054; 4 Taunt. 258. What is a sufficient delivery to the master for this purpose must depend upon the nature of the goods. Thus, the putting down, by the servant, of a load of hay which the master had sent him for, at the master's stable door, was held a sufficient delivery to the master to make the servant guilty of larceny in then appropriating a part of it to his own use. R. v. Hayward, 1 C. & K. 518, Tindal, C.J.

If the owner of goods delivers them to another, but is present all the time they are in the other's possession, and there is no intention on the part of the owner to relinquish his dominion over them by such delivery, the owner still retains the possession in law, notwithstanding this delivery; and if the person to whom he has so delivered them makes away with them and converts them to his own use, he will be guilty of larceny. 2 East, P. C. 683, 684; 1 Hawk. c. 30, s. 2. As, for instance, if the owner gives the goods to a man to carry and accompanies him at the same time—if the man runs away with the goods, he is clearly guilty of larceny. The law laid down in this paragraph was cited with approval, and formed the ground of decision in R. v. Thompson, L. & C. 225; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 53. In that case a lady, wishing to get a railway ticket, finding a crowd at the pay place, asked the prisoner, who was nearer to the pay place, to get a ticket for her, and handed him a sovereign to pay for it. He took the sovereign, intending to steal it, and immediately ran off with it. On these facts he was held to have been guilty of larceny at common law, as the lady being present retained the dominion and possession in point of law, after she had handed the sovereign to him for the intended purpose. Id.

So, if a man have the bare charge or special use of the goods of another, this does not divest the owner of the possession in law; and if the person who thus has the use of them fraudulently converts them, it is larceny. As, for instance, if a guest robs his inn or tavern of a piece of plate, it is larceny; for he hath not the possession delivered to him, but merely the use. 1 Hale, 506; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 6.

Although the taking must, in strictness, be invito domino, yet where a servant being solicited to become an accomplice in robbing his master's house, informed his master of it; and the master thereupon told him to carry on the affair, consented to his opening the door leading to the premises, and to his being with the robbers during the robbery, and also marked his property, and laid it in a place where the robbers were expected to come; it was held that this conduct of the master was no defence to an indictment against the robbers. R. v. Egginton, 2 Leach, 913; 2 B. & P. 508; cf. R. v. Williams, 1 C. & K. 195. Where the prisoner asked a clerk of the prosecutor to procure him a deed in the possession of the latter, and the clerk told his employer of the request, and by his direction gave the deed to the prisoner, it was held that if the clerk gave the deed into the prisoner's hand the prisoner could not be convicted of stealing it, but that if the clerk put down the deed and the prisoner took it up, he could be so convicted. R. v. Lawrence, 4 Cox, 440. See also R. v. Johnson, C. & Mar. 218; R. v. Chandler [1913] 1 K. B. 125; 82 L. J. (K. B.) 106; post, p. 665.

"Carries away."]—In order to constitute larceny, there must not only be a taking, but also asportation, or carrying away. A bare removal from the place in which the thief found the goods, though he does not make off with them, is a sufficient asportation. 1 Hale, 508; 4 Bl. Com. 231; 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1178. By s. 1 (2) (ii.) of the Larceny Act, 1916, the expression "carries away" is defined to include any removal of anything from the place which it occupies, but in the case of a thing attached only if it has been completely detached. As, for instance, if a man is leading another's horse out of a close, and is apprehended in the act; or if a guest, stealing goods out of an inn, has removed them from his chambers downstairs; 3 Co. Inst. 108, 109; or if a servant, animo furandi, takes his master's hay from the stable, and puts it into his master's waggon; R. v. Gruncell, 9 C. & P. 365; or, if a thief, intending to steal plate, takes it out of a chest in which it was, and lays it down upon the floor, but be surprised before he can make his escape with it; R. v. Simson, Kel. (J.) 31; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 28: R. v. Amier, 6 C. & P. 344; or if, intending to steal a cask of wine, he removes it from the head to the tail of the waggon in which it is placed, and is detected before he can effect his purpose of carrying it off. R. v. Walsh, 1 Mood. 14. And where the defendant drew a book from the inside pocket of the prosecutor's coat, about an inch above the top of his pocket; but whilst the book was still about the person of the prosecutor, the prosecutor suddenly put up his hand, upon which the defendant let the book drop, and it fell into the prosecutor's pocket; this was considered a sufficient asportation to constitute larceny. R. v. Thompson, 1 Mood. 78; and see R. v. Taylor [1911] 1 K. B. 674; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 311; 75 J. P. 126; 27 T. L. R. 108. In this case the accused put his hand into the prosecutor's pocket, seized his purse and drew it to the edge of the pocket, but failed to draw it completely out of the pocket owing to its meeting a belt. The prosecutor grasped the purse and replaced it. It was held that there was sufficient evidence of asportation to support a charge of larceny, though not of larceny from the person. So, the transfer of a letter by a letter-carrier from his pouch to his pocket is a sufficient asportation. R. v. Poynton, L. & C. 247; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 29. But where the defendant merely set a package on end, in the place where it lay, for the purpose of cutting open the side of it to get out the contents and was detected before he had accomplished his purpose; the judges held that this was not sufficient. R. v. Cherry, 2 East, P. C. 556; 1 Leach, 236, 321. So, where the thief was not able to carry off the goods on account of their being attached by a string to the counter: Anon., 2 East, P. C. 556; or to carry off a purse on account of some keys attached to the strings of it getting entangled in the owner's pocket: R. v. Wilkinson, 1 Hale, 508; the Court in these cases held, that there was not sufficient carrying away to constitute larceny: to render the asportation in such cases complete, there must be a severance 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1181; and see R. v. Lapier, 1 Leach, 320, where the defendant had assaulted a lady, and torn from her ear an earring which was subsequently found in her hair. Where, however, there is no asportation, the prisoner may be indicted for an attempt to steal, which is a misdemeanor at common law (see ante, p. 3), or upon an indictment for the full offence of larceny, he may be convicted of the attempt only. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9 (ante, p. 215). A man may be convicted of an attempt to steal when, even if no interruption had taken place, he could not have committed the complete offence, e.g., when a thief puts his hand in an empty pocket. R. v. Ring, 61 L. J. (M. C.) 116; 17 Cox, 491: R. v. Brown, 24 Q. B. D. 357; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 47; 16 Cox, 715: overruling R. v. Collins, L. & C. 471; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 177. As to what is sufficient to constitute an attempt to steal, see further, R. v. Cheeseman, L. & C. 140; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 89; 9 Cox, 100, where the circumstances were peculiar. In an indictment for an attempt to steal, it is sufficient to aver that the prisoner attempted to steal the goods of A. B. without specifying the particular goods. R. v. Johnson, L. & C. 489; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 24.

"Owner."]—The essence of larceny is the taking of property without the consent of the owner, but the expression "owner" is not limited to the person who is legal owner of the property stolen. By s. 1 (2) (iii.) of the Larceny Act, 1916, "owner" is defined to include any part owner, or person having possession or control of, or a special property in, anything capable of being stolen. See ante, p. 500.

Larceny as a bailee.]—At common law, where goods were delivered to a man upon trust, or taken by him lawfully and bonâ fide and without any fraudulent design, and with the owner's consent, he was not guilty of larceny by converting them to his own use. Therefore, in all cases where goods were borrowed or hired from the owner, or were delivered by the owner to another to have work done upon them, or cattle were delivered to be agisted, or the like, and in all other cases where goods were in the possession of a bailee (a), and he, while the contract of bailment subsisted, converted the goods to his own use, this was not larceny, but only breach of trust because the original taking was bonâ fide and rightful: unless, indeed, the jury found, on evidence warranting them in so finding, that the goods were originally obtained by the defendant from the owner animo furandi, or that the defendant received them, harbouring at the time an intention wrongfully to convert them to his own use. (See ante, p. 518 et seq.) It is, however, no longer necessary to refer to the numerous cases decided on this subject, many of which turned upon very nice distinctions, because, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (rep.), it was provided that a bailee of any chattel, money, or valuable security, who fraudulently takes or converts the same to his own use, or the use of any person other than the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment, shall be guilty of larceny. This section is reproduced by the proviso to s. 1, sub-s. 1, of the Larceny Act, 1916, which enacts that "a person may be guilty of stealing any such thing (i.e., anything capable of being stolen), notwithstanding that he has lawful possession thereof, if, being a bailee or part owner thereof, he fraudulently converts the same to his own use or the use of any person other than the owner." Even before 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3, although the goods had in the first instance been obtained without a felonious intent, yet if the possession of them was obtained by a trespass, the subsequent fraudulent appropriation of them, during the continuance of the same transaction, was a larceny. Thus where a man, driving a flock of sheep from a field drove with them a sheep belonging to another person, without knowing that he had done so, but afterwards, when he discovered the fact, sold that sheep and appropriated the proceeds of the sale to his own use; he was held to be rightly convicted of larceny. R. v. Riley, Dears. 149; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 48. As a general rule a bailee cannot be convicted of larceny unless the bailment was to redeliver the very same chattel or money. R. v. Hassall, L. & C. 58; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 175: R. v. Hoare, 1 F. & F. 647, Wightman, J.: R. v. Garrett, 2 F. & F. 14; 8 Cox, 368, Willes, J. A bailee is responsible when the article with which he has been intrusted is one which he is to return, or to deliver to somebody else, in specie; but he is not made responsible when he is at liberty, or is bound, to convert the particular article delivered to him into something else, before he returns it or delivers it to the other persons to whom he is instructed to deliver it. Re Bellencontre [1891] 2 Q. B. 122, at 137; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 83, Cave, J. The prosecutor gave a mare of his into the care of the prisoner, telling him that it was to be sold on the next Wednesday. On that day the prosecutor did not go himself to sell the mare, but sent his wife, who went to where the prisoner was, and saw him ride the mare about a horse-fair, and sell her, and receive on such sale some money. The prosecutor's wife then asked the prisoner to give her the money, saying that she would pay his expenses, which, however, he declined to do, and he absconded with the money. The jury having found upon these facts that the prisoner had authority to sell the mare and had converted the money to his own use, it was held (Stephen, J., diss.), that the prisoner was a bailee of the money so paid to him, and was rightly convicted of stealing it. R. v. De Banks, 13 Q. B. D. 29; 53 L. J. (M. C.) 132: Ex parte George, 18 Cox, 631. C. contracted with a salvage association to save cargo from a wrecked ship. He saved some and wrote saying so and what he had saved. He then sold part and appropriated the proceeds. Held, that he could properly be convicted of larceny as a bailee. R. v. Clegg [1869] Ir. Rep. 3 C. L. 166 (C. C. R.). The prosecutor asked the prisoner to bring him half a ton of coals from a coal-staith, and gave him money to pay for them. The prisoner bought half a ton of coals accordingly in his own name. He then put the coals into his own cart, and on his way abstracted one cwt. of the coals, and afterwards delivered the residue to the prosecutor as the coals which he had required. The prisoner was not in the prosecutor's employment. On these facts it was held that the prisoner was guilty of larceny as a bailee, some of the judges thinking that the coals being purchased with money given by the prosecutor for that express purpose, the property in them vested in the prosecutor on the purchase; others holding that to make the prisoner a bailee there must be evidence of a specific appropriation of the coals to the prosecutor; and all the Court agreed that there was evidence on the facts of such an appropriation. R. v. Bunkall, L. & C. 371; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 75. The prosecutor placed a sum of money in the hands of the prisoner for the purpose of purchasing coals for the prosecutor from a colliery company, which coals the prisoner was to pay for with the money so placed in his hands by the prosecutor. The prisoner did not buy any coals, but fraudulently appropriated the money to his own use. On these facts he was held to have been rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee of the money so placed in his hands. R. v. Aden, 12 Cox, 512 (C. C. R.). A carter was employed by the owner of a cargo of coals to load the coals in the carter's own cart from the vessel, and deliver specified quantities to persons whose names were on a list given to him. He sold two loads of the coals fraudulently to persons whose names were not on the list, and appropriated the money to his own use. It was held that he was guilty of larceny as bailee of the two loads. R. v. Davies, 10 Cox, 239 (C. C. R.). The prosecutor delivered two brooches to the prisoner to sell for him at 200*l.* for one and 115*l.* for the other, and the prisoner was to have them for a period not exceeding ten days for that purpose. After the ten days had elapsed the prisoner sold the brooches, with other jewellery, for 250*l.*, but arranged with the vendee that he might redeem the brooches for 110*l.* before a certain time. The prisoner was held to be guilty of larceny as a bailee of the brooches, it having been his duty after the ten days had expired without his effecting a sale to return the brooches in specie to the prosecutor, whereas he had sold them after the ten days without the intention of repossessing himself of them so as to enable him to fulfil that duty. R. v. Henderson, 11 Cox, 593 (C. C. R.). Quære, whether if he had had such intention, that would have been a defence. In the judgment it is expressly said that that question did not arise in the case, as the jury must be taken to have found that he had no such intention. Id. Where the prisoner, a commercial traveller, was intrusted by the prosecutors with silk for sale, and it was his duty at the end of six months to send in an account for the entire six months, and to return the unsold silk, and before the end of the six months he appropriated the silk to his own use. he was held to be rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee. R. v. Richmond, 12 Cox, 495 (C. C. R.). Where the prisoner was indicted for larceny as bailee of a coat, and the evidence was that the prosecutor had lent the coat to the prisoner to wear for a day, and that some few days afterwards the prisoner left the town, and was found wearing the coat on board a vessel bound for Australia, Martin, B., stopped the case on the ground that there was no evidence of a conversion sufficient to satisfy the statute. The determination of the bailment, said his lordship, must be something analogous to larceny, and some act must be done inconsistent with the purposes of the bailment. R. v. Jackson, 9 Cox, 505. Where the accused borrowed a bicycle from the prosecutor's wife, promising to return it the same evening but failed to do so, and on being taxed with the non-return claimed to be entitled to hold it as security for a claim against the prosecutor, but on arrest told a different story and many lies, it was held that there was evidence from which the jury could find a fraudulent intention and a sufficiently positive act of detention to distinguish it from the case of R. v. Jackson, supra, even assuming that case to be still good law. R. v. Wakeman, 8 Cr. App. R. 18. Where the accused hired a pony from A., and after paying hire for about a year sold the pony to B., it being agreed that the accused should still retain the pony in his possession, paying weekly hire for it, and should be at liberty to repurchase it at any time at the same price, it was held there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could determine that the transaction was a sale and not a loan, and that therefore there was a conversion by the accused. R. v. Price, 9 Cr. App. R. 15. In order to bring a bailee within 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 1, there must be a taking or conversion by him with the intention permanently to deprive the owner of his property. If he pledges the goods wrongfully, yet with the intention of redeeming them and restoring them to the owner, such a conversion by him does not come within this section; but if he pledges them with no intention of redeeming them and restoring them to the owner, but with the intention of depriving the owner of them altogether, he is guilty of a fraudulent conversion within the section. R. v. Wynn, 16 Cox, 231 (C. C. R.): and see R. v. Medland, 5 Cox, 292. The drawer of an accommodation bill for 30*l.* received it from the acceptor, upon an arrangement to get it cashed and pay over to the latter all the proceeds, except 3*l.*, which the drawer was to retain for his trouble. Instead of carrying out this arrangement, the drawer handed the bill to one of his creditors who was pressing him for payment of a debt for 10*l.*, in order that the creditor might discount the bill, and retain out of it his debt of 10*l.*, and then hand over the balance to the drawer. The creditor, however, did not carry out this arrangement, and detained the bill. On these facts it was held by Chambers, Common Sergeant, that although the drawer was a bailee of the bill within the meaning of the statute, yet that there was no conversion of it by him analogous to larceny, and therefore that an indictment against him for larceny as bailee of the bill could not be sustained. R. v. Weekes, 10 Cox, 224. Whilst in treaty with a firm of solicitors for the transfer of a public-house licence, the prisoner was required by them to give security for the purchase-money before they would assist him in procuring a transfer. To enable him to give the required security, the prosecutor accepted three bills of exchange drawn upon him by the prisoner, which it was agreed that the latter should deposit with the solicitors by way of security, and that he should not negotiate or use them for any other purpose, and if the transfer was not effected that he should return them to the prosecutor. The prisoner, who, instead of depositing the bills with the solicitors, applied two of them to other purposes for his own benefit, was held not to have been a bailee of the bills within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (rep.). R. v. Cosser, 13 Cox, 187, Bramwell, B. But a person who receives a bill of exchange for the purpose of getting it discounted and handing the proceeds over to another, and instead of getting it discounted indorses it as his own to a creditor in payment of his account, intending to pass the property in the bill absolutely to the creditor, is a bailee of a valuable security, and guilty of a fraudulent conversion of the same to his own use. R. v. Oxenham, 46 L. J. (M. C.) 125; 13 Cox, 349. In delivering the judgment of the Court in this case, Coleridge, C.J., said that in his opinion the cases of R. v. Weekes and R. v. Cosser, supra, were rightly decided. See Re Bellencontre (ante, p. 535).

(a) As to the difference between a bailee and a fiduciary agent, see Slattery v. R. [1905] 2 Austr. C. L. R. 546.

Husband and wife.]—Even before the Married Women's Property Acts it was held that a married woman might be a bailee within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3 (rep.); R. v. Robson, L. & C. 93; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 22; overruling R. v. Denmour, 8 Cox, 440, Martin, B. And where an infant fraudulently converted to his own use goods which had been delivered to him by the owner under an agreement for their hire, it was held that he was rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee of the goods. R. v. Macdonald, 15 Q. B. D. 323; 15 Cox, 757.

At common law if the goods of a husband are taken with the consent or privity of the wife, it is not larceny. R. v. Harrison, 1 Leach, 47: R. v. Avery, Bell, 150; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 185. But if a woman steals the goods of her husband, and gives them to her paramour, who, knowing it, carries them away, the paramour is at common law (or under the early statute, 13 Edw. 1, c. 34) guilty of felony: Dalt. c. 157; and where a stranger took the goods of the husband jointly with the wife, this was held to be larceny by him, he being her adulterer; R. v. Tolfree, 1 Mood. 243 (overruling R. v. Clark, 1 Mood. 376 n.): R. v. Featherstone, Dears. 369; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 127: R. v. Berry, Bell, 95; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 70: R. v. Flatman, 14 Cox, 396 (C. C. R.): R. v. Bloom, 4 Cr. App. R. 30. And so it is, even though no adultery had then been committed, but the goods are taken with the intent that the wife shall elope and live in adultery with the stranger. R. v. Tollett, C. & Mar. 112, Coleridge, J.: R. v. Thompson, 1 Den. 549; 4 Cox, 191. And if a servant by direction of his master's wife, carries off his master's property, and the servant and wife go off together with the property with the intention of committing adultery, the servant may be indicted for stealing the property. R. v. Mutters, L. & C. 511; 34 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 10 Cox, 50. It seems, however, that if a wife elopes with an adulterer, it is no larceny in the adulterer to assist in carrying away her necessary wearing apparel. R. v.

Fitch, Dears. & B. 187; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 169; Cox, 269. overruling on this point the direction of Coleridge, J., in R. v. Tollett, C. & Mar. 112. The prisoner, who had lodged at the prosecutor's house, left it, and the next day the prosecutor's wife also left, taking a bundle with her, which however was not large enough to contain the things which it was found had been taken away from the house on the evening when she left. Two days after, all the things were found in the prisoner's cabin, or on his person, in a ship in which the prosecutor's wife was, the prisoner and the prosecutor's wife having taken their passage in the ship as man and wife. It was held that from these facts the jury were justified in drawing the inference that the prisoner had received the property knowing it to have been stolen by some evilly disposed person. R. v. Deer, L. & C. 240; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 33; 9 Cox, 225. In that case it was clear that all the things which the prisoner was charged with receiving could not have been taken away by the prosecutor's wife, and therefore the jury were justified in concluding that some one, other than the prosecutor's wife, had actually stolen the goods, and that the prisoner had received them from that other person. If the goods had been taken by the prosecutor's wife and received by the prisoner from her, he could not have been convicted of receiving. For a wife, although she may have committed adultery, cannot at common law steal her husband's goods; and therefore the adulterer, receiving from her the goods which she has taken from her husband, could not, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91, be guilty of receiving stolen goods, because under that section receiving was only punishable in cases where the stealing amounted to a felony either at common law or by virtue of that Act. R. v. Kenny, 2 Q. B. D. 307; 46 L. J. (M. C.) 156. But by the combined effect of ss. 33 and 36 of the Larceny Act, 1916, an adulterer in certain circumstances may be convicted of receiving. See post, p. 728. An adulterer cannot be convicted of stealing the goods of the husband brought by the wife to his house, in which the adultery is afterwards committed, merely upon evidence of their being there, unless they be traced to his personal possession. R. v. Rosenberg, 1 C. & K. 233; and see R. v. Bloom, 4 Cr. App. R. 30. Where a wife took her husband's goods from a place within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and was found committing adultery with the prisoner at Liverpool, the husband's goods being then in the prisoner's possession, but there was no evidence that the goods had been under the prisoner's control at any place within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, it was held that the prisoner could not be indicted in that court for larceny. R. v. Prince, 11 Cox, 145.

These authorities, so far as they depend on the common law, must be read subject to the provisions of s. 36 of the Larceny Act, 1916 (ante, p. 500), which render one spouse liable to criminal proceedings for stealing the goods of the other when about to leave or desert the other. See R. v. Streeter [1900] 2 Q. B. 601; 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 915, post, p. 728 : R. v. James, [1902] 1 K. B. 540; 71 L. J. (K. B.) 211 : R. v. King, 24 Cox, 146; 10 Cr. App. R. 44. The effect of this section is that no crime is committed by a wife who takes her husband's goods or by a husband who takes his wife's goods unless they are taken in the circumstances mentioned in the proviso to the section. R. v.

Creamer [1919] 1 K. B. 564; 88 L. J. (K. B.) 594; 83 J. P. 120; 14 Cr. App. R. 19. A husband and wife do not cease to be "living together" within the meaning of s. 36 merely because the husband is temporarily absent from the joint home on military service abroad. Id.

Larceny of property by the owner or joint owner.]—The prisoner assigned his goods by deed to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. No manual possession was taken by the trustees under the assignment, but the prisoner himself remained in possession of the goods, and whilst in such possession he removed the goods, intending fraudulently to deprive the creditors of them. The jury found the prisoner guilty of larceny, at the same time finding that the goods were not in the prisoner's custody as the agent of the trustees. Under these circumstances it was held that the verdict of guilty was wrong, as the prisoner being in lawful possession of the goods could not be convicted of larceny. R. v. Pratt, Dears. 360; 6 Cox, 373. So, if a man take his own goods, it is no larceny, unless they be in the hands of a bailee, and the taking of them have the effect of charging the bailee. Where thirty bales of nux vomica, which paid no duty upon exportation, but a large duty if intended for home consumption, deposited by A. with B., who gave the usual bond to the custom-house, were sent by B., under the care of C., to be shipped on board a foreign vessel for exportation, and A., by collusion with C., took the nux vomica from the bales, substituted cinders for it, and shipped the bales on board the vessel, this was held, by a majority of the judges, to be larceny, because the taking rendered B. chargeable to the custom-house, and liable to a suit upon his bond. R. v. Wilkinson, R. & R. 470: and see R. v. Wadsworth, 10 Cox, 557. If one of several joint-tenants or tenants in common of a personal chattel carry away and dispose of it, this is not larceny, at common law; 1 Hale, 513; there was, in fact, no taking, for he was already in possession; it was merely the subject of an action of account, or bill in equity. But if he had taken it out of the possession of a person in whose hands it was for safe custody, and the effect of the taking would have been to charge the bailee, that was held to be a larceny at common law; as where a member of a benefit society entered the room of a person with whom a box containing the funds of the society was deposited, and took and carried it away, this was held to be larceny, the bailee being answerable to the society for the funds. R. v. Bramley, R. & R. 478. So also where the prisoner, a member of an industrial society, fraudulently took money from the shop of the society, which was under the management of H., another member, who was responsible for all moneys coming into his possession, the prisoner was held to have been rightly convicted of larceny on an indictment laying the property in the money in H. R. v. Webster, L. & C. 77; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 17; 9 Cox, 13. So, where the prisoner, a member of a co-operative society and one of the committee of management, fraudulently took money from the society's shop, where B., a servant of the society, sold its goods and received payments and was accountable for the money, the prisoner was held to have been rightly convicted of larceny on an indictment laying the property in the money in B. R. v. Burgess, L. & C. 299; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 185.

By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 1, 40 (4) (ante, pp. 499, 503), theft by member of co-partnership and joint beneficial owner is punishable in the same way as if they had not had any interest in the thing stolen. See R. v. Smith, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 266; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 112. An association having for its object not the acquisition of gain, but the mental improvement of its members, is not a " co-partnership " within the meaning of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116 (rep., v. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 40 (4)). R. v. Robson, 16 Q. B. D. 137; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 55. But persons who have the control and disposition of money, or who have the power of devoting it, for the purpose of their enjoyment or amusement, are beneficial owners within the statute. R. v. Neat, 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 118; 16 T. L. R. 109; 19 Cox, 424. In that case money collected for a fête by a committee was appropriated by a member of the committee. Where the property is laid in the individual beneficial owners, who together form an association which is illegal under the Companies Acts, the indictment is good. R. v. Tankard [1894] 1 Q. B. 548; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 61 (and see post, p. 609).

" A bag."]—The species of goods must be proved as laid; for instance, upon this indictment, if the prosecutor failed in proving that a bag was stolen, the defendant must be acquitted, although there were indisputable evidence of his having stolen other articles, unless the indictment were amended according to the evidence, under 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 5. (See ante, p. 500.) It is not necessary to enumerate all the articles stolen at one time unless a restitution order is desired. (See ante, p. 293.) But an indictment which alleges that the accused stole a specified thing " and other goods " is bad. R. v. Yates, 15 Cr. App. R. 16. It is not necessary that the prosecutor should prove all the articles mentioned in the indictment to have been stolen; if he proves the defendant to have stolen any one of them, it is sufficient. Although it is necessary to prove that the prosecutor's goods have been taken, that may be proved by circumstances, even if the witnesses for the prosecution cannot swear to the loss of the articles said to have been stolen, nor that the property found upon the prisoner and alleged to have been stolen is the prosecutor's. R. v. Burton, Dears. 282; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 52 (ante, p. 398). See also R. v. Mockford, 11 Cox, 16 (C. C. R.). R. v. Joiner, 74 J. P. 200; 26 T. L. R. 265.

Distinct takings—How charged.]—An indictment charging that R. stole certain goods between October 21, 1908, and February 9, 1909, was held not to be bad for duplicity, and the allegation was held to be in substance that all the goods were stolen at one time. But strictly there should be different counts for takings at different dates. R. v. Rye, 2 Cr. App. R. 155. Where the acts constitute a continuous taking, the prosecutor ought not to be put to his election. R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765, Erle, J.: R. v. Shepherd, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 118; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 45: R. v. Firth, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 172; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 54: cf. R. v. Henwood, 11 Cox, 526 (C. C. R.) (and see ante, p. 58). In R. v. Wright, Dears. & B. 431; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 65; 7 Cox, 413, where a bank clerk had misappropriated a large sum of money during a considerable period of his employment, and admitted the amount, it was held that it was not necessary for the jury to find that a specific amount was stolen on a particular day.

What can be stolen.]—By s. 1 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), everything which has value and is the property of any person, and if adhering to the realty then after severance therefrom, shall be capable of being stolen: Provided that (a) save as hereinafter expressly provided with respect to fixtures, growing things (see s. 8, post, p. 572), and ore from mines (see s. 11, post, p. 578), anything attached to or forming part of the realty shall not be capable of being stolen by the person who severs the same from the realty, unless after severance he has abandoned possession thereof; and (b) the carcase of a creature wild by nature, and not reduced into possession while living, shall not be capable of being stolen by the person who has killed such creature, unless after killing it he has abandoned possession of the carcase.

The above definition of what can be stolen practically sweeps away the common law restrictions, by which certain kinds of property could not be the subject of larceny. Many of those restrictions had already been abolished by statute, but the Act of 1916 goes farther in this direction than the Act of 1861, particularly with regard to animals. Under the Act of 1916 the test to be applied is simply whether the thing in question has value of any kind and is the property of any person. The extent of the departure from common law rules can be gauged by the following summary of the principal steps by which this branch of the law of larceny has developed:—

1. Things real, or which savour of the realty, cannot be the subject of larceny at common law; and so strict was the rule in this respect that a larceny could not be committed of title-deeds, 1 Hale, 510; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 35; or of any other charter or writing concerning the realty, R. v. Westbeer, 1 Leach, 12; 2 Str. 1133, 1137: R. v. Walker, 1 Mood. 155, or even of the box in which they were kept. 1 Hale, 510; 3 Co. Inst. 109. Larceny of title-deeds was punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 28, now repealed and re-enacted by 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 7 (1), post, p. 563.

Lands, tenements and hereditaments (either corporeal or incorporeal), cannot, in their nature, be the subject of larceny. Of things, also, which adhere to the freehold, as corn, grass, trees, and the like, or lead or other thing attached to a house, no larceny can be committed at common law. 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 34. The Forester's case, Y. B. 11 & 12 Edw. 3, f. 641. In R. v. Clinton, Ir. Rep. 4 C. L. 6, it was held not larceny to appropriate drifted and ungathered seaweed lying between high and low water mark on the shore exclusively owned by A. But it was always held at common law, that if the owner or a stranger sever things real, and another man come and steal them—or if the thief sever them at one time, and at another come and take them away—it is larceny. 3 Co. Inst. 109: 1 Hale, 510; Lee v. Risdon, 7 Taunt. 188, 191: R. v. Foley, 17 Cox, 142; 26 L. R. (Ir.) 299 (C. C. R. Ir.). It would appear, however, that the mere severance by the wrongdoer at one time and the taking away by him at another, are not sufficient to constitute larceny, unless he had, between the severance and the taking away, intended to abandon his wrongful possession of the article severed. If the wrongdoer did not intend to abandon his possession, but merely left the article concealed on the land after severance until he could conveniently return and carry it away, then the severance and carrying away are one continuous act, although a considerable time may have elapsed between the severance and taking away, and there is no larceny at common law. R. v. Townley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 315; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 144. The principle governing this decision is still preserved by proviso (a) to 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 1 (3) supra. The carcass of a diseased pig, which has been buried in the land three feet below the surface, and which is dug up the same day by the prisoner, has not become so attached to the soil as to prevent its being the subject of larceny in an indictment against the prisoner for stealing it. R. v. Edwards, 13 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.). Larceny of ore from mines is now punished by 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 11 (post, p. 578); larceny of certain materials affixed to buildings, by s. 8, sub-s. 1 (post, p. 572); and of vegetable products, by s. 8, sub-ss. 2, 3 (post, pp. 572, 573).

2. Bonds, bills, etc., being mere choses in action, are not the subject of larceny at common law, for they are of no intrinsic value. Calye's case, 8 Co. Rep. 33: 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 35; 1 Hale, 510, n. Larceny of such documents was punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27, and is now punishable under 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 2 (ante, p. 500), and in the case of theft by persons in the public service, or the police, under 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 17 (2) (a) (post, pp. 601 et seq.), and in the case of theft of postal packets by officers of the post office, under 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 18, or 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 55 (post, pp. 580, 581). For a definition of "valuable security" see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 46 (ante, p. 508).

3. Larceny at common law cannot be committed of things which are not the subject of property, as of a corpse; R. v. Haynes, 12 Co. Rep. 113; and see 2 East, P. C. 652; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 46. A corpse may possess such peculiar attributes as to justify its preservation on scientific or other grounds, and may under such circumstances become the subject of property. Spence v. Doodeward [1908] 6 Austr. Com. L. R. 406. Of things in which no person has any determinate property, as treasure trove, wreck, etc., till seized, it has been said that larceny cannot be committed; 1 Hale, 510; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 38: but it would seem that the true owner, though unknown, has still a property in them, before seizure by the lord, unless there be circumstances to show an intended dereliction of the property. 2 East, P. C. 606, 607. The same has been said of wreck. But theft from wrecks is now punishable under 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 15 (3) (post, p. 598).

Animals.]—At common law larceny cannot be committed with respect to animals feræ naturæ (unless they are dead, tamed, or in confinement) as of deer, hares and conies in a forest, chase or warren: fish in an open river or pond; or wild fowls at their natural liberty. 1 Hale, 511: Fost. 366; 1 Hawk. c. 33, ss. 39, 40; Y. B. 18 Edw. 4, f. 8, pl. 7; R. v. Rough, 2 East, P. C. 607.

By the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 1 (3), any creature, alive or dead, is capable of being stolen, if it has any value and is the property of any person, i.e., reduced into possession. Larceny of horses, cattle and sheep is dealt with under s. 3 (post, p. 546), of dogs under s. 5 (post, p. 548) and of other animals under s. 2 (ante, p. 500). The coursing, hunting, etc., of deer is punishable by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 12-15 (post, p. 551), and the taking of hares and rabbits by night in warrens or grounds used for breeding or keeping them is punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 17 (post, p. 553). Taking or destroying fish in private waters is punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24 (post, p. 555). As to property in oysters and mussels, see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, ss. 51, 52, 55 (post, p. 557). Animals feræ naturæ when killed upon the soil by a wrongdoer, become the absolute property of the owner of the soil: Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. C. 621; 34 L. J. (C. P.) 286: Lord Lonsdale v. Rigg, 1 H. & N. 923; 26 L. J. (Ex.) 196. If the wrongdoer kills them on the soil and leaves them there, intending to abandon the possession of them, but afterwards returns and takes them away, such taking amounts to larceny. But if the wrongdoer after killing them, leaves them concealed on the soil, not with the intention of abandoning the possession, but intending, on the other hand, to return and take them away when it should be convenient for him to do so, and afterwards does take them away, such taking away is not larceny, as the killing and taking away are one continuous act, although a considerable time may have elapsed between the killing and taking away. R. v. Townley, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 315; 40 L. J. (M. C.) 144. The rule of law laid down in this case is preserved by s. 1 (3) (b) of the Larceny Act, 1916. Poachers, of whom the prisoner was one, wrongfully killed a number of rabbits upon land belonging to the Crown. They placed the rabbits in a ditch upon the same land, some of the rabbits in bags, and some strapped together. They had no intention to abandon the wrongful possession of the rabbits which they had acquired by taking them, but placed them in a ditch as a place of deposit till they could conveniently remove them. About three hours afterwards the prisoner came back and began to remove the rabbits. It was held that the taking of the rabbits and the removal of them were one continuous act, and that the removal was therefore not larceny. Id. Prisoner was employed to trap wild rabbits, which he did, but, contrary to his duty, took them to another part of the land and placed them in a bag, intending to appropriate them to his own use, which a fellow servant observing, went and took some of the rabbits out of the bag during prisoner's absence, nicked them, and replaced them in the bag, his reason for nicking them being that he might know them again. Prisoner afterwards took away the bag and the rabbits. It was held that the act of the fellow servant in nicking the rabbits was no reduction of them into the possession of the master, so as to make the prisoner guilty of stealing them by carrying them away after they had been so nicked. R. v. Petch, 14 Cox, 116 (C. C. R.). It seems that the mere killing of an animal feræ naturæ by a sportsman is not such a reduction of it into his possession as to make it his property, so as to sustain a charge of larceny against a person who takes it fraudulently and with intent to deprive the owner of it, before the sportsman has picked it up. R. v. Roe, 11 Cox, 554, 557, Willes, J. Fish taken at sea are in the possession of the owner of the smack by which they are taken, and are therefore the subject of larceny. R. v. Mallison, 20 Cox, 204; 66 J. P. 503.

If animals feræ naturæ are reclaimed or confined, or are practically under the care and dominion of the prosecutor, they may be the subjects of larceny. Prior to the Larceny Act, 1916, it was further necessary that they should serve for food in order to be capable of being stolen, but in future it is sufficient if they are the property of any person. On the former law see 1 Hale, 511; 1 Hawk. c. 33, s. 41 : R. v. Garnham, 8 Cox, 451 : R. v. Head, 1 F. & F. 350; R. v. Cory, 10 Cox, 23, Channell, B.; R. v. Stride [1908] 1 K. B. 617; 77 L. J. (K. B.) 490. By s. 47 (2) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (ante, p. 509), the stealing of many animals, and of their produce, eggs or young, will remain punishable on summary conviction only, subject to the election of the accused to be tried on indictment, e.g., the stealing of any bird, beast, or other animal ordinarily kept in a state of confinement or for any domestic purpose, not being the subject of larceny at common law, and the unlawful possession of the plumage or skin of any such animal, are punishable summarily under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 21, 22; see also s. 23 as to pigeons, and R. v. Howell, 2 Den. 362 n.: R. v. Brooks, 4 C. & P. 131 : R. v. Cheafor, 2 Den. 361; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 43 : Smith v. Dear, 67 J. P. 244. Persons taking or destroying a swan's eggs out of the nest can be summarily punished under s. 24 of the Game Act, 1831.

Gas, water, and electricity.]—Gas passing through the consumer's pipes is the subject of larceny by him, if he fraudulently appropriates it at a point before that at which by his contract he is entitled to use it. R. v. White, Dears. 203; 22 L. J. (M. C.) 123 : R. v. Firth, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 172; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 54. Water supplied by a water company to a consumer, and standing in his pipes, may be the subject of a larceny at common law. Ferens v. O'Brien, 11 Q. B. D. 21; 52 L. J. (M. C.) 70. Any person who maliciously or fraudulently abstracts, causes to be wasted or diverted, consumes or uses any electricity is guilty of simple larceny, and punishable accordingly, 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 10. R. v. Armanni, 130 Cent. Crim. Ct. Sess. Pap., p. 707.

Value.]—No statement need be made as to the value of the property stolen except in those cases where value or price is of the essence of the offence (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, r. 6 (1), ante, pp. 47, 52). And although, to make a thing the subject of larceny, it must be of some value, yet it need not be of the value of any coin known to the law, that is to say, of a farthing at the least. R. v. Morris, 9 C. & P. 349. Cf. R. v. Edwards, 13 Cox, 384 (C. C. R.), ante, p. 543. Where value is the essence of the offence sufficient articles must be named in the indictment to amount in value to the sum necessary to constitute the offence. R. v. Forsyth, R. & R. 274.

Ownership.]—It must be proved upon the trial, that the goods stolen are the absolute or special property of the person named in the indictment. Where to steal the skins ("the carcase, skin, or any part of the animal killed") of the said sheep.

Felony: 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 4. See the last precedent. Sect. 4 is not limited to the animals named in s. 3.

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove two things—

1. That the defendant killed the sheep; and this is proved either positively, as by a witness who saw him do it; or by circumstantial evidence, as, for instance, that the skins were found in his possession, or were sold by him to another person, or the like. (See ante, p. 397.) Where the defendant was indicted for killing a lamb with intent to steal part of the carcase, and the evidence was that he cut off the leg of the lamb whilst it was alive, and carried the leg away before the animal died; and that the lamb afterwards died of the wound; the judge at the trial thought that as the death-wound was given before the theft, it was sufficient, and the defendant was convicted; the judges afterwards were unanimous that the conviction was right. R. v. Clay, R. & R. 387 : see also R. v. Sutton, 2 Mood. 29; 3 C. & P. 291 : R. v. McCulley, 2 Lew. 272; 2 Mood. 34.

2. That he killed the sheep with the intent stated in the indictment. The best proof of this is, that the part of the carcase mentioned was actually stolen. But if the defendant was caught in the act, that is, after killing the sheep, but before he had actually cut it up, then it is for the jury to say, upon a consideration of the facts of the case, whether he did not intend to steal the carcase. Upon an indictment, under 14 G. 2, c. 6 (rep.), for killing three sheep, with intent to steal the whole of the carcases, the jury found that the defendant intended to steal a part of the carcases only; but the judges were of opinion that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the indictment, as the statute meant to make it immaterial whether the intent was to steal the whole or a part only of the carcase. R. v. Williams, 1 Mood. 107.

STEALING DOGS.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 5.—Larceny, etc., of dogs.]—Every person who—(1) steals any dog after a previous summary conviction of any such offence; or (2) unlawfully has in his possession or on his premises any stolen dog, or the skin thereof, knowing such dog or skin to have been stolen, after a previous summary conviction of any such offence; or (3) corruptly takes any money or reward, directly or indirectly, under pretence or upon account of aiding any person to recover any stolen dog, or any dog which is in the possession of any person not being the owner thereof; shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding eighteen months, with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 18, 19, 20, so far as they relate to indictable offences. For convenience, the sections of the Larceny Act, 1861, relating to the punishment on summary conviction of theft, etc., of animals not the subject of larceny at common law are set out below.] or on whose premises such bird or the plumage thereof, or such beast or the skin thereof, or such animal or any part thereof, shall be so found, (such person knowing that the bird, beast, or animal has been stolen, or that the plumage is the plumage of a stolen bird, or that the skin is the skin of a stolen beast, or that the part is the part of a stolen animal), shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, be liable for the first offence to such forfeiture, and for every subsequent offence to such punishment, as any person convicted of stealing any beast or bird is made liable to by the last preceding section. Sect. 14.—Suspected persons found in possession of venison, etc.]—If any deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, or any snare or engine for the taking of deer, shall be found in the possession of any person, or on the premises of any person with his knowledge, and such person, being taken or summoned before a justice of the peace, shall not satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by such deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, or had a lawful occasion for such snare or engine, and did not keep the same for any unlawful purpose, he shall, on conviction by the justice, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty pounds; and if any such person shall not under the said provisions be liable to conviction, then, for the discovery of the party who actually killed or stole such deer, the justice, at his discretion, as the evidence given and the circumstances of the case shall require, may summon before him every person through whose hands such deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, shall appear to have passed; and if the person from whom the same shall have been first received, or who shall have had possession thereof, shall not satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by the same, he shall, on conviction by the justice, be liable to the payment of such sum of money as is hereinbefore last mentioned. Indictment for hunting deer in Inclosed Places. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, 1861. s. 13, ante, p. 551.)

Commencement as ante, p. 509.

Statement of Offence.

Hunting deer, contrary to section 13 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Particulars of Offence.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of Surrey, unlawfully hunted ("course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound ") one fallow deer the property of J. N., kept or being in certain inclosed land (" in the inclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, or in any inclosed land where deer shall be usually kept "), where deer were usually kept. The enactment seems to apply to deer of all kinds, ages, and either sex. R. v. Strange, Greaves, Crim. Cons. Acts (2nd ed.) 111. It seems essential to state whether the land is inclosed or uninclosed. See R. v. King, 13 L. J. (M. C.) 43. Felony: imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and if a male under sixteen years of age, with or without whipping (see ante, p. 247). 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 13. As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, Id. s. 117 (ante, p. 246, post, p. 562).

Evidence.

To support this indictment, you must prove the hunting, killing, or stealing of the deer, as stated in the indictment; that the act was unlawful, i.e., done in a place in which it is not lawful for the accused to kill the deer (Threlkeld v. Smith [1901] 2 K. B. 531, 536; 70 L. J. (K. B.) 921; 20 Cox, 38); that the land in which the offence was committed was at the time inclosed, in the occupation of J. N., and that deer were usually kept there. In R. v. Money, Gloucester Summer Assizes, 1847, Erle, J., held that an inclosure in the Forest of Dean made under an Act of Charles II., and surrounded by a ditch and bank sufficient to keep out cattle, but over which deer could pass, was inclosed land within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 26 (rep.). See Greaves, Crim. Cons. Acts (2nd ed.) 112.

TAKING OR KILLING HARES OR RABBITS IN WARRENS, ETC., IN THE NIGHT-TIME.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 17.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully, between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise, take or kill any hare or rabbit in any warren or ground lawfully used for the breeding or keeping of hares or rabbits, whether the same be inclosed or not, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully, between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, take or kill any hare or rabbit, in any such warren or ground, or shall at any time set or use therein any snare or engine for the taking of hares or rabbits, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet.

Provided that nothing in this section contained shall affect any person taking or killing in the daytime any rabbits on any sea-bank or river-bank in the county of Lincoln, so far as the tide shall extend or within one furlong of such bank. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 30, with the alterations italicized.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 509.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Taking hares by night, contrary to section 17 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of Surrey, between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise, to wit, about the hour of eleven in the night of the same day, in a certain warren or ground (" in any warren or ground lawfully used for the breeding or keeping of hares or rabbits, whether the same be inclosed or not ") in the occupation of J. N., then being lawfully used for the breeding and keeping of hares ("hares or rabbits"), unlawfully took twenty hares ("take or kill ").

Misdemeanor: fine and (or) imprisonment, without hard labour: (with sureties to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, if the Court thinks fit, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117, ante, p. 247, post, p. 562). 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 17.

Evidence.

To support this indictment you must prove—1*st*. That the defendant took or killed the hares (or rabbits) in the place mentioned in the indictment. " A rick-yard " where a few rabbits were kept has been held not to be a " ground used for breeding or keeping." R. v. Garratt, 6 C. & P. 369, Patteson, J. " Taking," in the statute, means " catching," and not taking away. Where a defendant, who set several wires in a warren, in one of which a rabbit was caught, was seized as he was laying hold of the wire to take the rabbit, which was then alive, the judges held this to be a taking within the meaning of the statute. 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 30 (rep.). R. v. Glover, R. & R. 269.—2*nd*. That the offence was committed between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the beginning of the last hour before sunrise—3*rd*. That the place in which the defendant took the hares (or rabbits) was a warren or ground then used for the breeding or keeping of hares (or rabbits); that it was in the occupation of J. N., and was situate as described in the indictment. It has been held that ordinary agricultural land cannot be said to be used for the keeping or breeding of rabbits merely because rabbits are tolerated for the purpose of sport and probably breed in the hedgerows or adjoining plantation. R. v. McLauchlan, 75 J. P. 8.

As to when larceny can be committed of rabbits, see R. v. Petch, 14 Cox, 116 (C. C. R.) (ante, p. 544).

The Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), which gives the occupiers of land the right to kill rabbits and hares, forbids them the use of firearms to kill them between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the commencement of the last hour before sunrise, and prohibits the use of poison, or of rabbit traps, except in rabbit holes (s. 6). On this Act see Anderson v. Vicary

[1900] 2 Q. B. 287; 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 713: May v. Waters [1910] 1 K. B. 431; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 250; 26 T. L. R. 239: Waters v. Phillips [1910] 2 K. B. 465; 26 T. L. R. 564: Leworthy v. Rees, 23 Cox, 522; 109 L. T. 244; 77 J. P. 268; 29 T. L. R. 408. It would seem that if this enactment is disobeyed by an occupier he will be within the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 17 (ante, p 553). The rights of the occupier are extended by 6 Edw. 7, c. 21, but not so as to extend his right to use firearms.

TAKING OR DESTROYING FISH IN WATER ADJOINING A DWELLING-HOUSE.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 24.]—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy any fish in any water which shall run through or be in any land adjoining or belonging to the dwelling-house or any person being the owner of such water, or having a right of fishery therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; ["Fish" includes freshwater crayfish. Caygill v. Thwaites, 33 W. R. 581; 49 J. P. 614.]

And whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, any fish in any water not being such as hereinbefore mentioned, but which shall be private property, or in which there shall be any private right of fishery, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the fish taken or destroyed (if any), such sum of money, not exceeding five pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet:

Provided that nothing hereinbefore contained shall extend to any person angling between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset;

But whosoever shall, by angling, between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, unlawfully and wilfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, any fish in any such water as first mentioned, shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds; and if in any such water as last mentioned, he shall, on the like conviction, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding two pounds, as to the justice shall seem just.

And if the boundary of any parish, township or vill shall happen to be in or by the side of any such water as is in this section before mentioned, it shall be sufficient to prove that the offence was committed either in the parish, township, or vill named in the indictment or information, or in any parish, township or vill adjoining thereto. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 34, with addition of the words in italics. As to the rights of tenants to take fish, see Jones v. Davies, 20 Cox, 184.]

Sect. 25.]—If any person shall at any time be found fishing against the provisions of this Act, the owner of the ground, water, or fishery where such offender shall be so found, his servant, or any person authorized by him, may demand from such offender any rod, line, hook, net, or other implement for taking or destroying fish which shall then be in his possession, and, in case such offender shall not immediately deliver up the same, may seize and take the same from him for the use of such owner :

Provided that any person angling against the provisions of this Act, between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, from whom any implement used by anglers shall be taken, or by whom the same shall be so delivered up, shall by the taking or delivery thereof be exempted from the payment of any damages or penalty for such angling. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 34, with addition of the words in italics.]

The protection of the second half of the section only applies to "anglers" and not to persons "found fishing." The word "angling" is to be construed strictly. Fishing by night lines, consisting of two small pegs or stakes about 6 in. to 8in. long, which were pointed and driven into the bank of a stream with lines and hooks attached and with a stone weight attached to one of the lines to keep the line floating with the stream, has been held not to be "angling." Barnard v. Roberts [1907] 96 L. T. 648; 21 Cox, 425; 71 J. P. 277.

Commencement as ante, p. 509.

Statement of Offence.

Taking fish, contrary to section 24 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Particulars of Offence.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of Surrey, in a certain stream of water ("any water") running through or being in certain land ("any land adjoining or belonging to the dwelling-house") adjoining [or belonging] to the dwelling-house of J. N., the said J. N. then being the owner of the said water [or, the said J. N. then having a right of fishery in the said water], unlawfully took ["take or destroy"] thirty tench, and thirty trout. Where the indictment alleged the fish to be the goods and chattels of the prosecutor, the judges held that these words might be rejected as surplusage. R. v. Hundsdon, 2 East, P. C. 611.

Misdemeanor: fine and (or) imprisonment, without hard labour; with sureties, etc. See ante, pp. 246, 247, post, p. 562, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 24, 117.

Evidence.

Prove the taking or destruction of the fish mentioned, or some of them. The taking need not be such a taking as would be necessary to constitute a larceny. See R. v. Glover, R. & R. 269 (ante, p. 554). But a taking by angling in the daytime will not be sufficient. And taking fish with the consent of the tenant but not of the owner of the soil is not an offence unless the fishing is reserved to the owner by the lease. Jones v. Davies, 70 L. J. (K. B.) 38; 20 Cox, 184;

66 J. P. 439 (K. B. D.). If a destruction only be charged, it must be proved to have been wilful. Prove, also, that the fish were taken or destroyed in a stream [or water] running or being in land adjoining to (see R. v. Hodges, post, p. 575), or belonging to the dwelling-house of J. N., and which at the time belonged to J. N., or in which he had a right of fishery. Where a corporation had a right of several fishery in a part of a tidal river, and the accused, at a time of low water, collected winkles from small pools of water left by the ebbing tide on mud banks of the river within the limits of the fishery, it was held that the proviso in the section did not restrict the general words thereof to the offence of taking fish by angling, and that winkles were "fish" within the meaning of the section, and, further, that there was evidence upon which the justices could find that the pools from which the winkles were taken were "water" within the meaning of the section. Leavett v. Clark [1915] 3 K. B. 9; 84 L. J. (K. B.) 2157; 113 L. T. 424; 25 Cox, 44; 31 T. L. R. 424; 79 J. P. 396. The local situation of the dwelling-house and water must also be proved; but if the boundary of any parish, township or vill, happen to be in or by the side of the water, it will be sufficient to prove that the offence was committed either in the parish, etc., named in the indictment, or in the parish, etc., adjoining thereto. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24.

DREDGING FOR OYSTERS, ETC.

Statutes.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 26.]—[Whosoever shall steal any oysters or oyster-brood from any oyster-bed, laying, or fishery, being the property of any other person, and sufficiently marked out or known as such, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny; and] whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully use any dredge, or any net, instrument, or engine whatsoever, within the limits of any oyster-bed, laying, or fishery, being the property of any other person, and sufficiently marked out or known as such, for the purpose of taking oysters or oyster-brood, although none shall be actually taken, or shall unlawfully and wilfully, with any net, instrument, or engine, drag upon the ground or soil of any such fishery, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour. . . .

And it shall be sufficient in any indictment to describe, either by name or otherwise, the bed, laying, or fishery, in which any of the said offences shall have been committed, without stating the same to be in any particular parish, township, or vill;

Provided that nothing in this section contained shall prevent any person from catching or fishing for any floating fish within the limits of any oyster fishery, with any net, instrument, or engine adapted for taking floating fish only.

[The words in italics have been repealed by the Larceny Act, 1916, the stealing of oysters or oyster-brood being simple larceny within s. 2 of that Act, ante, p. 500. As to property in oysters, etc., see ss. 51, 52 of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1865, infra.]

31 & 32 Vict. c. 45 (Sea Fisheries Act, 1868), part iii., s. 28.—Interpretation of terms.]—In this part of this Act the words "oysters" and "mussels" respectively include the brood, ware, half-ware, spat, and spawn of oysters and mussels respectively. In this part of the Act the expression "oyster and mussel fishery" includes a fishery for either oysters or mussels separately, and the term "oyster or mussel fishery" includes a fishery for both oysters and mussels; and the provisions of this part of this Act shall be construed to apply in the case of any fishery to oysters and oyster ground and beds alone, or to mussels and mussel ground and beds alone, or to both oysters and mussels, and oyster and mussel ground and beds, according as the right of fishery is for oysters alone, or for mussels alone, or for both oysters and mussels.

Sect. 42.—Marking out of oyster, etc., fishery, how proved.]—Whenever it is necessary in any legal proceeding to prove that in pursuance of any Act of parliament or of an order under this part of this Act, the limits of any oyster and mussel fishery have been duly buoyed or otherwise marked, or notices of such limits have been duly published, posted or distributed, or that notice of the provisions of the order or of such Act relating to the oyster and mussel fishery has been duly published, a certificate purporting to be under the hand of one of the secretaries or assistant secretaries of the Board of Trade, certifying that the Board of Trade are satisfied that the said limits were so buoyed or marked, or that the said notices were duly published, posted, or distributed, shall be received as evidence that the same have been so buoyed or marked, or that the said notices have been so published, posted, or distributed.

Sect. 43.—Oyster fishery to be within county for purposes of jurisdiction.]—The portion of the sea-shore to which an Order of the Board of Trade under this part of this Act relates (as far as it is not by law within the body of any county) shall for all purposes of jurisdiction be deemed to be within the body of the adjoining county, or to be within the body of each of the adjoining counties, if more than one (see ante, pp. 31, 37).

Sect. 51.—Property in oysters, etc., within several fishery.]—All oysters and mussels being in or on an oyster or mussel bed within the limits of a several oyster and mussel fishery granted by an order under this part of this Act, and all oysters being in or on any private oyster bed which is owned by any person independently of this Act, and is sufficiently marked out or sufficiently known as such, shall be the absolute property of the grantees or of such owner, as the case may be, and in all courts of law and equity and elsewhere, and for all purposes, civil, criminal, or other, shall be deemed to be in the actual possession of the grantees and such owner respectively.

Sect. 52.—Property in oysters, etc., removed from several fishery.]—All oysters and mussels removed by any person from an oyster or mussel bed within the limits of any such several fishery, and all oysters removed by any person from any such private oyster bed, and not either sold in market overt or disposed of by or under the authority of the grantees or owner (as the case may be), shall be the absolute property of the grantees and owner respectively, and in all courts of law and equity and elsewhere, and for all purposes, civil, criminal, or other, the absolute right to the possession thereof shall be deemed to be in the grantees and owner respectively.

Sect. 55.—Statement and proof of ownership, etc., in case of contiguous fisheries.]—When two or more oyster or mussel beds or fisheries belonging to different proprietors are contiguous to each other, and any proceeding by indictment or otherwise is taken against any person for stealing oysters or mussels from any bed formed under an order made in pursuance of this part of this Act, or for stealing oysters from any bed formed independently of this Act, it shall be sufficient, in alleging and proving the property and lawful possession of the oysters or mussels stolen, and the place from which they were stolen, to allege and prove that they were the property of and in the lawful possession of one or other of such proprietors, and were stolen from one or other of such contiguous beds or fisheries.

Sect. 65.—Saving.]—Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person being liable under any other Act or otherwise to any indictment, proceeding, punishment, or penalty, other than is provided for any offence by this Act, so that no person be punished twice for the same offence. [Cf. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 33, ante, p. 160.]

Indictment for using a Dredge, etc., in the Oyster Fishery of another.

Commencement as ante, p. 509.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Using a dredge in an oyster fishery, contrary to section 26 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, within the limits of a certain oyster-bed ("any oyster-bed, laying, or fishery") called ——, the property of J. N., unlawfully did use a certain dredge ("any dredge, net, instrument, or engine whatsoever") for the purpose of taking oysters ("oysters or oyster-brood").

Misdemeanor: punishable by imprisonment not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26. The offender may also, in addition to or in lieu of this punishment, be fined, and required to enter into his own recognizances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 247, post, p. 562).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant used a dredge, etc., within the limits of the oyster-bed, etc., of J. N., as stated in the indictment; and that such oyster-bed, etc., was at the time the property of J. N., and was sufficiently [marked out and] known as such. That it was so marked out may be proved as directed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45, s. 42 (ante, p. 558). The purpose is to be inferred from the act, and it is immaterial whether the defendant actually took any oysters or oyster-brood or not. The statute does not apply to persons catching or fishing for any floating fish within the limits of an oyster fishery with any net, instrument or engine adapted for taking floating fish only. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 26.

[This section is taken from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29, the unrepealed portions of which are set out below.]

Sect. 43, sub-ss. 2, 3. Limitations on prosecution.]—Ante, p. 506.

Indictment.

THE KING v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

Presentment of the Grand Jury.

A. B. is charged with the following offence—

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 6 of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of London, stole the will of the late C. D. ("either of a dead or of a living person").

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour.—6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, ss. 6, 37 (4); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (5) (b), ante, p. 501.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106).

Prove a larceny of the will, etc., as directed ante, pp. 510 et seq.

No person can be convicted of this offence upon any evidence whatever in respect of any act done by him if at any time previously to his being charged with such offence he has first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which has been bonâ fide instituted by any person aggrieved; nor in any proceedings under this section is a statement or admission made by any person in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy admissible in evidence against that person. The former law under s. 29 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (infra), has been altered with regard to a first disclosure of the offence in the course of bankruptcy proceedings, the absolute immunity from prosecution being taken away by s. 43 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916. A person accused of stealing a will who first disclosed the offence in his public examination in bankruptcy may be prosecuted, but his answers in his public examination are not admissible in evidence against him. The absolute protection still exists where the offence charged is not larceny, but destruction, cancellation, etc., of a will. See infra. The disclosure of the offence by a voluntary witness in a civil action on cross-examination and without objection to answer the questions being taken, has been held not to be a disclosure " in consequence of any compulsory process " of any court of law or equity within the meaning of s. 85 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which contains a similar provision. R. v. Noel [1914] 3 K. B. 848; 84 L. J. (K B..) 142; 112 L. T. 47; 24 Cox, 486; 10 Cr. App. R. 255.

DESTROYING, CONCEALING WILLS, ETC.

Statute.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 29.]—Whosoever shall, either during the life of the testator, or after his death, . . . for any fraudulent purpose destroy, cancel, obliterate, or conceal, the whole or any part of any will, codicil, or other testamentary instrument, whether the same shall relate to real or personal estate, or to both, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable . . . to be kept in penal servitude for life. . . .

And it shall not in any indictment for such offence be necessary to allege, that such will, codicil, or other instrument, is the property of any person:

Provided that nothing in this or the last preceding section (see post, p. 665) mentioned, nor any proceeding, conviction, or judgment to be had or taken thereupon, shall prevent, lessen, or impeach any remedy at law or in equity, which any party aggrieved by any such offence might or would have had if this Act had not been passed; but no conviction of any such offender shall be received in evidence in any action at law or suit in equity against him;

And no person shall be liable to be convicted of any of the felonies in this and the last preceding section mentioned (post, p. 565) by any evidence whatever, in respect of any act done by him, if he shall, at any time previously to his being charged with such offence, have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved; or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency. [This section re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, ss. 23, 24, with the alterations indicated in italics. The word "first" was inserted to get rid of the doubt expressed in R. v. Skeen, 28 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 91; Bell, 97.]

Sect. 115.—Offences committed within jurisdiction of Admiralty.]—All indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature, and liable to the same punishments, as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in any county or place in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody; and in any indictment for any such offence or for being an accessory to any such offence the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence itself shall be averred to have been committed "on the high seas"; Provided, that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of his Majesty's land or naval forces. [This section was framed from 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 77. As to Admiralty jurisdiction, see ante, pp. 31 et seq.]

Sect. 117.—Fine and sureties.]—Whenever any person shall be convicted of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act, the Court may, if it shall think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any of the punishments by this Act authorized, fine the offender, and require him to enter into his own recognizances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour (see ante, p. 252);

And in case of any felony punishable under this Act the Court may, if it shall think fit, require the offender to enter into his own recognizances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this Act authorized (see ante, p. 252):

Provided, that no person shall be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for any period exceeding one year.

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 560.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Destroying a will, contrary to section 29 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of London, destroyed the will of the late C. D. for a fraudulent purpose.

Felony: penal servitude for life, or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, pp. 252, 562).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106.)

Evidence.

Prove the destruction or concealment of the will by the defendant as stated in the indictment, and also the fraudulent purpose for which he did it. The fraudulent purpose can, in most cases, be only matter of inference not capable of direct proof (see R. v. Morris, 9 C. & P. 89); but the mere destruction or concealment, unexplained by the defendant, is evidence from which fraud may fairly be presumed. It is immaterial whether the will, etc., is destroyed during the life or after the death of the testator, or whether it relates to real or personal estate, or to both.

No person can be convicted of this offence by any evidence whatever, in respect of any act done by him, if at any time previously to his being charged with the offence he shall "have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved: or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency." These words differ from those of s. 43 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916, as explained above. As to the meaning of "compulsory process," see R. v. Noel, ante, p. 561. Evidence of A. that B. had told him that C. had committed an offence is inadmissible as against C. as evidence of the knowledge of B. as to the fact of C. having committed the offence: and it was therefore inadmissible as evidence that an offence, disclosed by C., a bankrupt, in his examination, had been disclosed previously to such examination, so as to disentitle C. to the protection of the proviso to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 85 (post, p. 624); R. v. Gunnell, 16 Cox, 154 (C. C. R.), in which case the meaning of the words "first disclosure" was fully considered. The proviso discussed in R. v. Gunnell, which was in identical terms with that of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 29, was repealed by 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 27: see post, p. 625; but the latter Act has not affected s. 29 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and R. v. Gunnell seems to be still a guide to the meaning of that section.

STEALING DOCUMENTS OF TITLE TO LANDS, RECORDS, ETC.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 7.]—Every person who steals the whole or any part of—(1) any document of title to lands; or (2) any record, writ, return, panel, petition, process, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, rule, order, Indictment for Stealing a Document of Title to Lands.

Commencement as ante, p. 560.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 7 (1) of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of Surrey, stole a deed, the property of J. N., being or containing evidence of the title [or, of part of the title] of the said J. N. to a real estate called Whiteacre.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, ss. 7, 37 (4); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour, 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37, (5) (b), ante, p. 506.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the deed, as directed, ante, pp. 511, et seq. Prove also that it is or contains evidence of the title or part of the title of J. N. to the real estate mentioned in the indictment, or to part of it, which may be done by producing the instrument or giving secondary evidence of its contents (see ante, pp. 367, 368, 445), and by showing how J. Under s. 43, sub-ss. 2, 3 of the Larceny Act, 1916, the same limitations apply to a prosecution of any person for this offence as have already been noticed in the case of stealing wills, ante, p. 506.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Destroying a document of title to lands, contrary to section 28 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of Essex, for a fraudulent purpose destroyed (destroy, cancel, obliterate or conceal) a certain deed, the property of J. N., being [or, containing] evidence of the title [or, of part of the title] of the said J. N. to a certain real estate [or, to part of a certain real estate] called Whiteacre.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than five nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 28; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 562).

Indictment for taking a Record, etc., from its Place of Deposit.

N. then having the lawful custody of the same.]

Felony: penal servitude for not more than five years nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 30; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances, and find sureties for keeping the peace, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 117 (ante, p. 562).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106).

Evidence.

Prove that the record, etc., described in the indictment was deposited in the Central Office of the High Court, or in the record office, or other place mentioned in the indictment, and that such was its proper place of deposit for the time being; or, that the person from whose custody the record, etc., is charged in the indictment to have been taken was by law entitled to have, and in fact had, possession of it at the time. That the defendant took the record, etc., from the place or person mentioned in the indictment, which may be proved either by positive or by circumstantial evidence. (See ante, p. 396). And that he took it for a fraudulent purpose, which, in most cases, can only be matter of inference from circumstances, and is not capable of direct proof. The mere taking is evidence from which fraud may fairly be presumed, unless it is satisfactorily explained by the defendant. As to what facts will support a conviction for taking the process of a court for a fraudulent purpose from a person having the lawful custody thereof, see R. v. Bailey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 347; 41 L. J. (M. C.) 61.

DESTROYING, ETC., VALUABLE SECURITIES. (a)

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Larceny Act, 1861), s. 27.]—Whosoever . . . shall for any fraudulent purpose destroy, cancel, or obliterate the whole or any part of any valuable security, other than a document of title to lands (see ante, p. 508), shall be guilty of felony, of the same nature and in the same degree, and punishable in the same manner, as if he had stolen any chattel of like value with the share, interest or deposit to which the security so stolen may relate, or with the money due on the security so stolen, or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or with the value of the goods or other valuable thing represented, mentioned or referred to in or by the security.

(a) The stealing of valuable securities, formerly punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27, is now simple larceny within 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 2. See ante, p. 500.

Definition of valuable security.]—Sect. 1—The term "valuable security" shall include any order, Exchequer acquittance, or other security whatsoever entitling or evidencing the title of any person or body corporate to any share or interest in any public stock or fund, whether of the United Kingdom, or of Great Britain, or of Ireland, or of any foreign state, or in any fund of any body corporate, company or society, whether within the United Kingdom or in any foreign state or country, or to any deposit in any bank, and shall also include any debenture, deed, bond, bill, note, warrant, order, or other security whatsoever for money or for payment of money, whether of the United Kingdom, or of Great Britain, or of Ireland, or of any foreign state, and any document of title to land or goods as hereinbefore defined. [This definition re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5, with the additions italicized. It should be carefully compared with the definition of valuable security in the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 46 (1), ante, p. 508. "Valuable security" has been held to include a transfer of shares in a limited liability company. R. v. Smith, 62 J. P. 231. It includes currency notes. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 14, s. 1 (5). As to money orders, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 59 (b), post, p. 582.]

Definition of document of title to lands.]—Sect. 1—The term "document of title to lands" shall include any deed, map, paper or parchment, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, being or containing evidence of the title, or any part of the title, to any real estate, or to any interest in or out of any real estate. [This definition re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 23, with the additions italicized.]

Definition of document of title to goods.]—Sect. 1—The term "document of title to goods" shall include any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehousekeeper's certificate, warrant or order for the delivery or transfer of any goods or valuable thing, bought and sold note, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising or purporting to authorise, either by indorsement or by delivery, the possession of such document to transfer or receive any goods thereby represented or therein mentioned or referred to. [This definition re-enacts 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 23, with the additions italicized.]

Indictment.

Commencement as ante, p. 560.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Destroying a valuable security, contrary to section 27 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, for a fraudulent purpose, destroyed a certain valuable security, to wit, one bill of exchange for the payment of ten pounds, the property of J. N. As to the description of the bill or other security, see ante, p. 50. As 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27, limits the term "valuable security" to securities "other than a document of title to lands," it is material, in an indictment under it, to describe the security so as to show that it is within the section. R. v. Lowrie, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 61; 36 L. J. (M. C.) 24. If the instrument be for any reason void in law, the defendant may be convicted on a count charging him with stealing a piece of paper. R. v. Perry, 1 Den. 69; 1 C. & K. 725.

Felony of the same nature, and in the same degree, and punishable in the same manner, as if the defendant had stolen any chattel of like value with the share, interest, or deposit to which the security stolen may relate, or with the money due on the security so stolen, or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or with the value of the goods or other valuable thing represented, mentioned, or referred to in or by the security. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27 (supra).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant destroyed the bill for a fraudulent purpose as directed, ante, pp. 563, 567.

The bill or other security must be of the description specified in the statute. R. v. Lowrie (supra). Where the defendant was indicted under 15 G. 2, c. 13, s. 12 (rep.) for stealing certain bills, commonly called Exchequer bills, and it appeared in evidence that the person who signed them on the part of the Government was not legally authorized to do so, it was held that they were not good Exchequer bills. R. v. Aslett, 2 Leach, 954. But on a subsequent trial of the same person, the documents were held to be "valuable effects or securities" within the same statute. Id. 958, 974.

In cases where the prosecutor had been compelled by duress or induced by fraud to sign a "valuable security," difficulties formerly arose in proving, in support of an indictment for larceny, that the property or possession of the instrument in question was in the prosecutor. These cases (R. v. Phipoe, 2 Leach, 673; 2 East, P. C. 599: R. v. Edwards, 6 C. & P. 515, 521: R. v. Smith, 2 Den. 449; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 111) are provided for by 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, ss. 29 (2) and 32 (2) (b), which make it a criminal offence for a person by threats (s. 29 (2), post, p. 681) or false pretences (s. 32 (2) (b), post, p. 691) to induce another to affix his name to any paper "in order that the same may be afterwards made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security."

In consequence of an advertisement, A. applied to B. to raise money for him. B. promised to procure 5,000*l.*, and produced ten blank 6*s.* stamps, across which A. wrote an acceptance, and B. took them up without saying anything, and afterwards filled up the stamps for 500*l.* each, and put them into circulation. On these facts Littledale, J., Bolland, B., and Bosanquet, J., held that the stamps so filled up were not bills of exchange, orders for the payment of money, or securities for money, within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.); and that, as the prosecutor never had any possession of the papers so as to enable him to maintain trespass for them, there was no taking of them such as to constitute larceny. R. v. Minter Hart, 6 C. & P. 106. But a document which was a complete bill of exchange in all respects, except that it wanted the drawer's signature, was held to be, when it had reached the hands of the intended drawer, a "security for the payment of money," within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 75 (rep.): R. v. Bowerman [1891] 1 Q. B. 112; 60 L. J. (M. C.) 13; and therefore would seem to be so within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 568). In the above case Hawkins, J., said: "Suppose a cheque to be drawn payable to order, and handed by the drawer to the payee, it could not possibly be said that the cheque was not a valuable security until the payee had indorsed it." Where country bank-notes, paid by the agent in London, were sent by him to the bankers in the country to be re-issued, and were stolen by the defendant, who was indicted for stealing the notes, and also for stealing the paper and stamps, this was held to be a larceny of the paper and stamps; but the judges seem to have been of opinion that the notes were not within 2 G. 2, c. 25, s. 3 (rep.), because it could not be said that the money secured thereby was due and unsatisfied. R. v. Clark, R. & R. 181; 2 Leach, 1036. See R. v. Perry, 1 Den. 69; 1 C. & K. 725 (ante, p. 569). So, where the defendant was indicted for receiving certain pieces of stamped paper, the goods and chattels of the prosecutor, and it appeared that the notes had been paid in London, and were in the possession of a partner of the firm, who was taking them to the country to be re-issued, when they were stolen, it was held that they were properly described in the indictment as goods and chattels; but some of the judges doubted whether they were valuable securities within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.). R. v. Vyse, 1 Mood. 218. Documents which purported to be certificates entitling the holder to shares, and to receive dividends in a foreign railway company, and which passed by delivery like bank-notes, and were treated and dealt with on the London stock exchange as railway shares, were held to be valuable securities within that statute. R. v. Smith, Dears. 561; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 31. The halves of notes, if destroyed, may be described as goods and chattels. R. v Mead, 4 C. & P. 535. It would seem, however, that they may also be described as parts of a valuable security, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 27 (ante, p. 567). The notes themselves may be described as money: 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 18 (ante, p. 52). Where upon an indictment on 7 G. 3, c. 50, s. 1 (rep.), which made it felony for persons employed in the post office to secrete any letter, etc., containing any note, etc., it appeared that the note had been paid to the holder, and had not been re-issued, the judges were of opinion that such notes retained the character and fell within the description of promissory notes, and were, as promissory notes, valuable to the owners of them. R. v. Ranson, R. & R. 232; 2 Leach, 1090, 1093. A cheque on a banker, written on unstamped paper, payable to D. F. J., and not made payable to bearer, was held not to be a valuable security within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Yates, 1 Mood. 170. A cheque on a banker may be described as "a valuable security, to wit, a cheque of the value of," etc., without stating the drawee to be a banker. R. v. Heath, 2 Mood. 33. It is not necessary that a bill should be indorsed by the payee at the time it is destroyed, so as to be in a negotiable state. Anon., 2 East, P. C. 598: R. v. Bowerman, supra. But in R. v. Pooley, R. & R. 12; 2 Leach, 887, an unstamped draft was held to be of no value and not to be a bill or draft within 7 G. 3, c. 50, s. 1 (rep.).

A pawnbroker's duplicate was held to be a warrant for the delivery of goods, within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 5 (rep.). R. v. Morrison, Bell, 158; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 210. A written agreement to pay money for a sufficient consideration appearing on the face thereof is a valuable security within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1 (ante, p. 568). R. v. John, 13 Cox, 100, Brett, J.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 2, the Bank of England may impress upon their notes, etc., by machinery, the names of their cashiers, etc.; and notes so impressed are to be deemed and taken to be, and may be described in indictments, as bank-notes, etc., in the same manner as if they had been subscribed in the handwriting of the cashiers, etc.

Money orders—Postal orders.]—The money orders issued by the post office are "orders for the payment of money and valuable securities" within the statute, 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 59 (1) (post, p. 582). It is no objection that they are unstamped, the practice of issuing them without a stamp having existed before, and been legalized by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96. R. v. Gilchrist, 2 Mood. 233; C. & Mar. 224.

CONCEALMENT OF INSTRUMENT OF TITLE OR FALSIFICATION OF PEDIGREE BY VENDOR OR MORTGAGOR, OR HIS SOLICITOR OR AGENT.

Statute.

22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859), s. 24.]—Any seller or mortgagor of land, or of any chattels, real or personal, or choses in action conveyed or assigned to a purchaser [or mortgagee; see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8 infra], or the solicitor or agent of any such seller or mortgagor, who shall, after the passing of this Act (Aug. 13, 1859), conceal any settlement, deed, will, or other instrument material to the title, or any incumbrance from the purchaser [or mortgagee; see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8, infra], or falsify any pedigree upon which the title does or may depend, in order to induce him to accept the title offered or produced to him, with intent in any of such cases to defraud, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being found guilty shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or by both, as the Court shall award, and shall also be liable to an action for damages at the suit of the purchaser or mortgagee, or those claiming under the purchaser or mortgagee, for any loss sustained by them, or either or any of them, in consequence of the settlement, deed, will, or other instrument or incumbrance so concealed, or of any claim made by any person under such pedigree, but whose right was concealed by the falsification of such pedigree; and in estimating such damages, where the estate shall be recovered from such purchaser or mortgagee, or from those claiming under the purchaser or mortgagee, regard shall be had to any expenditure by them or either or any of them in improvements on the land :

Fiat of attorney-general] but no prosecution for any offence included in this section against any seller or mortgagor, or any solicitor or agent, shall be commenced without the sanction of his Majesty's attorney-general, or in case that office be vacant, of his Majesty's solicitor-general; and no such sanction shall be given without such previous notice of the application for leave to prosecute to the person intended to be prosecuted as the attorney-general or the solicitor-general (as the case may be) shall direct.

Sect. 25.—Interpretation.]—In the construction of the previous provisions in this Act,

The term " land " shall be taken to include all tenements and hereditaments, and any part or share of or estate or interest in any tenements or hereditaments, of what tenure or kind soever; and

The term " mortgage " shall be taken to include every instrument by virtue whereof land is in any manner conveyed, assigned, pledged, or charged as security for the repayment of money or money's worth lent, and to be re-conveyed, re-assigned, or released on satisfaction of the debt; and

The term " mortgagor " shall be taken to include every person by whom such conveyance, assignment, pledge, or charge as aforesaid shall be made; and

The term " mortgagee " shall be taken to include every person to whom or in whose favour any such conveyance, assignment, pledge, or charge as aforesaid is made or transferred.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 (Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860), s. 8.]—The section 24 in the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (supra) shall be read and construed as if the words " or mortgagee " had followed the word " purchaser " in every place where the latter word is introduced in the said section.

STEALING OR DAMAGING, WITH INTENT TO STEAL, FIXTURES, TREES, ETC.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 8.]—Every person who—(1) Steals, or, with intent to steal, rips, cuts, severs, or breaks—(a) any glass or woodwork belonging to any building; or (b) any metal or utensil or fixture, fixed in or to any building; or (c) anything made of metal fixed in any land being private property, or as a fence to any dwelling-house, garden or area, or in any square or street, or in any place dedicated to public use or ornament, or in any burial-ground : [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31.] (2) Steals or, with intent to steal, cuts, breaks, roots up or otherwise destroys or damages the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, shrub, or underwood growing—(a) in any place whatsoever, the value of the article stolen or the injury done being to the amount of one shilling at the least, after two previous summary convictions of any such offence; or (b) in any park, pleasure ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house, the value of the article stolen or the injury done exceeding the amount of one pound; or (c) in any place whatsoever, the value of the article stolen or the injury done exceeding the amount of five pounds: [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 32, 33.] (3) Steals, or, with intent to steal, destroys or damages any plant, root, fruit, or vegetable production growing in any garden, orchard, pleasure ground, nursery-ground, hothouse, greenhouse or conservatory, after a previous summary conviction of any such offence; [This sub-section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 36,] shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny.

Indictment for stealing or cutting with intent, etc., Lead, etc., affixed to Buildings, etc.

Commencement as ante, p. 560.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 8 (1) of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole (a) [or with intent to steal, ripped, cut, severed or broke] sixty pounds' weight of lead, the property of J. N., then being fixed to the dwelling-house ("any building whatsoever") of the said J. N.

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. (See ante, pp. 500, 572.)—6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 8.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the lead, etc., as directed ante, pp. 511 et seq.; or if the indictment charge that the defendant ripped, etc., the lead, with intent to steal it, prove the ripping, etc., as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 397 et seq.) Prove also, that the house from which the lead was stolen or ripped was the dwelling-house of J. N., situate as described in the indictment. On an indictment for stealing lead from the dwelling-house of W., B. proved that he managed the property of W., who resided at Patras, that he received the rent for W. and let the house: it was held that W.'s ownership was sufficiently proved. R. v. Brummitt,

(a) In the 25th edition of this book, the square brackets enclosing the words "or with intent to steal, ripped, cut, severed or broke" were inadvertently omitted. An indictment was drawn, charging a prisoner in one count that he "stole, or with intent to steal, ripped and severed or broke one grate," etc. The prisoner was convicted, and he appealed. The Court of Criminal Appeal quashed the conviction upon the ground that two separate offences had been charged in one count, and that the indictment was therefore bad for duplicity. R. v. Molloy [1921] 2 K. B. 364.

L. & C. 9; 8 Cox, 413. An unfinished building intended as a cart-shed, which is boarded up on all its sides, and has a door with a lock on it, and the frame of a roof with loose gorse thrown upon it, because it is not yet thatched, was held to be a building within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31 (rep.). R. v. Worrall, 7 C. & P. 516.

An indictment for stealing a copper pipe fixed to the dwelling-house of A. and B. was held not supported by proof of stealing a pipe fixed to two rooms of which A. and B. were separate tenants in the same house. R. v. Finch, 1 Mood. 418. Where a man (having given a false representation of himself) got into possession of a house under a treaty for a lease of it, and then stripped it of the lead, the jury, being of opinion that he obtained possession of the house with intent to steal the lead, found him guilty; and he afterwards had judgment. R. v. Munday, 2 Leach, 850; 2 East, P. C. 594: followed in R. v. Richards [1911] 1 K. B. 260; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 174; 22 Cox, 372; 104 L. T. 48; 75 J. P. 144. An indictment for stealing lead fixed to "a certain wharf" was held to be sufficient, it being proved that the wharf was in fact a building. R. v. Rice, Bell, 87; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 64.

It has been held that upon an indictment on this section of the statute, the defendant cannot be convicted of simple larceny: R. v. Gooch, 8 C. & P. 293; and see R. v. Millar, 7 C. & P. 665: and that if the accused is charged with simple larceny, but the evidence proves a larceny under this section, he cannot be convicted. R. v. Molloy, 24 Cox, 226; 78 J. P. 216; 10 Cr. App. R. 75. As, however, simple larceny is now a statutory offence (see ante, p. 500), and wide powers of amending indictments exist (see ante, p. 54), it may be doubted whether these decisions will be followed in future.

Indictment for stealing or cutting, etc., with intent to steal, Trees, etc., in Parks, etc., Value above 1l.

Commencement as ante, p. 560.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 8 (2) (b) of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole [or with intent to steal, cut, broke, rooted up, or otherwise destroyed or damaged] one oak-tree ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, shrub, or underwood"), of the value of two pounds,* the property of J. N., then growing in a certain park ("park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, avenue, or any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house") of the said J. N. [thereby doing injury exceeding the amount of one pound].

If the indictment is for cutting, etc., with intent to steal, omit this allegation of value.*

Felony: punishment same as in simple larceny. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 8. (See ante, pp. 500, 574).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the tree, as directed, ante, pp. 511 et seq.; or, if the indictment allege that the defendant cut, etc., the tree with intent to steal it, prove the cutting, etc., as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 397 et seq.) In the former case, the value of the tree, and in the latter, the amount of the injury done, must be proved to exceed the sum of 1*l.* But if several trees be stolen or cut at the same time, or so continuously as to form one transaction, and the value or injury done exceed that amount in the aggregate, it will be sufficient. R. v. Shepherd, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 118; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 45; 11 Cox, 119. The injury mentioned in the statute means the actual injury to the tree itself, not consequential injury resulting from the defendant's act; and where the evidence showed that the actual injury done to certain trees damaged by the defendant was less than the statutable amount, but that it would, in consequence of the damage done, be necessary to stub up and replace part of an old hedge, at an expense greater than the statutable amount, this was held insufficient. R. v. Whiteman, Dears. 353; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 120. Prove that the tree, etc., stolen or cut, etc., was at the time growing in a park, etc., belonging to or in the occupation of J. N., and situate as described in the indictment. The words "adjoining any dwelling-house" import actual contact; and therefore ground separated from a house by a narrow walk and paling, wall, or gate, is not within their meaning. R. v. Hodges, M. & M. 341.

Indictment for stealing, or cutting, etc., with intent to steal, Trees, etc., growing in any place whatsoever, value above 5l.

Commencement as ante, p. 560.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE

Larceny, contrary to section 8 (2) (c) of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole [or with intent to steal, cut, broke, rooted up, or otherwise destroyed or damaged] one ash-tree ("the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, shrub, or underwood") of the value of six pounds,* the property of J. N., then growing in a certain close of the said J. N. [thereby doing injury exceeding the amount of five pounds].

If the indictment is for cutting, etc., with intent to steal, etc., omit this allegation of value.*

Felony: see the last precedent. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 8 (ante, p. 574).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the tree, as directed, ante, pp. 511 et seq.; or if the indictment alleges that the defendant cut, etc., the tree with intent to steal it, prove the cutting, as stated in the indictment, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See ante, pp. 397 et seq.) In the former case, the value of the tree, and in the latter the amount of injury done (see supra), must be proved to exceed the value of 5*l.*, but it is sufficient to prove that several trees were stolen or cut at the same time, or so continuously as to form one transaction, and the value or injury done in the aggregate exceeds that amount. R. v. Shepherd, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 118; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 45. Prove that the close in which the tree was stolen or cut belonged to or was in the occupation of J. N., and was situate as described in the indictment. It is not necessary to prove that the close was not a park, etc.

STEALING SILK, ETC., IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 9.]—Every person who steals, to the value of ten shillings, any woollen, linen, hempen or cotton yarn, or any goods or article of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, alpaca or mohair, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, whilst laid, placed or exposed, during any stage, process or progress of manufacture in any building, field or other place, shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 9 of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole thirty yards of linen cloth, of the value of twenty shillings ("to the value of ten shillings"), the property of J. N., whilst the same were laid, placed or exposed in a building, during a stage, process or progress of manufacture.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour: 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 9; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to recognizances and sureties for keeping the peace, see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (5) (b) (ante, p. 507).

As to summary proceedings for the embezzlement of materials or tools by persons employed in such manufacture, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40, ss. 2, 3, 11.

Evidence.

Prove the larceny as directed, ante, p. 511 et seq.; prove the value of the goods taken to be ten shillings at the least; then prove that they were stolen from the building, field, or other place mentioned in the indictment; and, lastly, prove that when stolen the goods were placed, laid, or exposed in the building, etc., described, in a certain stage, process, or progress of manufacture.

Where, upon an indictment on 18 G. 2, c. 27 (rep.), for stealing yarn from a bleaching-ground, it appeared in evidence that the yarn, at the time it was stolen, was in heaps, for the purpose of being carried into the house, and not spread out for bleaching, Thompson, B., held that the case was not within the statute. R. v. Hugill, 2 Russ. Cr. (7th ed.) 1447. So, where the indictment was for stealing calico, placed to be printed and dried in a certain building, it was held that, in order to support a capital charge, it was necessary to prove that the building from which the calico was stolen was used either for drying or printing calico: R. v. Dixon, R. & R. 53; but it should be observed, that 18 G. 2, c. 27 (rep.), mentioned particularly a building, etc., made use of by any calico printer, etc., "for printing, whitening, bowking, bleaching, or dyeing." Goods remain in a "stage, process, or progress of manufacture," within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 30, s. 3 (rep.), and therefore also within this statute, though the texture is complete, if they are not yet brought into a condition for sale. R. v. Woodhead, 1 M. & Rob. 549.

If you prove the larceny, but fail to prove the other circumstances, so as to bring the case within the statute, the defendant may be found guilty of simple larceny.

ABSTRACTION OF ELECTRICITY.

[This section re-enacts 45 & 46 Vict. c. 56, s. 23.]

Indictment.

Felony: punishable as simple larceny. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 10. See ante, p. 577.

"Maliciously" means intentionally and without lawful excuse: see post, pp. 741, 800. Prove also that the electricity was the property of the person named in the indictment. See R. v. Armanni, 130 Cent. Crim. Ct. Sess. Pap. 707.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 11.]—Every person who steals, or severs with intent to steal, the ore of any metal, or any lapis calaminaris, manganese, mundick, wad, black cawke, black lead, coal, or cannel coal from any mine bed or vein thereof, shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour. [This section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 38.]

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole [or severed with intent to steal] twenty pounds' weight of copper ore ("the ore of any metal, or any lapis calaminaris, manganese, or mundick, or any wad, black cawke, or black lead, or any coal or cannel coal"), the property of J. N., from a certain mine of copper ore ("mine bed or vein thereof respectively") of the said J. N.

Felony: imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 11. As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, Id. s. 37 (5) (b) (ante, p. 501).

Prove a larceny of the ore, etc., as directed, ante, pp. 511 et seq., or if a severance with intent to steal is alleged in the indictment, prove the severance, and circumstances from which the jury may infer the intent. (See R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765, and ante, pp. 352, 356, 364). Prove, also, that the mine was at the time in the possession or occupation of J. N.

[This section was taken from 2 & 3 Vict. c. 58, s. 10, and meets the difficulty created by R. v. Webb, 1 Mood. 431, where it was held not to be larceny for miners, employed to bring ore to the surface, and paid by the owners according to the quantity produced, to remove from the heaps of other miners ore produced by them, and add it to their own, in order to increase their wages, the ore still remaining in the possession of the owner.]

STEALING, ETC. POSTAL PACKETS, ETC.

Sect. 46.—Interpretation.]—Expressions "mail," etc., to have the same meaning as in Post Office Act, 1908. See ante, p. 508, and post, p. 585.

The above sections of the Larceny Act, 1916, reproduce the portions of ss. 50, 55, and 52 of the Post Office Act, 1908, relating to larceny, embezzlement and receiving, in order that the Larceny Act, 1916, may serve the purpose of a consolidating statute by presenting a complete code of indictable offences of the nature of larceny. As, however, the Post Office Act, 1908, is itself a code of Post Office offences, ss. 50, 52, and 55 have been left standing in their entirety, and in practice it will no doubt be found more convenient to proceed under the Post Office Act, 1908, the principal provisions of which are set out below.

8 Edw. 7, c. 48 (Post Office Act, 1908), s. 50.—Stealing mail bag or postal packet.]—If any person—

he shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to penal servitude for life or any term not less than three years, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years. [This section is framed from 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 6, 27, 28, 29, 42, and 47 & 48 Vict. c. 76, s. 13. For definitions, see s. 89, post, p. 585.]

Sect. 51.—Unlawfully taking away or opening mail bag sent by vessel employed under Post Office.]—If any person unlawfully takes away or opens a mail bag sent by any vessel employed by or under the Post Office for the transmission of postal packets under contract, or wilfully takes a postal packet in course of transmission by post out of a mail bag so sent, he shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years or not less than three years,

Sect. 53.—Fraudulent retention of mail bag or postal packet.]—If any person fraudulently retains, or wilfully secretes or keeps, or detains, or, when required by an officer of the Post Office, neglects or refuses to deliver up—

(a) any postal packet which is in course of transmission by post and which ought to have been delivered to any other person; or

(b) any postal packet in course of transmission by post or any mail bag which shall have been found by him or by any other person, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable on conviction on indictment to a fine and to imprisonment with or without hard labour. [This section is framed from 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 31, 42. As to former law, see R. v. Mucklow, 1 Mood. 160.]

Sect. 54.—Criminal diversion of letters from addressee.]—(1) If any person not in the employment of the Postmaster-General wilfully and maliciously, with intent to injure any other person, either opens or causes to be opened any letter which ought to have been delivered to that other person, or does any act or thing whereby the due delivery of the letter to that other person is prevented or impeded, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months.

Sect. 56.—Opening or delaying postal packets.]—(1) If any officer of the Post Office, contrary to his duty, opens or procures or suffers to be opened any postal packet in course of transmission by post, or wilfully detains or delays, or procures or suffers to be detained or delayed, any such postal packet, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to imprisonment with or without hard labour, or to a fine, or to both such imprisonment and fine. [This section re-enacts 7 W. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 25. As to detaining postal packets containing obscene matter or contraband goods, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, ss. 16, 18.]

(2) Where by reason of any Act being declared to be a Post Office Act or its provisions to be Post Office laws any enactment repealed by this Act is applied for any purpose, the corresponding provisions of this Act shall apply in like manner.

(3) A reference in any enactment other than this Act to a post letter shall be construed to refer to a postal packet within the meaning of this Act.

31 & 32 Vict. c. 110 (Telegraph Act, 1868), s. 20.]—Officials of post office disclosing or intercepting telegraph messages.]—Any person having official duties connected with the post office, or acting on behalf of the postmaster-general, who shall, contrary to his duty, disclose or in any way make known or intercept the contents, or any part of the contents, of any telegraphic messages, or any message intrusted to the postmaster-general for the purpose of transmission, shall, in England and in Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and shall upon conviction be subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve calendar months; and the postmaster-general shall make regulations to carry out the intentions of this section, and to prevent the improper use by any person in his employment or acting on his behalf of any knowledge he may acquire of the contents of any telegraphic message.

Sect. 21.—Property in telegraphic messages, how laid—Form of indictment.]—In every case where an offence shall be committed in respect of a telegraphic message sent by or intrusted to the postmaster-general, it shall be lawful and sufficient, in the indictment or criminal letters to be preferred against the offender, to lay the property of such telegraphic message in His Majesty's postmaster-general, without specifying any further or other name, addition, or description whatsoever, and it shall not be necessary in the indictment or criminal letters to allege or to prove upon the trial or otherwise that the telegraphic message was of any value; and in any indictment to be preferred against any person employed under the post office, for any offence committed under this Act, it shall be lawful and sufficient to state and allege that such offender was employed under the post office at the time of the committing of such offence, without stating further the nature or particulars of his employment.

32 & 33 Vict. c. 73 (Telegraph Act, 1869), s. 23.]—Telegraphic messages to be deemed postal packets.]— . . . Provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall have the effect of relieving any officer of the post office from any liability which would, but for the passing of this Act, have attached to a telegraph company, or to any other company or person, to produce in any court of law, when duly required so to do, any such written or printed message or communication. [The part omitted is repealed by 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 92, and is replaced by definition of postal packet in s. 89 of that Act, ante, p. 585.]

Sect. 24.—Telegraph Acts to be Post Office Acts.]—The Telegraph Act, 1868, and this Act shall be "Post Office Acts," and the provisions contained therein respectively shall be "post office laws," within the meaning of the "Post Office Act, 1908." [See 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 91, ante, p. 587.]

47 & 48 Vict. c. 76 (Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884), s. 1.]—. . . "This Act shall be deemed to be a Post Office Act within the meaning of the Post Office (Offices) Act, 1837." [Rest of section repealed, 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 92. (See now s. 91 of that Act, ante, p. 587.)]

Sect. 11.—Improper disclosures of telegrams—Forgery of telegrams, post, p. 851.]— . . . If any person being in the employment of a telegraph company as defined by this section improperly divulges to any person the purport of any telegram, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanour and be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding 20*l.*, and on conviction on indictment to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one year, or to a fine not exceeding 200*l.*

For the purposes of this section the expression "telegram" means a written or printed message or communication sent to or delivered at a post office, or the office of a telegraph company, for transmission by telegraph, or delivered by the post office or a telegraph company as a message or communication transmitted by telegraph.

The expression "telegraph company" means any company, corporation, or persons carrying on the business of sending telegrams for the public under whatever authority or in whatever manner such company, corporation, or persons may act or be constituted. The expression "telegraph" has the same meaning as in the Telegraph Act, 1869, and the Acts amending the same.

Indictment against an Officer of the Post Office for opening or delaying Letters (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 56 (ante, p. 582)).

THE KING v. A. B.

Central Criminal Court.

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY.

A. B. is charged with the following offence :—

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Opening a letter, contrary to section 56 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the 1st day of June, A.D. 1917, in the county of London, being an officer of the Post Office, did contrary to his duty open or procure or suffer to be opened [or wilfully detain or delay, or procure or suffer to be detained or delayed] a postal packet in course of transmission by post, the property of the Postmaster-General. As to the venue, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 72, ante, p. 584.)

Misdemeanor: fine, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 56). (See ante, p. 582.)

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was at the time of the commission of the offence an officer of the Post Office as defined in s. 89. For this purpose evidence of his acting as such is sufficient, without proving his appointment. R. v. Rees, 6 C. & P. 606. See R. v. Borrett, 6 C. & P. 124 : R. v. Townsend, C. & Mar. 178 : R. v. Goodwin, 1 Lew. 100. The defendant, a letter carrier from C. to T., had brought the C. letter bag, and safely delivered it to the postmaster at T., whose duty it was to sort the letters in time to make up the bags for the mails. The defendant's duty as a letter carrier was complete on the delivery of the letters to the postmaster; but the defendant was afterwards requested by the postmaster to assist him in the sorting, and consented to do so, and in the course of doing so stole a letter. It was held that, while so engaged in sorting the letters he was a person employed under the post office, within the statute. R. v. Reason, Dears. 226; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 11. See R. v. Glass, 2 C. & K. 395.

Then prove that the defendant opened the letter, or delayed it, according to the allegation in the indictment. The defendant may prove, in answer to the charge, any of the circumstances specified in the proviso, and which would authorize him to open or detain the letter.

Indictment against an Officer of the Post Office for stealing or embezzling Letters (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 55 (ante, p. 581)).

Commencement as in the last precedent.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 55 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, being an officer of the Post Office, stole ("steals or embezzles, secretes or destroys") one postal packet in the course of transmission by post, the property of the Postmaster-General, containing a cheque ("any chattel, money, or valuable security") for the payment of ten pounds.*

This allegation may be omitted, if the packet did not contain any chattel, money, or valuable security. As to the venue*, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 72 (ante, p. 584). [As to form of indictment for embezzlement, see post, p. 605.]

Felony: if the packet contains any chattel, money, or valuable security, penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 55 (ante, p. 581).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106).

If the packet does not contain any chattel, money, or valuable security, felony, penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 55 (ante, p. 581).

This offence is triable at quarter sessions.

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant was at the time he committed the offence an officer of the post office as defined in s. 89. See R. v. Rees, 6 C. & P. 606 (ante, p. 589) : R. v. Reason, Dears. 226; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 11 (supra) : R. v. Milner, 4 Cox, 275 : R. v. Simpson, 4 Cox, 276. It seems not to be necessary to prove his appointment if it can be proved that he acted as an officer or employee of the post office. R. v. Borrett [1833] 6 C. & P. 124; 1 Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 171 (and see ante, p. 401). Then prove that he stole the packet, with its contents (see ante, pp. 511 et seq.); or that he embezzled, secreted, or destroyed it. It is not necessary to prove that the letter or valuable security was of any value. 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 73 (ante, p. 584). Prove that the packet was in course of transmission by post, by calling the person who posted it, and producing the receipt or certificate, if any, given under the Postal Regulations of posting, or registration, or delivery (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 12), or by producing the letter bearing a post-mark; which semble is primâ facie evidence of posting. R. v. Plumer, R. & R. 264 : Woodcock v. Houldsworth, 16 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 49; 16 M. & W. 124 : Roscoe, Nisi Prius Evid. (18th ed.) 123 : Taylor, Evid. (11th ed.), s. 179. R. v. Johnson, 7 East, 65. Any letter posted in the ordinary way, whatever be its address or object, is a postal packet within the statute. Young v. R., 1 Den. 194; 2 C. & K. 466. Therefore, where a fictitious letter is posted, with money in it, to try the honesty of the defendant, the stealing of it is within the statute. Id. (overruling R. v. Gardner, 1 C. & K. 628. See R. v. Ryan [1905] 9 Canada Cr. Cas. 347.) But the secreting, by a letter carrier, of a letter written by an inspector of the post office, for the purpose of trying the defendant's honesty, was held not to be a stealing of a post letter within the statute; it was held, however, that he might be convicted of simple larceny, in stealing a sovereign enclosed by the inspector in such a letter, the sovereign being one of those which are occasionally found on the floor of the post office, having dropped out of letters, and which are carried to a fund which is under the direction of the postmaster-general; and that such sovereign might be described as the property of the postmaster-general. R. v.

Rathbone, 2 Mood. 242; C. & Mar. 220. So where, suspicions being entertained against the defendant, who was a sub-sorter in the General Post Office, the authorities there made up a letter, and enclosed coin in it, and put upon it the usual postage stamp; and an inspector delivered it in, at the window in the outer hall, to another inspector, who handed it to a third, who, after locking it up for the night, handed it to a sorter, who placed it amongst the letters which it was the prisoner's duty to sort, and the prisoner stole the letter and the money;— the ordinary course of posting a letter at the outer hall of the General Post Office being by placing it in the receiving-box; it was held that the prisoner was not rightly convicted of stealing a post letter containing money, and that the conviction must be confined to the count for simple larceny. R. v. Shepherd, Dears. 606; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 52. Where a servant who was sent with a letter and a penny to pay the postage, finding the door of the receiving-house shut, put the penny inside the letter, fastened it by means of a pin, and then put the letter in the unpaid letter-box: it was held that a messenger in the post office, who stole this letter with the penny in it, might be convicted of stealing a post letter containing money, though the money was not put in for the purpose of being conveyed by post to the person to whom the letter was addressed. R. v. Mence, C. & Mar. 234. Where a letter containing a bank-note was received by the postmistress for registration and not registered (though the fee had been paid), but placed by her under a glass case to which the prisoner (an officer of the post office) had access, the letter was held to be a post letter within 7 W. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 47 (rep.). R. v. Rogers, 5 Cox, 293, Cresswell, J. But where, the post office being at an inn, the person sent to put a letter, containing bank-notes, into the post, took it to the inn, with money to prepay the postage, and laid the letter, and the money on it, upon a table in the lobby of the inn, in which the letter-box was, and pointed out the letter to the female servant at the inn (not authorized to receive letters), who said "she would give it to them"; and she stole the letter and its contents: it was held that this was not a post letter within 7 W. 1 & 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 26, 27 (rep.), and the defendant could be convicted only of larceny. R. v. Harley, 1 C. & K. 89. An unsealed letter, delivered by the postmistress at G. to the defendant, the letter-carrier between that place and L., with the directions to obtain at the post office at L. a money order for one pound, and after enclosing it in the letter, to post the letter at L., was held to be, while in the defendant's hands, a post letter, and the defendant to be a person employed under the post office, so that he might be convicted under this section. R. v. Bickerstaff, 2 C. & K. 761. Where the defendant, a person employed in the post office, having committed a mistake in the sorting of the letters, put some post letters down a water-closet, in order to avoid the supposed penalty attached to such a mistake, this was held to be not only a secreting but a larceny of the letters. R. v. Wynn, 1 Den. 365; 2 C. & K. 859; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 51. It was the duty of a letter-carrier, on returning from his round, to bring back to the post office any letters which he had failed to deliver. A letter containing money having been given to him with other letters to deliver; on his return from his round, he brought back to the office the pouch, containing some letters which he had failed to deliver, but said nothing about the money-letter. Subsequently on enquiry being made of him, he produced the money-letter from his pocket; upon these facts it was held that he was rightly convicted of stealing the letter. R. v. Poynton, L. & C. 247; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 29.

Indictment for stealing Money, etc., out of Postal Packets.
8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 50 (ante, p. 580).)

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 50 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole a valuable security, to wit, one bill of exchange for the payment of ten pounds ("any chattel, money, or valuable security") the property of the Postmaster-General, from and out of a postal packet in course of transmission by post. As to the venue, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 72 (ante, p. 584).

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 50 (ante, p. 580).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p 106).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the chattel, money, or valuable security out of the postal packet, either directly or by circumstances from which it may be inferred. Prove, also, that the packet was in course of transmission by post and delivered to the post office and not yet delivered to the addressee, which is an essential part of the offence. (See ss. 50, 74, 90: R. v. Rathbone (ante, p. 590), and Young v. R. (ante, p. 590).) A delivery to a letter-carrier, or other person authorized to receive postal packets of the description in question, is a delivery to the post office; and a delivery at the house or office of the person to whom the packet is addressed or to him, or his servant or agent, or other person considered to be authorized to receive the letter according to the usual manner of delivering that person's postal packets, is a delivery to the person addressed. 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 90 (ante, p. 586).) It was held on 7 W. & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 27, that the words "every person" include those employed by the post office as well as others. See R. v. Brown, R. & R. 32 n.; overruling R. v. Skutt. 1 Leach, 106; 2 Leach, 904; and R. v. Pooley, R. & R. 31; and see R. v Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155.

Indictment for stealing, etc., postal packets, etc. (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 50 (ante, p. 580).)

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 50 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole one postal packet in the course of transmission by post, the property of the Postmaster-General, from a mail bag ("from a mail bag, or from a post office, or from an officer of the post office, or from a mail"). As to venue, see ante, p. 584.

Felony: penal servitude for life or for not less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 50 (ante, p. 580).

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106).

Evidence.

Prove the larceny of the packet as directed, ante, p. 511 et seq. The taking away and destroying of a post letter in order to suppress inquiries supposed by the defendant to be made in it about her character, was held to be a larceny of the letter. R. v. Jones, 1 Den. 188; 2 C. & K. 236. A person who with intent to deprive another to whom a letter is addressed of such letter and to commit a fraud, induces a servant of the post office to intercept and hand over such letter, which is in course of transmission by post, is either guilty of larceny as a principal felon, or is accessory before the fact of the larceny committed by the servant of the post office, and in either view can be convicted on an indictment charging him with larceny of the letter. R. v. James, 24 Q. B. D. 439; 59 L. J. (M. C.) 96. Where the defendant obtained the mail bags from the post office, pretending that he was the mail guard, and then ran away with them; the jury being of opinion that he got possession of them with intent to steal them, found him guilty; and the judges held the conviction to be right. R v. Pearce, 2 East, P. C. 603, 673. Taking the mail bags off the post horse during the momentary absence of the person employed to carry them, was held to be a taking from his possession, within the meaning of 52 G. 3, c. 14, s. 3 (rep.). R. v. Robinson, 2 Stark. (N. P.) 485.

Where a letter intended to be delivered in Brighton and addressed to Mrs. Fisher, 29 Gloucester St., was delivered at 29 Gloucester St., Lambeth, where the prisoner lodged, and the prisoner, who was known to some persons as Fisher, opened the letter and cashed a cheque contained in it, it was held that he could not be convicted of larceny of the cheque on the ground that there was no evidence of animus furandi when the prisoner received the cheque. R. v. Fish [1900] 64 J. P. 137, Bosanquet, Common Serjeant: where R. v. Mucklow.

1 Mood. 160, and R. v. Davies, Dears. 640; 25 L. J. (M. C.) 91, were cited and followed. In such a case the indictment should be framed under 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 54 (ante, p. 581).

Indictment for receiving a stolen postal packet, etc. (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 52 (ante, p. 581).)

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Receiving stolen property, contrary to section 52 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, received one postal packet ("any mail bag or any postal packet, or any chattel or money, or valuable security," etc.) the property of the Postmaster-General, knowing the same to have been stolen [as the case may be] ("stolen, taken, embezzled, or secreted," ante, p. 581), from and out of a mail bag, and to have been sent ("sent or intended to be sent") by post. As to the venue, see ante, p. 584.

Felony : 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 52 (ante, p. 581). The punishment varies according as the principal offence is larceny (s. 50), taking (s. 51), or embezzling or secreting (s. 55). Where the maximum punishment is penal servitude for life under s. 51, or in cases of embezzlement of postal packets containing money, etc., under s. 55, the receiving is not triable at quarter sessions. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106).

This precedent will serve in most cases as a second count for receiving to an indictment for larceny. See the precedents, ante, pp. 509 et seq.

Evidence.

Prove the felony as directed (ante, p. 590); then prove the receipt and guilty knowledge, as directed (post, p. 730); and also prove that the defendant at the time he received the packet, etc., knew that it had been sent, or that it was intended to have been sent, by post. This may be shown by the post-mark on the letter, or by the contents of the packet, if brought to the defendant's knowledge, or by other circumstances from which it may be inferred. (See ante, pp. 397, 398.)

For definition of the terms "mail," "mail bag," "officer of the post office," "post office postal packet," "transmission by post," see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, ss. 89, 90 (ante, pp. 585, 586).

Indictment for stopping Mails, with intent to rob, etc.
(8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 50 (d) (ante, p. 580.)

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Stopping a mail, contrary to section 50 (d) of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stopped a mail with intent to rob or search the mail. As to the venue, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s 72 (ante, p. 584).

Felony: see the last precedent.

This offence is not triable at quarter sessions. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1 (ante, p. 106).

Evidence.

Prove that the mail is such within the definition in s. 89 (ante, p. 584).

Prove that the defendant stopped the mail, and prove the intent by circumstances from which it may be inferred. If the defendant actually robbed or searched the mail, his original intent so to do will be put beyond doubt. The words " or search " are omitted from s. 12 of the Larceny Act, 1916 (ante, p 579), as going beyond larceny.

Indictment for fraudulently retaining Postal Packet.
(8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 53 (ante, p. 581).)

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Fraudulently retaining a postal packet, contrary to section 53 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, fraudulently did retain ("fraudulently retains or wilfully secretes or keeps or detains or when required by any officer of the post office, neglects or refuses to deliver up") a postal packet in course of transmission by post, the property of the Postmaster-General, which ought to have been delivered to a certain other person, to wit, one J. N. As to the venue, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 72 (ante, p. 584).

Misdemeanor: fine and imprisonment, with or without hard labour. 8 Edw. 7, c 48, s. 53 (ante, p. 581).

Evidence.

Prove that the letter ought to have been delivered to J. N.; that it was delivered to the defendant, and was retained by him, as stated in the indictment. See R. v. Fish, 64 J. P. 137 (ante, p. 593). If the defendant secretes, or keeps, or detains the letter after a request to deliver it up made by an officer of the post office, it may be presumed that he does so wilfully, unless at the time of the refusal to deliver it up, he gives some bonâ fide excuse for so doing. To make out a fraudulent retainer, however, it must be shown, from the contents of the letter or other circumstances, that the defendant well knew the letter was not intended for him. The fact that the defendant found the packet is no defence. See s. 53 (b), ante, p. 581.

Indictment for endeavouring to procure the commission of offences punishable on indictment against the Post Office Act, 1908. (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 69 (ante, p. 583).

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Endeavouring to procure the commission of an offence, contrary to section 69 of the Post Office Act, 1908.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, endeavoured to procure ("solicit or endeavour to procure") one J. S., an officer of the post office, unlawfully and contrary to his duty to open a postal packet then in course of transmission by post (see Edw. 7, c. 48, ss. 56, 74 (ante, pp. 582, 584), the property of the Postmaster-General. From this and the foregoing precedents an indictment may easily be framed for procuring the commission of any offence punishable on indictment under the Post Office Act, 1908. As to venue, see 8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 72 (ante, p. 584).

Misdemeanor: imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. (8 Edw. 7, c. 48, s. 69).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant solicited or endeavoured to procure the commission of the offence stated. It is immaterial whether the offence was completed or not.

LARCENY IN DWELLING HOUSES.

(See post, pp. 653 et seq.)

LARCENY FROM THE PERSON.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 14.]—Every person who steals any chattel, money, or valuable security from the person of another shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. [This section partly re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 40.]

Indictment for Stealing from the Person.

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny from the person, contrary to section 14 of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, stole one watch, one pocket-book, and one pocket-handkerchief ("any chattel, money, or valuable security") of the goods and chattels of J. N., from the person of the said J. N.

Felony: see precedent, post, p. 638.

Evidence.

Prove a larceny as directed ante, p. 511 et seq., except that an actual and not merely a constructive taking must be proved; and prove the goods to have been actually severed from the person of J. N. Where the defendant drew a book from the inside pocket of the prosecutor's coat, about an inch above the top of the pocket, but whilst the book was still about the person of the prosecutor, the prosecutor suddenly put up his hand, upon which the defendant let the book drop, and it fell into the prosecutor's pocket; this was held, by a majority of the judges, not to be a sufficient asportation to warrant a conviction for stealing from the person, because from the first to the last the book remained about the person of the prosecutor; although it was sufficient to constitute a simple larceny. R. v. Thompson, 1 Mood. 78. But where the prosecutor carried his watch in his waistcoat pocket, fastened to a chain, which was passed through a button-hole of the waistcoat, and kept there by a watch-key at the other end of the chain; and the defendant took the watch out of the pocket, and forcibly drew the chain and key out of the button-hole, but the point of the key caught upon another button, and the defendant's hand being seized, the watch remained there suspended, this was held a sufficient severance. R. v. Simpson, Dears. 421; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 7. See R. v. Lapier, 1 Leach, 320, ante, p. 533. Where the prisoner put his hand into the prosecutor's pocket, seized his purse, and drew it to the edge of the pocket, but failed to draw it completely out of the pocket owing to its being caught in the prosecutor's belt, this was held to be sufficient evidence of asportation to support a charge of simple larceny, but not of larceny from the person. R. v. Taylor [1911] 1 K. B. 674; 80 L. J. (K. B.) 311; 75 J. P. 126; 27 T. L. R. 108. Where a man went to bed with a prostitute, having left his watch in his hat on the table, and while he was asleep she stole the watch, this was held to be a stealing in the dwelling-house, and not a stealing from the person. R. v. Hamilton, 8 C. & P. 49.

STEALING FROM SHIPS, DOCKS, ETC.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 15.]—Every person who steals—(1) any goods in any vessel, barge or boat of any description in any haven or any port of entry or discharge or upon any navigable river or canal or in any creek or basin belonging to or communicating with any such haven, port, river, or canal; or (2) any goods from any dock, wharf or quay adjacent to any such haven, port, river, canal, creek, or basin; or (3) any part of any vessel in distress, wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, merchandise, or articles of any kind belonging to such vessel; shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable to penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years. [This section is framed from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 63, 64.]

Indictment for stealing from a Vessel on a navigable River.

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 15 (1) of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

J. S., on the first day of June, A.D. ——, in the county of London, stole twenty pounds' weight of indigo ("any goods or merchandise"), the property of J. N., in a ship called the Rattler ("vessel, barge, or boat, of any description whatsoever"), upon the navigable river Thames ("in any haven, or in any port of entry or discharge, or upon any navigable river or canal, or in any creek or basin belonging to or communicating with any such haven, port, river, or canal").

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 15; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2, ante, pp. 237-238. As to recognizances and sureties for keeping the peace, see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (5) (b), ante, p. 501.

Evidence.

[Prove a larceny as directed, ante, pp. 511 et seq., except that you must prove an actual and not merely a constructive taking. The words "goods, wares, and merchandise," in 24 G. 2, c. 45 (rep.), were held to extend to such goods, etc., only as are usually lodged in vessels, or on wharves and quays, R. v. Grimes, Fost. 79 n.; 2 East, P. C. 647; R. v. Leigh, 1 Leach, 52. The same may be said of the present statute, by reason of the substitution of the words "goods and merchandise" for the words "chattel, money, or valuable security," which are used in other parts of the Act. The luggage of a passenger going by a steam-boat was held within 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 17 (rep.). R. v. Wright, 7 C. & P. 159. Prove that the goods, etc., were at the time in the ship described in the indictment. The words of the statute are "in any vessel," etc.; and it is therefore immaterial whether the defendant succeeded in taking the goods from the ship or not, if there was a sufficient asportation in the ship to constitute larceny. A man cannot be guilty of this offence in his own ship. R. v. Madox, R. & R. 92. Lastly, prove that the ship was at the time upon the river, etc., mentioned in the indictment. Where it was laid to be committed in a barge on the river Thames, and proved to have been committed in a barge lying aground on the bank of one of the creeks of the river, namely, Limehouse-dock, it was held to be a fatal variance. R. v. Pike, 1 Leach, 317; 2 East, P. C. 647. But see now 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 5 (ante, p. 54).

If you prove a larceny, but fail in proving the other circumstances requisite to bring the case within the statute, the defendant may be convicted of simple larceny.

Indictment for stealing from a Dock, etc.

Commence as in the last precedent]—twenty pounds' weight of indigo ("any goods or merchandise"), the property of J. N., in a dock ("dock, wharf, or quay") adjacent to the navigable river Thames ("adjacent to any haven, port," etc.: see the last precedent).

Felony. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 15. See the last precedent.

Evidence.

Prove the larceny as directed, ante, pp. 511 et seq., except that there must be an actual and not merely a constructive taking. The goods must be such as are usually deposited upon a dock, etc., for shipment, safe custody, or the like. Prove that the goods were taken from the dock, etc.; for which purpose a mere removal, such as would be sufficient to constitute simple larceny, will not suffice, for the words of the statute are, "from any dock." etc., to satisfy which there must be an actual removal from the dock, etc., in the same manner as upon an indictment for stealing from the person (infra). Lastly, prove that the dock, etc., from which the goods were taken, is adjacent to the navigable river, etc. This, as we have seen in the last case, is a matter of local description, and must be proved strictly as laid.

If you prove the larceny, but fail in proving any of the other circumstances necessary to bring the case within the statute, the defendant may be convicted of simple larceny.

LARCENY BY TENANTS OR LODGERS.

Statute.

6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50 (Larceny Act, 1916), s. 16.]—Every person who, being a tenant or lodger, or the husband or wife of any tenant or lodger, steals any chattel or fixture let to be used by such person in or with any house or lodging shall be guilty of felony and on conviction thereof liable—(a) if the value of such chattel or fixture exceeds the sum of five pounds, to penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years; (b) in all other cases, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; (c) in any case, if a male under the age of sixteen years, to be once privately whipped in addition to any other punishment to which he may by law be liable. [This section re-enacts 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 74.]

Indictment.

The indictment for stealing a chattel will be in the form ante, p. 509, and for stealing a fixture, in the form ante, p. 573. The article stolen must be described as the property of the landlord; and in the latter case the dwelling-house or lodging must, according to the circumstances, be described as the dwelling-house of the defendant, or of the landlord, as in burglary.

Felony: imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour,and, if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping (Id.)—or if the value of the chattel or fixture exceed 5l., penal servitude for not more than seven nor less than three years, or imprisonment, etc., as above.—6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 16; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to recognizances and sureties for keeping the peace, see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (5) (b) (ante, p. 581).

Evidence.

Prove a larceny of the chattel mentioned in the indictment, as directed ante, pp. 511 et seq.; or, if the indictment alleged that the defendant stole a fixture, prove the allegations of that indictment, as directed ante, p. 573. Independently of the statute, the contract of letting, and that the goods were in his possession under that contract, would be matter of defence for the defendant; but as that circumstance would now be no defence, it is immaterial whether the contract of letting be proved or not.

LARCENY AND EMBEZZLEMENT BY CLERKS, SERVANTS, ETC.

Statutes.

Indictment for larceny by clerk or servant.

Commencement as ante, p. 588.

STATEMENT OF OFFENCE.

Larceny, contrary to section 17 (1) (a) of the Larceny Act, 1916.

PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE.

A. B., on the —— day of ——, A.D. ——, in the county of ——, being clerk r servant to M. N., stole from the said M. N. ten yards of cloth.

A count for larceny at common law may be added, but is unnecessary, as the ury can negative the relation of master and servant and convict of simple rceny. R. v. Jennings, Dears. & B. 447; 7 Cox. 397. If it appears that the oney, etc., was received by the clerk, etc., for and on account of his aster and was not received into the possession of the master otherwise an by the actual possession of the clerk, etc., so as not to amount to larceny but to embezzlement, the defendant is nevertheless not entitled to be acquitted, but the jury may return as their verdict that the defendant was not guilty of larceny, but was guilty of embezzlement, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted on an indictment for embezzlement. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 44 (2), ante, p. 506.

Felony: penal servitude for not more than fourteen nor less than three years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour, for not more than two years; and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.—6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 17 (ante, p. 601); 54 & 55 Vict. c. 69, s. 1, sub-ss. 1, 2 (ante, pp. 238, 239). As to requiring the offender to enter into recognizances and find sureties for keeping the peace, see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 37 (5) (b) (ante, p. 501).

Evidence.

Prove that the defendant, at the time he committed the offence, was " clerk " or " servant " to M. N., or was employed by M. N. for that purpose or in that capacity, as alleged in the indictment. (See post, p. 607). The driver of a glass-coach hired for the day is not the servant of the hirer, so as to come within the statute. R. v. Haydon, 7 C. & P. 445; and see Quarman v. Burnett, 9 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 308; 6 M. & W. 499 : Milligan v. Wedge, 10 L. J. (N. S.) Q. B. 19; 12 A. & E. 737 : Jones v. Scullard [1898] 2 Q. B. 565; 67 L. J. (Q. B.) 895 : R. v. Hey, 1 Den. 602; 2 C. & K. 983 : R. v. Gibbs, Dears. 445; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62. In R. v. Warren, 10 Cox, 359, a woman living with a man as his wife was convicted of larceny as his servant.

Then prove the larceny as directed, ante, pp. 511 et seq.; see particularly p. 531. Where, upon an indictment for larceny, it appeared that the defendant, being sent by his master to get change for a 5l. note, got silver for it and absconded, it was held that it was not larceny, because the silver had never been in the possession of the master, except by the hands of the defendant; R. v. Sullens, 1 Mood. 129; but it is now embezzlement within 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 17 (1) (b), and see s. 44 (2) (ante, p. 506). But if the property is in the possession of the master, even by the hands of another clerk or servant, or by delivery into the master's house or barn, or into his cart or barge, appropriation by a servant is larceny. R. v. Murray, 1 Mood. 276; 5 C. & P. 145 : R. v. Watts, 2 Den. 14; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 192 : R. v. Spears, 2 Leach, 825; 2 East, P. C. 568 : R. v. Reed, Dears. 168, 257; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 25. If a servant receives from his master goods for the purpose of selling them and appropriates them to his own use, it is larceny, not embezzlement. R. v. Howkins, 4 Cox, 224 (C. C. R.). It was the duty of the prisoner, a servant of the prosecutors, to give out materials to be wrought up, and pay the workmen when the work was finished, and for this purpose he received cash from his masters, and at the end of each week he accounted with them for sums so received and paid. The cash was kept by him, but he was not authorized to apply it in any other manner. He paid one of the workmen 13*s.* and fraudulently charged his masters as having paid him 14*s.* 8*d.*, and appropriated the 1*s.* 8*d.* to his own use. On these facts it was held that he was rightly convicted of larceny, as a servant, of the 1*s.* 8*d.* R. v. Low, 10 Cox, 168 (C. C. R.); ut see R. v. Dartnell, 20 L. T. (N. S.) 1020, Byles, J. It is not required by he statute that the goods, etc., stolen should be the property of the master; he words of the statute are, "belonging to or in the possession or power of the aster." If the defendant is not shown to be the clerk or servant of J. N., ut a larceny is proved, he may be convicted of the larceny merely. R. v. ennings, 7 Cox, 397, supra.

As to taking from the possession of the master by the servant, contrary to he master's orders, of any corn, etc., for the purpose of giving the same to any orse, etc., see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 103, s. 1, ante, p. 602.

Many of the difficulties formerly found in prosecuting servants for defrauding heir masters have been removed by the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), post, p. 734, and the Larceny Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 10), ow repealed and re-enacted by 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 20 (1) (iv), post, p. 621.

Evidence.

"Clerk or servant."]—Prove that the defendant, at the time he received the chattel, money, or valuable security, was clerk or servant to J. N., or employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant as stated in the indictment, acting under and bound to obey, the orders of his master or employer. See R. v. Negus, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 34; 42 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 12 Cox, 492. This may be proved by evidence that he acted as such. See R. v. Beacall, 1 C. & P. 312: R. v. Wellings, 1 C. & P. 454: R. v. Welch, 20 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 101; 1 Den. 199; 2 C. & K. 296; 2 Cox, 85. If the contract of service was in writing, parol evidence of it is inadmissible, unless notice to produce has been given. R. v. Clapton, 3 Cox, 126: R. v. Dodson, 62 J. P. 729, Kennedy, J. Where the prisoner was charged with embezzlement, but his employer, who made the engagement with him, was not called to prove the terms thereof, but only his managing clerk, who knew them through repute alone, having been informed of them by his employer, it was held that there was no evidence to go to the jury that the prisoner was servant to the prosecutor. R. v. Taylor, 10 Cox, 544, Russell Gurney, Recorder. Whether the defendant was clerk or servant is a question of fact for the jury. R. v. Negus, supra: R. v. Chater, 9 Cox, 1; and see Steph. Dig. Cr. L. (6th ed.) 271 n. A female servant is within the neaning of the Act. R. v. Smith, R. & R. 267. So is an apprentice, though nder age. R. v. Mellish, R. & R. 80. "In the capacity of clerk or servant" nly applies when the prisoner is employed on temporary occasions. and does ot usually fill the situation. R. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, 255, per Patteson, J.; ed quære "only." A son who lives with his father, and performs for him luties usually performed by a clerk, is "employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant" within the statute, although he receives no alary, and although there is no contract binding him to go on doing those luties. R. v. Foulkes, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 150; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 65; 13 Cox, 63. A butty collier, paid so much for every ton of coal he raised, was allowed to ell coal for his employer. It was his duty to pay over the gross price received, nd he was subsequently allowed a poundage. He converted to his own use noney received for coal. Held that he was servant to the colliery owner. R. v. Thomas, 6 Cox, 403. As to the distinction between servants and mere bailees, ee R. v. Gibbs, Dears. 445; 24 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 6 Cox, 455. The statute is not confined to the clerks and servants of persons in trade, but extends to the clerks and servants of all persons whomsoever, if they be employed to receive money, etc. : and therefore a person employed as accountant and treasurer to the overseers of the poor, whose duty it is to receive and pay moneys receivable and payable to them, is a clerk and servant within the statute. R. v. Squire, R. & R. 349; 2 Stark. (N. P.) 348. See R. v. Townsend, 1 Den. 167; 2 C. & K. 168; 2 Cox, 224: R. v. Adey, 1 Den. 578; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 149; 4 Cox, 210; but see R. v. Harris, 17 Cox, 656 (C. C. R.), post, p. 613. In a case decided before 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 15, a collector of poor and other rates within the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, was held to be rightly described as servant to the committee of management of the affairs of that parish (appointed under 10 G. 4, c. lxxxvii), though he was elected by the vestrymen of the parish. R. v. Callahan, 8 C. & P. 154. A clerk of a savings-bank was held to be properly described as clerk to the trustees, though elected by the managers. R. v. Jenson, 1 Mood. 434. An assistant overseer, elected by the parishioners in vestry under 59 G. 3, c. 12, s. 7, who fixed his duties and salary, was held to be rightly described as the servant of the inhabitants of the parish, in an indictment charging him with embezzling moneys collected by him for the poor rate. R. v. Carpenter, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 29; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 169; 10 Cox, 246. But he is not clerk or servant of the overseers; and see R. v. Sampson, 1 Cox, 355. The appointment is now made in rural parishes by the parish council or parish meeting, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 5 (1), 19 (5); but a rural assistant overseer may still be described as servant of the inhabitants. R. v. Smallman [1897] 1 Q. B. 4; 66 L. J. (Q. B.) 82; 18 Cox, 451. The mode of appointment in many urban parishes has been altered under 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 33. Where, however, C. had been nominated by the inhabitants of a township as an assistant overseer, and the nomination did not specify as one of the duties he was to perform the duty of receiving money, it was held that he could not be convicted as a clerk or servant of the inhabitants of embezzling rates collected by him. R. v. Coley, 16 Cox, 226 (C. C. R.). The learned reporter in a note on this case at p. 230, after reviewing other cases on the same subject, concludes that the "decision appears open to question," and it is not reported in the Law Reports. In R. v. Truman, 2 Cox, 306, it was held by Maule, J., that a rate collector appointed by guardians of the poor under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 46, was not their clerk or servant: cf. R. v. Townsend, ante, p. 607; but see s. 97 of that Act. In R. v. Welch, 20 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 100; 1 Den. 199; 2 C. & K. 296; 2 Cox, 85; a treasurer to guardians of the poor appointed under a local Act was held to be their servant.

It is not necessary that the employment should be permanent; if it is only occasional it will be sufficient. Where the prosecutor, having agreed to let the defendant carry out parcels when he had nothing else to do, for which the prosecutor was to pay him what he pleased, gave him an order to receive two pounds, which he received and embezzled, he was held to be a servant within 39 G. 3, c. 85 (rep.). R. v. Spencer, R. & R. 299. So, where a servant usually employed to receive sums of one description at one place was employed in one instance to receive at a different place a sum of a different description, R. v. Smith, R. & R. 516, and see R. v. Beechey, Id. 319. And where a drover, who was employed to drive two cows to a purchaser, and receive the purchase-money, embezzled it, he was held to be a servant within the meaning of 7 & 8 G. 4, c. 29, s. 47 (rep.). R. v. Hughes, 1 Mood. 370; but cf. R. v. Goodbody, 8 C. & P. 665. The duties of the secretary of a money club were held to be sufficiently cognate to that of the receipt of money for and on the account of the club, to make his employment to receive money in a particular instance an employment by him as clerk or servant within the same enactment, although he had recourse to an action in his own name to get in the money. R. v. Tongue, Bell, 289; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 49; 8 Cox, 386. But where the treasurer of a charitable institution, in his individual capacity, directed the defendant (who was the schoolmaster of the charity school, appointed by a committee of which the treasurer was a member, and whose sole duty was confined to the instruction of the children) in one single instance to receive a voluntary contribution, for which he was to have no remuneration; it was held that he was not a clerk or servant, or person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant. R. v. Nettleton, 1 Mood. 259. A member of, and secretary to, a society, who fraudulently withheld money received from a member to be paid over to the trustees, was held to be guilty of embezzlement, and to be properly described as the clerk and servant of the trustees, and it was held that the money was properly described as their property, although it ought, in the ordinary course, to have been received by the steward, and although the articles of the society were not enrolled, and the society was not conducted strictly according to the Act of Parliament. R. v. Hall, 1 Mood. 474: R. v. Miller, 2 Mood. 249: R. v. Woolley, 4 Cox, 255, Patteson, J.: R. v. Proud, L. & C. 97; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 71; 9 Cox, 22. Cases of this kind appear to be covered by s. 20 (1) (iv) of this Act (post, p. 621).

Cases prior to the Larceny Act, 1868.]—A mere unpaid treasurer of a friendly society, not appointed by the trustees of the society, is not a clerk or servant of the trustees in whom the moneys of the society are vested, and could not be indicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68 (rep.), for embezzling the moneys of the society. R. v. Tyree, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 177; 38 L. J. (M. C.) 58; 11 Cox, 241. "I believe," says Bovill, C.J. (see L. R. 1 C. C. R. at p. 181), "there is no case to show that the treasurer of a friendly society can be indicted for embezzlement. The essence of the indictment in this case is this, that the prisoner was a clerk or servant of the trustees. The trustees have all moneys of the society vested in them by statute, as well as by one of their rules, and the prisoner must account to them; but this does not make him their servant. The treasurer is an accountable officer, but not a servant." And the secretary, who was also a member of a friendly society, established under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 (rep.), for which no trustees had been appointed, could not, previously to 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116 (now repealed and replaced by s. 40 (4) of the Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50) (ante, p. 503), be convicted on an indictment for embezzling the society's moneys, laying the property in A. B. (another member of the society) and others, and describing him as their servant, because the "others" would have comprised himself, and so the indictment would in fact have charged him with embezzling his own money as his own servant. R. v. Diprose, 11 Cox, 185 (C. C. R.): R. v. Taffs, 4 Cox, 169, Maule, J.: and cf. R. v. Blackburn, 11 Cox, 157. So where a committee, formed of the members of two friendly societies, for the purpose of conducting an excursion, appointed certain persons to sell the excursion tickets, and the money received from their sale was to be paid over to a specified person, and was to belong to the two societies: the prisoner, who was a member of the committee, was one of those appointed to sell tickets without any remuneration for his services; he sold some of the tickets, and fraudulently misappropriated the money received for the sale to his own use; it was held (previously to 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116) that he could not be convicted on an indictment charging him, as servant to the other members of the committee, with embezzling their moneys. R. v. Bren, L. & C. 346; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 59; 9 Cox, 398.

Effect of Larceny Act, 1868.]—The Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, now repealed and replaced by s. 40 (4) of the Larceny Act, 1916, ante, p. 503), was passed to meet the difficulties which arose in the above cases, An association having for its object not the acquisition of gain but the spiritual and mental improvement of its members is not a "co-partnership" within the meaning of the term as used in 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1 (rep.). Consequently a member of such an association who has embezzled money belonging to it cannot be convicted on an indictment charging him with embezzling the moneys of a "co-partnership," and containing no count describing the moneys as moneys of which he was a joint beneficial owner. R. v. Robson, 16 Q. B. D. 137; 55 L. J. (M. C.) 55; 15 Cox, 772. But such an indictment might now probably be amended under 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 90, s. 5 (ante, p. 54). A member and secretary of a fête committee, the members of which had guaranteed the expenses of the fête, may be a "beneficial owner" of the entrance moneys so as to make him criminally liable for their misappropriation within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1 (rep.). R. v. Neat, 69 L. J. (Q. B.) 118: 12 Cox, 424; 16 L. L. R. 109.

Unlawful societies.]—A person cannot be convicted of embezzlement as clerk or servant to a society which, in consequence of administering an unlawful oath to its members, is an unlawful combination and confederacy within 37 G. 3, c. 123, and 57 G. 3, c. 19: R. v. Hunt, 8 C. & P. 642. Registered friendly societies which comply with the Act of 1896 are not within those Acts (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25, s. 32). And a society which is of the nature of a friendly society, although not enrolled or certified under the Friendly Societies Acts, some of the rules of which are in restraint of trade, and therefore void, is not an illegal society in the sense that it is disabled from prosecuting a servant for embezzling its funds under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68 (rep.). R. v. Stainer, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 230; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 54; 11 Cox, 483, and the members of such a society are clearly "beneficial owners" within 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 40 (4) (ante, p. 503), R. v. Tankard [1894] 1 Q. B. 548; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 61; 17 Cox, 719: and see R. v. Frankland, L. & C. 276; 32 L. J. (M. C.) 69; 9 Cox, 273: R. v. Webb [1893] 9 T. L. R. 199 (C. C. R.).

A prisoner, who had been employed sometimes as a regular labourer, sometimes as a roundsman for a day at a time, and had on several occasions been sent to a banker's to receive the amount of cheques, was sent to the banker's with a cheque for payment, for which he was to receive 6*d.*, he not being in the prosecutor's employment at the time; he received the money for the cheque and embezzled it; and being indicted for the embezzlement, Park, J. (after consulting Taunton, J.), held, that he was not a clerk or servant within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. R. v. Freeman, 5 C. & P. 534. The person employed to collect sacrament money from the communicants is not the servant of the minister, churchwardens, or poor. R. v. Burton, 1 Mood. 237.

Where several employers.]—If the clerk of several partners embezzles the private money of one of them, he is within the Act: for he is a servant of each. See R. v. Leech, 3 Stark. (N. P.) 70. So where a clerk was appointed and paid by a joint committee of directors of several railway companies, and employed at a joint station of the companies. R. v. Bayley, Dears. & B. 121; 26 L. J. (M. C.) 4; 7 Cox, 179. So where a traveller is employed by several persons, and paid wages, to receive money, he is the individual servant of each. Id.: R. v. Carr, R. & R. 198. So where a clerk in the employ of a railway company at one of their stations was also employed separately by W. & G. to sell coals for them, it was held that he could be convicted of embezzlement as the servant of W. R. v. Batty, 2 Mood. 257. So, a coachman, employed by one proprietor of a coach to drive a certain part of the journey, and to receive money and hand it over to him, may be charged with embezzling the money of that proprietor, though the money, when received, would belong to him and his partners. R. v. White, 8 C. & P. 742; 2 Mood. 91.

A county court bailiff, who had fraudulently misappropriated the proceeds of levies made under county court process, could not formerly be indicted for embezzling the moneys of the high bailiff his master. R. v. Glover, L. & C. 466; 33 L. J. (M. C.) 169; 9 Cox, 501. That case, however, was decided upon the county court Rules then in existence, setting forth the duties of the bailiff, but it has been held that by virtue of the county court Rules of 1875, a county court bailiff, misappropriating moneys as did the bailiff in R. v. Glover, might be indicted for embezzling the moneys of the high bailiff his master. R. v. Parsons, 16 Cox, 498, Cave, J. The county court Rules of 1903 are in the same terms on this as those of 1875. And under s. 33 of the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), the bailiffs appear to be servants of the high bailiff. A distraining broker employed exclusively by the prosecutor, and paid by a weekly salary and by a commission, was held to be a servant within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68 (rep.). R. v. Flanagan, 10 Cox, 561.

The mode by which the defendant is remunerated for his service is immaterial. Where a defendant, who was employed as a master of a barge, to carry out and sell coals, and was allowed a portion of the profits, after deducting the price of the coals at the colliery, for his labour, took a quantity of coals, sold them, received the price, and absconded with the money; it was held by a majority of the judges, that he was a servant within 39 G. 3, c. 85 (rep.). R. v. Hartley, R. & R. 139. So, where the defendant was employed as a traveller to take orders and collect money, was paid by a percentage upon the orders he got, paid his own expenses, did not live with the prosecutors, and was employed as traveller by other persons also; he was held to be a clerk to the prosecutors, within the meaning of the Act. R. v. Carr, R. & R. 198: R. v. Hoggins, Id. 145: see R. v. Tite, L. & C. 29; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 142; 8 Cox, 458; and see R. v. Solomons [1909] 2 K. B. 980; 79 L. J. (K. B.) 8; 25 T. L. R. 747. The prisoner agreed with the prosecutor, an earthenware manufacturer, to act as his traveller, to employ himself in going from town to town in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and soliciting orders for the goods manufactured by the prosecutor, and that he would not, without the prosecutor's consent, take or execute any order for selling any goods of the kind manufactured by the prosecutor, for or on account of himself or any other person, except the prosecutor. And it was further agreed that the prisoner should pay his own travelling expenses, that he should be paid a commission, and should render weekly accounts. The prosecutor afterwards gave the prisoner permission to take orders for two other manufacturers. It was held on these facts, that the prisoner was a clerk or servant of the prosecutor. R. v. Turner, 11 Cox, 551, Lush, J. And where the cashier of a firm had, besides his salary, a percentage on the profits made by the firm, but was not to be liable for its losses, and had no control over the management of the business, it was held that he might be indicted as a servant for embezzling the firm's moneys. R. v. M'Donald, L. & C. 85; 31 L. J. (M. C.) 67; 9 Cox, 10. The defendant entered into an agreement with the prosecutor, whereby he undertook to take charge of the prosecutor's glebe land, his wife undertaking the dairy and poultry, at 15*s.* a week, till Michaelmas, 1850, and afterwards at a salary of 25*l.* a year, and a third of the clear annual profits, after all expenses of rent, rates, labour, and interest on capital, etc., were paid, on a fair valuation, made from Michaelmas to Michaelmas; three months' notice on either side to be given, at the expiration of which time a cottage, which was to be occupied by the defendant as bailiff, in addition to his salary, was to be vacated. It was held that this was not a contract of partnership, but an agreement for the hire of the defendant as a labourer: and that he was rightly convicted of embezzlement, in fraudulently denying the receipt of moneys which he had received for and on account of the prosecutor, though such denial was after Michaelmas, the period agreed on for the valuation to be made and the profits ascertained. R. v. Wortley, 2 Den. 333; 21 L. J. (M. C.) 44; 5 Cox, 382. R. v. Hartley (ante, p. 611), R. v. M'Donald, and R. v. Wortley were decided before the Larceny Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1 (repealed and replaced by s. 40 (4) of the Larceny Act, 1916, ante, p. 503). Where the prosecutors, manure manufacturers, engaged the defendant, who kept a refreshment house at B., to get orders for the manure, on which orders they supplied it from their stores: the defendant was to collect the money, and pay it over to them, and send a weekly account, and was called agent for the B. district: "he was to go through the county and see the farmers, and get orders, and to be continually during the season among the farmers:" subsequently the prosecutors sent large quantities of manure to stores at B., which were under the defendant's control, who took them in his own name and paid the rent for them, being repaid such rent by the prosecutors when their accounts were adjusted: and the defendant signed a proposal to a guarantee society to insure the prosecutors, which stated that his salary was 1*l.* a year, besides commission, which was estimated at 65*l.* a year: and the prosecutors deposed that at this time they had agreed to give the salary of 1*l.* a year—the defendant was held to be an agent, and not a servant within the statute. R. v. Walker, Dears. & B. 600; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 207; 8 Cox, 1. So, where the defendant was employed to obtain orders for the sale of iron manufactured by the prosecutors, and was to receive a commission on the orders he got; it being his duty to account to the prosecutors for all moneys he should receive, but it was not expressly found to be his duty to receive money; he was held not to be a clerk or servant, etc., within the statute. R. v. May, L. & C. 13; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 81; 8 Cox, 421. Where a man assigned his estate to trustees for the benefit of creditors, and was employed by the trustees to manage the business and collect the book debts, he was held not to be their clerk or servant. R. v. Barnes, 8 Cox, 129, Byles, J. As to persons employed by a debtor acting under such an arrangement with his creditors, see R. v. Dixon, 11 Cox, 178 (C. C. R.). A solicitor engaged as land agent to a limited company at 300*l.* a year to collect rents, etc., was held to be a clerk or servant of the company. R. v. Gibson, 8 Cox, 436.

The conclusion to be drawn from the cases appears to be that a commercial traveller, whether paid by commission or salary, who is under orders to go here and there, or is bound to devote the whole or at least some portion of his time to the service of his employer, is—but that a commission agent who is not under orders to go here and there, and who is not bound to devote any portion of his time to the service of his principal, but who may get or abstain from getting business for his principal as he chooses, is not—a clerk or servant, or person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant within 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 17. Thus, where the prisoner was employed by the prosecutor to solicit orders and collect moneys, for which he was paid by commission, being at liberty to get orders when and where he pleased, but to be exclusively in the employ of the prosecutor, and to give the whole of his time to the prosecutor's service, he was held to be the servant of the prosecutor. R. v. Bailey, 12 Cox, 56 (C. C. R.). And the prisoner would still have been the servant of the prosecutor, if he was a traveller under orders to go here and there, even although he might have been at liberty to obtain orders for other persons besides the prosecutor, and so was not bound to devote all his time to the prosecutor's service. R. v. Tite, L. & C. 29; 30 L. J. (M. C.) 142; 8 Cox, 458. But where the prisoner was employed by the prosecutors as their agent for the sale of coals on commission, and to collect moneys in connection with his orders, but was at liberty to dispose of his time as he thought best, and to get or abstain from getting orders as he might choose, he was held not to be a clerk or servant within the statute. R. v. Bowers, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 41; 35 L. J. (M. C.) 206; 10 Cox, 250. In delivering judgment in that case, Erle, C.J., said, "The cases have established that a clerk or servant must be under the orders of his master, or employed to receive the moneys of his employer, to be within the statute; but if a man be intrusted to get orders and to receive money, getting the orders when and where he chooses, and getting the money when and where he chooses, he is not a clerk or servant within the statute." Id. Where the prisoner was employed by one of the overseers of a parish to collect the poor-rate and keep the rate books, but was left complete liberty as to the method of collection and keeping the books, he was held not to be a clerk or servant. R. v. Harris, 17 Cox, 656 (C. C. R.). See also R. v. Mayle, 11 Cox, 150: R. v. Marshall, 11 Cox, 490 (C. C. R.). The test whether a person charged with embezzlement was the clerk or servant of his alleged master, is—Was he under the control of and bound to obey his alleged master? See the judgment of Blackburn, J., in R. v. Negus, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 34: 42 L. J. (M. C.) 62; 12 Cox, 492. And, therefore, where the prisoner was employed to solicit orders for the prosecutors, and was to be paid by a commission on the sums received through his means, and he was at liberty to apply for orders whenever he thought most convenient, but was not to employ himself for any other persons than the prosecutors, it was held that these facts alone did not show him to be a clerk or servant within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68 (rep.). Id. The distinction between the case last cited, and R. v. Bailey (supra), is, that in R. v. Bailey the prisoner was under the prosecutor's control, having to devote his whole time to the service, whereas in R. v. Negus, although the prisoner was not to employ himself for any other persons than the prosecutors, he might go away to amuse himself whenever he liked. See the remarks of Bovill, C.J., and Blackburn, J., L. R. 2 C. C. R. 35. The prosecutors employed the prisoner, who carried on an independent business as an accountant and debt collector, to collect certain debts for them at a commission on the amount recovered, the time and mode of collecting the debts being in the prisoner's discretion, and it being his duty to pay over the amounts received by him to the prosecutors as soon as he had collected them. It was held that he was not employed in the capacity of clerk to the prosecutors. R. v. Hall, 13 Cox, 49.

A director and shareholder in a limited company, who is employed at a salary to superintend its business and collect moneys due to the company, may be convicted of embezzlement of such moneys as a servant of the company.

R. v. Stuart [1894] 1 Q. B. 310; 63 L. J. (M. C.) 63; 17 Cox, 723 (C. C. R.). And see also 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 20 (1) (ii) (post, p. 621).

"For or in the name or on the account of his master."]—Prove that the defendant received the money, etc., stated in the indictment, for or in the name or on account of his master or employer.

Where the defendant misappropriates money received by him from his master himself, for the purpose of paying it to a third person, this is not embezzlement. R. v. Smith, R. & R. 267: R. v. Hawkins, 1 Den. 584; 4 Cox, 224, but see 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 20 (1) (iv) (post, p. 621). Nor is it embezzlement where the money misappropriated is constructively in the possession of the master, by the hands of any other clerk or servant. R. v. Murray, 1 Mood. 276; 5 C. & P. 145. See R. v. Hayward, 1 C. & K. 518: R. v. Watts, 2 Den. 14; 19 L. J. (M. C.) 192: R. v. Reed, Dears. 168, 257; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 25: 6 Cox, 284. But the fraudulent appropriation of money, which has never been in the master's own posession, and which the defendant has received from a fellow-servant to give to his master, is embezzlement. R. v. Masters, 1 Den. 332; 2 C. & K. 930; 18 L. J. (M. C.) 2; 3 Cox, 178.

A conductor of a tramway car was charged with embezzling 3*s*. It was proved that on a certain journey there were fifteen threepenny fares and twenty-five twopenny fares (altogether 7*s*. 11*d*.), and the prisoner was seen to give tickets to each fare and to receive money from each, but what sum did not appear. He made out a way-bill for the journey, debiting himself only with nine threepenny fares and sixteen twopenny fares (altogether 4*s*. 11*d*.). The mode of accounting was to deliver the way-bills for each journey to a clerk and to hand in all the money received during each day on the following morning. The prisoner's way-bills for the day showed the receipt by him of 3*l*. 1*s*. 9*d*., but he paid in only 3*l*. 0*s*. 8*d*. It was held that there was sufficient evidence of the receipt of 7*s*. 11*d*., the total amount of fares of the particular journey, and of the embezzlement of 3*s*. part thereof. R. v. King, 12 Cox, 73 (C. C. R.). If the indictment alleges the embezzlement of money or bank-notes, such allegation, so far as regards the description of the property, will be sustained by proof that the defendant embezzled any piece of coin or any banknote or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or banknote may have been delivered to him in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to any person, and such part has been returned accordingly. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 40 (2) (ante, p. 503). But an indictment alleging the embezzlement of money is not sustained by evidence of the embezzlement of a cheque, unless it be also proved that the prisoner cashed the cheque, and so converted it into money. R. v. Keena, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 113; 37 L. J. (M. C.) 43; 11 Cox, 123. Where the defendant's duty was to place every night in an iron safe, provided by his employers for that purpose, in an office where he conducted the business of his employers (though in his own house) the moneys received by him on their account and not used during the day, it was held that by placing it there he determined his own exclusive possession of the money, and that, by afterwards taking some of it out of the safe, animo furandi, he was guilty of larceny. R. v. Wright, Dears & B.

131; 27 L. J. (M. C.) 65. Where a son acted as clerk to his father, who himself held the office of clerk to a local board, and whose duty it was to receive moneys on account of such board, and some of such moneys were received by the son as his father's clerk in the ordinary course of business and appropriated by him to his own use, it was held that he was rightly convicted on an indictment charging him with embezzling such moneys, and alleging them to be the moneys of the father. R. v. Foulkes, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 150; 44 L. J. (M. C.) 65; 13 Cox, 63. Where the master gave a stranger some marked money, for the purpose of purchasing goods from the master's shopman, in order to try the shopman's fidelity, which he doubted; the stranger bought the goods, and the shopman embezzled the money: the judges held this to be a case within the Act. R. v. Whittingham, 2 Leach, 912: R. v. Headge, Id. 1033, R. & R. 160, confirmed in R. v. Gill, Dears. 289; 23 L. J. (M. C.) 50; 6 Cox, 295. Where the defendant's duty was to sell his master's goods, entering the sales in a book, and settling accounts with his master weekly, and upon such a sale the defendant fraudulently omitted to make an entry of it in the book, and appropriated the money which he received from the buyer, this was held to be embezzlement and not larceny. R. v. Betts, Bell, 90; 28 L. J. (M. C.) 69; 8 Cox, 140. A defendant whose business it was to receive orders, to take the materials from his master's shop, work them up, deliver the goods, receive the price for them, and pay it over to his master, who, at the end of the week, paid the defendant a proportion of the price for his work, received an order for certain goods, took his master's materials, worked them up on his premises, delivered them, and received the price, but concealed the transaction, and embezzled the money; upon a conviction for embezzlement, it was doubted whether this was not a larceny of the materials, rather than a case within the statute; the judges held the conviction right. R. v. Hoggins, R. & R. 145. But where it appeared that the defendant was employed as a town traveller and collector, to receive orders from customers, and enter them in the books and receive the money for the goods supplied thereon, but had no authority to take or direct the delivery of the goods from his master's shop, and a customer having ordered two articles of the defendant, he entered one of them only in the order-book, for which an invoice was made out by the prosecutor to the customer; but the defendant entered the price of the other at the bottom of the invoice, and, having caused both to be delivered to the customer, received the price of both, and accounted to the prosecutor only for the former: this was held not to be embezzlement but larceny. R. v. Wilson, 1 C. & P. 27. The prosecutor had contracted with a railway company to find and provide them with necessary horses and carmen for the purpose of conveying and delivering to the company's customers the coals of the company, in their own waggons; and that he or his carmen should daily account for and deliver to the company's coal manager all moneys received in payments for coals so delivered; the delivery-notes, as well as receipted invoice, for the coals, being handed to the carman, and the former taken to the prosecutor's office, the latter left with the customers on payment. The defendant, one of the prosecutor's carmen, delivered coals of the company to a customer, and brought back the delivery-order to the prosecutor's office to be entered; he received
